"Seven Oaks, Chatham.—The length of the Box Railway Tunnel is 3195 yards, or nearly two miles; and the tunnel on the Thames and Medway Canal, between Gravesend and Rochester, is upwards of 2½ miles in length. The seeds in question may be sent safely.
"Rustic Lads."—We cannot recommend any Society, with certainty. There is a list published, about our Correspondent should apply to himself or to
"J. T. Cox, Esq."—Sir W. Hooker's "Guide to Kew Gardens" is published by Longman and Co.
"Mr. W. S. Stockbridge."—We cannot refer to you.
"J. T.," Sandstone.—Wood-engraving Tools may be purchased at Penn's, Newgate-street.
"A Constant Subscriber," "A Subscriber," "R. M.," Newbury; and "A Subscriber."—Be the Act. 1 and 12 Vic., cap. 29, tenants and owners of land are empowered to fell trees without taking out a game certificate.
"A Constant Subscriber," Hull.—The promissory note will be valid, if payable "on demand."
"J. R. T." Hull.—The case depends entirely upon circumstances; in ordinary cases a house-servant can claim the customary warning.
"S. F.," The Bishop of Manchester has been regularly gazetted.
"John" had better apply personally to a music-seller.
"C. B. T.," Exeter.—Taylor's "Short-hand," improved by Harding.
"Trevor."—Declined.
"An Edinburgh Subscriber" is thanked for the trouble he has taken in sending us the sketches of Arthur's Seat. We have, however, commissioned an artist to sketch the Royal landing for our next week's Number.
"One of the Committee," Mr. Bunn's "Roland" reply is entitled "A Word with Punch."
"A. W."—We have not room.
"Amateur."—A letter sent, as stated, would, doubtless, be forwarded.
"A. B. C.," Constantinople, is thanked. The Sketches had not reach us in time.
"A. B." The Royal Botanic Gardens at Kew are not open on Sunday.
"W. B. C." will find Views of "Harrow-on-the-Hill" in No. 62 of our Journal, to be had by order.
"A Subscriber," Lancaster.—The Colosseum "View of London," published in January, 1843, may be had. Price 1s.
"J. L."—The distance from Windsor Castle to the Statue of George III., on Snowhill, in the Great Park, is about 3½ miles.
"A. G.," Sherborne.—The impressions sent are from a quarter noble of Edward III. and a coin of Charles I., of France (silver); but they are too imperfect to be safely identified.
"A Subscriber."—In the case submitted by our correspondent, the two daughters of the first marriage would be co-heiresses of their mother, and would confer on their husbands the right to bear, as a quartering, the arms of that lady with their own, on a cruton. The crest of an heiress is never borne over the shield of pretence, as her husband's arms. We cannot ascertain the date of the Royal Standard referred to.
"M. A."—We are sorry we have not the information sought for.
"F. L." The Five of Hanover-Luxemburg is restored to the half sister of Queen Victoria, viz. to the Princess Anne Feodore Augusta Charlotte Wilhelmina, only daughter of the Duchess of Kent, by her first husband, the Prince of Lexington.
"B. J."—The Duke de Nemours is second, but eldest surviving, son of Louis Philippe, ex-King of the French. He is married to the Princess Victoria Augusta, daughter of Ferdinand, Prince Consort of Saxe Coburg Gotha, Prince Albert's uncle.
"Lewis."—The proper course to be adopted to obtain the additional name is to petition the Crown for a Royal license to authorize the assumption.
"S. C. W.," Leeds.—The present Baronet of Hillington is Sir Wm. John Hen. Browne Middleton. Earl Grey was born December 28, 1804. His seat is Howick, Northumberland.
"A Constant Subscriber."—The information may perhaps be obtained at the Heralds' Office. Apply to G. H. Harrison, Esq., College of Arms, Doctors' Commons.
"A. B." A daughter is entitled to quarter the arms of her mother, in case that lady was an heiress or co-heiress.
"A Subscriber and Constant Reader."—No one can bear any arms as his own seal, but those according to law, from his father, or those specially granted to himself. If a person be not entitled to arms himself, he cannot use any quarterings.

ERRATUM.—In the article upon "The Sale at Stowe," in our Journal of last week, the income of the Marquis of Chandos is stated at £29500 instead of £23,000, per annum.

BOOKS, &c. RECEIVED DURING THE WEEK.

Lamartine's Popular History of the French Revolution.—Alison's History of Europe.——White on Cholera.——Gray's Lectures on Currency. Henriques on Cholera.——Airth's Latin Grammar. Hedrick's Universal History. Abbott's First English Reader.——Mozart's Marriage of Figaro. Milner on Currency.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 9, 1848.

THE National Assembly of France has at length arrived at that portion of its business for which it was more especially called together—the debates on the Constitution. By the large majority of 569 against 140, it has decided that these debates shall be carried on under the protection of the state of siege—a measure of prudence which the zeal and daring of Red Republicanism will sufficiently justify in the eyes of Europe and of France. The draft of the Constitution has already been published; and, like all the similar documents which the present and the preceding generation have produced, it reads well, sounds well, and looks well. Whether it will work well, or work at all, are the questions which France will have to solve, and upon which it would be unwise, in the meantime, to hazard an opinion. Its chief features are, that France shall be governed by a single Legislative Chamber, composed of 750 members, elected by universal suffrage; that the President shall not be nominated by the Assembly, but, like itself, shall derive his powers directly from the nation, and by the same medium—universal suffrage. He is to hold office for four years, and is not to be re-eligible a second time until four years from the expiry of his first term. The liberty of the press, of worship, and of meeting are affirmed, subject to those legal penalties for the abuses of each which the interests of society demand, and which the example of other constitutional countries shows to be perfectly compatible with true freedom.

The mischievous doctrine, that every man has a right to demand work from the state, which there was at one time a probability would be promulgated in the Constitution, finds no support or even mention, but, instead of it, the principle familiar to our English law is affirmed, that no man shall be allowed to die of starvation; but that there shall be a national Poor-Law for the relief of the destitute, the impotent, and the disabled. All the other points in the document are of minor importance, and relate principally to the administrative functions of the President, the Ministers, the Judges, and other officers of the State. There was at one time an idea that General Cavaignac would not permit the discussion of the Constitution by the journals of the capital, on the plea of danger to the public peace; but the General has taken the opportunity of disabusing the public mind upon this subject; and the Constitution will receive from the press as ample an examination and discussion as it will experience in the Chamber of Assembly. The social question raised by the proposed Poor-Law will, in all probability, be the most interesting and protracted that will ensue. In all countries the Poor-Laws are a most delicate subject; and the recent experience of Ireland shows how extremely difficult it is to give the poor a legal claim to subsistence, without on the one hand ruining altogether the overburdened proprietors of the soil, and of weakening or destroying, on the other, those feelings of self-reliance and of manly independence which should operate on the minds of the great bulk of the people, to lift them above habitual and contented pauperism. It was the great amount of misery among the working population that expedited the last Revolution. To ameliorate their condition, was proclaimed at the very outset to be the principal task that would devolve upon the chiefs and founders of the Republic. The working classes have doubtless hoped too much from the merely political change that has taken place. They have given their confidence to blinded theorists and hair-brained philanthropists. They have expected a golden age; they have indulged in foolish and in guilty ideas; but still their misery remains, and must in some way or other be alleviated under the enormous penalty of repeated attempts at Revolution—attempts which will not only aggravate all the evils which they themselves suffer, but which will entail disasters upon the whole of France. That a well-considered and careful system of Poor-Law relief would tend in some degree to the alleviation of the social misery of the masses, seems probable; but if such a system were supported by the abrogation of the present law which compels the subdivision of land among all the children of a deceased proprietor, we think it still more probable that the superficial evils of a Poor-Law would be widely increased. At present there are hundreds of thousands of landed proprietors in France who are scarcely removed above the condition of pauperism themselves; who cultivate small patches of their own ground by their own labour; who have no capital wherewith to employ the labour of others, and upon whom the burden of a poor-rate would amount to a confiscation. It should be the object of the Government to prepare the way for a better system of farming. If, in the first Revolution, the law had simply allowed a father to distribute his land in equal proportions among all his children, instead of compelling him to do so, many of the social evils of the present day would have been avoided. It is possible that the National Assembly will consider this subject; and, from various indications, it seems probable, as well as possible, that it will meet with the attention of the ablest economists and politicians of France, during the approaching debates upon that portion of the Constitution.

WHETHER the Italian question is to be settled by peaceful intervention or prolonged war, is still matter of doubt. So long as the Austrians retreated before Charles Albert, the whole of the Lombardo-Venetian States left the battle to the Piedmontese, and contented themselves with forming Provisional Governments, Ministries, and projects for the union of Northern Italy, diversified by squabbles as to the formation of independent duchies and their future rulers. They knew that the army of the King of Sardinia was unused to war—that their numbers, discipline, artillery, ammunition, and money were insufficient; yet these states, so boastful of the newly-won Italian independence, so ready to use the power it gave them, sent no aid to Charles Albert's army: their freedom was to be won for them, not by them; and, in case of reverses, they looked to France for help.

They have, so far, let the day of Italian Emancipation pass by; and again, for the hundredth time in their history, have forgotten to be true to themselves. As yet, however, the Austrians, though they have nominally regained Lombardy, have not re-conquered their Lombardo-Venetian kingdom. Parma, Placentia, Modena, and Reggio have protested against the withdrawal from their towns and fortresses of the Sardinian troops, on the ground that by their act or union they are now a part of the kingdom of Sardinia. The Provisional Government of Venice has formed a Council of War for the defence of the city and fortress; and Admiral Albini has declared that, without express command to the contrary from Turin, he will not regard the armistice, but will fight the Austrian fleet wherever he can meet with it.

Nor are these the only demonstrations against Austria. Charles Albert has declared that, rather than submit to any oppressive conditions of peace, he will take the field again at once; in preparation for which he is re-organising his army, appointing experienced officers, taking into his pay a band of Swiss troops; and, it is said, has appointed the distinguished Polish General Chrzanowski his Commander-in-Chief.

So far, there is no definite result from the intervention of France and England. Austria has opened direct negotiations with Charles Albert, proposing the Adige as the boundary of the Austrian dominions, and a payment by the King of Sardinia of £16,000,000—a condition that it would be utterly impossible for Lombardy and Piedmont to fulfil. Reinforcements have been sent to the French army at Dijon; but, as yet, no definite orders to enter Italy.

It is still most earnestly to be wished for that there may be no disturbance of the general peace of Europe by the armed intervention of France in Italy. If the Italians merit independence, they are powerful enough to win it for themselves. To the peace of Italy, and hence less the peace of Europe, it is, however, important that there should be an end of Austrian rule throughout the whole Lombardo-Venetian kingdom.

The form of Government throughout every part of the Austrian dominions may be changed; Austria may rule in future in the fullest spirit of liberty, but no amount of freedom can root out from the hearts of the Italian people the hatred of a power that has so long treated men, at all events proud of the traditions of freemen, as slaves.

Austria can never for any lengthened period hold a peaceful position in Italy. Whether Italy be a geographical expression or not, whether there be an Italian people or not, the peace of Europe requires that Italy shall, at all events, belong to those who are not Austrians—whether to Italians, rests with themselves.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

ARRIVAL OF THE COURT IN LONDON.

Her Majesty and the Prince Albert left Osborne at half-past nine o'clock on Monday morning, and sailed on board the Victoria Royal yacht at Osborne Pier, reached Gosport at a quarter before eleven, and Buckingham Palace at twenty minutes past one. Her Majesty was accompanied by his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, the Princess Royal, and Prince Alfred, and was attended by the Countess of Gainsborough, the Lady in Waiting, Lord Alfred Paget, and Captain the Hon. A. Gordon, Equerries in Waiting, General Bowles, Colonel the Hon. C. B. Phipps, and Dr. Meyer.

Her Majesty was received at the Palace by the Duke of Norfolk, Earl Spencer, and Earl of Morton.

Her Royal Highness Princess Royal and the Dowager Lady Lyttelton remained at Osborne, together with her Serene Highness the Princess of Hohenlohe Langenbourg, and the Princesses Elise, Adelaide, and Feodora of Hohenlohe Langenbourg; and her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent remains some time longer at her present residence in East Cowes Park.

At half-past two o'clock the Queen held a Privy Council and Court at Buckingham Palace.

Before the Council, her Majesty gave audiences to Earl Spencer, the Marquis of Lansdowne, and Sir George Grey.

The Privy Council was attended by his Royal Highness Prince Albert, the Lord President, the Lord Chancellor, the Lord Privy Seal, the Secretaries of State, &c. The Most Honourable John Marquis of Breadalbane was, by command of the Queen, sworn of her Majesty's Most Honourable Privy Council, and took his seat at the Board. Mr. U. Greville was the clerk of the Council in Waiting.

At the Court, Viscount de Morcerce, the Portuguese Minister, had an audience of the Queen, to take leave, on temporary leave of absence.

Count de Lisle-le, on a special mission from the King of the Two Sicilies, had an audience of her Majesty.

Baron d'Andrian had an audience to present a letter to the Queen from the Archduke John of Austria.

Lieutenant-Colonel Steil was presented to the Queen at an audience, by Viscount Palmerston.

Sir John F. Davis, Bart., was presented to her Majesty by Viscount Palmerston, on his return from China.

The Earl of Auckland had an audience of the Queen.

The Judge Advocate-General had an audience of the Queen, and submitted to her Majesty the proceedings of some court-martial.

The Court was attended by the Marquis of Anglesey, Gold Stick in Waiting; the Treasurer of the Household, the Comptroller of the Household, and the Earl of Morton, Lord in Waiting.

Count and Countess of Neuilly and the Duke and Duchess of Nemours called at Buckingham Palace in the course of Monday, to pay their respects to her Majesty previous to her departure for Scotland.

On Tuesday morning his Royal Highness presided at a meeting of the Commission for promoting and encouraging the Fine Arts in the rebuilding the Palace of Westminster. His Royal Highness arrived at the New Palace at ten o'clock, attended by Captain the Hon. Augustus Gordon. The Commissioners present were the Right Hon. the Speaker, Viscount Morpeth, Sir R. H. Inglis, Mr. Wyse, and Mr. Hawes. The secretary, Mr. Rastlake, was in attendance, the meeting being shortly before twelve o'clock. The Queen went in state to the house of Lords to close the Session of Parliament with a speech from the Throne. The state procession left Buckingham Palace at a quarter before one o'clock. Six state coaches, drawn by six horses each, conveyed the various officers and functionaries of the Court. Then followed the Queen's Marshalmen. The Queen's footmen in state liveries. A party of the Yeoman Guard. The State Coach, drawn by eight cream-colored horses, conveyed her Majesty the Queen, his Royal Highness the Prince Albert, the Duchess of Norfolk, officiating for the Mistress of the Robes, and the Duke of Norfolk, K.G., Master of the Horse. The Queen was conveyed to the House of Lords by Sir William Martins. Her Majesty and the Prince, attended by the Royal Suite, returned to Buckingham Palace, at ten minutes past two o'clock, and were received by the Lord Chamberlain and the Vice-Chamberlain. The Queen's Guard of the Grenadier Guards was on duty on the Palace lawn.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

PUBLIC MEETINGS.

WEST LONDON RAILWAY.—A meeting of this company took place on Thursday at the London Tavern. The chair was taken by H. H. Grounds, Esq., the secretary. Mr. Thompson, the engineer, read the report, which stated that the directors had made every effort to induce the Great Western and London and North-Western Railway Companies to carry out the terms of their agreement with the West London Railway. The invariable answer, however, had been, that, in the present state of the money market, the directors could not ask the shareholders to undertake new schemes. The present balance in the hands of the company was £1417 10s. 3d. The secretary stated, however, that he had had interviews with the secretaries of the two companies, and with Mr. Parker, and he had reason to say it was the intention of the directors of those companies fully to carry out the terms of the agreement they had entered into. The report was unanimously adopted.

THE METROPOLITAN WALKS.—THE PRINCE'S LIBERALITY OF HER MAJESTY.—From the report read at a recent meeting of the board of directors of this institution, held at their offices in Sackville-street, Piccadilly, it appeared that the sayrum at Carshalton, Surrey, was founded twelve years since, for the temporary residence of the convalescent and debilitated poor, whose restoration to health is impracticable in the hospitals and at their own unhealthy and ill-provided homes; but that many be speedily effected by pure air, rest, and nutritious diet. During the last half-year there have been received 325 poor persons (being an increase of 47 over the corresponding period), and there are now 80 inmates, being the utmost that the present building will contain, and numbers of very destitute and pitiable cases are necessarily neglected. To remedy the evil, a building fund has been established, which now amounts to £1500. Her Majesty, on recently being made acquainted with the nature and object of the society, was graciously pleased to become patron, and together with her Royal Consort presented a joint donation of £100; and her Majesty the Queen Dowager and Prince Albert £20; the Royal Highness the Duchess of Cambridge, £10; and her Royal Highness the Duchess, £10 towards the general purposes of the charity. The following unostentatious act of benevolence deserves to be recorded:—A gentleman, not a gentleman called at Messrs. Strahan's, the bankers and society, and having given a common name, left £100 towards the building fund. In a few days after he (being recognised as the same individual) again called at the banking house, and left a further sum of £100, at that time giving a different name.

FREE BATHS AND WASH-HOUSES FOR THE POOR.—On Monday, the third annual meeting of the Association for providing Baths and Washhouses for the Poor, of free baths and wash-house, in Goswell-road, East Smithfield, was made by the committee. It stated that during the past twelve months there were 33,356 baths, and that 34,843 poor women had washed and dried the clothing of themselves and families; and 12,610 had ironed; making a total of 81,108 persons during the year who have participated in the benefits of the establishment, without having cost or taxed the parish a single farthing. It was also gratifyingly announced many hundreds of the poor in the crowded and wretched localities of East Smithfield with whitewashes, and the loan of pails and brushes, to cleanse and purify their dwellings, to a great extent, and prevented the spreading of fever prevailing at several periods during the year. The subscriptions for the year amounted to £289 12s., together with a loan of £47 18s., making a total of £337 10s., whilst the expenditure amounted to £334 9s. 11d., being an excess over income of nearly £30. A hope was expressed that at a time when London was threatened with the return of the cholera, the public will support an institution like this, which effects so much good by promoting cleanliness amongst the poor.

SURREY EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTE.—On Tuesday evening the anniversary of this institution, established to afford the working classes the means of self-culture, was held in King's-court Chapel, Great Suffolk-street, Borough; Apsley Pellatt, Esq., in the chair. Letters were read from the Earl of Waldegrave, Lord Ashley, the members for East Surrey, and C. Pearson, Esq., M.P., regretting their inability to attend. The chairman having advocated the objects of the institution in a forcible speech, the secretary read the report, which states that lectures and classes had been opened for such evenings in the week, the subscription being at the rate of 1d. a week, or 4s. 6d. a quarter. A day school had been opened for boys, 37 of whom attended, paying 1d. a week each. The attendance of the collecting boys had been very irregular. The total receipts from all sources was £92. 8s. 3d., liabilities and expenditure £40 12s. 6d.; balance against the institute £51 7s. 6d. The report having been adopted, E. Lee, Esq., and some other gentlemen, addressed the meeting on the merits of the institution, and the proceedings terminated with a vote of thanks to the chairman.

BUILDERS' BENEVOLENT INSTITUTION.—On Tuesday, the second annual general meeting of the subscribers to this useful charity, was held at the Freemasons' Tavern, Great Queen-street, Lincoln's-inn-fields; Hugh Hers, Esq., President, in the chair. The report for the past year congratulated the meeting on the flourishing condition of the institution. The annual sums and subscriptions for the above period amounted to £1600, and the committee confidently expected soon to be in a position to distribute relief among the necessitous members of the trade. The report was approved and adopted.

BARTHOLOMEW FAIR.—On Monday, in pursuance of ancient custom, the Lord Mayor and city authorities proclaimed the fair at the usual spot in Smithfield. The city of "Old Bartlemy," long declining, has departed there being this year only three booths for the sale of gilt gingerbread, and a few beggarly stalls for the sale of oysters and fruit. A somewhat unnecessary order has been issued by the Lord Mayor, ordering all booths, shows, &c., to be closed at eleven o'clock at night during the fair.

POSTSCRIPT.

We understand that Major General Bunbury is appointed to the command at Jamaica, an appointm ent well de-erved by his long and active services. He has been forty-five years in the service, and for six and-twenty years in command of regiments, and is the officer of 1 ngest service on the list.

ROYAL CALEDONIAN ASYLUM On Tuesday, a quarterly general Court of the Governors of this Institution was held at the board-room, in Crane-c urt, Fleetstreet; Mr. Simpson, the treasurer, in the chair Mr. Barney, the secretary, read the minutes of the late meetings of the committee and guardians The chairman then stated that they had at present only £100 in hand, and it was probable that the quarterly bill would amount to £1000. He begged to move that the directors be empowe ed to se l out £750 stock. The motion was carried unanimously, and the meeting separated.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

FRANCE

It is positively stated that General Cavaignac has received an account that Austria has ac epted he j int mediation f France and England

It is said, that at the suggestion of Ge ral Lamoricière, the represent tives who changed to the late ministry in the Chamber of Deputies have resolved that their lead r, M Odilion Barrot, sh ll seize an early opportunity of declaring in the Assembly their adhesion to the Republic.

The Paris journals of Thursday express satisfaction at the manner in which the Queen's spe h referred to foreign politics, and (the Débats in particular) express hopes that France and Eng and will be able to prevent the dangers to which European civilisation will be exposed by the results of a war.

Accounts from Toulon state that four war steamers had assem bled for Marseilles, to embark the brigade of infantry assembl ed there; but, although said to be destined for a port in the Adriatic, there appears to exist no fear that their departure is connected with any hostile project.

SPAIN

The Madrid Gazette of the 2d announces the resignation of the Count de Vistafranca as Political Chief of that city, and the appointment of the Marquis of Pen-flonda in his place. It is positively stated that Narvaez is to be the Ambassador of Spain to the French Republic.

Gen Favia, Captain-General of Catalonia, was seriously indisposed, and it was reported that he would be succeeded in his command by either Baron de Meer, Gen. O'Donnell, or Gen. Cordova.

The frigate Zafiro sailed from Cadiz for Manilla on the 28th ult., with 145 political convicts on board.

SCHLESWIG-HOLSTEIN.

Intelligence was yesterday received that the Provisional Government of the Duchies of Schleswig and Holstein have refused to acknowledge the armistice lately concluded by Prussia in the name of the Germanic Confederation.

ITALY.

We have received letters from Genoa of the 2nd inst. In consequence of the arrest and exile of M de Boncompagni, a peaceful demonstration took place in that city on the night of the 1st inst., which was I imited to the burning of the books and pap rs of the police, and the destruction of the furniture of that part of the Ducal Palace

The National Suveiner of the 4th instant states that the Austrians having imposed an extraordinary contribution of 400,000 florins (£32,000) on the city of Parma, to be paid within four months, that and the people being forthcoming within the period stated, the Croats, according to custom, had commenced pillaging the city. The inhabitants, however, encouraged by the patriotic defence of Bologna, rang the tocsin, and commenced a fearful battle, in which they were assisted by the women and children. They threw their furniture from the windows on the heads of the Austrians, and the inhabitants of the country hurried to their assistance armed with their implements of husbandry. The result of the struggle had not been ascertained.

COUNTRY NEWS.

DOUBLE COLLISION ON THE NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY

A collision took place on Tuesday morning, at Leighton Station, by which not less than 50 persons have sustained injuries of a more or less serious character. Upon the 12th, 30th, A. M. luggage train, which had previously stood on the line a number of bal-ast-tricks, headed by a powerful engine. From some cause or other, at present unexplained, this train was not moved out of the way and the coming onion was that the engine of the passage train, which was coming from London, ran into it at full speed, crushing the break-van into a thousand pieces, and strewi g the waggons about the line in every direction. The engine and number of the goods train were thrown off the rails, and were nearly in to the up-line, while several of the goods waggo s were e tirely destroyed, and their contents strewed about the railway. At the same moment, scarcely all passing time for t e few persons who were in the carriages—from the shock occasioned by the accident the York mail came up at its usual speed, and, no signal of the obstruction being display ed, the driver, Daniel Lees, ran amalong into the others caused ned by the previous collision. The effect of this second collision was to throw the engine and tender of the mail train completely across the down-line, and crush many of the carriages of the succeeding carriage.

The driver of the mail and stoker was perfectly ra nculous. The former was, however, severely injured, and is now lying at Leighton.

The passengers in the train, as I suffered more or less; but no injuries beyond a few slight cuts and bruises appear to have been sustained by any of them—a fact which, when all the circumstan es of the accident are taken into consideration, may almost be considered miraculous.

The first, in fact both collisions, took place at about five minutes past three o clock. As soon as the extent of the catastrophe was ascertained, the proceeding of which we have given an account was inaugurated, to Wolverton, to procure assistance; and before five o'clock Mr. M'Connell, the chief of the locomotive department, Mr. Bedford, the cashier of the police of the Liverpool division, and the unremitting servants of the company, returned to the spot with engines, carriages, and labourers, to assist in clearing the line. Assistance had previously arrived from Leighton, and all those persons set about to render every attention to the sufferers which could be afforded them at this station. The necessary precautions were taken to stop both the up and down trains, and the traffic on the Line was altogether suspended for several hours. So complete was the wreck, that the whole of the services of the multitude of labourers employed had failed to clear the line when the 6.15 A.M. train from London arrived at the spot, and as the only means of keeping up the communication, the passengers in that train were conducted over the scene of the accident to the York mail, those who travelled by the latter coming on to town by the 6.15 A.M., which returned to the Euston station.

It appears that the driver of the luggage train passed the station at full speed and had entered the tunnel before an observed the danger-signal of the second policeman, whose post of duty is at its northern extremity. He immediately reversed is engine; but the train consisting of 40 loaded waggons, its speed was not perceptibly diminished before he egressed from the tunnel, when he immediately saw the red lam- at the rear of the empty bal ast waggons. At this moment he had great h pe of being able to avoid the collision, were, most it is tatutory, the engine, already reversed, flew into forward gear, and carried the train directly into the waggons.

The mail in into London was detained upwards of five hours, the letters arriving at the Post office about 11 o'clock instead of 5 A.M.

Among the runs of the luggage-train t ere was discovered shortly after the accident a barrel of gunpowder, the top of the cask having given way and disclosed its dangerous contents. It was described by the directors as full of butter. The company have a clue to the party by whom it was sent, and it is to be hoped that they will visit him with the severest punishment the law allows. The bare contemplat on of what might have been the consequence of this breach of the law is dreadful

The accident at Newton Bridge, on Saturday night last, when the train ran off the line against t e embankment, has t ad one fatal result Lieutenant-Colonel James Baird, of Stirling, expired at Birmingham on Tuesday morning, from the effects of the shock he sustained on that occasion.

THE WEATHER.

The weather during the week, except on part of Thursday during a thunder-storm, has been fine. The following are some particulars of each day: On Thursday, August 31, the sky was mostly clear till noon, and chiefly overcast afterwards; between 8h. A.M. and 9h. P.M. a violent thunder-storm occurred; the l ghtning was frequently vivid, and the claps of thunder were loud and of long duration; the latter followed the l ghtning at intervals of time varying from 2" to 12" During the storm rain fell to the depth of nine-tenths of an inch; the direction of the wind was variable; and the average tempera ure of the air for the day was 57½°. On Friday, September 1, the sky was for the most part clear; the direction of the wind was N.; and the average temperature for the day was 57°. On Saturday more or less cloud prevailed between 10h. A.M. and 6h. P.M.; at other times the sky was mostly free from cloud; the direction of the wind was W.S.W.; and the average temperature of the day was 56½°. On Sunday the sky was cloudless, but, at times, the sky was partially obscured by a thin haze; the wind was variable; the average temperature of the air was 53½°. On Monday, the morning was foggy, the sky was cloudless afterwards; the direction of the wind was S.; and the average temperature of the air was 60°2. On Tuesday, the sky was chiefly overcast till after noon, and it was chiefly covered by cloud after that time; the direction of the wind was S., and the average temperature of the air was 60°. Wednesday, the sky was chiefly covered till 11 o'clock in the afternoon, and was free from cloud at all other times; the direction of the wind was W.; and the average temperature was 60½°; and that for the week ending this day was 57°.

The extreme thermometrical readings for each day were:

Thursday,	Aug. 31,	the highest during the day was	67	; and the lowest was 48½ deg
Friday,	Sept. 1,	.....	66	 50
Saturday,	Sept. 2,	.....	59	 44
Sunday,	Sept. 3,	.....	72	..... 46½
Monday,	Sept. 4,	.....	77½	 44
Tuesday,	Sept. 5,	.....	78	 49
Wednesday,	Sept. 6	.....	69½	..... 50½

For the month of August, the mean temperature of the air was 58°; the mean temperature of evaporation was 58°; the mean temperature of the dew point was 56½°.

The water mixed with the air was such in weight as to balance a column of mercury in the bent leg, t of 0·403 inch; and it was so distributed that the average weight in a cubic foot of air was 4½ grains; and the degree of humidity was 83, considering complete saturation to be represented by 100.

Blackheath, Thursday, September 7, 1848. J. G.

IRELAND.

ARRIVAL OF LORD JOHN RUSSELL.—On Friday (last week), the Prime Minister, accompanied by his lady, arrived in Kingstown harbour, in the Banshee steamer About ten minutes after 9 o'clock, P.M., the bow of the Banshee turned the eastern p er of the harbour, when Captain Wilkens of the Iron Duke steamer commenced a feu de joie, and did not cease t l he Banshee came well up to the pier. Messrs. George Rae, James Magee, James Pirn, and other directors of the Dublin and Kingstown Railway, were on the pier, and with other officials to receive his Lordship. The Lord Mayor likewise dis harged this duty, and several strangers expressed their gratification at seeing Lord and Lady John Russell To the lower orders generally did not cheer, but they did not seem to express disapprobation they would do on His Lordship and Lady Russell were then conducted to the terminus of the Kingstown Railway, where a special train was in waiting; and in eight minutes after arriving at Dublin Here again a large assemblage of persons of the middle and lower orders was present. The moment his Lordship was recognised a faint cheer was raised An attempt to get up a groan failed The distinguished visitors got into one of the Lord-Lieutenant's carriages, which was in waiting, and before five o'clock they reached the Viceregal Lodge at the Park. The Premier was visited at the Viceregal Lodge, at eleven o'clock on Saturday, by the Lord Chancellor, who remained more than half an hour. It is understood that his Lordship has accepted an invitation from the Earl of Charlemont, to pass a few days with him at his beautiful residence, Marlio, near Clontarf

THE SPECIAL COMMISSION.—The special commission for Tipperary is to open at Clonmel on the 19th instant. After the grand jury shall be sdlected and sworn, Justice Blackburne, bills of indictment for high treason will be sent before them against Messrs. W. S. O'Brien, Meagher, Leyne, O'Donoghue, and the other leaders in the insurrectionary movements in Tipperary often in custody. The grand jury will then find the bills, the prisoners will either adjourn or go into the trials of other cases, as the Irish Treason Act prescribes a certain number of days to elapse between the finding of the bill and the arraignment of the prisoner. The jurors will be taken from the grand panel of the county, and will, in all probability, be magistrates. Mr Butt, Q.C., will be one of the leading counsel for the prisoners, with Mr. Whiteside, Sir Colman O'Loghlen, Mr Holmes, and other distinguished lawyers.

SIR W. SOMERVILLE, the Secretary for Ireland, arrived in Dublin at the close of last week

EXTENSIVE EVICTIONS OF TENANTRY.—The harrowing scene described in the following communication is one of the many and various acts of cruelty which the hand of power inflicts on the poor in Ireland. The following letter (addressed to the editor) appears in the Freeman's Journal:

Gorticlern, August 30 1848

Dear Sir,—You will exceedingly oblige the undersigned Roman Catholic tenantry by publishing the following facts in your valuable jou nal;—I was called on the 30th to attend, as a witness to a dreadful scene, and sorry am I to say I performed my duty when I was announced to me that I should make haste, or the house would be thrown down on me in leaving the house I found the place crowded to excess, and in fact, the first assailants were the wretches of women and children The destroying angel had by this time levelled to the ground six houses, he burned on to the seventh, dragged forth the aspiring victims, John Reynolds, to perish on the da ghill, as I have been credibly informed The following are the names of the persons dispossessed:—Owen Reynolds, and wife, and five children John Reynolds, Cogy, and wife, and six children Pat Reynolds, and wife, and five children Edward Flyn, and wife, and four children, Pat Reynolds, and wife, and four children Edward Flyn, and wife, and three children; John Fox, and wife, and three children Pat Reynolds, and wife, and two children Michael Gilroy and wife, and one child total fifty-four souls This unprecedented scene took place in the county of Leitrim, in the county of Leitrim. To the truth of which I sign my name if yours, &c PATRICK M'GOVERN, R.C.C. Gorticlern REPEAL OF PARLIAMENTS.—A project for getting the Imperial Parliament to sit periodically in Dublin is creating some little agitation in political circles. At the head of this "movement" is Lord William Fitzgerald, brother of the Duke of Leinster. On Monday the Committee of the new Association met at the Royal Hibernian Hotel in Dublin for general purposes, but that the object of this society is to procure an arrangement by which the Imperial Parliament shall hold its sittings in Dublin during such convenient portions of each year as may be sufficient for the transaction of business more peculiarly relating to Irish affairs."—2. "That the committee meet at their rooms, 24, Abbey-street, every Monday, at two o'clock, to receive subscriptions and adopt measures for and to transact the general business of the society." Letters from correspondents were read, subscripti ns received, and the detail business of the society transacted, and the committee adjourned to Monday next, at two o'clock.

THE ARMY —"The flying column," under General M'Donald, having received orders to disperse this week the camp has been broken up, and the troops have been marched to their winter quarters. The 74th to Dublin, to encamp in their time at the station. The 66th Regiment has been ordered to Kilkenn y, from Athlone and Ballingarry The 94th, or King's Light Infantry, have received the route for Waterford. The three companies of the 94th Regiment, which remained the remaining portion of the High brigade, rejoined the head-quarters in Dublin on the 8th inst.

THE PUBLIC HEALTH —The Committee of the Dublin Sanitary Association have received the following communication:—

Dublin Castle, August 19, 1848

Sir,—Your communication of the 19th instant having been referred to the Central Board of Health, who have been requested to draw up such regulations as they may deem necessary for the purpose of checking the disease, I have to request that you will inform the committee of the Association that the board report that they have been occupied with the subject, and the regulations will be published very shortly. In the meantime, any suggestions which the Sanitary Association may have to offer will meet with the immediate and respectful attention of the board. I have also received the kind and cordial assistance of many of the members of both houses of the Act of Parliament. I have the honour to be, sir, your obedient servant

R. DARGVILLE.

THE WEATHER AND THE CROPS.—The weather continues to be quite superb The agriculturist could desire nothing more favourable. The provincial newspapers concur in the most favourable accounts of the harvest. The potato crop promises an abundance which has taken place in this respect. Harvest labour is now everywhere in active exercise, and the gathering in is looked forward to much more hopefully than it was some short time since LEASES.—Various parties, unknown beyond their own localities, are arrested from time to time, as being compromised in the late insurrectionary movement. Amongst them is Patrick O'Donnell, who was present at the "affair" of Ballingarry; as also a Liverpool Chartist, named M'Manus.

TENDINGTON ROYAL HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY.—This Society, which is under the patronage of her Majesty the Queen Dowager, held its annual exhibition on Thursday, in the gardens of the Clarence Arms. About 400 tickets of admission were sold, exclusive of the money taken at the gates. The prize of plate distributed in prizes amounted to between £40 and £50.

CITY OF LONDON REGISTRATION.—Mr M'Christie, the revising barrister, will commence his sittings at Guildhall to revise the lists of parliamentary voters for the city of London, on Tuesday, the 19th inst., at ten o'clock, A.M. It may be remembered that the number of objections taken last year to the many of persons been, retained on the lists was between 3000 and 4000 This year the objectors have been a little more sparing, the number of single objections taken being 1454. There are besides, however, 518 double objections, i.e. claimants in which objections are taken by the agents on both political sides to the same names, and which make an aggregate of 1972 objections. There are also 209 claims on behalf of parties to have their names inserted on the lists

ART-UNION OF LONDON AND THE BOARD OF TRADE.—On Tuesday morning a deputation of the council of the London Art-Union attended Lord Granville, at the office of the Board of Trade, to urge the objections which they entertain against the proposal of the Lords of the Privy Council, that prize-holders should not be limited to the purchase of works of art from the public exhibitions of the year, but be permitted to buy them anywhere, provided only that they be in the possession of an artist, and even to give commissions. Sir Denis Le Marchant, Mr. Porter, and Mr. Northcote were also present

SALE AT STOWE.

OUR Illustrations this week are of singular character and interest, and represent, with one exception, some of the beautiful specimens of cinque cento jewellery of great variety, and in which the collection of articles of bijouterie at Stowe was peculiarly rich. Although these articles were sold on different days, in the early part of the sale, we have preferred engraving them so as to appear all together; and, after noticing the subjects of our Illustrations, we shall briefly notice the principal other and smaller articles of several days' sale, and which we have purposely avoided doing till we had delineated some of them with the pencil as well as the pen.

We have selected for engraving—a phœnix; a knight on horseback; a basilisk; a bonnet; and a small cup or tazza blowing a cornet, all of the jewel in form of a phœnix is a truly beautiful specimen of cinque cento design; and in the enamel colours which adorn it great taste and harmony are displayed. The phœnix itself is of white enamel, the wings being shaded so as with gold, and the wing covers slightly marked with red The flames beneath it are, of course, red. A large diamond is in the centre of the jewel, and the remaining portions are very boldly forward, small roses of rich enamel decorating its corners. The lions' heads are of purplish tint, with the exception of their noses, which are of gold. Diamonds are set in each of the roses; and two small pearls, one pear-shaped, in gold, with borders of white enamel. Some of the scroll-work connecting the different parts of the jewel is of white enamel, other portions of red, or rose green enamel, and some of it left plain gold—the whole forming a very handsome and beauty of effect. The Maltese crosses forming the chain to the jewel are of white enamel, ornamented with gold, and in their centres rubies are set, in enamel, much raised; and the small scroll at the top is of gold, having a rose diamond in it; pearls are affixed to the lower part of the jewel. This sold for £7 15s

The Mounted Knight is a very beautiful specimen of cinque cento jewellery, made with great skill and taste. It is of gold, and the horse is covere with white enamel, excepting the mane dresses (as it is represented back), which, as also the hocks, are of gold. The mane and tail are likewise gold. Emeralds caparisons are of deep blue enamel, bordered with gold, and set with rose diamonds, in excessively raised ouches, thereby producing a great richness of light and shade. The knight is enamelled dark blue, the portions of the armour being raised and marked out in gold, and his pauldrons and elbow-plates set with diamonds The visor to the helmet—an unusual thing, by the way, is movable—is also studded with diamonds. The chain is composed of roses of red enamel, linked together, and in each rose is a diamond Pendant from the upper part of the chain, and girth of the horse, are pearls. This interesting work of art was purchased by Mr. Russell for £16 5s. 0d

The Whale or, in form of a dragon, is a singularly quaint-looking specimen of art. The body of the dragon is formed of a single piece of mother o' pearl, the head, shoulders, and feet, and termination of its tail being of gold enamelled. The ground colour of the enamel on it is also likewise deep blue, with gold ornaments upon it, and in like by rals d inches are emeralds, rubies, and topazes, the emeralds being in the triangular ouches, whilst in the oval ones are the rubies, with the exception of the two topmost, which contain the topazes. The claws of the dragon's leg is mainly blue, ornamented with gold, the claws and leather-ed head of the dog green bordered with gold, as is the foliated termination to the animal's head, and its tail. The shell is purplish, and rubies are set for the eyes. In the scroll-work under the animal a large amethyst is the principal stone, there being an aqua marine beneath it; and pearls and diamonds are pendant from the scroll-work, which is enamelled with blue, green-ish tint, and white. Two emeralds are also inserted in ouches at this part of the jewel. The bearded monster on the shoulder of the dragon, whose lower limbs terminate in elegant scroll-work, is enamelled of a purplish tint, his hair and beard being gold, his lower limbs a greenish tint, and scroll terminations blue enamelled with gold. The small figure of Cupid is enamelled, as heralds would say, "proper," that is, of flesh colour, hair, and wings, and bow of gold. The chain by which this interesting jewel is suspended are of gold, and the upper portion of ornamental work to which they are attached is enamelled purple blue, and set with a diamond. The cross for the whistle in the dragon's mouth is enamelled deep blue, with gold flowers.

The jewel made for a Benittier is described in the catalogue as of the period of Cellini, but it is more of old a date by many years, as its general character testifies; for though a beautiful work of art (some parts really exquisite), as a whole it is deficient in the peculiar charm and the utter of design which marks the Cellini class. The cup for holding holy water is formed of a single stone, an almandine, supported by two angels of gold enamelled. We should mention here that the "a mandine" is that beautiful variety of the garnet known to jewellers also as the "precious garnet," and generally as the "carbuncle." The cup at its base and upper edge is set with rose diamonds, and elegant festoons of gold flowers, set with diamonds and turquoise, are looped round its sides. The lid is massive gold, and rising from its centre is a St. of a youth, sculptured as a cameo, in jacinth, and surrounded by a gold glory, at its base are four small cameos of cherubs' heads, sculptured in amethyst and onyx, with wings radiating from the settings on which the heads rest, and these are set with diamonds and turquoise; and flowers similarly enriched fill up the vacant spaces on the lid. The angels supporting the cup are of gold, richly enamelled with colours; and the cherub's head in connexion with the cup is cut in jacinth, the wings of silver set with diamonds and turquoise. From the sides of the cup rise supports to the upper portion of the benitier; and these are decidedly of weak and ineffective design, having wings at either extre mity set with turquoise and diamonds, and ouches in all of which, no doubt, formerly, were beautiful jewels, but now in part filled with cameos of inferior workmanship The sides of these supports are filled with enamelled work, and in the centre a rose joining these two portions; and from this latter piece rise two dwarf-crosscurs, each supporting an angel, between which is a small compartment enclosing a beautiful cameo, of jacinth, of a head of the Virgin, surrounded by a glory issuing from a border of diamonds. Above this oval compartment is a group, most exquisitely modelled, of the three persons of the Trinity, the Father represented as an aged man holding an orb, symbolical of government, in his hand; the Son is holding what has been an ebony cross, the upper part being broken off; and the Holy Spirit is as the cross, in a diamond-formed compartment surrounded by a glory of gold and diamonds The back of this beautiful jewel is not so elaborately filled with gems, and instead of a repetition of the Holy Trinity, its space is filled with regens, and instead of a repetition of the Holy Trinity, its space is filled with regents, and instead of a repetition of the Holy Trinity, its space is filled with regents, and instead of a repetition of the Holy Trinity, its space is filled with regents

THE SALE AT STOWE.—CINQUE CENTO JEWELLERY.

CURIOUS WHISTLE.

PHŒNIX JEWEL.

KNIGHT JEWEL.

Lot 1471, a Gobelin tapestry curtain, after Boucher, was bought by Mr. Batterson for £37 16s. Lot 1476, a Kreahole table of rich buhl and tortoiseshell, with or-moulu masks and ornaments, was bought for 90 guineas for Mr. Peto. Lot 1478, a worked blotting-book cover, £2 10s. This book bore evidence of having been used by her Majesty when visiting Stowe, the Royal cypher being embroidered on the exterior. It was rumoured that it was bought for the Marquis of Chandos. Lot 1498, a Dresden two-handled cup and cover, beautifully painted, realised 19 guineas, though it cost the Duke but £5. Lots 1503 and 1504, a pair of superb candelabra, groups of boys supporting or-moulu lily-lights, brought 190 guineas, whereas they cost but £120. On Monday (the 16th day) was sold the first portion of the plate—the plain table articles bringing high prices; there were, however, a few ornamental lots.

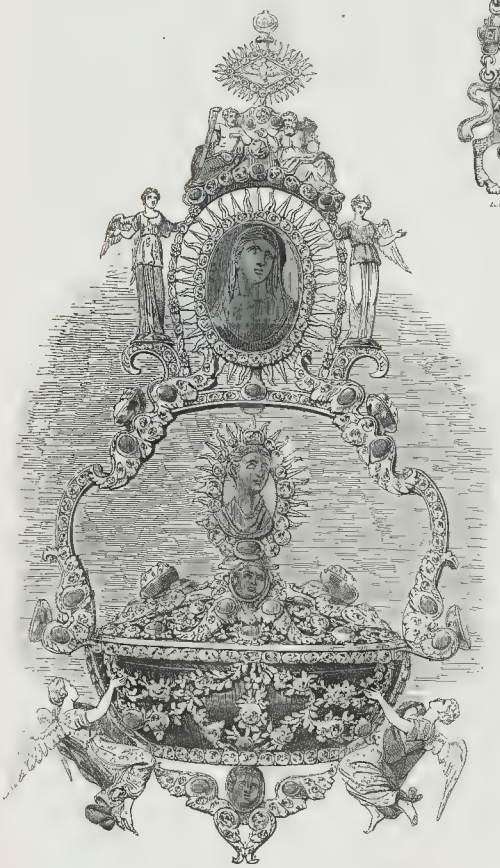
On Tuesday the articles were of higher character. Among them was a powder-flask and shot-belt presented to the Marquis of Chandos in August, 1837, by agriculturists of Bucks, in remembrance of a pleasant shooting excursion in the Moors of Auchlyne, in Perthshire; sold for £12 10s., to Lady Glamis, the mother of the Earl of Strathmore. Lot 283, an equestrian statue of the Duke of Wellington, designed by Cotterill, and executed in silver by Garrard, weighing 160 ounces, was bought by Mr Reid, of Glasgow, at 13s. per ounce. Some of the silver-gilt plate brought as much as 40s. and 45s per ounce.

Lot 323, "Napoleon's Supper Tray," consisting of a soup tureen, cover, and ewer, four dishes and covers, and eight plates and six knives, forks, and spoons, the whole about 350 ounces, after much competition, was sold, at 32s. per ounce, to Mr. Redfern.

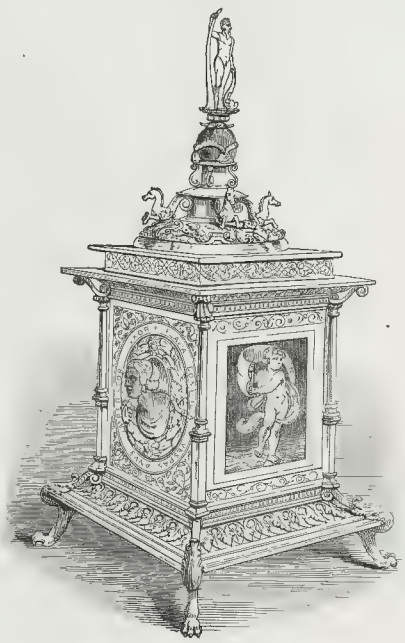
Lot 326, a superb chalice and cover, as described in the catalogue; in reality the christening cup of the present Marquis of Chandos. This lot was bought by a gentleman named Harvey at 28s. per ounce, it is understood with the view of restoring it to the family.

On Wednesday the lots were of a still more magnificent class: the tankards, salvers, vases, candelabra, and sideboard dishes were very superb. The extent which our details occupy this week, however, compel us to defer notice of the more remarkable lots until our next Number.

JEWEL—NEGRO.



BENITIER.



SILVER-GILT SALT-CELLAR.

HER MAJESTY GOING TO PROROGUE PARLIAMENT.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

THE ROYAL SQUADRON LEAVING WOOLWICH.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—SATURDAY, SEPT. 2.

Their Lordships sat for a short time, and advanced several Bills on the table a stage They were the Copper and Lead Duties B l, read a second time; the City of London Sewers Bill, report received.

COMMITTEES The following Bills passed through Committee:—The Taxing Masters (Court of Chancery, Ireland) Bill; the Slave Trade (Muscat) Bill; the Exchequer Bills Bill; the Consolidated Fund Appropriation Bill; the West Indian Colonies and Mauritius B ll; and the Savings Bank (Ireland) Bill

THIRD READINGS The following Bills were read a third time, and passed:—The Promoting Public Bills; the Stamp Duties, &c. (Ireland), Bill; the Lock-up Houses Bill; the Spirits (Dealers in) Bill; the British Spirits Warehousing Bill; the Postage on Newspapers (Channel Islands) Bill; and the Post-horse Licensing Bill

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY.

The House of Peers assembled at one o'clock.

The Royal assent was given by commission to several public and private Bills.

In Committee on the City of London Sewers Bill, the Earl of RADNOR moved an amendment to limit the operation of the Bill to two years. On a division, there were—For the amendment, 21; not-contents, 4; non-contents, 3; majority against the amendment, 1 The Bill was then passed through all its stages.

The Savings Banks (Ireland) Bill was read a third time and passed, with amendments

Their Lordships, after sitting an hour, adjourned to five o'clock.

At the usual hour sitting—

The Earl of DESART communicated a letter he had received from Lord Redesdale denying that he had made any agreement with the Marquis of Lansdowne to the effect that no opposition on the part of his party would be given to the Copper and Lead Duties B ll. All the understanding come to was, that he himself (Lord Redesdale) would not offer the Bill any further opposition

On the motion that the Copper and Lead Duties Bill be read a third time, the Earl of Falmouth proposed the omission, and their Lordships divided: For the third reading, contents, 25; non-contents, 11; majority for the Bill, 14. The Bill was read a third time and passed

The Consolidated Fund Appropriation Bill was read a third time and passed.

On the motion for the third reading of the Exchequer Bills Bill, Lord MONTEAGLE made some observations on the state of our finances, and on the proposed mode of raising the money for the deficiency. The Marquis of LANSDOWNE, in reply, thereto, made the gratifying announcement that all the accounts received from France during the past week, with respect to the crops generally, were much more favourable than those before received, and from the accounts received that day, it appeared that the potatoes exhibited a much more satisfactory aspect, and had, in fact, a new appearance, and all the symptoms of a recent growth. The noble Marquis also expressed a hope that the renewed commercial prosperity grounded on the thoroughly sound though circumscribed condition of our trade and monetary system

The Taxing Masters Court of Chancery (Ireland) Bill, the Slave Trade (Muscat) Bill, and the West India Colonies and Mauritius Bill were read a third time and passed.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

The House sat from one to half-past two o'clock

The Chairman of the Horsham Election Committee reported that Mr. Fitzgerald was not duly elected, and that Lord Edward Howard should have been returned.

The amendments made by the Lords in the Fever Act (Ireland) Bill, and the Savings Banks (Ireland) B l, were agreed to.

Sir W. CLAY, in moving that the evidence taken upon the Cheltenham election be printed, took occasion to repudiate the scandalous accusations made by Mr Craven Berkeley against him as chairman of the committee, and against the other members thereof. The Baronet intimated that he had at first thought of seeking private satisfaction from Mr. C. Berkeley, but had been advised that he would not be justified in doing so.—Lord J. HAY said he had been consulted by Sir W Clay, and, after consultation with a noble military officer, came to the conclusion that the hon. Baronet would not be justified in seeking for private satisfaction in the matter.—Lord PALMERSTON thought the general expression of disapprobation elicited from the House by Mr. C. Berkeley's unwarrantable conduct ought to be sufficient satisfaction to Sir W Clay and the other members of the committee —The evidence was ordered to be printed

Lord G BENTINCK moved for returns to verify the allegations made by him on a former occasion relative to the contradictory returns made by the Board of Trade and the Customs.—Mr. PARKER hoped the noble Lord would not insist on the required returns, as they would cause great expense In the preparation, but would be satisfied with the acknowledgment that the statements made by the noble Lord on the occasion referred to were quite correct. In fact, both the Board of Trade and the returns of the Board of Trade and the Customs, were correct.—Lord G. BENTINCK remarked, that it was not possible that his statement and the contradictory returns of the Board of Trade and Customs could be all correct However, as the truth of his allegations was admitted by the Government, he was satisfied, and would not press for the returns

On the motion of Lord G. BENTINCK, a new writ was ordered to be issued for Bolton, in the room of the late Mr Bolling

The House suspended its sitting till six o'clock

At six the House resumed, merely to receive such Bills as came down from the Lords with amendments.—Adjourned.

PROROGATION OF PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—TUESDAY.

After a most arduous and protracted session, the Imperial Parliament of Great Britain and Ireland was prorogued on Tuesday last by the Queen in person. Much interest was taken in the ceremony on this occasion from its being probably the last public act of her most Gracious Majesty previous to embarking for Scotland, whither she and her illustrious family are attended by the warmest aspirations of all classes of her loyal and devoted subjects

Long before the hour appointed for the departure of the Royal procession from Buckingham Palace, the people, in front of that edifice, and at every point along the route to the Houses of Parliament was crowded by thousands of persons, all apparently animated by a desire to testify their respect for the Sovereign. The day was beautifully fine.

The Queen left the Palace about a quarter to one o'clock, the cortège being marshalled exactly in the order observed upon previous occasions. Upon entering the state carriage the people greeted her Majesty and the Prince Consort with unanimous cheers, which were rapidly taken up and continued along the route with a genuine British heartiness that could not but have been eminently gratifying.

The route of the Royal procession from the Horse Guards to the House of Lords presented a most interesting and imposing appearance Upwards of 60 man-of-war flags sent, on the occasion from the Royal Dock-yards, floated from spars projecting from the upper windows of the house on each side of Parliament-street, while two Royal standards of enormous dimensions were suspended over the carriage-way, one at either extremity of the street, and the third midway, opposite the end of Charles-street. The effect was novel and picturesque in the extreme Indeed the spectacle presented on the occasion approached the House of Lords, appeared to us to have far surpassed any similar event that we recollect having witnessed. The dense crowds in the streets—the fashionably-attired groups that thronged the windows and balconies and filled the stands, that were, as usual, erected at every available interval along the route the rich uniforms and martial bearing of the military—the flags, emblems of England's greatness, that floated gaily over head, and the gorgeous pageant that accompanied the Sovereign, all combined to form a scene which, heightened as it was by the cheers of loyalty that filled the air, the merry peals that sounded from St. Margaret's Steeple, and the roar of the Park artillery, presented an effect of exceeding grandeur.

Precisely at a quarter past one o'clock the discharge of cannon announced that her Majesty had reached the entrance to the House of Lords. Within the House itself, the aspect of the scene at the meetings of the Peers was early filled by a numerous and brilliant audience

Their Lordships assembled at twelve o'clock, but the doors of the House were opened shortly after eleven o'clock, and the galleries and the back benches were almost immediately occupied by elegantly-dressed ladies, the front seats alone (with the exception of the Bishops' bench and the seats reserved for the corps diplomatique) being reserved for Peers. The coup d'œil presented by the interior of the house was magnificent The galleries in the body of the house seemed a parterre of beauty; and the effect of the rays of the sun streaming through the painted windows, and reflected from the gorgeous ornaments of the chambers and from the light dresses of the ladies, the prevailing colours being white and blue, was exceedingly beautiful. It realised completely the idea of the architect, and the chamber seemed indeed a fitting abiding place for the representatives of the Government of a mighty empire

Shortly after twelve o'clock the Lord Chancellor, robed, entered the house, and prayers were read by the Bishop of Hereford.

As usual, the Duke of Wellington was earliest in his attendance With the exception of the Lord Chancellor, we believe he was the only Peer present at quarter

Among the earliest Peers in attendance at the House were the Marquises of Lansdowne and Clanricarde, the Earls of Harrowicke and Minto, and the Lords Monteagle and Campbell.

The foreign Ministers began to arrive soon after twelve o'clock. Among the earliest arrivals were M. Gustave de Beaumont, the Minister of the French Republic; Mr. Barrow, the Minister of the United States; the Chevalier Bunsen the Prussian Minister; Count Kleamansegge, the Hanoverian Minister; the Turkish Ambassador, Prince Castelcicala, the Neapolitan Ambassador; and M. Callimachi, the Minister of Greece

M. Guizot, and several other illustrious foreign refugees, were likewise present

SOUTH WALES RAILWAY Lord MONTEAGLE moved that the messengers do take and report a certain Bill to them, Mr. W. Chadwick, the Chairman, and Mr John Mather, the Secretary of the North Wales R lway Company, to attend their Lordships, who id be called to the bar. The messengers having been called to the b r, stated, in answer to questions from the Lord Chancellor, Lord Cowpland, the Earl of Minto, and Lord Monteagle, that they had called last night at the respective residences of Mr. W. Chadwick and of Mr. J. Marriner, and had been told that both gentlemen were out of town, and, consequently, they had been unable to make personal service of the summonses Lord Monteagle believed that, as no personal service had been effected, it would not be legal to order that those persons be taken into custody. He would therefore move that William Chadwick and John Marriner be ordered to attend the bar of their Lordships' House on the first Monday after the commencement of the next session, and he intended to follow that up by moving for the production of all documents and accounts relating to the affairs of the North Wales Railway Company.—Lord CAMPBELL supported the motion. He believed these persons were purposely absenting themselves. The method proposed to be adopted by his noble friend to enforce their attendance was slow but sure. He would support the motion.—The motion was then agreed to.

A flourish of trumpets at twenty minutes before one announced the arrival of his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, who shortly afterwards entered the House

At a quarter after one the Park guns were fired, announcing the arrival of her Majesty at the New Palace of Westminster. The Lord Chancellor, the Duke of Wellington, and the other great officers of state, immediately left the House to receive her Majesty

Her Majesty was conducted to the robing room; and, shortly afterwards, the Royal procession entered the House. Her Majesty, who was attired in a beautiful dress of white satin, and who wore a superb tiara of diamonds, leant upon the arm of Prince Albert The crown was borne by the Marquis of Lansdowne; the sword of state by the Duke of Wellington; and the cap of maintenance by the Earl of Shaftesbury. All rose at the entrance of her Majesty, and continued standing until her Majesty, having taken her seat upon the Throne, said, "My Lords, be seated." Prince Albert took his seat in the chair on the left of the Throne

Sir Augustus Clifford, the Usher of the Black Rod, then proceeded to summon the Commons to the bar of their Lordships' House.

At twenty minutes past one, the SPEAKER, accompanied by several members, appeared at the bar, and having presented several bills, the Speaker addressed her Majesty as follows:

"Most Gracious Sovereign,—We, your Majesty's faithful Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, attend your Majesty, after a protracted and laborious session, with our last bills of supply. After a most patient and careful examination of the estimates, which, by your Majesty's commands, were laid before us, we have made every practicable reduction in the public expenditure, at the same time that we have had regard to the financial state and prospects of this country, as affected by the commercial embarrassments of the past year, and by the interruption of trade consequent upon the late political events in Europe, we have taken every precaution to secure the efficiency of all departments of the public service, and to relieve your Majesty's most gracious recommendation, which was communicated to us by the Lord Commissioner at the commencement of the session, our attention has been specially directed to measures relating to the health. It is impossible to overrate the importance of a subject so deeply affecting the comfort and happiness of the poorer classes, and we confidently hope, that, if the bills which have been passed are carried out in the same spirit in which they have been framed, they will greatly tend to lessen the amount of human suffering, and to promote the moral improvement as well as contentment of the labouring classes in dense and populous districts. Not unmindful of the condition of Ireland, or of the distressed state of the poor in that country, owing to the limited demand for labour, we have provided additional funds, arising from the repayment of previous loans, to be extended in public works; and we have also removed the impediments to the sale of encumbered estates, in order to encourage as much as possible the application of capital to the improvement of land. The spirit of insubordination which has prevailed in various parts of the country, especially in Ireland, has forced upon our consideration topics of a far more grave and anxious character. We have only to concur in those measures which have been thought necessary to secure obedience to the laws, and to repress and prevent outrage and rebellion. Deeply sensible of the value of those institutions under which we have the happiness to live, no effort on our part has been wanting to preserve them from the evil designs of misguided men, who, taking advantage of a season of temporary distress, have endeavoured to excite discontent and insurrection. We have witnessed with gratitude and proud satisfaction the unequivocal expression on the part of the great mass of the people of those realms, of attachment to their Sovereign and respect for the law; and we, as their representatives, participating to the fullest extent in these feelings, now tender to your Majesty the sincere expression of our devotion and loyalty."

The right hon. gentlemen then presented to her Majesty, for the Royal Assent, the Consolidated Fund Appropriation Bill, and the Exchequer Bills Bill.

The Royal Assent was then given to the following Bills:—Tax Copper and Lead Duties; the Taxing Masters (Court of Chancery, Ireland); the Slave Trade (Muscat); the Exchequer Bills; the Consolidated Fund Appropriation; the West India Colonies and Mauritius; the Saving Banks (Ireland); the City of London Sewers; the Local Acts; and the Fever (Ireland) Bill.

The Lord CHANCELLOR then advanced, and, kneeling, presented to her Majesty a copy of the Speech, which her Majesty read as follows:—

THE QUEEN'S SPEECH.

"MY LORDS AND GENTLEMEN,

"I am happy to be able to release you from the duties of a laborious and protracted session

"The Act for the Prevention of Crime and Outrage in Ireland, which received my assent at the commencement of the session, was attended by the most beneficial effects. The open display of arms intended for criminal purposes was checked: the course of justice was no longer interrupted, and several atrocious murderers, who had spread terror through the country, were apprehended, tried, and convicted.

"The distress in Ireland, consequent upon successive failures in the production of food, has been mitigated by the application of the law for the relief of the poor, and by the amount of charitable contributions raised in other parts of the United Kingdom.

"On the other hand, organised confederacies took advantage of the existing pressure to excite my suffering subjects to rebellion. Hopes of plunder and political change were held out to tempt the distressed, whilst the most serious prospects were exhibited to intimidate the timid. I took immediate occasion of the loyalty and wisdom for increased powers; and, strengthened by your prompt concurrence, my Government was enabled to defeat, in a few days, such machinations which had been matured during many months. I have also shown by the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland in the emergency deserve my warmest approbation

"In the midst of these difficulties you have continued your labours for the improvement of the laws. The Act for facilitating the Sale of Encumbered Estates will, I trust, gradually remove an evil of great magnitude in the social state of Ire ard.

"The system of perpetual entails of land established in Scotland produced very serious evils, both to heirs of entail and to the community; and I have had great satisfaction in seeing it amended upon principles which have long been found to operate beneficially in this part of the United Kingdom.

"I have given my cordial assent to the measures which have in view the improvement of the public health, and I entertain an earnest hope that a foundation has been laid for continual advances in this beneficial work

"GENTLEMEN OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS,

"I have to thank you for the readiness with which you have granted the supplies necessary for the public service. I have avail myself of every opportunity which the exigencies of the State may allow for enforcing economy.

"MY LORDS AND GENTLEMEN,

"I have renewed, in a formal manner, my diplomatic relations with the Government of France, and the most friendly understanding between the two countries has continued without the slightest interruption.

"Events of deep importance have disturbed the internal tranquillity of many of the states of Europe; but Belgium and Switzerland, in the south.

"I am employing my good offices, in concert with other friendly powers, to bring to an amicable settlement these differences, and I trust that our efforts may be successful

"I am rejoiced to think that an increasing sense of the value of peace encourages the hope that the nations of Europe may continue in the enjoyment of its blessings.

"Amidst these convulsions I have had the satisfaction of being able to preserve peace for my own dominions, and to maintain our domestic tranquility The strength of our institutions has been tried, and has not been found wanting. I have studied to preserve the people committed to my charge in the enjoyment of that temperate freedom which they so justly value. My people, on their side, feel too sensibly the advantages of order and security to allow the promoters of pillage and confusion any chance of success in their wicked designs

"I acknowledge with grateful feelings the many marks of loyalty and attachment which I have received from my subjects during the past year. It is my earnest hope that by cultivating respect to the law and obedience to the precepts of religion, the liberties of this people may, by the blessings of Almighty God, be perpetuated."

The Speech was read by her Majesty in a most clear and impressive manner; and her Majesty exhibited some emotion in reading those parts which related to Ireland. At the conclusion of the Speech,

The Lord CHANCELLOR came forward and said, "It is her Majesty's will and pleasure that this Parliament be prorogued to Thursday, the 2d day of November next, to be then holden; and this Parliament stands prorogued to Thursday, the 2d day of November accordingly."

The Queen then quitted the House in procession, in the same order in which her Majesty had entered it; the Commons retired from the bar; the Peers proceeded to their robing-rooms; the spectators left the House and thus ended the longest session of Parliament known within the memory of any one living.

The Royal procession immediately commenced retracing its steps, and reached Buckingham Palace at two o'clock; the enthusiastic loyalty of the people especially of the more respectable classes, occupying the windows and balconies—being again displayed in, if possible, a still more striking manner than before, and appearing to be cordially appreciated by both her Majesty and her Royal Consort.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—TUESDAY.

The Speaker took the chair at half-past twelve o'clock.

NEW MEMBER.—Mr. Bass took the oaths and his seat for Derby.

PETITIONS were presented by Mr ANSTEY, from Thomas Forde, a prisoner for debt in the Surrey prison, complaining of being imprisoned on the criminal side of the said prison; and by Mr. HUME, from a person named Cronch, against the railway system as regards the transmission of parcels.

CONVICT DISCIPLINE.—Mr HUME asked the Secretary for the Home Department, whether it was the intention of Government to make a trial of Captain Macon chie's mark system in his system of convict discipline?—Sir G. GREY, in the absence of his hon. friend, said the subject had an immense great consideration on the part of the Government; but he was not prepared to say that they would adopt Captain Maconochie's plan. The principle, however, that of extra remission for good conduct, combined with penal punishment, was approved of, and would probably be adopted in the next experiment.

IRELAND.—Several notices were then given by hon. members.

Mr. SCHOLEFIELD moved for returns of the number of evictions by order of the sheriffs of the several counties of Ireland within the last three years; also of the number of houses level ed under such authority within the same period.—Agreed to JUDGES AT CHAMBERS IN THE LONG VACATION.—The ATTORNEY-GENERAL read a letter from Mr. Justice Coleridge, stating that in his opinion, according to an arrangement made amongst the Judges in 1838, the Chief Justices and Chief Barons were liable to attend at Chambers in the Long Vacation in their turn, as well as the Puisne Judges; an opinion which had been controverted by the Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas.

THE COMBINED COURT AT DEMERARA. Mr. HUME asked the Under-Secretary for the Colonies whether any measures had been taken in consequence of the Combined Court at Demerara having separated without voting any supplies beyond the 30th of September?—Mr. HAWES said, the period for which the supplies had been voted had now expired, therefore, as there was no deficiency, there was time enough to remedy any grievance that might arise out of it. The act of the Court arose out of some ambrage taken by them at the Secretary of State having permitted the colony to make sweeping reductions in the public establishments of the colony. As he (Mr. Hawes) had said before, his noble friend was not advuse to any well-considered system of red ction or economy in the country, but could not give his sanction to such his sanction; but he could not assent to a reduction of twenty-five per cent. on all official salaries in the colony, without reference to the duties that were to be performed, which was the specific act made was a reduction of the salary of the next governor of the colony from £3000 per annum to £3500.

BUSINESS BY THE BOARD OF TRADE.—Lord G. BENTINCK gave notice for a Committee, early next session, to inquire into the correctness of the returns made by the Board of Trade on the subject of the importation of sugar, the produce of the British West Indies, into this country, in the several months of the year 1847.

THE PROROGATION.

At twenty-five minutes past one o'clock the Usher of the Black Rod summoned the House to the House of Lords, to hear her Majesty's Speech, and witness the prorogation of Parliament

The Speaker, accompanied by the members present (about 40 in number), then followed the Usher of the Black Rod.

At twenty minutes to two o'clock the Speaker returned to the House of Commons, without being, as usual, preceded by the mace, and, surrounded by several hon. members, proceeded to read her Majesty's Speech.

The Session then terminated, and the members present withdrew, after taking leave of the Speaker.

DEPARTURE OF THE COURT FOR SCOTLAND.

On Tuesday the Queen and Prince Albert left Buckingham Palace, accompanied by the Prince of Wales, Prince Alfred, and the Princess Royal, in an open carriage and four, at twenty minutes past three o'clock in the afternoon, for Woolwich, to embark for Scotland. The Duchess of Gainsborough and the Viscountess Canning, Ladies in Waiting, followed in another carriage and four; and Lord Alfred Paget and Captain the Hon. Alexander Gordon, Equerries in Waiting, occupied a third carriage. Her Majesty and his Royal Highness were conducted to their carriage by the Duchess of Norfolk, Duke of Norfolk, Earl Jersey, Lord Byron, Viscount Clifden, Major-General Bowles, Colonel the Hon. C. B. Phipps, Lieutenant-Colonel the Hon. R. Boyle, Colonel Wylde, and Colonel Bouverie.

ROYAL EMBARKATION AT WOOLWICH.

The visitors generally were admitted to Woolwich Dockyard by ticket from the Commodore Superintendent, and assembled in great numbers, there being nearly five thousand persons present. The river steamers were crowded with passengers, and as each vessel passed the Royal yacht the engines were eased and stopped, to give the visitors an opportunity of inspecting that vessel The arrangements for the preservation of order were excellent. Along the line of road leading westward from the dockyard a detachment of Horse Artillery, mounted, kept the road clear of vehicles and pedestrians. From the entrance of the yard to the landing-place the Dockyard Brigade were stationed in single file. The guard of honour was furnished by the Royal Marines

The Fingard, the flag-ship of the port, was decked out with colours, as was also the Circe, the Commodore's yacht. The Black Eagle, at an early hour of the afternoon, was moored alongside the quay near the basin, embarking the Royal carriages and luggage. The Royal yacht was the subject of general attraction, and her crew, who were attired in white, seemed a body of the finest picked men in the service. The yacht hoisted the Admiral's flag at her foremast and the Royal standard at the mizen. The Boat Brigade was moved immediately under the wall of the quay close to the landing place, ready to fire the salute.

At a quarter past 4 o'clock a royal salute of guns on the heights (Woolwich Common) announced the approach of the Royal cortege Before the salute had ended, the British ensign was hoisted down at the flag staff and the Royal standard immediately substituted. Soon after came in sight of the 11th Hussars (Prince Albert's Own) gallantly mounted, and took up a position on either side the avenue. The Brigade Major of the Royal Artillery immediately followed, bearing the Royal standard, and was succeeded by the carriage containing her Majesty, the Prince Consort, the Princess Royal, the Prince of Wales, and the Prince Alfred, and followed by two carriages and four, containing Lieutenant-General Sir George Berkeley, K.C.B., and Lieutenant-Colonel Wemyss, Aide-de-Camp in waiting. The Queen was dressed in white, and wore a bonnet trimmed with crimson velvet, and a black lace veil. Prince Albert was gallantly attired in a light drab coat and black hat. Her Majesty and the Prince immediately descended from the carriage, and entered the state barge, which was covered by Lord Adolphus Fitzclarence. The barge was pushed off from the stairs amidst the cheers of the assembled multitude; and at the same moment the bands of the Royal Marines and the Dockyard Brigade struck off "God save the Queen," and the Boat Brigade opened up the Royal salute Her Majesty first ascended the ladder of the Royal yacht, and Prince Albert waited till the Royal children, whom he lifted from the barge, were safe on board. Her Majesty's barge was lying about the after dock for a few moments, sat down on the quarter deck, and did not move till the vessel was nearly under weigh.

A day or nearly half-an-hour took place, owing to the time occupied in shipping the luggage, during which the Royal yacht was surrounded by a crowd of small boats, whose living cargoes occasionally raised loud cheers The Eclipse, Dover steam-packet; Rockwell, Gravesend steam-packet, Ipswich steamer, and several of the Woolwich steamers passed by during this interval, and saluted, as they passed, the Royal party At length, the necessary preparations were complete, and the Royal yacht, in charge of Mr. Stuart, the pilot, slipped her moorings, and proceeded slowly down the river.

The Royal squadron proceeded at half speed. The Victoria and Albert, Captain Adolphus Fitzclarence, proudly displayed the Royal standard at the main, and the Admiralty flag at the fore; and as she majestically swept past the numerous craft, was cheered most enthusiastically by the crews. She had in tow the Black Eagle, Captain Lord Adolphus Fitzclarence, steam-packet, for several minutes; but the Fairy soon came up with the Royal yacht, and took up her station at about half a cable's length on the port quarter. The Black Eagle was then cast adrift, and followed on the starboard quarter, but the Victoria and Albert very soon put on full speed, and the Black Eagle could not come up to her station. The position, however, which was occupied by the Black Eagle, was most ably and gallantly occupied by a remarkably handsome private steam-yacht, and being of similar rig to the Fairy, the progress of the trio down the river produced a beautiful effect. Of course the two small vessels were under the stern of the Victoria and Albert, and had to work expansively, and to ease almost every five minutes, to keep at a respectful distance.

As the squadron proceeded, numerous steam-vessels, crowded with passengers, cheered heartily as they swept by. A Royal salute greeted the Royal yacht at Erith, and a salute from the grounds of Mr. James Harmer, at Greenhithe, brought the Queen and Prince Albert on the quarter-deck gallery of the Victoria and Albert, where they remained until the arrival of the squadron off Gravesend, when another salute was fired from the Rosherville-pier, and the cannon from Tilbury Fort thundered forth several rounds. The clear coming-on-tapped these who had charge of the navigation to make the most of these providential circumstances, and to push on without stoppages, so that they might be able to get into free bone water in good time.

The Virago now took the place of the private yacht before mentioned, and was said to be under weigh, rockets shot up from the shore, and signal lights lasted from the flag-ship, the Queen. Three cheers came from the Royal yacht, and the signal was, instead of anchoring, as at first intended, to proceed, the Prince and the royal family, who were very beautiful indeed the moon having risen, and the stars twinkling in great brilliancy, as the night was clear and calm—to spend those who had charge of the navigation to make the most of these providential circumstances, and to push on without stoppages, so that they might be able to get into free bone water in good time.

The Virago now took the place of the private yacht before mentioned, and was said to be under weigh.

Contrary to general expectation, the squadron proceeded direct to sea, not anchoring in the Swin, as was anticipated, for the night. The outer course was taken, probably, to ensure the greatest possible security.

The Royal yacht passed Harwich at eleven o'clock at night, Lowestoffe at two o'clock, and Yarmouth shortly before three o'clock AM The track from the Thames was N.N.E., passing outside of the Goodwin, and proceeding in that direction until abreast of the Holme Sands, off Lowestoffe, when she bore due north On clearing the Newark and Cross Sands, the course was altered to N.N.W., which would bring the Royal yacht direct on to the Scottish coast.

Her Majesty passed Dundee at a half-past five A.M. on Wednesday, two other steamers in company. Weather very fine, with a light breeze from W. by N.

OUR MAGAZINE COLUMN FOR SEPTEMBER.

PLAINT. BY EBENEZER ELLIOT

DARK, deep, and cold the current flows
Unto the sea, where no wind blows,
Seeking the land which no one knows.

For all must go where no wind blows,
And none can go from him who goes:
None, none return whence no one knows.

O'er its sad gloom still comes and goes
The mingled cries of friends and foes,
Borne to the lane which no one knows.

Why should the wretch who shrieking goes
With millions from a world of woes,
Reluctant speak with it on those?

Why shrieks for help you wretch, who goes
With millions from a world of woes
Unto the land which no one knows?

Alone with God, where no wind blows,
Hid death his all-o'er—doom'd h—goes!
That God is there, the shadow shows!

Though millions go with him who goes,
Alone he goes where no wind blows,
Unto the land which no one knows.

O shoreless deep, where no wind blows!
And thou, O land, which no one knows!
That God is all, the under shore!

Tait's Edinburgh Magazine.

WHAT BECOMES OF VAUXHALL IN THE WINTER?

Amongst the unsolved ledmysteries of London, is the hybernal existence of Vauxhall. What becomes of it in the depth of winter? People see the orchestra and drifting leaves in the supper-boxes; whilst a few spectral leaves, on which the light of many a summer night's moon has rested, chase one another with pattering noise along the cow-cut promenades, or waddle about amongst the decaying torches of the brewer's gig cart. It is nap nibble to conceive anything more dreary—a wet November Sunday, in a grave family at Clapham, is nothing to it.—Albert Smith: Gaiours in London.

THE NATIONAL ASSEMBLY AT FRANKFORT

The hotels are crammed full, while, upon the strength of having six hundred and eighty-four additional individuals in the city—all of them with the unusually liberal sum of five florins, or nine shillings, a day, to spend, and that not their own—the hotel-keepers have most cunningly raised their prices. The cigar-venders should do the same, for the din of voices and the smoke of cigars are equally incessant. I was shut into a room over a famous cigar shop, and, spite of being born, you are deafened and stifled. Never, even in Germany, was there known such a consumption of tobacco and waste of breath. Words and smoke are suspiciously close together. It is the fashion now for everybody to talk politics, or, at least, to show that they may talk what they imagine to be politics, without let or hindrance, and at the top of their voices. The German cockade, black, red, and yellow, is universally worn generally in the shape of a large button, starting directly in front of the hat or cap, like a ferocious Polyphemus' eye; frequently in perfect harmony with the rough-bearded countenance beneath, but sometimes contrasting ludicrously with a peaceful little face, which looks half frightened at what it has mounted. Roses of back, red, and gold, for the use of ladies, are to be seen in the shop windows; but, whether to laugh or cry at, we never saw a woman of any kind wearing the colours at all. On the contrary, vagaries of dress are entirely confined to the other sex, especially to snubnish-looking youths, anxiously nourishing beards which show no inclination to grow, open, half-brushy, and bristling, like animal hedgehogs' hats and feathers, as if the unity of Germany all depended upon their looking like mountebanks.—Fraser's Magazine.

THE RAILWAY SYSTEM SUGGESTED.

A striking suggestion of the extension of railway communication into a "system," as connecting lines are now called, will be found in Sir Richard Phillips's "Morning's Walk from London to Kew," published in 1813. On reaching the Surrey Iron Railway at Wandsworth, Sir Richard records: "I found renewed delight on witnessing, at this place, the economy of horse labour on the iron railway. Yet a heavy sigh escaped me, as I thought of the inconceivable millions which have been spent about Malta, four or five of which might have been the means of extending double lines of iron railway from London to Edinburgh, Glasgow, Holyhead, Milford, Falmouth, Yarmouth, Dover, and Portsmouth! A reward of a single thousand would have equipped coaches and other vehicles, of various degrees of speed, with the best tackle for readily turning out; and we might, ere this, have witnessed our mail coaches running at the rate of ten miles an hour, drawn by a single horse, or unpaid fifteen miles an hour by Blenkinsop's steam-engine! Such would have been a legitimate motive for overstepping the income of a nation; and the completion of so great and useful a work would have afforded general employment, and promoted universal jubilee!" The writer of these penetrative remarks lived until 1840, so that he had the gratification of witnessing a triumph akin to his long-cherished hope.—The London Anecdotist, Part III. Inexactly and Inaccurately.

CRUELTY OF SPORTING

On the tables of the rich, as on those of more humble means in our day of 1848, the roasted pheasant and the savoury jugged hare are seen more frequently on the board than in the free of our forefathers; and so much the better. During the gastronomic indulgence presented thereby, however, few are the comments heard, few the remarks consequent on the cruelty of sport. The handsome present of game to some sympathetic dame or a couple of woodcocks, carry in the mass is to some kind-hearted critic, who has written a lead ng article on the horrors of sport, and sent an specimens to the editor, and he will not refuse your contribution, nor will the lady or critic care whether they were shot dead or strang-led; but, on the contrary, they will demolish it with gusto, and thank you for more. Sporting Review.

THE LATE MR O'CONNELL

He possessed, in an eminent degree, all the qualities which were indispensable to enable him to grapple successfully with all the difficulties which he had to encounter in the contest upon which he entered. He was of a prudential, or the 3-short degree of perfection which they were calculated to attain. Even in fa its and debt-enders were such as to favour the attainment of his favourite objects. His was not that love of truth which would have made him hesitate in giving a utterance to statements or asseverations, which, in all [illegible] when they were made, although they might prove, in the end, unfounded. It was not the delicacy which abstains from epithets by which a true-bred gentleman would feel himself disgraced; when to use them might be patriot an adversary, or excite against him the humings of the mob. Whatever the object was which he proposed to himself, he never—at least at the main end which it was to be accomplished. If his end was to be attained by plausible argument, no one could be more plausible. If, by coarse invective, an antagonist was to be annoyed or put out, no feeling of self-respect ever interposed to prevent the vituperance, or to alleviate the vulgarity, of his exasperation. He was not deficient in wit, while he abounded in broad humour, admirably calculated to catch and captivate the masses, who were often spell-bound by his eloquence. Whatever he contrived to mould to his views and purposes, by skilfully identifying them with their own.—Dublin University Magazine.

LIVING IN BELGIUM.

It is a current notion that Belgium is one of the cheapest countries in the world, but a very erroneous one. Purposes of economy are much better answered by residence in France. All the necessaries of life are infinitely better in France than Belgium; and, although of some of them the price may be nominally lower, in the well-cultivated country, the French weights and measures are so advant geous in contrast with the Belgian ones, that, to use familiar parlance, you get twice as much for your money. Indeed, rent and fuel are much higher and made substantially dearer than in France, and all groceries at far higher prices than in England. In a word, the reputation which Belgium once enjoyed as a country in which a very limited, were as far as a very comfortable fortune, is fast becoming a thing of the past; and railways, that had far to make all the ends of the earth meet, diminish the facilities which economists once possessed for making both ends meet. To complete this picture of a familiar sense, wherever one of bifurcate lines of ribbed iron stretch forth to clench whole provinces in a foremoon. Dolman's Magazine.

ORIGIN OF THE DIAMOND.

Dr. Pettsholdt, who is the most recent writer on this subject, believes that, according to the present state of our knowledge, the diamond is product of the newest geological period, and results from the slow decomposition of vegetable matter in the state of solution. This problem is not to be controlled matter in which it is commonly found is really the matrix. It is unproduced, thus favouring the popular notion in the Kas Index [illegible] fashionable really prior to the soil. That the gem was once in a wet condition, appears probable from its frequently containing inclosed [illegible] organic, some of which even exhibit the vegetable cellular texture. Perhaps that the accumulations of soot on the wick of a badly-burning tallow candle frequently show a tendency to crystallize in the octohedral form of the diamond, when the combustion of the material is retarded; the resemblance of the facets of which is very similar to an envelope of a letter, and probably gave birth to the popular phrase, on seeing such an appearance, that "There is a letter in the candle." Such fragments are often considerably harder than ordinary soot.—Sharpe's London Magazine.

AFRICAN CHARACTER.

Europeans receive generally a very [illegible] impression of Africans by what they have read of faithful Friday in "Robinson Crusoe," or what they have seen at an amusing exhibition of some pretended Ethiopian Serenaders. The result of such a slight investigation is no doubt in favour of the African barbarians, who are supposed to be faithful, very funny, and entirely harmless, in the same way that a Cockney would judge the habits of the peasantry by seeing in the opera ballets shepherds and shepherdesses with white satin shoes and silk stockings. The style of a nymph in an eclogue differs somewhat from the phraseology of a Billingsgate salad [illegible]. The murdering of most all the British explorers and the Kaffir war have given sufficient proof that the Africans are at least as treacherous a people as the New Zealanders.—Simmonds's Colonial Magazine.

THE THEATRES.

OLYMPIC

The management of this little theatre deserves every credit for the untiring industry displayed in providing novelty for so many of the play-going publicat so much in London; and it is pleasant to add that the spirit displayed meets with an adequate return. The house is nightly filled, and nothing can go off better than do the performances. Mrs. Stirling has been added to the company, and made her first appearance here on Monday, on which evening also two new pieces were produced, the first, a very cleverly written and admirably constructed drama, in two acts, called "Time tries all," and the second a very broad farce, with the quaint title of "What to Eat, Drink, and Avoid." The drama is written by Mr. Courtenay, a gentleman connected with the theatrical and literary world, whose friends have long anticipated future distinction for the author. It is a natural story of love and fi tation, nicely imagined and well told; and furnished Mrs. Stirling with a character peculiarly suited to her, which she played in a very graceful and unaffected manner, winning golden opinions from a crowded audience. Her delivery of the "tag," in which was contained a little distinct advice for the ladies and gent emen, was in nce a piece of speaking as we have heard for some time. She was ably se onded by Mr Leigh Murray whose bearing is alway that of a gentleman accustomed to good society—Mrs. Fitzwi, Mr S Cowell, and Mr. F Vi our. The applause was loud and frequent, and very vigorous at the fa l of the curtain, when the author articles had to reappear. It was said in the theat e that the piece had been lying about at several of the other houses for some time. If this be true, we can only say that the managements betrayed some short-sightedness in letting it go out of their ha .

The farce is written by Mr. Brough, the author of the burlesque on "The Tempest," now running with great success at Liverpool. It is of the broadest description; the chief interest lying with Mr. Peckham Wry (Mr. Compton), who believes his servants are in league to poison him; and they, in their side, believe their master to be mad. Hence arise many awkward contretemps, terminating of course in a satisfactory explanation. The dialogue abounds with comical phrases and pointed allusions, worked with much humour; and as the pieces of this kind probably last a good after the ordinary dinner hour, they will rears of laughter. Mr. Brough has made a capital debut in the London world of letters.

MARYLEBONE.

The affairs of this theatre still go prosperously before the wind. On Monday eve ing there was not a spare nook from which to see Mr. and Mrs. Keeley in "Mark Chesterleif," which has been very carefully produced, and well played by the stock company. The humour of Young Barley told as well as ever; and Mrs. Gamp's tea scene, with Betsy Prig, threw the pit into ecstacies. Mrs Johnstone, however, who played the nurse so well between ar Bartlemy's, somewhat endangered the success by her over-act ng, and several of her own interpolations might have been dispe sed with. Dickens is not likely to be improved by an actor's "gag." Miss Keeley sustained the character of Merry Pickaxe[illegible]

After this the popular burlesque of "Open Sesame" was brought out, and with a completeness certainly equal, if not superior, to its original mounting at the Lyceum. Mr. and Mrs. Keeley played their original characters. Miss Keeley, Copia; Miss M. Cooke, the "exquisite" captain, Abdallah; and Mr. G. Cooke, Ali Baba. Thirty-nine young ladies nar ched their seventy-eight legs about the stage as forty, and in the cavalcade princess we e splendidly sung by the characters. The performance altogether reflects the highest credit upon the compact troupe of this theatre and the general management. All the points were well given; and we may parti ularise a young lady named Gilbert, as speaking her lines with an effect and intelligence not often found in those amused to delver burlesque dialogue.

Mr Herman, whose performances we noticed at length when given at the Haymarket, has been a tonishing the natives of the transpontine districts of the Surrey with his wonderful feats of legerdemain, mechanical trickery, and conjuring in general. To those who have not seen his great master, Robert-Houdin, his performance is of the most extraordinary description.

Miss Julia Bennett, the favourite actress at the Haymarket, was married on Saturday last to Mr. Jacob Barrow, of Bath, a gentleman well known in the amateur theatrical circles.

The Pic Nic closes forthwith, to reopen at the beginning of October: and the LYCEUM, it is said, will commence its season about the 15th of the present month.

VAUXHALL GARDENS have been again crowded this week; so has CREMORNE, at which place some sea lions and lionesses, or rather seals, are exhibiting; and the numbers at the SURREY ZOOLOGICAL GARDENS are beyond calculation.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

Interpone tua interdum gaudia curis.

No one will dispute the philosophy of our thesis, though the proper way to go about it has been a vexed question since the beginning of the world, and will, most probably, remain so to the end of it. Therefore, without entering into a discussion we will assume that in the present generation it means "Go to Doncaster Races next week." On this presumption, it is lawful and right to inquire what is likely to come of the visit according to the doctrine of chances? The discovery of the longitude, or the perpetual motion, would be a trifle in comparison with the discovery of the longest and shortest meaning is always the signal for a movement of some sort or other. Sometimes it is serenaded with soft symphonies—as when the Corporation decrees a thousand pounds for a bonus to the sports; sometimes (or, more properly to speak, very often) it is introduced with a dirge as the accompaniment to some flagrant anticipation, as when but here illustrative cases rise in naturally, and the reader needs none of our assistance to point the moral.

It used to be one of the peculiarities of Doncaster, that the value, or rather the [illegible] [illegible] you required was exactly one-and-twenty shillings. A guinea was so far your dinner; so was your Stand ticket; so was any othe. little matter you might want: in short, one pound one was its "Open Sesame." This was here time for the natives. Those were the days before the days of a holiday resource; now it has become a "dreadful trade" the most neck or nothing going; and instead of a pastime where "good digestion waits on appetite," it is the especial occasion of gastric and gastric-nervous misery, and brandy. The Ordinary's "occupation's gone." T at stout middle-aged man in the white hat, pepper-and-salt paletot, and a profuse perspiration, is a cheesemonger in Little Britain. Formerly he used to go down every day for the early as the Leger came round; it was good for two bottles of port, and never rose from table till it was time to go to the play. He has now as little stomach for food as for the polka. He drew four-and-twenty tickets the day before yesterday in a St. Leger scheme, whereof the prizes are to the tune of one hundred and thirty-seven thousand pounds; and if he wins, "why shouldn't he come in for London in the place of Sarah Bothwell?" Do you suppose a person in such a position has a fit attendre for beef and beer?

The cynosure of Doncaster is the race for the St Leger—an event that comes off within a space of three minutes—a period of time which constitutes the meeting for many-nine of every hundred that resort to it. How will those three little moments speed on Wednesday next?—that is the question.

The talent are agreed that the Derby was much under the usual average of that stake. Whatever influence the unkindly weather of the summer had upon the running of Sarpiice, Spring Jack, and other great creations of Epsom memory, no feeling of self-respect ever interposed to bare best intimation by bad—or, at least, indifferent. A filly is now first favourite for the Leger. Mares that could not run up for the Derby have won its great match—viz., Pyrrhus the First, Cotherstone, and Nutbourne. As it came up in paper for the Two Thousand Guinea Stakes, for which she had nothing to beat; and the other day the 4bot St. Leger—defeating Fitzadmiral that defeated Distaff—a [illegible] [illegible]—that defeated Spring Jack, and so forth to the end of an instructive racing chapter. But, as we stated last week, Lord Stanley does not pledge himself to run Cameron for the St. Leger but he will With what I [illegible] [illegible] As it comes

THE MUSICAL FESTIVAL IN WORCESTER CATHEDRAL.

Oh, come every one that thirsteth," was also finely rendered by the Misses A. and M Williams, Sims Reeves, and Machin. The beautiful execution of the tenor airs by Lockey in this oratorio is well known.

THURSDAY.—Of the second concert last night, of the third performance this morning, of the third and last concert this evening, and of the "Messiah" to be given to-morrow, as the closing programme of the Festival, I shall forward the details in a communication for next week's publication, in which will be included a general review of the meeting, with some suggestions for the consideration of the future committees of management. The collection at the doors yesterday amounted to £383 1s., being £50 more than on the second day of last Festival. There were 1100 present, of which the company in the nave (the highest-priced seats, 10s.) formed more than one-half the number. The western gallery seats, at 10s., were also well occupied, but the aisles, at 5s., were not so well filled. For the Concerts, the tickets are 10s. for the floor of the hall, and 5s. for the gallery.

Amongst the company present at the performances were, the Lord Bishop of the Diocese, the Bishop of Gloucester, the Bishop of Bath and Bristol, the Earl and Countess of Beauchamp, Lady Anne Beckett, Dowager Marchioness of Ely, Lady Anne and Lady Catherine Loftus, Dowager Viscountess Gort, Lady M. Cocks, Lord Southwell, the Dean of St. Asaph, T. C. Whitmore, Esq., M.P., Lady Amstruther, Sir T. and Lady Winnington, Sir Robert and Lady Throckmorton, General Lygon, M.P., Lord Leigh, &c.

NEW CHURCH OF ST. MARY, EWELL.

THIS handsome edifice was consecrated a few days since by the Lord Bishop of Winchester. Ewell, it may be as well to premise, is the head of an ancient and extensive deanery in Surrey. It lies about thirteen miles from the General Post-Office, on the Worthing road: its old church, built by the wayside, was an unsightly structure, and becoming dilapidated, it has been taken down, and rebuilt upon a new site near the old churchyard, given by the Rev. Sir G. L. Glyn, Bart., lay Rector and Vicar.

The first stone of the new Church was laid on the 26th of June, 1847. The plan consists of a nave, about 66 feet in length, and 24 feet in breadth; a chancel, 29 feet long by 24 feet wide: north and south aisles, about 12 feet wide, a chancel aisle on the north, and a vestry on the south; with an engaged tower at the western end of the north aisle; and a south porch, which is the principal entrance.

The exterior of the Church is faced with Swanage stone: the quoins and ornamental features are worked in Bath stone. The roofs are covered with plain tiles, with slightly ornamented cresting.

The earliest style of the Decorated or Middle Pointed Architecture is adopted, of simple character; the heads of the windows being filled in with geometrical tracery of various designs.

Our View shows the south side, porch and vestry, and the west end, with a window of four lights over the gallery; together with the western face of the tower, with the clock placed under a penthouse or canopy of stone.

The extreme height of the tower, to the top of the angular pinnacles, is about 88 feet.

The east end of the chancel has diagonal angle buttresses; and a five-light window, with a foliated circle in the apex of the gable, which is surmounted by a cross.

Internally, arcades, supported by alternate circular and octagonal stone pillars, connect the side aisles with the Church.

The roofs are of open timber framing, lined with boarding; curved wall ribs springing from stone corbels in the chancel and nave.

The area of the Church is occupied with low sittings, worked in deal; and there is a western gallery. The whole of the wood-work visible is stained. The paving is of Staffordshire black and red tiles. The communion chairs, velvets, and other fittings of the Church and vestry were presented by Lady Glyn, with the exception of the table.

The accommodation, including that in the chancel and the seats appropriated solely for children, amounts to 945 sittings, 497 of which are free.

The cost of the building itself will be rather more than £7000, £1000 being raised by a parish rate, and the remainder by subscriptions collected by the Vicar, the Rev. Sir G. Glyn, aided by the Church Building Societies.

The architect is Henry Clutton, Esq., of Whitehall Place. The builder is Mr. G. Myers, of Ordnance Wharf, Lambeth; and the glazing and staining are by Mr. Killich, of Ewell.

This new Church will afford double the accommodation of its predecessor. At the consecration, the Bishop of Winchester preached an eloquent sermon, from Haggai, ii. 7, to an overflowing congregation; after which a collection was made of £734 12s. 10½d., including £100 munificently given by Thomas Alcock, Esq., of Kingswood Warren, M.P. for East Surrey. A debt of nearly £400, however, still remains; and, it must not be forgotten that Sir George Glyn has liberally made himself responsible for the payment of this large balance.

EWELL (NEW) CHURCH.

SUPERB EPERGNE.

THIS very graceful group of table ornament has just been completed for the Medical Officers of the British Army, as an ornament for the Mess-Table of the Staff, at Fort Pitt, Chatham. It is manufactured in electro-plate by Messrs Elkington and Co., of Regent-street; and it is a fine specimen of the perfection to which the patentees have brought this beautiful art. The value of the group is 100 guineas. It bears the following inscription:—

EPERGNE FOR THE MEDICAL OFFICERS OF THE BRITISH ARMY.

"This Epergne, after a design by Staff-Surgeon G. R. Darnell, was purchased with the surplus of a sum subscribed by Officers of the Medical department of the Army for a Portrait of the late James Forbes, M.D., Inspector-General of Hospitals, the Founder of the Medical Staff Mess at Fort Pitt. June, 1848."

The composition is spirited and characteristic. Upon the base is a wounded soldier; a medical officer is endeavouring to relieve his sufferings, while a comrade supports the poor fellow. The glass dish for flowers, &c., is supported conically by a bamboo and a native of a northern forest.

GRETNA-GREEN MARRIAGES.

A Bill introduced into Parliament in the late session, "to amend the law of Scotland affecting the Constitution of Marriage," was read a second time, but then withdrawn; the Lord Advocate undertaking to reintroduce the measure at a very early period next session. One of the provisions of this Bill is to put a stop to the notorious Gretna-Green marriages, by enacting "that if any person not authorised to solemnize marriage by the laws of the established Church, or the rules or practice of the communion to which he may belong, shall profess to be and act as a clergyman in the solemnization of any marriage, he shall be guilty of an offence, and be punishable by imprisonment not exceeding the period of two years," &c.

The Gretna-Green practice has, doubtless, been regarded by some persons as a vulgar eccentricity rather than as a valid proceeding. The truth, however, is that in Scotland nothing further is necessary to constitute a man and woman husband and wife, than a declaration of consent by the parties before witnesses; or even by such a declaration in writing, without any witnesses, a marriage is considered binding in all respects.

"GRETNA-GREEN."

Still, a marriage in Scotland, not celebrated by a clergyman (with the exception of those we are about to mention), is rarely or never heard of; a result of the feeling in favour of a religious celebration of the contract, which would look upon the neglect of that solemnity as disreputable. What the Scottish people, however, eschewed as evil, the more lax English, under certain circumstances, did not fail to avail themselves of; and the rigid Marriage Act of 1754 had not been many years in force, before "Love found out the way" of evading its enactments, still under the mask of playing propriety. It was only requisite that the knot should be tied in Scotland, to set at defiance parents and guardians; for matches so made appear to have been almost exclusively "stolen" or "runaway," and the parties all English. To enter Scotland was sufficient; and hence such unions are called "border marriages."

The first of these illicit stations, Gretna, is situated nine miles north-west of Carlisle, and is the first stage in going from Longtown, in England, to Annan in Scotland. Peumant, in 1771, described couples as married here by a fisherman, a joiner, or a blacksmith, at from two guineas a job to a dram of whisky.

Some twenty years since there were two rival practitioners. Upon an average, three hundred couples were married in the year, and half a guinea was the lowest fee charged. Chambers tells us that the trade was founded by a tobacconist (not a blacksmith, as is generally believed), named Joseph Paisley, who, after leading a life of profanity and drunkenness, died so lately as 1814. The common phrase, "Gretna-Green," arose from his first residence, which was at Meggs Hill, on the common, or green, between Gretney and Springfield, to the last of which villages, of modern creation, he removed in 1791.

In 1815, the number of marriages celebrated at Gretna was calculated in Brewster's "Edinburgh Encyclopædia" at 65, which produced an annual income of about £1000, at the rate of fifteen guineas each; fashion having, in some degree, taken under its shelter the knots tied here.

LAMBERTON TOLL-BAR, NEAR BERWICK-UPON-TWEED.

An attempt was made in the General Assembly of 1826 to have this shameful system of fraud and profanity abolished, but without effect. "It is impossible," says Chambers, "to use terms of sufficient reprobation and abhorrence in alluding to the base panders, from the innkeepers of Carlisle to the kennel boys of Springfield, who make it the means of supporting their villainous and contemptible existence."

Dr. Dibdin, several years since, suggested that the only available and effectual remedy would be a statutable declaration against the legality or validity of such matches; and then the fisherman's "occupation's gone." This purpose will, in all probability, be answered by the provision in the measure we have already referred to.

The second station we have engraved is of less notoriety than Gretna: both are situated nearly upon the Border; Gretna being at the southern, and Lamberton at the south-eastern, extremity of Scotland; and the latter at about a mile north of Berwick-upon-Tweed. The "Bar" is a small ale-house; but, doubtless, sufficiently capacious for its purpose. Upon the wall is scribbled the following doggerel:—

"My fluttering breast bespeaks a hope,
A wish for happy days
May Hymen bless our vows,
And prosper all our ways."

PARIS FASHIONS FOR SEPTEMBER.

As the hope of tranquillity begins to revive, and the horizon of commotions becomes less clouded, in high society, in France, marriages are now projected; whilst, with a small number of exceptions, they hardly thought of marrying during our days of trial and storm, except in the middle classes. Brilliant alliances have given a new development to fashion. In the spring, ribbons enriched every coiffure, to the great detriment of flowers: this fashion, at the end of summer, has entirely changed, and the prettiest bonnets of white or light-coloured tulle are decorated with honeysuckle, muguets, wild roses, and other flowers. The colzeas begin already to attest the approach of autumn. Silk dresses replace those of barèges and muslin; china crape shawls succeed the various kinds of mantles; and drawn silk bonnets are most fashionable. Half light, half sombre tints have the preference over bright colours; they are not yet dark, but they are no longer pale. Our Engraving affords a correct idea of Parisian dress at the present epoch. One of the costumes consists of a straw-coloured silk bonnet pékin, ornamented with yellow wild roses; a square shawl of white china crape, embroidered with large yellow roses; and a silk dress, bleu de Roi, brocaded with shaded satin. The high dress is in the form of a pelisse, open up the front, ornamented with a frisé, indented with coquilles of ribbon; coquilles, forming large rosettes, are also placed up the front, between the notches. A lace jockey, with a small lace collar turned down, completes this toilette.

PARIS FASHIONS FOR SEPTEMBER.

Next is an open-shaped Tuscan bonnet, trimmed outside and in with wild flowers; an Italian taffeta silver grey dress, with three flounces. The dress is made à gaunge, the sleeves tight to the wrist, the flounces fuller than they were in the summer. The mantle (with sleeves) is of peach-coloured satin, covered with lace, plain in the centre, and a deep embroidered border; cuffs of wide lace fluted over the hand; the collar of lace. Hazneteus shoes; silk stockings (here we may add that silk stockings begin to be rigorously essential for every toilette). The general adoption of shoes has rendered this aristocratic chaussure necessary for all ladies who wish to be perfect in their mise.

The little girl in the group has a straw bonnet à la Watteau, with a small round crown trimmed with wide velvet. A large rosette of velvet to match is placed above the coiffe de cheveux. The silk dress is trimmed with puffings of the same material; the skirt short, so as to show embroidered trowsers and a mantle to match the dress, trimmed with puffings, fastened at the waist with bow.

A blouse carrée à la Raphaël, with a leather belt. A Cashmere cap the colour of the blouse, surrounded with a piece of wide velvet to match; the visor of japanned leather—form à la Médée.

Toilette for a nurse: A brown merino dress, made high; a little ribbon for the neck forming a double nœud serré; a small tulle cap on the back of the head, ornamented with rosettes of ribbon; a long white apron, with pockets; white linen cuffs.

THE PROGRESS OF A BILL.

BY W. BLANCHARD JERROLD
ILLUSTRATED BY KENNY MEADOWS.

CHAPTER I.—THE BILL IS ACCEPTED.

THE genealogical tree of which Mr. Julius Claver Macfum was a sprig was an old, old piece of vegetation, at least so said Mr. Julius Macfum. If the historian may rely upon the testimony of this gentleman, the Macfums came to England with the Conqueror; and, if the characteristics of this member of the family may be taken as a fair specimen of the Macfums, I should judge that Julius was right in his asseveration. Julius Macfum was not a man of education, nor was he possessed of any wonderful talent, but he contrived to m[illegible] a very decent figure in the world, nevertheless. In the first place, he was never seen twice in the same waistcoat a fact sufficient to establish any man's reputation in genteel society. And then, he was more moustachio and talked about the Maccabæans in Music. He was dependent upon some unseen uncle, who forwarded him periodical remittances, and gave him to believe that he would leave him the bulk of his property. He had lately been introduced to Mr. John Henry Pursey, and had taken this young gentleman in hand. Fortunate young Pursey! John Pursey was a young, and, need it be added, an inexperienced man, for he had married! He was not in brilliant circumstances, as may be inferred from his early marriage, for it is always your needy young men who settle in t el green youth.

THE BILL IS ACCEPTED.

He was a clerk in the City, and rented a seven-roomed cottage in the neighbourhood of Chelsea, where he ensconced his wife and one servant, and where he usually spent his evenings and his Sundays For six or eight months after his marriage, this modest life was his world: but by degrees a longing for some change, some excitement, to vary the monotonous quiescence of this domestic bliss, stole over him, and he wandered forth into the night haunts of London, in one of which he became acquainted with Mr. Julius Macfum And Mr. Julius, in the sereneness of his heart and the emptiness of his pocket, determined to test the truth of his protégé's soul to try whether he had discovered one trustiness among the selfish and unfeeling souls that peopled London. And Pursey, elated with the condescensions of his mustachioed friend, vaunted the enthusiastic nature of his new acquaintance to his co-clerks, with the air of a man who had made an important discovery in the world: but by degrees a longing for the new friends should take a chop together. Macfum would have asked Pursey to his club, only he wished for a quiet evening, and he knew that he should meet Lord Condiment there, who would dine upon his supping with him; so it was arranged that they should dine at the Café de l'Europe, in the Haymarket, where Macfum assured his young friend they would get a first-rate steak and potatoes as ever he had eaten in all his continental peregrinations. The friends met as agreed. Pursey was punctual to his appointment; but Macfum was half an hour after his time. He had been detained at the Carlton, and had just left that bore, Sir George Gaffle, the Mall. I know it, however, to be a positive fact, that Macfum paid the toll-keeper of Waterloo-bridge the sum of one halfpenny, being the toll for his passage over that fabric, not a quarter of an hour before his arrival at the café. I shall not, after the fashion of certain novelists, describe the hissing chops of which the friends partook. I will simply mention the fact that Macfum insisted upon standing a bottle of the landlord's finest port, as a sedative after an ample dinner. And then began that lazy conversation in which Englishmen usually indulge after their principal meal

"This isn't a bad glass of wine," ventured Pursey.

"Humph! ah!" said Macfum, tasting the wine at intervals, and holding the glass to the light; "I've been spoiled lately."

"How so?"

"Why, I've been spending a few weeks with Lord MacFleming, in the north of Scotland, late, and he has some of the most magnificent port, I think I may say, I ever tasted. A fine dry wine that cleans the mouth. If I may be allowed the expression. It was scarcely so pure a wine, now I call it to mind, as that sent to an uncle of mine in India the ungrateful old fuller"

"What! did he pronounce it bad?"

"Oh no! not for the old gentleman! He wrote back an indignant letter, asking me if I thought half a pipe of wine (though he acknowledged that it was in fine condition) was not a shabby present to send to a relative who had been as good as a father to me. The rich old Indian imagine that we poor devils ever here can make money as fast as they."

"Is your uncle an Indian merchant?" asked Pursey.

"Come, you're not taking care of yourself—Hi. My uncle a merchant, eh? Well, I scarcely know what he calls himself; but of this fact I'm pretty certain, he has heaps of money I take him to be an obese old sensualist, who lies all day under a tent, and is fanned by a brace of perspiring negroes. He's unmarried, and I'm the only relation he has in the world. You don't know how exciting it is to be a member of a rich consumptive family to see first one die, then another, and to be compelled at last to represent the entire family oneself."

"And the family estate," interposed Pursey

"You sly rogue!" and the condescending Macfum poked his young acquaintance in the ribs. "Yes, and the family estate—that's a consolation, certainly Within the last two years I have lost nine relations—no great loss, certainly, as relations go"

"My dear Mr. Macfum!" exclaimed Pursey, staring with astonishment

"My dear boy, I spoke sarcastically—it's a habit of mine. But you will allow, in common with all the world, that relations are great bores. They do take such deuced liberties with one. Sir, I would exterminate the whole race of uncles and aunts (cousins I don't count as relations); they're merely slow continentals, with a man of sense avoids—they are such insufferable bores: and uncles, we have agreed to a man at the Carlton, that they are tyrannical old humbugs."

"Do you include your uncle in this sweeping condemnation?"

"Hang it! I scarcely know. The old fellow used to behave himself in the most liberal manner. At one time I thought him the most generous old fool on the face of the earth; but then of late he has grown so confoundedly close, that I don't know how to treat a gentleman. Last year he got some old crotchet into his head, and were he would cut off my allowance. I wrote to him, and told him emphatically, that as a gentleman and a man of honour I could not consent to be treated like a youth of twenty; and then the stupid old fellow returned me the humblest answer in the world, enclosing me a cheque for double my usual allowance. Rather handsome of the old boy, certainly! But then he's got a confounded good-natured fellow, but the worst of him is he's so awfully proxy. For instance, when I was in the same strait, last year, as I was just now telling you, Sir George offered to lend me a hundred pounds during a few days, merely to oblige a friend of mine. To this I objected, as any considerate man would object to borrow cash of his friend if he could do without, so I frankly told him that I couldn't think of using his money, but that if he would put his name to a bill for me it would answer the same purpose, and not put him to the inconvenience of drawing upon his banker's. And so the matter was arranged. But let us talk upon another subject. I'm boring you with these personal matters. Have you been to the opera yet?"

Pursey, who believed with many of his class, that if he allowed he had not been to the opera that season he would be set down by the habitués as a vulgar fain, saved his character by telling a lie. He asserted that he was at the opera on the opening night.

"In the omnibus-box?" asked Macfum, carelessly

"No: in the pit"

"What say you, shall we lounge in there to-night? I can pass a friend."

"What pit sure" And the wicks that were darkened from Pursey's eye betrayed the flutter at his heart—showed to his friend that it was no common occurrence to aim to visit the opera.

"I'll introduce you to Lord Condiment; I think you'll like him."

Henry Pursey gladly assented to this proposition He was on the high road to distinction. To shake the hand of a live Lord! was not this to reach the summit of human ambition?

"Waiter, another bottle of port. Do you ride much, or are you too much occupied with your mercantile affairs"

"I don't find much time for riding," returned Henry, anxious to avoid another falsehood, yet without sufficient strength of mind to acknowledge his ignorance of horseflesh.

"No, I suppose not; but still you use spurs now and then?"

"Oh yes, now and then." Henry Pursey's relatives could have informed Macfum, that his (Pursey's) knowledge of horseflesh was limited to an occasional canter upon the pensive donkey at Rockbrandy, for the acquirement of which of those persons who do not object to broken knees in their horsefleshs, and are not particular as to grooming.

"Gentleman has some first-rate flesh As you're rather a judge, he will be glad to see you manage one of his mares If we meet him to-night, I'll make an appointment with him for Sunday morning. Will that day suit you?"

"I'm afraid I'm engaged on the Sunday," returned Henry, anxious to avoid a display of his equestrian awkwardness before a peer of the realm, yet loth to lose so glorious an opportunity of parading himself in the company.

"Well, we can arrange a day when we meet Condiment" Here there was a pause in the conversation Presently Macfum's eye caught the date of the month suspended against the opposite wall. He filled his glass hastily, and again read the date. "Bless my soul!" he then exclaimed. "Walter, is that the right date of the month?"

"Yes, sir," answered that important functionary

"Why, hang it, Sir George leaves town to-night, then. Waiter! fetch me a seven and-sixpenny bill stamp directly"

"Yes, sir," again volunteered the humble individual addressed as waiter, as he dis-appeared with the money

"Hang it, what an ass I am. I've been thinking that this was the thirteenth or 14th Sir George leaves town to-night, the fifteenth. He's almost the only man in the world, of whom I could ask so delicate a favour. But I may yet catch him at the Carlton. He said he should take a chop there at six. Do e take this, I wish for a few moments, my dear boy, I'm only going round to the Carlton. I shall just catch Sir George if I run for it."

And Mr. Julius Macfum rushed into the street, leaving Henry to enjoy the remainder of the wine and his own vain reflections. "Well, I haven't been under as all my life," soliloquised the youth. "I've done it at last. I wonder what Mr. Macfum could get me a ticket for. If Macfum can't, I should think Lord Condiment could, easily. Macfum is a deuced good fellow: there's no mistake about that. What would Mary say, if she could see me hand L. Lloyd a half the money of the bill and I to have the honour of being introduced to Lady Condiment and Sir George's wife; but how's it to be done? I can't ask Condiment home to our grubby place: could not; he'd cut me directly. I'm a de ice here. He! here's Macfum!"

"He's off! Lady George fetched him in the travelling carriage at half-past five. It's a confounded nuisance! I'm hanged if I don't cut the Carlton."

"Why?"

"Because of late they've admitted some great snobs, whom it turns one ill to meet. I was in the room knocking one of the Abbotsmen down just now a coarse brute! I was in the readi g-room, hissing some insignificant letter for Sir George, when the fellow came up and asked me if I wanted to see the Baronet very particular? I told him, conceiving that he was a gentleman, that I did wish to see Sir George on an urgent pecuniary matter, when the groom presumed to ask if he could be of any service?—he—an utter stranger! I told him I'd a mes age into Hackney, Captain Henry Osborne, of the Bombay Artillery, fourth son of the late Mark Osborne, Esq, aged 37

Norfolk, New, £30, 2 x d; North British, 20; Ditto, Quarters, 4½ North Staffordshire, 7½; Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton, 25½ x; Shrewsbury and Birmingha , 2½; Shrewsbury and Chester, 8 per Cent. Preference, 12½; South-Eastern, 24½ x; Ditto, Dover, 5½; Thirds, 6½; Wilts, Somerset, and Weymouth, 24½; York, Newcastle, and Berwick, 28½ x d; Ditto, Original New and Berwick, 37 x d; Ditto, Extension, No 1, ; Ditto, G N E Preference, 7½; York and North Midla d, 6; Boulogne and Amiens, 6; Namur and Liege, 4½; Orleans and Bordeaux, 1½; Rouen and Havre, 7½; Sambre and Meuse, 9½

SATURDAY MORNING.—There was little change in prices during yesterday. Consols operated at 85¾, and gradually advanced to 86; Exchequer Money and Time, which were close, quotation. In the Foreign and Share Markets there was no movement of interest.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE (Friday).—Although there were several fresh runs of English wheat up to our market this morning the total arrivals during the week have not exceeded 20,0 quarters. On the whole, the show of samples—many of which were the refuse of Monday was good. Selected parcels, of both old and new, were readily cleared off at full prices, but the sale of the middle and out of-condi qualities was the turn in favour of the buyers Foreign wheat was fixed at barely last week's currency. The imports this week have been 16,720 quarters. The sale of all kinds of barley was heavy, at some instances, a decline of 1s per quarter Scarcely any English barley on offer We were fairly supplied with malt, the demand for which was dull, and prices were 1s per quarter lower than on Monday. Oats the supply of which was very moderate—were dull, at late rates. In all other articles prices underwent no change

ARRIVALS. English, wheat, 2010; barley, 80; oats, 750 Irish, oats —. Foreign: wheat, 1,720; barley, 8740; oats 13,320. Flour, 2560 sacks; 4110 quarters

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 52s to 56s ditto, white, 56s to 64s. Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 50s to 54s ditto, white, 54s to 58s grinding barley, 22s to 30s; distilling 32s to 33s; malting ditto, 35s to 36s Norfolk and Lincoln malt, 56s to 60s; Ingham, 60s to 70s Kingston and Ware, 60s to 65s Chevalier, 65s to 66s Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 20s to 24s; potato ditto, 24s to 26s; Youghal and Cork, black, 18s to 27s; ditto, white, 20s to 29s; tick beans, 32s to 37s; ditto, old, 36s —s to —s; grey peas, 40s to 41s; maple, 40s to 41s, white, 38s to 40s, boilers, 40s to 44s, per quarter. Town-made flour, 50s to 53s, Suffolk, —s to —s; Stockton and Yorkshire, 46s to 48s, per 280 lbs.

Foreign: Dantzig red wheat, 4 to —s; white, —s to —s; Marianopoli, —s to —s; Polish ditto, —s to —s; peas, —s to —s per quarter Flour, American, 36s to 37s per barrel; Baltic, —s to —s per barrel

Seed Market.—Exceedingly little business has been transacted in seeds this week. Prices, however, rule almost stationary

Linseed.—English sowing, 56s to 60s; Baltic, crushing, 42s to 46s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 40s to 42s; Bombay, 40s to 42s per quarter, coriander, 16s to 20s per cwt brown mustard seed, 8s to 10s, white do., 6s to 9s 6d; tares, 4s 6d to 6s 6d per bushel English rapecake, £7 5s to £7 10s per ton of 2240 lbs; linseed ditto, £7 ditto to £7 5s ditto, foreign, £8 10s to £9 per 1000; rapeseed cakes, £5 to £5 10s per ton; canary, 50s to 60s per quarter English clover-seed, red, —s to —s; white, —s to —s; extra, up to —s. Foreign, red, —s to —s; extra, —s; white, —s to —s, extra, —s per cwt

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis are from 6d to 9d; of household ditto, 6d to 8d per 4lb loaf.

Imported Weekly Average.—Wheat, 55s 9d; barley, 32s 1d; oats, 22s 6d; rye, 32s 3d; beans, 35s 8d, peas, 36s —d

To-day's Arrivals.—Wheat, 31s 5d; barley, 30s 6d; oats, 21s 6d; rye, 30s 8d; beans, 36s 11d peas 36s 4d

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 4s 6d; barley, 2s 6d; oats, 2s 6d; rye, 3s 6d; beans, 2s 6d, peas, 3s 6d

Tea.—The sale is tolerably steady; but we have no improvement to notice in the quotations.

Sugar A large business has been done in foreign sugars for export. For home consumption, however, only a limited demand exists.

Coffee.—A steady business is doing in most descriptions at last week s quotations

Rice.—A fair sale of fully fo per cent has taken place in the value of rice, with a very inactive demai)

Provisions. The best parcels of Irish butter are in moderate request, at about last week's quotations but all other kinds have not participated at a decline of 2s per cwt In foreign butter, a steady trade has been doing, at late rates Kegs of Kiel or Kiepels are value quotations Fine Dorset, 90s to 96s per cwt., fresh do to 92s per firkin Best Belfast, 80s to 82s; middling to ordinary, 74s to 78s Best Waterford, 84s to 86s per cwt. The best blackberry bacon is scarcely in good demand, and the rates have receded 2s per cwt. The best middling kinds are steadily supported, but other sorts of provisions are dull, and the supplies of which on offer are considerably good—on a very slow inquiry.

Tallow.—A good business is doing in all kinds of tallow, at full prices P Y C is selling at 45s to 45s 6d per cwt Town-tallow 42s 6d to 43s per cwt net cash

Oils.—Sperm oil is dull, and rather cheaper Seal oils have no alteration to notice.

Spirits.—The market is quiet, yet last week s prices are supported on every occasion.

Rum and Brandy.—Old rum is in buyers' 2s 6d to 2s 8d per gallon; fine do, 3s; old clover, 2s 6s to 2s 11d., new ditto, 2s 10s to 2s 8d and strong, 2s 4d to 2s 11d per gallon

Hops.—Very little fresh business has been done in the value of this article, which is very inactive Foreign, 1s 3d; Sussex, 1s 6d; Farnham, 1s 6d; Kent, 2s 2d to 3s 3d; Essex, 1s 6d to 2s 3

ADVERTISEMENTS.

ASTLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE.—Proprietor, Mr. W. BATTY.—Last week but three of the [illegible] engagements having been made for the appearance of the [illegible] of the Establishment at both much Crowded [illegible] to witness the gorgeous Spectacle of Mazeppa. A strong attraction [illegible] of Circles, is produced, for the first time, Miss. PLAUB, the great Equestrian Diseuse, and the astonishing feats of Mr. C. FARLEY and Mr. [illegible] Equestrians of Europe. Last week of Mr. Godfrey. MONDAY, SEPT 11, the performance will commence at a Quarter to 8—an, with (Last Week) Brown's grand Spectacle of MAZEPPA; or the Wild Horse. After which (Last Season of the Season. The Spectacle in which he has so highly successful, Extraordinary Equestrian of LADY DOROTHY and PEEPING TOM of COVENTRY.—Box office open from 11 till 5.—Sole Manager, Mr. W. West.

CREMORNE.—Phalanx of Talent, Vocal, Instrumental, Choreographic Pyrotechnic and Gastronomic combination of Attractions.—[illegible] SABIA and WILLIAM SEPT. 11th, 12th, and [illegible] Saturday Tournament on the Thames, in front of the new and magnificent River Espl[illegible] To-night (Monday), and last Night of Vocalist Mr. [illegible] Walking Gentlemen Pelle, Feats of Natation &c. Vocal and Instrumental Concert. First time of the new military Pas de [illegible] Scene and Dénouement of the Comedietta Scene. With entire new music, scenery, costumes, and appointments. Representation of a Storm in the Pyrenees, with descriptive music, scenery and pyrotechnic effects. Grand Sports and Pastimes. Monster Mayoral Troupe of Acrobats. The new covered Promenade, 450 feet in length, will be brilliantly illuminated with gas [illegible] Band of 50 performers. Brilliant illuminations, and magnificent Pyrotechnic Display by the Chevalier Morlacchi. Admission to the entire Entertainments, 1s. Doors open at Three; close at Twelve o'clock.

THE ROYAL CHINESE JUNK [illegible] REVING,' manned by a Chinese Crew—This most interesting Exhibition, which has been justly called the "greatest novelty in London," has been visited by her Majesty the Queen, all the Royal Family, and an immense number of persons, including nearly all the nobility and gentry of distinction in London. The "Keying" is now open for Exhibition, from Ten to Six, in the East India Docks, next to the Railway and adjoining the Fair Blackwall.—Admission, ONE SHILLING. Junk Tickets, including fare and admission, can be had of the Blackwall and East & Counties Railways. Conveyance may be [illegible] from Blackwall Pier, at the Pier between West minster and Woolwich; fare 6d. Catalogues obtainable only on board, price 6d.

ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION.—The Cause of the Partial Explosion in Albany-street explained and illustrated, by Experiments, in a Lecture, by Dr. Bachhoffner, on Gas Making, in which the new patent Gas Apparatus of Sugden, Wilson, &c., will be exhibited daily at Half past Three o'Clock and in the Evening, at Half past Eight o'Clock, and on Wednesday and Saturday, at Three. Also, the Manufacture of Glass. Portals by Dr. Bachhoffner daily, at Four o'Clock, and in the Evenings of Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday. The various Optical Effects. Diver and Diving-Bell. Working Model of Vessels, with Improved Apparatus. Panorama of Italy, by Taylor. Electric Telegraph.—Admission, 1s.; Schools, Half Price. Descriptive Catalogues, 6d.

CALDWELL'S SOIREES DANSANTES, Every Evening, from 8 till 12.—Admission, 6d.; per Quarter, £1 1s.—The best place in London for adults, having the privilege of permitting with 1000 in a room capable of accommodating 1500.—81, Private Lessons, at any hour, £1 1s.—19, 20, and 21, Dean-street, Soho.

BUY YOUR WEDDING RING at 33 LUDGATE-HILL

PIANOFORTES, the best of every description, New and second-hand. Foreign and high-class, for SALE or HIRE, at CRAMER, BEALE, and CO.'s, 201, Regent-street.

PIANOFORTE MART, 76, Strand.—Fine [illegible] NERS, nearly New, at 25, 28, 30, 32, 33, 35, and 40 Guineas. Also, a splendid Variety, with the newest Patented improvements, to be sold or hired, ready to tune, even in the most dry weather, at extreme economy.

PIANOFORTES, by MOORE and CO.—Pianofortes, with all the most recent improvements at manufacturing prices, are to be had at J. and H. MOORE and CO.'s, 104, Bishopsgate-street Within. A good stock of second-hand, 7 guineas to 40 guineas. N.B.—A short credit allowed if desired.

PEACEY'S PIANOFORTES for HIRE or SALE in Town or Country (at the lowest possible prices for Instruments that really can be WARRANTED,) and pianoforte Professor, G. PEACEY, Manufacturer by appointment to the Queen, Kidderminster and Wilton, opposite the Wesleyan Chapel.

N.B.—100 new Pianofortes always on view, with a variety of every descriptions of second-hand.

DANCING TAUGHT in the most Fashionable Style, at WILLIS'S ROOMS, 41, Bruton street, Golden square, by Mr. GEORGE BARNLEY (late assistant to Mr. Wood) Private lessons at all hours by Ladies and Gentlemen of all ages. Evening Class Monday and Friday. A Juvenile Class Wednesday and Saturday. Terms may be had on application. The Rooms to be let for Private Parties.

THE SAFETY CHAIN BROOCH (patronised by the Queen) is manufactured into a variety of new and [illegible] elegant in BLACK as well as Gold and Silver. They may [illegible] to any part of the Kingdom, and ordered DIRECT from the INVENTORS, JENNY LIND and SON, Exeter. Plate and Ornaments of every description made to order by Devonport Silver.

DRESSINGS, WEDDINGS, BIRTH-DAYS, &c., may be selected from SUMMERLY'S ART MANUFACTORIES, sold by all first-class Retailers. The late Novelties are Flowers, Fruits, Grapes, Cherubs, a Wood-carved Frame and Rack in Stand for a New Set. A Catalogue, with 24 Designs sent on receipt of Three Postage-stamps, from SUMMERLY, 19, Old Bond-street.

JONES'S £4 4s. SILVER LEVER WATCHES, at the Manufactory, 338, Strand, opposite Somerset House.—Gentlemen having modern instruments, and who may [illegible] not to vary more than half a minute per week. The great reduction at which they are now sold will induce every other Maker or Manufacturer, or any other house. On receipt of a Post-office Order payable to JOHN JONES, for £4 4s., one will be sent Free. Hand Gives a Sketch of Watchwork, sent Free for a Twopenny Stamp.

THE NEW FISH CARVER and FORK in the ARGENTINA SILVER of Messrs. ELKINGTON, of Bond Street, Birmingham, and 22, Regent-street, London. Assortments of these Novelties, Plain, Ornamental, and Gilt, at the Manufactory, 45, Regent-street, Birmingham, and at the Show-Rooms, 22, Regent-street, London.

A HANDSOME PRESENT.—A GOLD WATCH and FINE GOLD CHAIN, fitted complete in a morocco case, for £9 9s. very suitable for a present. The capacity of the watch is as follows:—Double-backed gold case, gold dial, seconds, movement, four holes jewelled, measuring three-quarters of an inch broad, and, as a recent improvement, is a wireless warranty given. A movement and a trial allowed. The name is of no consequence. SAHL and SONS, Watch Manufacturers, 18, Cornhill, opposite the New Royal Exchange.—N.B. Watches sent to any part of the country through the post-office with perfect safety, upon the receipt of an order for the amount.

WATCHES and their MANAGEMENT.—T. COX SAVORY and CO. have published a PAMPHLET, describing the construction of the various watches in use. It presents, in a concise and intelligible manner, a number of useful hints. It is intended to give to simple matters which should be obtained by every purchaser of an article, the principal characteristics of which should be known by ordinarily by. It also contains rules for the proper management of a watch by the owner, and may be had gratis on application personally, or by post.

T. COX SAVORY and Co., 47, Cornhill, London, seven doors from the Bank.

SILVER PLATE, New and Second-hand.—T. COX SAVORY and Co. a Sample of Prices, with engravings to be had gratis, or will be sent free, applied for by a post-paid letter.

T. COX SAVORY and Co. have a large and elegant assortment of Second-hand Plate and Goods, the new pattern on view. Metal Spoons and Forks, Waiters, Goblets, Ladies' Gold Neck Chains &c. Jewellery.

T. COX SAVORY and Co., 47, Cornhill (seven doors from Gracechurch-street).

SILVER-PLATED DISH COVERS and CORNER DISHES. A. B. SAVORY and SONS, 14, Cornhill, London (opposite the Bank), have a large assortment of the above articles ready for the dinner table, which they continue to sell at a considerable reduction. Also every other article in their Drawings, with prices annexed, forwarded to any part of the kingdom postage free.

SILVER TEA SERVICES, of New Patterns.—A. B. SAVORY and SONS, Working Silversmiths, 14, Cornhill, opposite the Bank, have made several sets of elegant TEA and COFFEE SERVICES, of novel and elegant forms. The following have been generally

Two Pattern Tea Pots	Tea Urn	Two Lobe Quarter Tea Pots
Strong Silver Tea pot	£12 12 0	Strong Silver Teapot £12 12 0
Ditto Sugar Basin, gilt	5 5 0	Ditto Sugar Basin, gilt 5 5 0
Ditto Cream Ewer, gilt	5 5 0	Ditto Cream Ewer, gilt 5 5 0
Ditto Coffee-pot	16 16 0	Ditto Coffee-pot 16 16 0
	£47 0 0	£47 0 0

A larger stock is offered for selection in the Show-Rooms including every variation of pattern, from £5 upwards.

S. MORDAN and Co.'s PAT NT EVERPOINTED PENCILS.—S. M. and Co. CAUTION the public against using those useful articles so as that the genuine name is not used legibly on the case. A new fit of exact metal stamps present on the Public, as they are of greater strength and durability, but will be found of a size to fit all. These remarks apply also to S. M. and Co.'s patent ends for replenishing the same.

Manufactory, City-road, London.

PUBLICATIONS &c.

NEW WORK BY MR. ALBERT SMITH.
Now ready, Part I., price 1s. (or completed in Ten Monthly Parts, 6d.),

THE POTTLETON LEGACY. A Romance of Town and Country. By ALBERT SMITH, with Illustrations on Steel, by Hablot K. Browne ("Phiz").

"Full of humour and character."—Examiner.

Now ready, a new edition, thoroughly revised and reprinted, from the first article to the last,

THE PARADISE OF BACHELORS, AND THE KNIGHTAGE OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND for 1848 (both Year) By CHARLES R. DOD, Esq., author of the "Parliamentary Companion," &c. In one volume, 18mo., cloth gilt, price 5s. 6d.

"Mr. DOD and CAREY, Pattern-street, and all Booksellers.

Planché Office of [illegible]

LES HUGUENOTS.—This splendid opera is [illegible] published in the PLANÉ, No. 9 [illegible] at Fenn Bo, and Regt. [illegible] Also each Post-paid, 3s. stamps.

Price 2s. 6d. (Proof Impressions on India Paper).

A PANORAMIC PICTURE of the HOLY LAND; containing Model Views of the principal Cities and Places as referred to in the Old and New Testament. With 85 Reference Map of the Plate. Sold in close by it.

Portrait at the Office of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, 198, Strand, and by all Booksellers.

Now Ready, price Eighteen Shillings, Vol. XII. of THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, [illegible] again by most handsomely bound, and containing [illegible] Illustrations of the [illegible] events of the last [illegible] forming a most complete and [illegible] of the Progress of Science, Art, Literature, and Social Improvement during the Year 1847.

Also, the [illegible] Volumes, each containing [illegible] Illustrations of Art, Literature, and [illegible]

The Covers for Binding Vol. XII., with Lea New Allegorical Design, price 3s. each; Or by mail, 4s. 6d.

[illegible] also all the previous Volumes.

CHARLES GLOVER'S New Song, "MY A—GIRT HOME," with a beautiful Portrait of its Author, by Brandard. Price 2s. Also, the Duet, "Sweet Spirit, hear my prayer." Price 2s. 6d. Two is another of Mr. Charles Glover's successful songs, and is a song that will be very generally enjoyed: there is much originality of thought and elegance in the words and music that will place it on the [illegible] list of English music.

LEE and COLBRAN, 48, Albemarle-street

Where may be had Charles Glover's "List of a Song," price 3s. "Life of a Soldier," price 2s. "A Night-Stir in at Sea," "Fear not, for I am Thy God," "The Pilot," price 2s. 6d., Descriptive and the rudimental Divertissements for the Pianoforte. Beautifully Illustrated in Colours by Brandard.

Fourth Edition, price 5s. with Maps, Cuts, &c., and ably enlarged, a great, and corrected to the present time,

BRETTELL'S HAND-BOOK to the ISLE of WIGHT, topographical, Historic, Pictorial, and Picturesque. Profusely and richly illustrated, scenery, Antiquities, Natural History, Geology, &c. &c. &c. A complete List of Lodgings and Hotels

ST. MICHAEL'S SCHOOLS, PIMLICO.

ST. MICHAEL'S SCHOOLS, PIMLICO.

This picturesque pile has been erected from the design of Mr. Teulon, for the Boys' and Girls' Schools of St. Michael's, Chester-square, and was opened on Monday last. The site is on the south side of the Grosvenor Canal, upon a piece of ground the gift of the Marquis of Westminster; and the first stone of the building was laid by the Marchioness of Westminster, on the 14th of July, 1847.

The Schools form a portion of the north side of an intended street in continuation of Hugh-street. The entrances for the children are from the projected roadway next the Canal, so that the occupiers of the houses in Hugh-street will not be subjected to noise. The Schools are calculated to accommodate—Boys, 125; Girls, 125; Infants, 140

The Boys' and Girls' Schools are so arranged that the two may be thrown into one, for the purposes of a weekly service or public meeting. The Infant School is completely divided from the other schools. The Boys' and Girls' Schools have, in connexion with them, a committee-room, with masters' and mistresses' house, with basement story; and the Infant School has also a residence for the Infant School mistress. Each school has a separate yard or play-ground; and the masters' and mistresses' houses respectively are provided with a piece of garden ground, reserved towards the Canal.

The exterior of the buildings is Elizabethan in style; the materials red brick, with chequer of black bricks. All the window-frames are mullioned with Bath stone, and all the decorated portions are executed in that material.

The roof of the schools internally is open-timbered, after the manner of the roofings of the Elizabethan period, and affording thereby a complete ventilation. The staircases are carried up in the towers which flank each end of the general design. In plan, the schools form together a Latin cross; and they are among the most tasteful edifices of their class that we have had occasion to illustrate.

The cost of the building has been defrayed principally by subscription, and partly by the aid of the Committee of the Council on Education

CRICKET MATCH EXTRAORDINARY.

By the kind permission of the authorities of Greenwich Hospital, the hardy veterans of that splendid establishment were entertained at a cricket match on Monday and Tuesday, in the Priory-grounds, near Lewisham. The novelty of the conditions upon which alone these worn-out sons of the ocean would be allowed to enter the lists, was the cause of a large and fashionable party attending each day. These conditions were, that twenty-two men should be chosen or the field, one half of whom should be minus an arm, and the other a leg! Yet there was no lack of candidates for the honours of the bat and ball, and the number was very soon selected. The weather, too, was beautifully fine; the locality selected for the display a most charming spot; and the spectators as well as the actors appeared to be highly amused

A large tent had been erected on the southern side of the field, and within it was spread forth an ample supply of the creature comforts of this life, to which the dilapidated tars did ample justice. They were invited to this entertainment by Mr. Ingersoll, of Lewisham, who, in conjunction with Mr. Ireland and Mr. Staunton, had got it up at their sole expence, in addition to distributing a sum of money amongst the competitors. Upon the first day the wickets were pitched, and the sports commenced shortly after two o'clock, the bands striking up "Rule Britannia," the eleven one-armed men taking the first innings, and during the whole time the bats and balls were at work, the spectators were kept in an almost continued roar of laughter by the grotesque figures the poor old veterans made as they measured their length on the slippery sward in their vain efforts to reach the ball, or to exercise their diminished "under-standing" beyond their ordinary gait to reach the goal in time.

Upon the first day the one-arms made 50 runs in the first start, and 41 at the second. On Tuesday they assembled again with renewed vigour; and now the wooden legs went at it in high glee. Their first innings made 32, and their second 42; thus leaving the game to the one-arms by 16. Nothing could exceed the delight with which they appeared to enjoy the sport, or the kindness and courteous attention of Mr. Ingersoll to all their wants. The game was concluded by six o'clock, and the hearty old blue-coats marched in procession from the ground, headed by the band, banners, &c., and were again entertained at a parting feast by Mr. Ingersoll, at the Black Bull Inn.

GREENWICH PENSIONERS' CRICKET MATCH, AT THE PRIORY GROUNDS, NEAR LEWISHAM.

The Episcopal Church in Scotland.—At a Diocesan Synod, held within St. Andrew's Chapel, Glasgow, on the 30th of August, the Rev. Walter John Trower, M.A., formerly Fellow of Oriel College, Oxon, and now Rector of Wiston, Sussex, and Rural Dean, was elected Bishop of the Diocese of Glasgow and Galloway. Mr. Trower is well known to the Church as the author of several valuable works published by the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge

Dockyard Battalions.—These troops concluded drill, until May next, on Friday evening (last week), when they were dismissed with highly complimentary addresses from their respective commanding officers. The Clarence battalion (Gosport) concluded by being inspected by Lord Frederick Fitzclarence, G.C.B., the Governor of Portsmouth.

The steam-ship United States, which left Cowes for New York, on Sunday afternoon, with 100 passengers and a valuable cargo, broke down off Scilly and returned at nine P.M., on Tuesday, to Southampton Water, where she must be docked. The Messrs. Baring are part proprietors of the United States steamer which ran between New York, Havre, and Southampton.

London: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by William Little, of 198, Strand, aforesaid.—Saturday, September 9, 1848

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

No 335—Vol. XIII.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 16, 1848. [Sixpence.

SECULAR EDUCATION.

THE question of the Education of the People in all free countries, where there are diversities of religious belief, is necessarily one of greater difficulty than in those nations where despotism allows no difference of religious opinion. If we take the two extremes afforded by Europe—of Russia, where the will of the Emperor is the law, and of Saxony, where there is a Constitution on the broadest basis of popular liberty—we find that there are systems of National Education in each. In the one country the system is founded upon the universal religious opinion of the people (for in Russia there is no dissent); and in the other it has no especial reference to any one creed, but is cognisant of all. Both, however, attain the important end in view—the education of the masses. In the first the theory and practice are alike easy; in the second, difficult, but, nevertheless, reconcileable. The great problem to be solved in this country, which has a rich and powerful Established Church, and rich and powerful Dissenting bodies of various denominations, is how to educate the people, as successfully and systematically as in despotic Russia and free Saxony, without doing violence to the civil rights and religious feelings of either the one or the other. Successive Governments, fully aware of the urgent importance of the question, and of the danger to society of allowing a large and preponderating section of the next generation, greatly increased in numbers as it must necessarily be, to grow up in a state of dense ignorance, in the very heart and centre of civilisation, have endeavoured to meet the difficulty in which the purely religious phase of the question has landed them, by adopting the voluntary principle as the basis of operations, and giving State aid to each sect, in proportion to the amount raised by each for the education of its own members, in Religious as well as in Secular knowledge.

There can be no doubt, that in this country the voluntary contributions of rich men and the voluntary exertions of good men, who have, perhaps, been poor, have done very much to educate the people. The land teems with evidence of the good they have both effected. No true friend of education can deny that to the pious bequests of past ages, and to the steady exertions of the intelligent and active men of the present day, we are largely indebted for the religious as well as for the intellectual supremacy of the British people. Every one will admit, that, unaided by the State, voluntary exertion has done much for Education; but we have still to inquire, has it done enough, and can it do enough, to meet the exigencies of our increasing population, and to provide for the safety of society?

Much has been said in praise of the laissez faire principle. The experience of all time bears testimony to its value. In all matters relating to the physical well-being of the human race, to the increase of wealth and luxury, to the various ramifications and extensions of trade and commerce, laissez faire may be safely trusted. The desires, necessities, and luxuries of the physical nature make themselves keenly felt. There needs no aid of States or Governments to force them into vigorous maturity. With laissez faire as the principle of Government, nations, as well as individuals, will grow rich; but the conviction seems to increase amongst us that laissez faire is not the principle by which either nations or individuals are to become educated. The poor man ardently desires to be rich—he needs no State stimulus to force him to acquire his subsistence. The ignorant man does not, as a matter of course, desire to be instructed. The more ignorant he is, the less he values knowledge. If there needs no inducement to make him love wealth, there needs many to make him love instruction. It, therefore, becomes necessary to adopt some other principle than laissez faire, by which he may be duly impressed, both for his own good and for that of the aggregate society of which he forms a part, of the paramount importance of Education for himself and for the children that are to follow him. Men who have devoted much attention to this interesting subject, have come to the conclusion, that, however much voluntary exertion—either by itself, or with the eleemosynary aid of the State—may do, it never can do enough to educate the people. It may shed a feeble ray upon the dark clouds of popular ignorance; but it never can dissipate them. It may rescue individuals from the slough of ignorance; but it can never rescue the whole community from its filth and contamination. It may teach the willing, it may improve the partially instructed; but it can never reach, either with its funds or its zeal, the unwilling and the totally uninstructed, who despise because they do not know the value of the boon it offers. We see that voluntary effort cannot even maintain the poor of this rich country, and that a compulsory assessment is required for the purpose. But by a still sterner necessity voluntary effort is powerless to instruct the ignorant of this intelligent country. A compulsory assessment and a compulsory system are as necessary in the one case as in the other. If we would prevent physical starvation on the one hand from overwhelming large numbers of the population, or mental degradation, and all its consequent evils of vice, crime, and misery from overwhelming on the other a still larger proportion of our people, we must adopt a large, a general, and a coercive principle. We have done so in the case of the destitute. We must yet do so in the case of the ignorant.

But here the religious difficulty intervenes; and sects, conscientiously impressed with the superior importance of religious to secular knowledge, put forward claims to exclusive teaching, which no one sect will ever accord to another. While they disagree, the people remain and increase in ignorance; both of the religious teaching which all sects have at heart, and of the secular instruction which it is so vastly the interest of the civil Government to diffuse amongst them. These and other points in connexion with the subject have, we are glad to see, been brought prominently under public notice by the "Lancashire Public School Association;" a body that exists amongst the densest population of the whole country, and that, consequently, has abundant opportunities of witnessing the insufficient results of the principle at present acted upon. Under its auspices has just been issued a series of "Reasons for exertion in the cause of general Secular Education." In the arguments of this document we entirely agree. We think its publication at the present time will be of some service in arousing the attention of the public on a matter that has slipped out of notice for a time, amid the whirl of revolutions and the clash of kingdoms. The following extract seems to us to state with much clearness and force the real secret of the insufficiency of the system to which at present endangers society, and to point out the only true remedy: —

COURT-MARTIAL AT PARIS APPOINTED TO TRY THE INSURGENTS OF JUNE.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

"The principle," says the Association, "on which the assistance of the State is at present given for educational purposes, is manifestly erroneous. It requires all recipients to raise a sum of money amongst themselves, proportionate to the aid received; so that to the rich and willing, where aid is not needed, much is given -while to the poor, who cannot, and to those who, not properly appreciating the value of education, will not subscribe (and consequently where aid is most necessary), nothing is given. Education is the best protector of property. To leave it entirely to voluntary effort, is to throw all the duties of property, as regards education, upon the benevolent; while those who are able, but unwilling to contribute, entirely escape. It is a policy similar to that which would disband all our police, take away the "commission of the peace" from the magistrates, break up our sanatory committees and corporations, and leave our watching, paving, and cleansing to whomsoever chose to do them. It is so with regard to voluntaryism in education. It will always be strongest where competitions are richest; i.e. where it is least needed: it will, for the most part, expend itself at home, while the poor and needy districts will be almost entirely neglected. Voluntaryism also varies so much with the times,—failing in bad times of trade, or at the death of a rich and good man,—that it cannot be regularly depended on."

The Association is of opinion, for these reasons, that Education, to become universal and efficient, must be systematic; that any system likely to be generally acceptable to the people must be free from doctrinal religious teaching, and removed from the direct control of Government; managed by local authorities popularly elected, and, as a consequence, supported by local rates, thereby securing the right of free admission to all, without religious distinction.

It dwells upon the necessity of establishing schools for infants; day schools for the young; evening schools for those who labour during the day, or whose education has been hitherto neglected; and industrial schools for those outcasts from our social system, who, in the absence of such means of improvement, are receiving a practical education in immorality and crime.

Great Britain has long been in advance of the world in the intelligence of her inhabitants: there is now some danger that she will fall behind, for the want of such a system as is here shadowed forth. Our Poor-Law declares that no child born within our realm shall die for want of food; and in this respect we are still an example to the nations. But we require an educational law equally stringent and universal in its application to meet the mental necessities of our age. The child that perishes physically entails no future burden upon us; but the child that only perishes intellectually, lives on, a curse to, and a disease upon society. As for the fear that, were a general system of secular instruction adopted by the State, religious teaching would fall into neglect or disuse, we hold it to be quite unfounded. The religious fervour of the people of this country may safely be trusted to do its appointed work. It will not labour upon a more unpromising field than at present, when it has a trusted and faithful ally called upon whom to exert itself, and to whom to bear the glad tidings of the Gospel. Secular teaching is but a surer foundation for the solid edifice, that Religion will be but too happy to raise if left to her own untiring zeal and devotion.

Two years ago there seemed a prospect that this mighty question would be brought forward by one or the other, and supported by all the influence of the two great parties in the State. Commercial panic—the revolutions on the Continent—our falling finances, sedition in England, and rebellion in Ireland, have, however, combined to throw it in the background for a while; but its immense importance will cause it to become once more the question of our age. The difficulties that beset it may be great, but they are not considerable. They have been conquered elsewhere; and it would be strange indeed if the great British people should prove inadequate to the task which other nations have accomplished.

COURT-MARTIAL AT PARIS.

THE Illustration upon the preceding page shows the Court (Conseil de Guerre) now sitting in the Rue du Cherche-Midi, at Paris, to try "the insurgents of June." This military tribunal consists of seven judges from the rank of non-commissioned officer to that of colonel, who is president of the court, and is seated at the middle of the raised table. The officers wear their brass collars; their shakos, helmets, &c. are placed upon the table and steps in front before the table are three prisoners, one seated; and between them as the tribune of the counsel for the defence, who wear their robes and caps.

In a sort of tribune in the distance is seen standing the officer (a captain) filling office of attorney general, or public prosecutor; near him is a secretary, and beneath are gendarmes and sentries, seated, while the foreground is similarly occupied, with a sprinkling of reporters and witnesses. Facing the tribunal, which is raised upon a platform, are grouped the insignia of the Republic; and in a second room, just seen between the two columns, are the persons who flock to hear these extraordinary trials.

THE POOR IN IRELAND.—The following statement of the prospects of the peasantry of the county of Mayo is extracted from a letter received from a most trustworthy writer, dated September 12, addressed to a friend in this metropolis:—"I regret to tell you that our prospects here are of the most gloomy description. The potatoes, of which there was a good breadth, have entirely failed. I examined numerous fields within the last week, and feel quite warranted in stating that at least three-fourths are gone, and that there will be scarcely a sound potato to be had in the course of a month. The out-door relief has altogether ceased; the people are now in a great measure thrown on their own resources. This, I think, is quite right; but in the course of a month or six weeks the mass of the population, which is at present reduced to permanent pauperism—at least one-third of the existing members will be in a state fearful to contemplate—without food, fuel, clothing—without shelter, nor any visible prospect of being in any way able to help themselves; how can they? 100,000 human beings without land, cabins, employment, or support of any kind. In 1846 and 1847 the resources of former years kept them on; these means are all gone; and I therefore don't hesitate to say that we are far, far worse off than at any previous time. I look on the coming winter with fear."—Standard.

DIVINE EXTRAORDINARY.—Holland, it is at present engaged in the moorings in the Tyne. He goes down daily, and traverses the bottom of the river, examining with all the minuteness of a person walking on shore position of the chains and buoys. On Monday he came in contact with a machinery opposite Whitehill Point. On being brought up it bore the 1813. having been immersed 40 y

ROYAL NAVAL SCHOOL. ration of this has unanimously presented to Mr. Eames, late secretary, an silver, upon which the following inscription is engraved: "Presented marriage, to A. J. S. Eames, Esq., secretary of the Royal Naval School, by the of their approbation of his valuable services in the welfare of that institution, during a period of 17

[illegible] Some months ago, a party was sent out by the United States Government to explore the Dead Sea. It appears that they have most satisfactorily completed their task, having been upon the sea in their boats encamped on its borders, for some two months, and their researches and observations have been of the most thorough and interesting character. They have sounded the sea, in all its parts, to the depth of 600 fathoms, and found the bed of it tabled salt. The pestilential effects attributed to the waters turn out to be fabulous. Ducks were seen skimming over the surface, and partridges abounded along the shore. The party are at present making their interesting passage the Holy Land.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

The attention of the public in Paris during the past week has been principally occupied with the approaching election of three representatives for the capital, which was fixed for Sunday and Monday next. The most prominent of the candidates were—Prince Louis Napoleon, M. Emile de Girardin, Marshal Bugeaud, and MM. Fusey, Benjamin Delessert, Achille Fould, Edmond Adam, [illegible]r (du Nord). On the probable success of these persons, respectively, the journals speculate according to their party predilections; but the struggle would, it was believed, be between Prince Louis Napoleon and MM. Fusey, Delessert, Emile de Girardin, and A. Fould. The Clubs of the "Red Republic" have put forward the notorious Communists MM. Cabet, Raspail, and Thoré as their candidates. The partisans of Louis Napoleon are confident of not only in his election as representative, but as President of the Republic. And on this latter subject it was said that the Government had determined by some means or another—either by an Exclusion Bill, or by an alteration in that part of the Constitution which relates to the election of the President of the Republic—to prevent the possibility of the Prince arriving at the high dignity of the first [illegible]residentship.

The alteration contemplated would substitute Presidential election by the present National Assembly for that by the universal suffrage of the nation, which would no doubt have the effect of placing General Cavaignac at the head of the Republic as its first President.

The Legitimist party are getting up a biography of General Cavaignac's father, who was one of the most violent of the Conventionists, and whose [illegible]rocities at Bordeaux and other places are still remembered with horror. The Legitimists, it is said, have determined to bring forward General Lamoricière as their candidate for the Presidency of the Republic, in preference to General Cavaignac.

An envoy from W[illegible]kia has arrived in Paris, to solicit the aid of France [illegible] Russia.

The Bordeaux Legitimists have brought forward Count Molé as a candidate for the representation of that city.

Prince Louis Napoleon has addressed the following letter from London, dated the 27th ult., to his uncle, Jerome Bonaparte, the ex-King of Westphalia:—

"My dear Uncle,—Your wise counsels on the subject of the elections about to take place have only anticipated the letter which I was about to write to you on the same head. I believe, as you do, that as this time it will be my duty to accept the mandate of my fellow-citizens, if they shall honour me with their suffrages. Under circumstances which, happily, no longer subsist, I have not hesitated to prolong my exile, rather than suffer my name to be used as a pretext for perturbation and disorder. Now that order is established, I hope that my [illegible] will no longer prevent me from contributing, as a representative of the people, to the consolidation of the Republic, to its happiness and glory. Be pleased to make known these sentiments, and accept, my dear uncle, the assurance of my respectful attachment. Your devoted nephew,

LOUIS NAPOLEON BONAPARTE."

Gen. Cha[illegible]on, who has been appointed Governor-General of Algeria, is replaced, as Director of the Affairs of Algeria at the Ministry of War, by M. Germain, member of the Governments Council of Algiers.

The Prefect of Police has addressed a circular to the Commissaries of the Police at Paris, stating that the Minister of the Interior, with a view to carry into execution the late decision of the Assembly of the National Guard, has ordered a census of the citizens liable to be called on to be immediately proceeded with in the department of the Seine. The Prefect calls on the Commissaries to aid the census-takers in their task, particularly in what relates to students, clerks, and workmen, "who form," the circular adds, "one of the most important elements of the population to be mobilised."

The Comité de Salubrité, of the Prefecture of Police, has received orders from the Prefect to visit the establishments of the restaurateurs, garçotiers, charcutiers, and marchands de vin, who supply food, both in Paris and in the banlieue, and to examine the state of the utensils employed, the quality of the food and liquors, &c., especially in those places which, on account of the lowness of their prices, are frequented by the poor and labouring class.

The fifth division of the Army of the Alps continued to assemble at Dijon. Three regiments of the line had just arrived there.

The Marquis and Marchioness of Normanby entertained at dinner, on Saturday, General Cavaignac, the Minister for Foreign Affairs, the Apostolic Nuncio, the Sardinian Ambassador and the Marquis Brignole, General and Mme. Lamoricière, the foreign ministers are already accredited to the Republic, General Changarnier, the Count and Countess de Hatzfeldt, M. de [illegible], General Wubicsen, the Marquis Ridolfi, Baron Rothschild, the Earl of Harrowby, Viscount Sandon, the Hon. W. F. Campbell, M.P., and the gentlemen attached to the embassy.

The Marquis of Normanby, the British Ambassador, had a long interview on Sunday with M. Bastide, Minister of Foreign Affairs.

The committee consisting o. the delegates of the five committees charged to examine the question of the penitentiary régime, has settled the bases of its report. It has condemned the system that now prevails, and the bonbons, and to be [illegible]ployed in hard labour out of the territory; and it has designated Algeria in preference to all the colonies as the place of transportation. M. Léon Faucher has been nominated reporter.

The Baron de Kœnneritz presented to General Cavaignac, on Saturday, letters from the King of Saxony, accrediting him as Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the Government of the French Republic.

[illegible]wo other insurgents of June were tried by court martial on Saturday. [illegible] of them, named Lefevre, a carpenter, deliberately shot a person quietly passing on the street, suspecting him to be a spy. The other, named Lebas, an officer of the Republican Guard, charged with having surrendered the barrack of the Tournelles to the insurgents, without opposing any resistance, was condemned to five years' imprisonment.

The editors of the journals Le Peuple and Le Peuple Français were each sentenced on Saturday, by Police Correctionnel Police, to one month's imprisonment and 6 200f. fine, for publishing those journals without having previously deposited the required security.

The Moniteur publishes a decree of General Cavaignac, appointing Colonel Pierron, of the 34 Regiment of the Marines, Governor of Guadaloupe, in the place of M. Gatinee, Commissary-General of the Republic in that colony.

Marshal Bugeaud has published a circular to the electors of Lyons, proposed to him to offer himself as a candidate for the representation of the department of the Seine at the approaching elections. The Marshal accepts their offer, and adds that if returned by the three first departments, he will consider it his severance to defend civilised society against the anti-social doctrines of Communists and Terrorists, and that in fact he will be both in soul and body the soldier of good order, of family, and of property.

The Réforme publishes a letter from M. Caussidière, dated London, 8th inst., in which he explains his reasons for having evaded the arrest with which he was menaced in consequence of the vote of the National Assembly. He says, that having suffered an imprisonment of 22 months in consequence of the events of the year 1834, he is aware of the delays which attend the preparation of political trials; but that when the moment arrives when he can present himself before a jury emanating from universal suffrage, he will not disgrace the 160,000 intelligent citizens who elected him a member of the National Assembly.

M. Pascal Duprat has been appointed Minister Plenipotentiary of the Republic at Vienna.

The proposition raising the salary of the President of the National Assembly from 60fr. to 10 000 francs a month, has disappeared from the orders of the day. M. Marrast having discovered that it was not acceptable to the Assembly, and that it was doubtful if it would be supported by the Government.

The commission appointed to regulate the indemnity to be paid to the French colonists, in consequence of the abolition of slavery, meet every day. It appears that three plans have been proposed to indemnify the right of the colonists to an indemnity, but accede it to their necessities; the second recognises the right of the colonists to a full indemnity, according to the value of the slaves emancipated; the third fixes the indemnity at 120,000,000f. (£4,800,000), to be divided amongst the colonists. Several delegates from the colonies have been examined by the commission.

In a letter published in La Presse, on Tuesday, addressed to its readers, M. Emile Girardin informs them that, in consequence of the vote of the National Assembly on Monday rejecting the decree proposed by the Committee of Legislation, and likewise the suppression of the Council of Government on the previous day, he finds that he must retire from the contest, in which he admits that he has been completely vanquished, and he requests his fellow-editors here engaged in that contest to take charge of his flag, and to continue to unfurl the journal through the [illegible]s which surround it, until he shall enjoy the liberty of expressing his [illegible]s without transgressing the limits prescribed by the law.

M. Lestiboudois has given notice to the National Assembly on Tuesday the report of the committee to which the proposition of M. Lausedat relative to the papers found in the Royal palaces, after the revolution of February, had been referred. The committee propose to appoint a committee of fifteen representatives to examine and class those documents, and select such as were entitled to publication.

The rentes carried on the Bourse on Tuesday, that General Cavaignac had been fired at, is said to be well founded. The rumour states, that on Sunday evening an officer walking in the garden of the General's residence in the Rue de Varenne, was fired at from, it is supposed, a house in the Rue de Babylone. The matter is to be the subject of investigation. General Cavaignac is paying the penalty inflicted on every honest Governor or Governments of France; he is assailed on all sides by all parties with a degree of rancour exceeding that which compelled Louis Philippe to retire, all which is in proportion to his importance. One hears on all sides insinuations against the loyalty of the chief of the National Guard—that the soldiers have been rendered discontented by the representations of at once the Legitimists, Bonapartists, and Socialists—that the Garde Mobile are (it is true) infinitely better paid than they were, but, it is said, in proof of this, that at the review on Sunday last two regiments expressed loudly [illegible] the Garde Mobile [illegible] But the report [illegible] been contradicted by the Moniteur. Other rumours rendering the position of General Cavaignac painful are resorted to by the partisans of all but the existing moderate Republic. As the day for the elections (Sunday next) approaches, the efforts of the political agents of General Cavaignac will, no doubt, increase. The state of Paris is not satisfactory; the Red Republicans, Communists, and the Bonapartists respectively are described as in a state of [illegible]ement and hope.

Letters from Lyons of the 8th inst. announce that a club of Montagnards has been established in that city, which is regularly attended three times a week by at least 2000 operatives. At the last meeting an historical essay was read in praise of the most celebrated Communists who have appeared since the commencement of the world, comprising Socrates, Plato, Cabet, Considérant, and Prudhon. The reading of the composition was terminated amidst cries of "Death to the Aristocrats."

The accounts from the department of the Lower Pyrenees stated that the insurrection in the Valley of Arros had been appeased through the interference of several influential inhabitants of the country. A number of peasants of the Valley paid, on the 4th, their arrears of the tax of 45 centimes, and the others had abandoned all idea of resisting the payment.

From the departments partial disturbances, and complaints of the menacing attitude assumed by the peasantry, have been announced during the week. The miners employed at Rive de-Gier, in the neighbourhood of Saint Etienne, had struck work for the purpose of obtaining an increase of wages and a diminution of the hours of labour. They refused to work for upwards of nine hours a day, and demanded 4f. 25c. (3s. 6d.) for that time. The Attorney-General of the district having communicated with them, they returned to their employment, on an understanding that their demands should be taken into consideration

At Lille some alarm has been created by numbers of unemployed operatives parading the town, demanding work.

At St. Servan and St. Malo the population rose to prevent an English sloop from loading corn and potatoes, which were purchased for the English market; but the gendarmes and the coast guard having marched against the rioters, whilst the National Guard refused to aid, the quays were cleared at the point of the bayonet, and the sloop, having received her cargo, proceeded on her voyage.

Accounts from Algiers, of the 2d inst., announce that some agitation had manifested itself in the western parts of the regency, and two battalions had been accordingly embarked at Algiers for Oran

NATIONAL ASSEMBLY.

MONDAY.—M. Marrast, the President, took the chair at a quarter-past 12.

The order of the day was the discussion on the proposition of M. Crespel de Latouche, relative to the repression of offences of the press during the state of siege.

The proposition declares, that during the state of siege, whilst the Constitution is under discussion, no journal can be suspended. The Bill of the Committee of Legislation declares that the laws of the Republic can, in cases of sedition, summon the offending parties before the Court of Assizes, by means of direct summons, and in forty-eight hours. If a verdict of guilty be declared by the jury, the journal can be suspended for a period of from one week to three months. In cases of non-appearance, the Court shall condemn by default. The judgment by default shall be executed in what concerns the suspension, notwithstanding all opposition. The appeal to the Court of Cassation shall only be received after the definitive judgment.

M. Crespel de Latouche observed that what the proposition demanded was exceedingly important to establish, during the discussion on the Constitution, the regular administration of the tribunals for the irregular, and, in his opinion, arbitrary administration of the Government in its present position. The new Bill, as altered by the Committee, in part only respected to what he considered necessary. But numerous amendments had been given notice of, and, if adopted, would make the Bill of such a nature as to satisfy what he and the other friends of freedom of discussion demanded. He should, therefore, refrain at present from any further remarks, reserving to himself to support the amendments of which he had spoken

M.M. Dufaure, Labordère, St. Gaudens, and Victor Hugo opposed the Bill, which was supported by M. Marie, the Minister of Justice, that functionary considering [illegible] discussion ensued, in the course of which several deputies loudly protested against what they called "the dictatorship" at present existing; and a motion having been made to the effect "that the Assembly should not proceed to discuss the articles of the Bill," the Assembly divided, and refused, by a majority of 515 to 238 votes, to allow the discussion to proceed. The Assembly having decided against the discussion of the articles, M. Crespel de Latouche rose and declared that he did not abandon his proposition. The majority, he observed, might have voted as he did against the project of the committee, because it had introduced into it a new right, the right of suspending the journals, which did not exist in it. What he desired was, the common law, legality, and nothing but legality; since he proposed that the tribunals alone should have the right, even under the state of siege, to try offences committed by the press. This attempt to open the debate was, however, soon crushed by the carrying of the "previous question" (which was loudly called for) by a majority of 457 to [illegible].

General Lamoricière, Minister of War, next and on the tribune two projects of decree, the one demanding a credit of 4,000,000f. to indemnify several proprietors in Algeria, who had been expropriated many years ago, and to whom the State hitherto paid an annuity of 10 per cent., and the other claiming a further credit of five millions of francs to encourage emigration to Algeria, and establish agricultural colonies in that country. The Assembly next renewed the debate on the preamble of the new Constitution. The amendment on the 4th article, adding "labour" to the bases of the Republic (which were originally declared to be "family, property, and public order"), and the modification of the 6th article, which now stands thus, "The Republic imposes upon citizens, and contributes towards them, mutual duties," were adopted without any discussion. M. Mathieu, de la Drôme, then moved to replace the 8th paragraph of the preamble by the following clause:—

"It is the duty of the Republic to protect the citizen in his person, his family, his religion, his property, his labour, and to place within the reach of every one the instruction indispensable to all men; to afford assistance to necessitous citizens, either by procuring them the means of existence by means of its resources, or in giving, in default of family, the means of existing to those who are unable to work. With a view to the accomplishment of all those duties, and for the guarantee of all those rights, the National Assembly, faithful to the traditions of the great Assemblies which have inaugurated the French Revolution, decrees as follows the Constitution of the Republic."

M. Mathieu's amendment went to admit the right of all citizens to instruction, labour, and assistance. After M. Mathieu's speech on the subject, the Assembly [illegible]

TUESDAY.—The debate on the amendment of M. Mathieu was resumed, in the course of which M. Gauthier de Rumilly and M. de Tocqueville opposed the amendment as evidently moved by a partisan of Socialist doctrines. The latter declared that a growing danger of the cause of the French Revolution, and contended that it had been effected to destroy the order of things which the Socialists were striving to re-establish under another name. He next cited the history of the United States, to prove how necessary property was to existence, and showed what an insignificant part Socialism had acted in their revolution. He contended that the Revolution of February had been democratical and not Socialist.

M. Ledru-Rollin followed, and pleaded in favour of the right to labour, which had, he contended, been the constant pre-occupation of the members of the Convention, and which was formally inscribed in the report of Robespierre.

M. Duvergier de Hauranne opposed the amendment.

M. Corbon observed that if he advocated the right to labour, it was because he considered it as a necessity of the Revolution of February. The hon. deputy observed that he must deplore the decision of the distinguished men who had been charged to frame the new constitution, to resume the right in question in consequence of the events of June. He contended that that right had been recognised by all the barreaux (bars), and he had been delegated by his with the expression of defending it in the deliberations of those bodies. M. Corbon then examined the causes of the last Revolution, and contended that it had not been Socialist, but democratical and social. He disclaimed all personal participation in the overthrow of Louis Philippe, and added that, at noon, on the memorable 24th of February, he was not even dreaming of the Republic. His declaration was received by the right with a shout of derisive laughter.

M. Antony Thouret, M. Crémieux, and M. Grévy spoke in favour of the amendment.

WEDNESDAY.—The debate was resumed to-day at some length, in spite of an attempt by M. Delahaye to bring the question to a division

M. Armand de Lamoricière, after denouncing Communist opinions, strongly advocated the necessity of inscribing the right to labour in the new Constitution

M. Thiers, who followed, observed that the question before the Assembly was not a mere question of political economy, it was a social question. The honourable deputy went on to expose the insanity of the Socialist doctrines, and, after having defended the rights of property, together with liberty and (of) competition, the bases on which society rested. Its principle was labour, without which man would be the most miserable of beings, and society itself plunged in misery. God and society told man, "Work, work, and you will receive the price of your labour. The produce of your toil shall be your property and that of your children;" and man lived and died of his life with, at all events, a moral assurance. The prosperity of a country was to be judged by the more or less respect enjoyed by property. With respect to competition, M. Thiers maintained that it was for the people that suffered from it, and contended that the operative had been greatly benefited by the introduction of machinery, and the other improvements in industry. In the course of his long and eloquent oration, the speaker was frequently interrupted by the clamour of dissentient members, and having pronounced the word "fractions," the greatest confusion ensued, and one of the Montagnards called him a Royalist. When silence was restored, M. Thiers resumed his seat, and after enforcing his Conservative opinions by a mass of statistical and historical data, concluded by appealing to the justice and humanity of the Assembly not to inscribe the right to labour in the Constitution.

M. Considerant, who spoke next, maintained that the present society required to be reformed, and that it was the duty of the National Assembly to devote its entire solicitude to that desirable object. He was left speaking.

SPAIN.

Accounts from Madrid of the 6th inst. state that General Pavia had resigned the Government of Catalonia, in consequence of ill-health, and that he would probably succeeded by General Cordova. The Carlist force at present in arms against the Government in the province was estimated at 8,500 or 9,000 men.

Baron del Assio, the Chargé d'Affaires of Denmark, had received letters from his Sovereign according him as Minister Resident at Madrid, and had on the 7th presented his credentials to the Queen. Generals Cordova, Orbe, and [illegible]ay Alhos, were preparing to leave for Catalonia.

On the 6th an extraordinary courier, despatched from Paris by [illegible]s, Rothschild, brought to the Minister of Finance a sum of 4,000,000 reals in gold, the proceeds of a negotiation entered into between that house and M. Mon, relative to the quicksilver mines of Almaden.

Two other Generals, Galiano and Bolestal, had been ordered to Catalonia. A decree of the Queen granted leave to General Figueras, Minister of War, to proceed to Grenada, and appointed the Duke of Valencia President of the Council, to direct the affairs of the war department during his absence.

The Madrid journals of the 7th inst. announce the sailing from Cadiz, on the 23d, for the Philippine Islands, of the frigate Mercedes, with 99 prisoners on board, viz 12 officers, 33 sergeants, and 54 soldiers. Among the first was Don Narciso de la Escosura.

BELGIUM.

The Monsteur Belge announced at Brussels on the 11th that the Discount-office (comptoir d'escompte) is about to enlarge its sphere of operation, and to receive bills payable in any and every locality in Belgium at the usual rates.

The comptoir d'escompte has been established for times of difficulty, and it will be a great advantage to commerce, if, when bankers refuse to discount bills out of Brussels, they may be cashed at these institutions.

HOLLAND.

Holland has just escaped a serious political crisis by a fortunate arrangement of the important question of the Fundamental Pact, or "reform" bill. It was generally feared that the liberal provisions of this measure would be rejected by the Upper Chamber, whereas, on the contrary, that assembly has accepted the Assembly's article as by majorities varying from 22 against 4 to 14 against 12 votes. Thus, all difficulties have disappeared, and the provincial states will assemble forthwith, for the purpose of electing the members who are, in conjunction with the existing members of the second chamber, to form what is called "the double chamber," whose office it will be to vote the revision en dernier ressort. The attention of the public is naturally directed to the choice of the new members, on whom the ultimate fate of the measure will depend.

GERMAN STATES.

FRANKFORT. The German National Assembly having, in their sitting of the 5th inst, resolved to suspend the execution of the military and other measures stipulated by the armistice which was concluded at Malmö on the 26th of August, 1848, the President of the Imperial Council of Ministers, and the body of the Imperial ministers and the Under-Secretary of State, have resigned their offices into the hands of the Regent, who has been pleased to accept their resignation.

The Regent has ordered Mr. Frederich Dahlmann, member of the German National Assembly, to form another Ministry.

One of the last public acts of the ex-Ministers was a decree, signed by the Archduke Regent, on the 2nd inst., and published on the 4th, in which the official forms are fixed under which the Regent and his Ministers are to communicate with each other, and with all German authorities. They are very simple.

An envoy has arrived at Frankfort from the Provisional Government at Bucharest, in Wallachia, and has sent his credentials to Baron Gagern. The letter, which was read by the President, recommends M. Majorescko, and announces that he is sent to give every explanation that may be required with regard to the great political changes which have taken place in the Principalities on the Danube. Baron Gagern said that he would place this interesting document in the hands of the new Foreign Secretary as soon as he should be nominated.

M. Donoleon, Ambassador of the United States at Berlin, in conformity with orders received from his Government, has announced official communications with the Provisional Executive of Germany.

Very considerable subscriptions are constantly made towards the German fleet, and no small sums arrive from Germans out of the country. An extraordinary donation was announced the other day:—"A hundred pounds or so from the German provinces of the Russian empire on the Baltic." It shows a good deal of courage on the part of those Germans, to send this patriotic remembrance from Russia.

The latest accounts from Frankfort agree in the opinion, that, from the present feelings of the Deputies, it might be confidently expected that, at the next deliberation (on the 11th) on the armistice, they would agree to its ratification.

On the 9th, the following combination of the new Ministry was reported:—

Baron Von Arnim, Foreign Affairs; Standmann, Interior; Compes, Justice; Herrmann, Finance; and Duckwitz, Commerce.

PRUSSIA.

On the 7th instant, Ministers sustained a defeat in the National Assembly at Berlin. For some days previously, considerable excitement prevailed in the capital, and every hour brought forth a fresh host of placards and circulars bearing the liberal clubs and the liberal portion of the civic guard, and inveighing against Ministers, for refusing, after a month's delay, to carry out the decision of the Constituent Assembly respecting the intimation to those officers who acted contrary to the spirit of the new order of things, that it was a matter of honour on their part to withdraw from the army. All efforts to conciliate the ultra-Liberals on the subject failed; they would accept no other motion than that proposed by the veteran Jacoby, to the effect that it is the strict duty of Ministers to carry out the decision of the Constituent Assembly on the 9th of August, with the view of pacifying the country, and avoiding a rupture with the above Legislative body. While, therefore, the preparations were being made for suppressing any popular disturbance, the Civic Guard gave free expression to their discontent with the conduct of the Cabinet, particularly for having on the 9th instant induced the Assembly to vote for that clause in the Civic Guard Bill which declares that every member of that armed body shall be equipped, not (as solemnly promised by the King on the 19th of March, the day after the revolution) at the expense of the state, but at his own.

In this state of things the debate on Stein's motion was begun on the morning of the 7th, and, after a long and stormy debate, it was carried by a majority of 67. The announcement of the result was received with the most enthusiastic cheers by the tens of thousands who were waiting outside to hear the result, and who, pending the debate, amused themselves by hanging the ministers in effigy. On the morning of the 8th Ministers tendered their resignation, which, however, had not been accepted by the King up to the 9th. M. Beckerath, of Crefeld, and Hansemann, of Frankfort, had been sent for by the King, and it is said he would be commissioned to form a new Ministry. M. Rodbertus, Minister of Religious Affairs, and MM. Robertus and Waldeck, were named as likely to be members of the new Cabinet. A great deal of excitement prevailed in Berlin during the whole of the 9th inst., in consequence of a report that the King would not accept the resignation of the Ministers.

AUSTRIA.

The Wiener Zeitung, the official organ of the Austrian Government, states that the negotiations for a peace with the King of Sardinia have as yet made little progress, and that the Austrian Government have resolved to proceed at once with the reorganisation of the Lombardo-Venetian kingdom. Deputies from the different provinces will, therefore, assemble at Verona to give their advice on the subject of the new constitution of the country, on the basis of the greatest liberty and a proper consideration of nationality. "The interior administration of the Lombardo-Venetian kingdom," adds the Vienna Zeitung, "will be exclusively Italian."

All eyes were, however, fixed with more intensity upon Hungary than upon Italy. It was said that the Emperor had refused to sanction his Hungarian financial and military code, and that Deak and Batthyany were, therefore, on the point of giving in their resignation.

On the 6th inst. a deputation of the Hungarian Diet, consisting of 21 members, arrived at Vienna, to request a decisive and definite answer in regard to the policy which the Austrian Government intended to pursue in regard to Hungary and Croatia. The deputation was to wait upon the Emperor on the next day, to demand from him in person the answer to this important question.

The Emperor had fixed an audience to five of the members of the deputation.

HUNGARY.

The Hungarian Ministry, which had been rendered more feeble every day by Kossuth's politics, was now on the eve of its certain dissolution at the date of our latest accounts.

Francis Kemeharzy had already sent in his resignation, and the other Ministers intended to follow his example.

The defeat of the Hungarians, at the Roman encampments, by the Croatians, had been officially confirmed.

ITALIAN STATES.

LOMBARDY AND PIEDMONT.—It is stated that the Austrian Cabinet is divided in opinion as to three modes of arranging the Italian question. One party proposes the line of the Adige as the extreme frontier of the Italian provinces. The second, which is supported by the Austrian General Government of Frankfort, proposes the line of the Mincio. The third wishes to maintain the political union of the Lombardo-Venetian kingdom with the Austrian Empire, whilst it be satisfied to secure to a national administration independent of the Central Government of Vienna. It is proposed by this party that a son of the Archduke Regulier, who was born at Milan, shall be placed at the head of the Lombardo-Venetian Government.

At Genoa, on the 3d, a grand dinner of 700 covers had been given by the officers of the Neapolitan Guard to the officers of the line. The utmost harmony prevailed, and no disorder took place either within or without doors. The troops composing the garrison took on the same day the oath to the statute and the state, as prescribed by the late order of the day. At de Boni, whose extraction by the mobs caused the late tumult, has returned to Genoa. The city was tranquil; but all the commoner classes were anxious that Genoa should become the port of Lombardy, and all sorts of sacrifices would be made to attain that object.

ROME.—Matters here are in a very unsettled state. To the political embarrassments of the Roman Council are added the pecuniary ones of the time

HER MAJESTY'S VISIT TO SCOTLAND.

THE QUEEN LANDING AT ABERDEEN.

College in the saloon of the Royal yacht. They were accompanied by the Earl of Aberdeen, their Chancellor, and were severally introduced by his Lordship to her Majesty. The Queen then received the Provost and magistrates of Old Aberdeen, who were also severally introduced by the Earl of Aberdeen. The freedom of Old Aberdeen has been conferred on Prince Albert, by the magistrates of Old Aberdeen, and the degree LL.D. by the Senatus of King's College.

PREPARATIONS FOR THE LANDING.

In the immediate vicinity of the landing-place, the arrangements were also conducted admirably by Mr Abernethy. The quay opposite to the landing-place was floored and covered with crimson cloth, over a space of about forty feet square, around which walked sentries of the 93rd Highlanders. The grand stand in front was filled by nearly 1800 respectably dressed persons, and the crowd on each side of the line fenced in for the Royal progress was very dense. In the open space, between the grand stand and the Royal landing-place, were a number of the clergymen of the city, in their robes. A number of the principal citizens were also admitted. About half-past seven o'clock the boys of the Grammar School marched down the quay, under Dr. Melvin, displaying two white silk flags, with city arms emblazoned, and two Union Jacks. They took up a position along the inside of the Royal route from the triumphal arch westward to the Canal bridge. The boys of Gordon's Hospital followed, with two flags, and took up their position from the Canal bridge westward. Sheriff Watson's Female Industrial School, the Boys' Hospital, and other educational institutions, followed in succession; and the effect produced by this arrangement was particularly pleasing. The Gordon's Hospital boys' band marched up to the triumphal arch, and played "God Save the Queen," as a duet, in a very creditable manner.

"THE AULD BALGOUNIE BRIG."

The extreme height of the centre portion to the top of the parapet is 37 feet from the ground; the whole is painted in imitation of granite.

THE LANDING.

At a minute or two before half past 8, her Majesty and Prince Albert made their appearance in the round-house, and walked out to the quarter-deck in company with his Royal Highness Prince Albert, his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, her Royal Highness the Princess Royal, and his Royal Highness Prince Alfred, when the Royal party were received with a loud and continued cheer from the multitude.

Her Majesty was received on the quarter-deck by Lord Aberdeen, Lieutenant of the county, and Lord Adolphus Fitzclarence. Sir George Grey and Captain the Hon. Alex. Gordon were also on deck, as were also the Ladies in Waiting (the Countess of Gainsborough and Viscountess Canning).

Exactly at half-past eight, the Queen stepped from the yacht, down the gangway, to the platform—her Majesty being conducted down-stairs by Lord Adolphus Fitzclarence. Her Majesty led by the hand the Princess Royal; and was followed by Prince Albert, who led in his right hand Prince Alfred, the Prince of Wales holding his brother's left hand. Lord Aberdeen and Lord Fitzclarence accompanied the Royal party to their carriage. Sir George Grey, the Ladies and Equerries in Waiting, &c., followed.

Immediately upon her Majesty's stepping ashore, the Royal standard was hauled down from the mainmast of the Royal yacht, and the union jack substituted; a Royal salute was fired from a battery on the Inches; the city bells were set a-ringing; and the seamen on board of her Majesty's yacht and the Firaga gave three rounds of hearty cheers, which were responded to from the shore, and from the vessels in the harbour, with the utmost enthusiasm.

Her Majesty and Prince Albert, and the Royal children, having taken their seats in the Royal carriage, the cortège moved off in the following order. The Sheriff of the County, the M.P. for the city, in his own carriage; the Lord Provost, Magistrates, and the other city officials, in three carriages, the one containing the Lord Provost being last; the Queen, his Royal Highness Prince Albert, and the three Royal children, in the Royal carriage; followed by several of the Professors and Clergymen, in their ministerial habiliments, on foot: then, a carriage containing Lord Aberdeen, in military uniform; Admiral Gordon, M.P. for the county, in naval uniform; Mr. Grant, of Monymusk, Convener of the county, in military uniform; and Captain the Hon. A. Gordon: then came the carriage which contained the Countess of Gainsborough, and Viscountess Canning, &c. The carriages which followed were occupied by Sir George Grey, Sir James Clark, and others in attendance upon the Royal party. In passing along the quay the scene was extremely brilliant: the whole of the vessels in the harbour were decorated profusely with flags, some single ships displaying scores; while on many of the houses along the quay huge union jacks and other flags had been erected. The pensioners lined the south end of Marischal-street; and when her Majesty turned up that street, they formed in immediately behind the Royal carriage, in two single files, in which order they followed her Majesty to Holburn. The houses in Marischal-street displayed many beautiful flags, and every window was crowded with beauty and fashion. The most hearty and enthusiastic plaudits resounded on all sides. The progress along Union-street was very grand. Flags and banners were suspended in large numbers, and the aspect of the street, when viewed from one end, was magnificent. On arriving at the confines of the city at Holburn, the magistrates and the other city officials drew aside.

KING'S COLLEGE.

THE CATHEDRAL.

Her Majesty, on passing, was graciously pleased to recognise the civic authorities, courteously bowing to them as they passed on. The Queen then passed on. The magistrates, immediately returned to town in their carriages, as did also the pensioners and special constables.

THE ROYAL PROGRESS TO BALMORAL.

After the magistrates of Aberdeen left the Royal party on the confines of that city, the Royal carriages proceeded along the Deeside-road; the first object of attention being the triumphal arch at Cuparston, where an immense crowd received her Majesty with loud cheering.

The arch consisted of three divisions—a large centre one, and two smaller side ones. On the summit was an imperial crown, tastefully executed in flowers, and at the two sides large Scots thistles. Throughout, the arch was a rich mass of flowers and evergreens, and the whole had a very fine effect.

At the Cults arch the families of the neighbouring proprietors and gentry had

MARISCHAL COLLEGE.

THE ROYAL PROGRESS TO BALMORAL.

ARCH AT CUPARSTOWN, NEAR ABERDEEN.

ARCH AT MURTLE.

met: and when her Majesty passed the whole party adjourned to the front of Mr. Ishirra Gibb's house, drank a glass of wine in honour of the occasion, and afterwards adjourned to Corbie Tap, or Morque, to a hearty breakfast with the laird

At Murtle, opposite the gate, was raised an arch of tasteful design, formed of two large pine trees, between which were suspended wreaths of evergreens, surmounted by a crown composed of natural flowers, beneath which were the Royal initials, V. A. Here her Majesty was pleased to stop, and receive fruit and flowers for the Royal children, from the Misses Thorburn, of that place.

The next arch was below Culter House; it was of massive proportions, and composed of evergreens, variegated with dahlias

At Drum was an arch of Gothic design, consisting of two castellated towers, and thus forming a large arch, spanning the carriage-way, with one on each side over the footpath.

At Park was a pretty sylvan and floral structure, of Eastern design, with "Victoria and Albert" inscribed in gold, and bordered with flowers.

At Crathes was a fine arch, of light and elegant design, with pilasters wrought with evergreens and flowers, and its pediment surmounted with a large crown, and a banner, stretched just above the archway, bore "Mearns hails its Queen."

ARCH AT PETER CULTER.

At Banchory the demonstrations were numerous and tasteful. At the entrance to the village was erected a triumphal arch of gigantic dimensions, composed entirely of heather, and surmounted by a figure of the British Crown, six feet high, by five and a half wide, formed of dahlias and other flowers. The centre arch, and also the two side ones, were wreathed round with bouquets of flowers, and surmounted with two large banners, bearing inscriptions. At the west end of the village stood another triumphal arch, composed of evergreens and flowers, and surmounted by Princes' Feathers, Union Jacks, and two banners. In front of the Burnett Arms Inn, where the Royal party changed horses, and on both sides of the street, spacious hustings were erected for the accommodation of the gentry of the county. At the distance of about one hundred yards above the village an arch was erected by Mr. Skene, a farmer, Kinneskie. It consisted entirely of oats, barley, and wheat, so neatly arranged that the ears only were visible, and bore the motto "Peace and Plenty."

[ARCH AT CRATHES.

About a mile and a half above the village, and close by the porter's lodge of Inchmarlo, another triumphal arch was erected, covered with heath, inlaid with moss, and festooned with flowers; and at the distance of about a mile further onward, and in full view of the mansion of Blackhall, stood another triumphal arch, erected under the auspices of H. Ross, Esq. This arch was composed entirely of stags' heads with splendid antlers. At each side of the arch was a pedestal, surmounted by two of the sons of H. Ross, Esq., in full Highland costume, and holding each a hound by the collar, and at the bottom of the pedestals were two Highlanders in their native garb, bearing a flagstaff and banner. Prince Albert, in passing Mr. Ross's arch of stags' heads, was heard to say, "What a beautiful display!" Early in the day a large concourse of spectators, numbering from four to five thousand, assembled in the village, to wait the arrival of the Royal party. Nothing could surpass the order and propriety manifested by this large assemblage.

At about a quarter to eleven o'clock, the Royal carriage, containing her Majesty, Prince Albert, and the three Royal children, drove up, and stopped in front of the Inn. Sir George Grey then introduced Sir Thomas Burnett, Lord-Lieutenant of the county, to the Queen and Prince Albert, and Sir Thomas presented a loyal address from the nobility and gentry, which was most graciously received. The Queen thanked Sir Thomas Burnett for the reception, and expressed herself very much struck with the beautiful scenery of the district.

After remaining in the village about 12 minutes, and changing horses, the Royal carriage moved on amidst the acclamations of the assembled multitude.

At Potarch Bridge a large Gothic arch was thrown across the road: it was composed of evergreens, moss, and heather, and surmounted by a crown of flowers and banners, inscribed "V. and A.," and "Welcome, Queen of the Highland Home."

ARCH AT DRUM.

At Aboyne the Royal party arrived at 12 o'clock, and alighted to lunch, Lady Aboyne attending on her Majesty. An elegant foot-cloth, of Gordon tartan, had been prepared for her Majesty to walk on from her carriage to the Inn. Immediately after the lunch, the carriage left for Ballater.

Ballater was reached at half-past 1, where their approach was announced by the booming of cannon on the height of Cairndarroch. An immense assemblage of the inhabitants and summer residents and neighbouring gentry were dressed in full Highland costume. They attracted the attention of the Queen, and Prince Albert beckoned one of the clansmen to the side of the carriage, and questioned him as to the sept he belonged to several gentlemen had, also, the honour of paying their respects to the Prince.

As soon as the horses were changed, the Royal carriages set off at a rapid pace, crossing the bridge, and taking the south side of the river, and, notwithstanding the uneven nature of the ground, the journey of nine or ten miles was performed in little more than an hour, bringing her Majesty to Balmoral about a quarter to three o'clock. At Crathie, about a mile and a half on this side of Balmoral, the last public demonstration took place. There was an arch, and in large letters the phrase, "Welcome to your Highland home, Victoria and Albert." At Balmoral itself there was nothing like decoration. Indeed, beyond Crathie Lare was little interruption of the wonted solitude of the place. In the course of twenty minutes after the arrival of her Majesty, the detachment of the 93d Highlanders who were to receive her Majesty were on their way to their present head-quarters, the old Castle of Braemar; and, beyond the servants and a few London policemen, to warn off over-inquisitive intruders, there was nobody left to disturb the privacy which the Royal party wish to enjoy. The seclusion at Balmoral is the better secured, that all the Deeside traffic is on the other bank of the river.

This week we have engraved several of the arches raised upon this very interesting occasion. Next week, we shall present our subscribers with a few other commemorations of the Royal Visit, which were raised between Banchory and Balmoral

In the Aberdeen Herald, whence the preceding descriptive details have been condensed, the "Sporting Prospects" of the Royal Visit were thus glanced at:—"It being one of the objects of her Majesty, in taking a Highland residence, to afford Prince Albert an opportunity of showing his dexterity in the sporting line, Balmoral has been well chosen. Having had an opportunity of traversing his Royal Highness's beat, we should say, that, as regards grouse, the prospect is not very favourable, and we ground our opinion on the number of barren birds we encountered. If the ptarmigan are not wild, good sport may be expected amongst the crags, near the summit of Lochnagar; but, if the weather 'breaks,' he will have some difficulty and delay in following them from cliff to cliff The deer will, no doubt, be 'driven,' so sport in that way may be expected; but there is no doubt that his Royal Highness will have access to better beats, such as the Invercauld and Mar Forests. One of the best grouse shootings, viz the Moss of Monaltrie, is not far distant. The only dog about the place is the late Sir Robert Gordon's favourite deer-hound 'Danger,' and we could answer for him doing his duty."

HER MAJESTY AT BALMORAL.

FRIDAY

The Queen appeared to be in excellent spirits on her reaching Balmoral. In the course of the afternoon, her Majesty not only inspected the Castle, but walked through the grounds, and ascended the Craig of Balmoral the hill immediately over the Castle—from whence she obtained a fine view of the wild valley, all the way to the Pass of Ballater. A winding walk has lately been made to a point on the northern side of the hill, from which the prospect is most comprehensive and imposing. Below lies a deep wooded valley within an amphitheatre of hills; and from them e the eye wanders over a scene of wild magnificence, in parts of great beauty.

When night set in, a pile of fuel, which the Invercald tenantry had erected on Craig Lua, was kindled, and shed a bright glare down upon the Castle; while the grotesque figures of about one hundred men, dancing round the fire, added to the wildness of the nocturnal welcome.

ARCH AT PARK.

At Crathie there was a display of fireworks given by one of the proprietors of the Loch na-gar distillery, Mr. Begg, of Aberdeen, who also kindly invited the young folks of the district to a ball. In the course of the evening the health of her Majesty was drunk with enthusiasm, as well as the healths of Prince Albert, the Prince of Wales, and the other members of the Royal family.

The Royal dinner party this evening included her Majesty and the Prince, the Countess of Gainsborough, Viscountess Canning, the Right Hon. Sir George Grey, the Hon. Captain Gordon, Mr. Anson, and Sir James Clerk

SATURDAY.

"To-day"—says the Balmoral Correspondent, a journal published at Aberdeen pour l'occasion—"the weather was somewhat threatening;" but the clouds cleared from off the hills, and their rugged fronts were clothed in sunshine

ARCH NEAR BLACK HALL.

"It is with much pleasure that we have learned that her Majesty and his Royal Highness Prince Albert have expressed the high gratification afforded them by their journey from Aberdeen to Balmoral. The display of public feeling, and the spirit with which it was evinced, they warmly appreciated."

To-day all was quiet at Balmoral, where yesterday all was bustle. There was no visible token of the presence of Royalty, with the exception of the appearance, now and then, of some of the constabulary force patrolling the grounds. There were few visitors in the neighbourhood; indeed, there is no accommodation for any, the whole of the houses in the locality being occupied by those in some way connected with the Royal visit. Harvesting was in progress; and, during the day, the Queen stood for a considerable time viewing the reapers employed in a field near the Castle; her Majesty was on foot, that the labourers knew her not.

In the morning, her Majesty and the Prince walked out in the grounds of Balmoral. The Princess Royal, his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, and Prince Alfred, accompanied by Miss Hillyard, also walked out. Her Majesty and his Royal Highness, accompanied by the Countess of Gainsborough and Captain the Hon. A. Gordon, drove out in a pony carriage on the road to Braemar.

SUNDAY.

Her Majesty and his Royal Highness Prince Albert, accompanied by the Countess of Gainsborough, Viscountess Canning, and the rest of the Royal suite, attended divine service this morning at the Established Church of Scotland, at Crathie. The service was performed by the Rev. Mr. Anderson.

MONDAY.

His Royal Highness Prince Albert went out early to enjoy the sport of deer-stalking, attended by his piqueur and one of the suite staying with the Court. The Prince was early a-foot, and soon had found a fine stag, which he cautiously followed some time; but the moment he had raised his rifle to fire, one of the under-keepers came in the direct range of his piece, and his Royal Highness missed the opportunity of killing his game.

In the course of his excursion the Prince brought down a fine roe. Roes are abundant in the neighbourhood of the castle, but red deer are not generally so plentiful, as their haunts are the higher altitudes; yet still there are sufficient numbers to afford excellent sport, from having been strictly preserved.

Loch an gar was this morning covered with snow, which is rather an unusual occurrence at this early period of the season, but the weather is in general extremely cold, and there is a prospect of its continuance.

Her Majesty and the Prince, accompanied by the Countess of Gainsborough, Viscountess Canning, Lieutenant-Colonel Alfred Paget, the Hon. Captain Alexander Gordon, promenaded the private grounds surrounding the castle this morning.

Lord John Russell is not expected to arrive on a visit here before the close of the week.

TUESDAY.

This morning, her Majesty, attended by Viscountess Canning, rode out; and Prince Albert, accompanied by Sir George Grey, went grouse shooting. The Princess Royal, the Prince of Wales, and Prince Alfred walked in the castle grounds; and during the day the Queen and Prince Albert visited the whisky distillery of Messrs. Begg.

FESTIVITIES AT ABERDEEN.

A grand banquet was given by the Lord Provost and Magistrates, in the Town Hall, on Friday, in celebration of the Royal visit. Among the noblemen and gentlemen present were—Lord Adolphus Fitzclarence, Lord Aberdeen, Lord Haddo, Sir Michael Bruce, Bart., the Lord Provost and Magistrates of Aberdeen, the Provost of Old Aberdeen, James Gordon, Esq. of Craig, Alex. Forbes, Esq. of Blackford, General Byers, of Tonley; John Gordon, Esq. of Cairnbulg, Colonel Fordyce, M.P., Admiral Gordon, M.P., Major Gunr, Robert Grant, Esq. of Tillyfour, Convener of the county, Henry Lumsden, Esq. of Auchindoir, Colonel Fraser of Castlefraser, Captain Hope Johnstone, Thomas Blaikie, Esq., Major Taylor, Alex. Forbes Irving, Esq. of Drum, Hugh Lumsden, Esq. of Pitcaple, Comptroller Donaldson of the Customs, Colonel Sawyers, Captain Charles W. Gordon, the officers of her Majesty's squadron, &c. About 260 covers were laid and occupied. The Lord Provost occupied the chair, and the croupiers were Provost Reid, Bailie Nicol, the Dean of Guild, Bailie Rose, and Treasurer Webster. As this Henry and Gordon presided at the side tables. After dinner, the health of "The Queen" was drunk with enthusiasm; as was, also, the health of "Prince Albert," "The Prince of Wales," "the Prince Alfred, and the Princess Royal;" "The Queen's Ministers," coupled with the name of Sir George Grey; "The Lord-Lieutenant of the County" (Lord Aberdeen); "The Lord Provost and Magistrates;" Lord Adolphus Fitzclarence, and the Officers of her Majesty's squadron;" and other toasts.

When the company broke up, the departure of the Royal Family and suite, a very large majority of ladies and gentlemen partook of a most elegant lunch, prepared for them by Mr. Grant, the obliging landlord of the Bamoral Arms Inn. Many of the Queen and Prince Albert were voted with acclamation.

On Thursday and Friday nights there were several tasteful illuminations in Aberdeen.

The number of persons to witness the landing of her Majesty at Aberdeen, on Friday, was immense. An approximation to it than "many thousands" (Herald) from eighty to a hundred thousand persons in sight from one point. Lie Cross, at the time her Majesty was passing beyond Union Bridge. And, also, many of the persons who had Marischal-ground and the Castle-street in full view—some farther, ran into Union-street, and this appeared twice, it is certain, that at least fifteen thousand, including the scholars of every educational establishment in the city, were spread at these stations, and have thus to be added to the number above mentioned.

THE ILLUMINATIONS.

The several incidents and localities in the Royal Progress which we have engraved are mostly detailed in the preceding narrative. Thus, we have the landing of her Majesty in the noble Harbour of Aberdeen, at page 164; and the progress of the Royal cortège towards the city, at page 165.

The three establishments visited by his Royal Highness Prince Albert, which we have also illustrated are—first, a front view of King's College, Old Aberdeen, about one mile from the New City. This was founded by James IV. in 1494, and opened for students some time previous to 1506. It possesses a fine library, and the chain from the Stationers' Company of London a copy of every book entered at their Hall. The edifice is chiefly remarkable for its tower, from the angles of which spring four arches bristled with pinnacles, and supporting a central lantern.

Next is a view of the Cathedral of St. Machor, or, rather, only a portion of it, at Old Aberdeen, which is retained for the celebration of divine service: its main features are two square towers, surmounted with spires. Another of the prebends of the cathedral, "Sir Gregory Cayneyow," one of the pensioners and chantry Bishop Cheyne, in the early part of the fourteenth century, and popularly known in our time by the mention of it in Lord Byron's "Don Juan"—

> "I am half a Scot by birth and bred
> And love a haggis; and my heart flies to my head,
> As 'auld Lang Syne' brings Scot and, one and all,
> Scotch plaids, Scotch swords, the pibroch and claymore,
> The deer, the Don, Sassenach frity a hawk while,
> All my boo foregone and her other chums
> Of wand like grouse, chiefs in their own pall,
> Like Hamlet's offering—Scotch grace not some
> My childhood in this confluence of runs:
> I care not—'tis a glorious sight of auld lang syne."

Marischal College takes its name from George Keith, Earl Marischal, who founded it towards the close of the sixteenth century as an irregular building, in the north-east part of New Aberdeen, and contains a museum, observatory, and library of 10,000 volumes.

The several Arches raised in commemoration of the Royal visit have already been described.

The newly purchased Royal property lies amid the mountains of Marr, upon the north bank of the Dee, and is thus described by a correspondent of the Morning:—

"From the south Deeside road, the entrance, through a plain gateway, descends through shrubbery towards the house. There is, besides other offshoots, a centre, square and lofty, containing the dining-room on the ground story, and the drawing-room immediately above it—both spacious and handsome rooms for a house in the country. The furniture, and indeed the whole house, is just as it was left at the death of the late Duke of Gordon, the reversion of whose lease from the Earl of Fife, dated 1 Car. I. 1628, for ninety-seven years, has been taken by Prince Albert. Only a few articles of value, the plate, and the clocks have been removed. No time was left for altering or adding, and in the dining-room, the pictures, the property of Lord Aberdeen, remain. The drawing-room has much comfort, but no splendour. The walls are covered with light coloured prints with furniture and hangings to match. A grand piano forms one of a pendage, and a bagatelle-board another. The chief beauty in the drawing-room is the windows and balcony, whence the well-known town and the hill of Craig-Gowan, waving fragrant with every breeze, fill the eye. Attached to the centre there are two wings of equal size, but somewhat different construction from each other. On the wing on the entrant's left hand its front is partially covered with a verandah. All the apartments that can be spared are devoted to bed-rooms; dressing-rooms are, of course, few, and the servants' rooms are in the attics. The kitchen, servants' rooms, and the library and billard-room [illegible] the ground floor of the right wing.

"The entrance hall is at the corner next the main, occupying the remainder of the ground-plan of this wing. Over the interior door is a shallow pectinal front, in Dutch Low-work, the word 'Suite.' The entrance-hall has a Dutch tiled pavement, bearings, flag stands, and the Royal motto, 'Cum crescit.' The fire-place is of iron bars crossed on the south, for wood; and the mantel-piece has figures of projecting warriors. Above these, and overhanging the breadth of both hall, library and the entrance-hall, is the Queen's bed-room; the walls, hangings, and furniture are here too of chintz. The house, be it remembered, runs parallel with the river that is, from east to west. All these rooms, then, look to Craig-Gowan and the south. Prince Albert's dressing-room off the

(Continued on page 168.)

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, Sept. 17.—Thirteenth Sunday after Trinity.
MONDAY, 18.—George I. and II. Landed.
TUESDAY, 19.—The Moon enters her last quarter at 9h. 58m. P.M.
WEDNESDAY, 20.—Ember Week. The Sun rises at 5h. 44m., and sets at 6h. 2m.
THURSDAY, 21.—St. Matthew.
FRIDAY, 22.—Autumn quarter begins. Autumnal Equinox.
SATURDAY, 23.—The length of the days 12h. 6m.

TIMES OF HIGH WATER AT LONDON BRIDGE.
FOR THE WEEK ENDING SEPT. 23.

Sunday	Monday	Tuesday	Wednesday	Thursday	Friday	Saturday
M. A.	M. A.	M. A.	M. A.	M. A.	M. A.	M. A.
h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.
4 30	5 0	5 18	5 40	6 0	6 25	6 55
7 45	8 0	8 30	9 0	9 30	10 0	10 30
11 0

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"Louisa."—See "Blunt's Art of Dancing."
"Ideas from Deauville."—We have not room.
"A Young Artist."—Write to the Secretary of the Society.
"R. M. W."—The Sir. Michael's Schools, independent of the basement story (engraved in our Journal of last week), cost £3000 building.
"J. C. M'—."—Fleming and Tibbins's "Grand Dictionnaire Français-Anglais and Anglais-Français," and Nodier's "Latin Dictionary."
"Alpha."—Further.—The law for abating the marriage of a man with his deceased wife's sister has not been repealed. Our Correspondent had better provide himself with the pamphlets published upon the subject, to understand its present position.
"W. B." Plymouth.—The announcement would be subject to advertisement duty.
"R. S.," Dublin.—We do not know of any memoir of Madame Grisi published separate.
"F. D.," Birr.—The Mechanics' Magazine Office is at No. 166, Fleet-street.
"Scholasticus," Dublin. Certainly not.
"A Lover of Music" Norwich.—The Law of Governors, &c., at the Counting-house, Christ's Hospital, Newgate-street.
"A Subscriber," Hammersmith.—No.
"Tees," Hastings.—Apply, with the Bible, to Mr. Lumley, bookseller, No. 56, Chancery-lane.
"Tees" Hastings.—The patronage of the Royal Navy is lodged principally with the First Lord of the Admiralty.
"Subscriber, W." should advertise the Napoleon coin.
"A Subscriber," Ansell. Apply at the Savings Bank of your own district.
"Pati." "The "History of Wool Engraving" has been beautifully reprinted from our Journal, and published at 10s.
"T. M.," Boulogne, is thanked.
"J. P.," Rugeley. We have not room.
"R. E. B."—The song in question may be had, by order, of any music-seller.
"W. H. B.," Liverpool, has a vote for each county in which his property is situated.
"W. & W. R." Stroud.—"Electro-Metallurgy" is published at 10*s.* 6*d.*
"Juvenis."—Apply at Watkins and Hill's, Charing-Cross. The usual sense in which we use the word "erratic" is that of preposterous.
"A. M." Doncaster, is thanked. Hackland Forward Church has already been engraved in our Journal.
"R. G.," Norwich.—Regent's Park.
"A. S." Renfrewshire, is altogether in error.
"A Brighton Subscriber" and "La Tercelosa." We cannot take cognisance of such matters.
"X. Y. X."—Our correspondent must be misinformed. There never was an Earl-dom of De Tiffon.
"An Old and Feeble Subscriber."—By consulting Burke's "General Armory," the arms and crest may be discovered; or by referring to the College of Heralds.
"A. B. C."—An application to some of the officers of the Court of Chancery might elicit the information desired.
"M. G. F."—We do not know what motto is borne by the Bruces, of Berks and Northampton. A reference to the exemplification of arms granted to the late John Symonds, on his taking the name of Bruce, in 1783, would show. That document may be consulted at the Heralds' Office.
"J. V. H."—Dr. Ball, Ann and Ca., 26, Cheapside, or Thomas, on Corhill.
"A Constant Reader."—The sample interest only would be paid; and, if the dividends remain unclaimed for several years, they are transferred to the Government, who will pay them only after having received the most conclusive evidence of the right of the parties applying to receive the amount.
"Hypra."—See Darley's "System of Popular Algebra."
"James."—We cannot decide.
"H. H." Pigeon-house-harbour.
"W. W. H." Apply to Messrs. Allen and Co., or Mr. Maddox, booksellers, Leadenhall-street.
"C. L.," Shrewsbury.—See a "Catechism of Phrenology," published by M'Phun, Glasgow.
"R. J. O."—Refer to our Journal.
"E. W." Agnes Sorel was the reputed mistress of Charles VII. of France. She died A.D. 1450, and all contemporaries agree in commendation of her loveliness and intellectual powers.
"Inquisitrix."—See Bernard's "Book of Archery," published about fifteen years since.
"W. S. W. R.," probably refers to "Arnold's History of the Later Roman Commonwealth."
"H. J. B.," Bristol. Omitted for want of space.
"Invernys." Our charge for our Journal is Twenty-six Shillings per Annum, paid in advance.
"Hyson."—We do not interfere in wagers.
"Worcester."—The price of a Cornetcy in the Light Cavalry is £840. The pay amounts to eight shillings a day—a sum quite inadequate for the befitting support of a gentleman in the station of a Cavalry Officer. There is, we believe, no standard height.

* Our correspondent of the counties of Clare and Galway will find, hereafter, that we have not lost sight of the questions to which his letter alludes. We retain our own opinion as to the propriety of the Irish tenantry, and the Irish people; but we are far from asserting that that generosity was wise, or that the amount of the gift, whatever it may have been, was properly distributed. On the contrary, we quite agree with our correspondent, that the British Government demoralized the Irish people, both by its gifts and by its sudden introduction of a poor-law into a country unable to bear it. The whole suspect, however, is one of the highest importance, and we shall endeavour to do justice to it at a future time.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

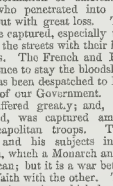
LONDON, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 16, 1848.

It must not be expected that because the foolish attempt of Messrs. O'Brien and Meagher to found a Red Republic in Ireland has been so easily crushed, that a large proportion of the Irish people are not disaffected towards this country, and prepared for rebellion at some more favourable period. Wherever there are large masses of starving men, there are the elements of civil commotion. Unfortunately large masses of the Irish are scarcely ever removed from the near confines of starvation; and during the approaching winter, with a new failure of the potato crop, and a disinclination on the part of the British people to pay any more millions to relieve them, which did not exist on the occasion of the first failure, the misery and discontent of the people are only too likely to be greater than ever. We have already a foretaste of what the winter has, in all probability, in store for us. In consequence, apparently, of the service of some law processes on the peasantry in a dispute for rent, or of a distraint upon the growing crops, the peasantry in the neighbourhood of Kilkenny, Carrick, and Waterford have arisen in large numbers. Notwithstanding the recent search for arms, they have contrived either to secrete the weapons they formerly held, or to provide themselves with new ones; and in numbers variously estimated at from 4000 to 12,000, they last Monday made an attack upon the police-barracks at Carrick, killing one man, seriously wounding a great many, and completely demolishing the building. Other outrages are spoken of, but as yet the accounts are somewhat confused and contradictory. The last authentic intelligence upon the subject will be found in another portion of our paper. One thing seems plain from all we can learn, that the approaching winter will severely try the temper of the people of Ireland, and the patience of the British Government. The collection of the poor-rate, established to relieve the people, has but added to the bitterness and disaffection. A poor-rate, in many parts of Ireland, is equivalent to a confiscation of property—to a killing of the goose that lays the eggs. In Nenagh the furniture and even wearing-apparel of persons, formerly in respectable circumstances, have been seized and sold for arrears of poor-rate; and former rate-payers have thus been transformed into rate-consumers and paupers. We have a letter before us showing the case of one Union, that of Scarrift, the whole property of which, by the Government valuation, is £47,000. In that Union, according to the writer, there are 10,000 paupers. Thirty thousand pounds have been spent within this Union in nine months; it is now £7000 in debt; and a rate of 7*s.* 6*d.* in the pound upon its property has just been imposed. Tranquillity is not reasonably to be expected in a country which offers many samples of a condition like this; and the well-intended Poor-Law has but aggravated the evils it was intended to alleviate. So powerless are Governments in all attempts to feed and employ the people, or to improve the social condition of a nation! Yet, powerless as they are, an attempt of some kind must be made to give profitable work to the Irish, and raise them from their present state of dangerous and degrading pauperism, under the penalty of continually repeated turmoil and convulsions.

While Germany is peacefully pursuing her projects of consolidation and union, amid the doubts and fears of Europe, the fortunes of Italy are more varied and complicated. Austria has at length accepted the offered mediation of England and France in the affairs of the Lombardo-Venetian kingdom, but upon a basis which can evidently lead to no final or satisfactory adjustment. In the meantime, however, the hope is strengthened, that whatever the final adjustment may be, the peace of Europe will not be again troubled by the armed struggles of the conflicting parties. But, as the conflagration becomes extinguished in this part of Italy, it bursts out in another. The old garment no sooner receives a patch on the right side, than a worse rent displays itself on the left. One difficulty is only soldered, but to disclose another of greater magnitude. Lombardy is disposed of; but Naples and Sicily alarm the whole of Europe by the new turn of events in that part of Italy. The King of Naples has landed a large body of troops at Messina to reduce the Sicilians to subjection; and at the time the last advices left a deadly struggle was raging between the Neapolitans and the Sicilians. On the 3rd inst. the city was bombarded from two sides—great numbers of women, children, and aged people having taken refuge on board of the British and French ships in the harbour. The greater portion of the property of the inhabitants had, in anticipation of a protracted struggle, been previously removed into the interior of the country; so that literally nothing of value was left in Messina, except beds and mattrasses, which were placed against the windows to make loop-holes, as a means of defence and offence against the besiegers. Men and women, old and young, civilians and clergy, rich and poor, laboured in the formation of barricades. A body of Neapolitans and Swiss, who penetrated into the city on the 1st instant, were driven out with great loss. The Messinese took fearful revenge upon the captured, especially the Swiss; and the people marched through the streets with their heads affixed upon the points of their bayonets. The French and English squadrons looked on without interference to stay the bloodshed; but it is said that an envoy from Sicily has been despatched to England to demand the aid or intervention of our Government. Messina, being placed between two fires, suffered greatly; and, after the city was almost entirely destroyed, was captured amid great slaughter by the Swiss and Neapolitan troops. The struggle between the King of Naples and his subjects in Sicily is not like an ordinary rebellion, which a Monarch and his advisers should be left to settle as they can; but it is a war between nations, the one of which has broken faith with the other. The King of Naples has refused the Sicilians the rights which he solemnly promised, and which were the condition of his Sovereignty over that portion of Italy. Great Britain was a party to the stipulation, and may fairly be called upon by the Sicilians to interfere in their behalf. Let us hope that the intervention will be not only speedy and effectual, but that it will prevent the further effusion of blood; and secure for Sicily, without the horrors of any further warfare, the rights of a free people, long promised and too long withheld.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

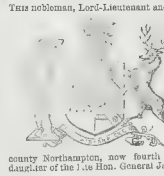
CHARLES, LORD DOUGLAS.



This nobleman, Lord-Lieutenant and hereditary Sheriff of Forfarshire, died on the 4th inst., in his 73d year. The title he had enjoyed since 1844, when he succeeded his elder brother. His father, the first Peer, was Archibald Steward, who contested with the Duke of Hamilton for the estates of his uncle, Archibald, Duke of Douglas, and eventually succeeded, after a long suit, known so well by the name of "the Douglas cause," which made a noise all over Europe, and is one of the most extraordinary ever litigated. Lord Douglas, last deceased, was never married. His brother and successor, the Hon. and Rev. Jas. Douglas, Rector of Broughton county Northampton, now fourth Baron, is married to Williamina, second daughter of the late Hon. General James Murray, but has no issue.

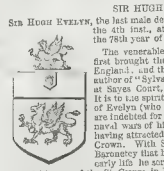
SIR HUGH EVELYN, BART.

Sir Hugh Evelyn, the last male descendant of the author of "Sylva," died, on the 4th inst., at his residence, Forest Hill, Sydenham, in the 78th year of his age.



The venerable Baronet represented George Evelyn, who first brought the art of making gunpowder to perfection in England, and the celebrated and accomplished John Evelyn, author of "Sylva," who obtained the Clerk Peter the Great, at Sayes Court, Deptford, with such princely hospitality. It is to the spirit of planting timber, created by the writings of Evelyn (who was Treasurer of Greenwich Hospital), we are indebted for the timber that built our ships during the naval wars of his Majesty George III., the scarcity of trees having attracted the earnest attention of those officers of the Crown. With Sir Hugh Evelyn, Bart., expires the third Baronetcy that has been granted to this ancient family. In early life he served in the Royal Navy, having been present as midshipman of the Sir George, in Rodney's action of 1782, and at the taking of St. Lucia, in the West Indies.

Sir Hugh was fond of recalling the extinction of an ancient family, but more especially when he [illegible] with a Bailie so distinguished in our country's annals as [illegible] Jarvis, whose descendant is "Discourse on Forest Trees" has gained him no mean position in literature, and whose high character and honour stand as [illegible] forth amid the corruption and licentiousness of the period in which he lived. Of that eminent man, the Baronet, whose decease we record, was the great great-grandson.



THE HON. AND REV. ALFRED WODEHOUSE.

The decease of this gentleman occurred last week. He was the fifth son of Lord, second Lord Wodehouse, by Charlotte Jane, his wife, daughter and heiress of John Norris, Esq., of Witton Park, Norfolk. He was born 10th June, 1814; and married, 3d April, 1840, Emma Marcella, second daughter of Reginald Macdonald, Esq., Chief of Clanranald, by whom he leaves several children.

JOHN FRANCIS LEATHES, ESQ., OF HERRINGFLEET HALL, SUFFOLK.

The death of this lamented gentleman occurred on the 8th inst., at his seat, Herringfleet Hall. He was a magistrate and deputy-lieutenant of the county, second Lord Wodehouse, by whom he was high sheriff of the former in 1827. The family of Massenden, of which Mr. Leathes was the male representative, came over from Normandy in the reign of William the Conqueror, and soon acquired such high position that Sir William de Massenden held the dignified office of Grand Admiral of England A.D. 1123. He founded the Abbey of Massenden, and dedicated it to the Blessed Virgin, in fulfilment of a vow made during a storm at sea, in which, his whole fleet were in the most imminent danger. From this ancient house lineally descended Catherine Massenden, beq., M.P. for Horwich, who assumed, at the death of his maternal uncle, William Leathes, Esq., Minister Plenipotentiary at the Hague—the surname and arms of Leathes. He was father of George Leathes, Esq., of Herringfleet, Major of Dragoons; whose son—John Francis Leathes, Esq., lord of Herringfleet and Readham—forms the subject of this brief notice. At the time of his death Mr. Leathes had completed his 81st year. He was never married.

POSTSCRIPT.

IRELAND.

The latest intelligence from Ireland proves that the descriptions of the disturbances in the vicinity of Carrick and Waterford are much exaggerated. The numbers who attacked the Police barrack of Portlaw did not exceed 300, and they were immediately repulsed by the force within. The rebels got under a low wall which fronts the barrack, under the piers of a gate, quite close, and round the walls of a public-house almost adjoining the barrack, standing erect seen by the police of the fellows under the wall but their pikes standing erect At this time there were about three hundred pikemen and twenty with guns and blunderbusses outside, and six police, a special constable, and magistrate (Mr. Medgwell) inside. The firing was kept up with spirit on both sides for some time, when the rebels decamped, leaving one man dead, one mortally and several slightly wounded. The police remained unmolested in their many halls and slept based them very closely; and from the cool deliberate manner in which they conducted themselves, the rebels would have a different story to tell were it not for the fortunate (for them) cover under which they sheltered themselves. This ended the "Battle of Portlaw," which, like the "Battle of Boulash-common," should show these wretched misguided people and their insane leaders how vain were their efforts to cope with Her Queen's troops, and how hopeless their visionary expectations that the police would fraternise with them

No attack was made on Curraghmore House; it was only threatened. Having so fortified his Court that it would take many thousands of the rebels to dislodge him, Lord Waterford nobly offered protection to the wives and children of the men who were determined to fight the constituted authorities. The wives and children of 100 women and children were safely lodged within his lordship's precincts, while their husbands and brothers were standing in battle array, waiting for the rebels' approach, who, however, altered their sense than to expose themselves to the fire of men who were and are determined to show them that, when provoked to it, they will punish without mercy the disturbers of their country's peace

DONCASTER RACES.—FRIDAY.

DONCASTER CUP

Chanticleer	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	1
Bolaski	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	2
Van Tromp	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	3

Won in a canter

PARK HILL STAKES.

Canezou	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	1
Queen of the May	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	2
Attraction	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	3

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

FRANCE

In Paris the chief subject of discussion is the speech of M. Thiers against the Socialists and Communists; it has been quite a triumph, and is praised by men of all parties.

Placards containing an appeal in favour of Henry V., were surreptitiously affixed to the walls of Aix during the night of the 10th. The moment they were discovered by the police they were pulled down.

The police paid a visit to the Duphot Club, in the street of that name, and seized a copy of the song called "Monsieur Crédit," the name given to the Duke de Bourdeaux, and by which he is hailed as the restorer of confidence and credit, and an anagram of the words "Henri de Bourbon," by which he is called the "Roi du Bonheur."

The accounts of disaffection having manifested itself among several of the regiments of the garrison of Paris, are confirmed: on ration of biscuit being served to them instead of bread, they revolted, and refused to fall into the ranks when the drum was beaten. The mutiny was only quelled by a promise from the authorities that the ordinary ration should be resumed.

AMERICA

The British and North American Royal Mail steam-ship Cambria, Captain Harrison, arrived at Liverpool on Thursday. She sailed from New York on the 31st ult., and Halifax on the 3rd instant, but encountering strong head winds for nine days in succession, the voyage has been rather protracted

The Cambria brings 74 passengers, and £4000 in specie. She saw the Yacht from Liverpool to New York, about one day's sail from Halifax, after she had left that port.

The intelligence by this arrival, although a week later, does not contain anything that is very important.

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

THE ADMIRALTY. The Lords of the Admiralty, with the exception of the Earl of Auckland, who is detained in town owing to slight indisposition, left on Monday on an official inspection, visiting on their route Woolwich, Gravesend, and other points of the river. The First Lord left the Admiralty for Portsmouth on Thursday.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.—An extra reserve battery is in progress of formation, to be composed of married men of from fourteen to twenty years' service; and the horses when cast in future as unfit for field battery service, instead of being sent to one of the London horse repositories for sale, are to be put in the extra reserve battery, and employed at the long and very unpleasant work of the Royal Arsenal, at Woolwich, and the fatigues of the garrison. By this improved arrangement the horses of the regular field batteries will always be available for service, and become more proficient in their duties than they have hitherto been when employed in conveying stores and other works connected with the Royal Arsenal and the garrison. The non-commissioned officers of the extra battery will have a better chance of getting on full pay or addition to their pay when employed at the Royal Arsenal, or on the fatigue duties of the garrison, which will be a great acquisition to many steady married men who have seen long service.

NEW MILITARY ACADEMY.—The preparatory military academy for training pupils, who will afterwards be admitted as cadets of the Royal Military Academy at Woolwich, will be opened on the 2nd of October, at Carshalton, in Surrey, where spacious premises have been taken by the Board of Ordnance. The number of pupils will be limited at first to eighty, the appointment being in the hands of the Master-General of Ordnance. Dr. Andrews has been appointed Head Master, and the various professors have been already named. The pupils will remain at this training school for three years and will go through a course of study in the elements of mathematics, chemistry, French, Latin, drawing, &c., and, if their conduct is unimpeached, will, at the end of that time, be transferred at once to Woolwich, where they will remain till they receive their commissions as second lieutenants of Artillery or Royal Engineers. The establishment at Carshalton will be under the control of the officers of the establishment at Woolwich; Major-General J. B. Parker, C.B., Lieutenant-Governor; and Lieutenant-Colonel W. D. Jones, the Inspector

ROYAL PHILANTHROPIC SOCIETY.—Thursday afternoon a special general meeting of the committee and authorities of the Philanthropic Institution was held at the society's establishment, London-road, for the purpose of adopting a plan for the farm school about to be founded. The boys are to be accommodated in families of 50 or 60 each, the school being arranged in the style of a village; but, although they are to be thus divided, every facility for the most complete superintendence will be maintained, and every care taken to render the general regulations of the establishment efficient.

FATAL ACCIDENT.—On Tuesday evening a fatal accident occurred to Mr. West, junr., son of Mr. West, brewer, Hackney-road. It appeared that he mounted a horse which had thrown him on a previous occasion, when the horse started off at a terrific speed, and at length both horse and rider fell, when the animal, rolling over Mr. West, killed him almost instantaneously. He was a fine promising young man.

THE CHARTIST prisoners in Newgate now awaiting trial have been permitted by the authorities to have the tools requisite for shoemaking and tailoring, in which occupations they are all engaged. The articles they manufacture are to be devoted to their defence

MORE CHARTIST ARRESTS IN MANCHESTER.—On Thursday, Mr. Beswick, chief superintendent of police, Manchester, arrested Patrick Devlin, of Manchester, and William Grocott, secretary to the Miners' Association, also of Manchester. They were ordered to find bail, themselves in £100 each, and two sureties of £50.

APPREHENSION OF THE BRADFORD "WAT TYLER."—On Wednesday morning the Rev. Isaac Jefferson, the Chartist blacksmith of Bradford, better known by the appellation of "Wat Tyler," from the leading part which he took in the Chartist agitation there some months ago, was apprehended at a lone public-house near Swilling, a few miles from Bradford. Three constables, it appears, went on the previous Tuesday afternoon a strong deal box, about eight inches square, and iron-bound, containing 2000 sovereigns, was sent from the firm of Messrs. Praed and Co., Fleet-street, addressed to Tweedy and Co., bankers, Truro, Cornwall; it was forwarded in the first instance to Chaplin and Horne's offices, Swan-with-Two-Necks, Lad-lane, to be by them conveyed in the usual course to Paddington station; on the next morning a hackney coach, which was sent by the mail train, directed as above, was received at the establishment of Messrs. Tweedy and Co., and on its being opened it was found to contain nothing more than a quantity of melted pewter and other rubbish. It turns out that the said box was of somewhat larger dimensions than the one sent from Praed's, but that the address thereon was a very good imitation of that on the original box, for which the other had been in so artful and extraordinary a way substituted. A gentleman from the Truro bank, accompanied by an officer of police, arrived at Paddington on Thursday night a week, when they had an immediate interview with Mr. Sanders, the secretary of the railway company. Mr Collard, the active superintendent of the company's police, with other officers, upon the alert, in order to discover, if possible, the perpetrators of the plunder.

IRELAND.

RENEWAL OF DISTURBANCES.

Intelligence arrived in Dublin on Wednesday, that a disposition to renew the recent disturbances had been manifested by a portion of the peasantry of Tipperary. The details are given by the Kilkenny Moderator on Wednesday:—"No doubt remains that an insurgent force has assembled, showing a spirit of [illegible] determination

"The main body of the insurgents, said to be 4000 strong, has encamped on Ampey Hill, in the county of Tipperary, but within a mile of adjoining the slate quarries in this county. The position is an exceedingly strong one, and every possible measure appears to have been taken to add to its security. There is no doubt that leaders of some military experience are amongst them, and the peasantry are being regularly drilled. They are chiefly armed with pikes, but many have rifles. Richard O'Gorman is said to be chief commander, and Doheny is also supposed to be amongst them. About four o'clock yesterday afternoon a detachment from the camp proceeded to the police barrack of Islandike quarry, which the constabulary had up-tied only 20 minutes previously to take refuge at Tooltown. The insurgents, at some distance from the house, fired through the windows; but finding there was not any person within it, they soon took possession, and ultimately set fire to it, reducing the entire house and furniture to ashes. It is rumoured that the surrounding constabulary stations were attacked, and in some places the police were disarmed, but in others the men had fortunately quitted the barracks, and retired upon Clonmel and Cahir.

"The driver and guard of the Cork Mail, which arrived here about 10 o'clock last night, report that the police had quitted the Glenbower Station, and retired to that of Nine-mile House. Shortly before the arrival of the coach at the latter place a party of rebels had surrounded the station, and demanded that the men (about 10 in number) should surrender their arms. The police refused, and upon their proceeding to attack the house the little garrison first upon the insurgents, and soon put them to flight. The fate of the party is, however, doubtful."

A man from Clonmel reported that "Carrick is in an awful state; the hill around are covered with armed men, who have forced all the farmers to give barrels of bread, meat, and other supplies, as well as arms and ammunition Many of them have been also forced to join the movement, and he stated that Carrick was to be taken forthwith. Not a labourer was to be seen between Carrick and Clonmel, until he reached this town; all have joined the rebels on the hills, who are represented to number several thousands.

"On Monday night there were bonfires in the mountains in the vicinity of Carrick-on-Suir. At two o'clock a constable went to Mr. Coulson, resident magistrate, and roused him from sleep, to inform him of a rising that had taken place near Kilmacthomas. He immediately despatched an express for a company of the 3rd Buffs, to assist the Carrick troops in an expedition against the insurgents They arrived at four o'clock A.M. Meantime pickets patrolled the streets and the vicinity of the town in the expectation of an attack. In half-an-hour after the arrival of the Buffs they started, accompanied by another company of the Buffs from Carrick, and one company of the 83rd, together with a detachment of the 4th Light Dragoons and a party of artillery, with two pieces of cannon. They proceeded to Kilmacthomas, where the rebels were said to be encamped

"It is reported that Doheny headed the armed insurgents who made the attack on Curraghmore for arms on Monday night. He has taken the command of the Waterford rebel division, whose present rendezvous is to be Portlaw; and the Tipperary rebel division, under the command of O'Mahony, is to rendezvous at Slievenamon. Their commissariat is said to be most abundantly supplied, at the expense of the neighbouring farm-houses; and it is a condition on all recruits joining, that they are to bring arms, ammunition, and a supply of food, meat, &c., for a certain number of days. This has all the appearance of a determined and sanguinary rebellion. It is also reported that General Macdonald has demanded an immediate reinforcement of artillery and cavalry.

"But little alarm was excited in Waterford, the firmness exhibited in quelling the recent outbreak giving every confidence that this, also, would soon be effectually put a stop to."

The electric telegraph has transmitted the following account of the mails having been stopped. It is dated "Dublin, Wednesday:

"As the Cork mail was on its way to Dublin, it was met, last evening, between Clonmel and Glenbower, about six miles from the former, by a party of the people, who told the coachman and guard to return, as there was a collision between the police and the people at the Glenbower police station. On arrival there, a man was found lying dead in the road; the police were still safe, but expected a renewed attack. The coachman hurried on to Callan, where he collected a mail from the people, asking for assistance.

"The mail coach did not meet with any obstacle on the part of the peasantry, who are in a high state of excitement, in consequence of ejectments in the neighbourhood and seizures of corn for rent.

"The Waterford mail, which left Dublin yesterday (Tuesday) morning, was stopped near Granny-bridge by a large party of men, who in the first instance would not allow the coach to pass, as they were about to pull down the bridge. After some remonstrance they permitted it to be drawn across. On arrival at Waterford, the guard reported the circumstance to the postmaster, and to Sir C. O'Donel, the General of the district.

The Kilkenny Moderator of Wednesday states that when it went to press, "no further intelligence had arrived in Kilkenny, and we should hope that any matter of importance which may have taken place at Slievenamon could not be of sufficient importance to give rise to serious apprehension. We, however, have no doubt that a partial and unimportant émeute will take place."

THE STATE TRIAL.

On Thursday se'nnight the summonses were served on the Grand Jurors of the South Riding of Tipperary, ordering their attendance in Clonmel on the 21st inst., under the penalty of £100 each in the event of failure

The High Sheriff of the county of Dublin, and the Board of Superintendence, and Mr. Governor Brien and Mr. Hamilton, on Friday, have waited on Mr. O'Brien, at the state trials. The preliminary proceeding or reading over the enormous mass of evidence before the prisoners was not concluded until Saturday evening. One of the witnesses, a boy of 15, who identified Mr. Scott O'Brien, was asked by that gentleman where he saw him, and the lad replied, laughing, "Faith, I saw you, sir, at Mullinahone

It is understood that Mr. Gerald Dowling will be put upon his trial on a charge of high treason before a special jury of the county of Dublin, at the Commission of Oyer and Terminer, which stands adjourned to Saturday, the 21st of October It was supposed that the gentleman would have been tried along with the other leaders at the Special Commission at Clonmel

According to the Freeman, up to the present time nothing is known as to the removal of the prisoners to the place of trial, as neither the post office nor the railway company have received any communication on the subject. It is supposed that they will be sent by a special train, strongly guarded

HIS PRISONERS.—The political prisoners in Clonmel are in good health and spirits, save Mr Dunne. They have a corridor to themselves, to which they are wholly confined, excepting for two hours in the morning, when they are permitted to take exercise in the yard. Their relatives can see them on Wednesdays and Saturdays, but none others. They have been allowed to get their own beds, and provide themselves with their board, of which all of them have availed themselves. Books are excluded, except professional works to two who are pursuing studies. They regularly attend worship on Sunday.

The Freeman's Journal states that the discreditable rumours respecting the fealty of Halpin, the secretary of the Irish Confederation, have no foundation

LANDLORDISM. The Dublin correspondent of the Bath News, in the following communication, strikes at the true source of much of Ireland's misery—the worthlessness of the landlord class. He says: "It is difficult to believe the tales we find from time to time recorded regarding some poor law unions in this country; and many of the incidents which are now of daily occurrence, it is not easy to reject them. I was confidently assured the other day that one of principal graziers of Roscommon, who is about to break up his establishment has been brought to this determination by the remoteness of the poor-rate. All his life this gentleman and his class have found that they could manage many thousand acres of land in sheep pastures and bullock farms with little or no labour, and had not a dozen men, the remaining peasant population burrowing in the bogs. Under the Poor-Law he finds that these people, of whom no account was had, have claims upon him which the law on their behalf insists shall be fulfilled; and not daring to adopt himself one of the only resources, or perhaps, not well knowing how to do so, he has formed the resolution of giving up that which has hitherto been the occupation of his life. He will not be robbed of his property, as he terms it—evictions—seems to have become even a mania. I have heard myself the names of landlords in the west of Ireland who would now permit the occupation of farms, whereon rent or arrears have been evicted. Now, if this gentleman would be able to till the soil and pay the poor-rate. They have themselves no capital, and without it they cannot employ themselves on their own lands which I believe they have no wish to cultivate themselves, and they forget the penalty to be off, more probably that Government will undertake the employment or maintenance, or that population of the proportion they regard as redundant In the union of Kilrush, where we have official knowledge that 1000 houses have been thrown down, I find it stated to-day, in a Limerick paper, that one gentleman will have to pay this year £7000 in poor-rates. I should be curious to know how much this gentleman expends in labour. And the people do not manifest any hesitation to labour, but the contrary. By and by, accustomed to pauperism and the workhouse, it will probably be difficult to withdraw the able-bodied from the workhouse as it is during maternity. At present, in many parts of Clare, and even adjacent to the city of Limerick, the able-bodied labourers engage with the farmers for their board without wages. Some get 2d. per day" for tobacco.'

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

It is nearly two centuries since the city of Aberdeen was graced by the presence of its reigning Monarch. The last Royal visit was that of Charles II. in 1650, when that Monarch, an exile from England, came from Holland protected by the Dutch fleet

The committee charged to examine the question of using the Tuileries for the sittings of the French National Assembly, have declared that building to be [illegible] inappropriate for the purpose

By an Act of the Session just ended (11 and 12 Vic. cap. 90), it is declared that, after the 1st of January next, no person shall be required, in order to be on the list of voters for Members of Parliament, to have paid any poor rate or assessed taxes, except such as shall become payable from him previous to the 5th of January in the same year; and that no person shall be entitled to be on any such list of voters, unless the poor-rates and assessed taxes payable from him previously to the 5th January shall be paid on or before the 20th July next following

On Monday last a notice was issued that an election of six directors of the East India Company for four years, would take place on the 11th of April, 1849, the names of all proprietors entitled to vote at such elections to be made up on the 5th of November.

By command of the Postmaster-General, Lane End, near Stoke upon-Trent, is affordable, in future to be designated Longton, for all purposes of postal communication, and instructions have accordingly been forwarded to all postmasters

On Monday morning most of the bakers at the west-end of the metropolis made a reduction in the price of their bread, from a halfpenny to a penny in the four-pound loaf. The full-priced bakers are now selling the best wheaten bread at 8½d., and household at 7½d. per 4lb. loaf, and the low-priced bakers from a penny to three-halfpence cheaper. A still further reduction is expected to take place in a few days

On Friday afternoon, last week, part of the tunnel running under St. Catharine's hill, near to Guildford, connected with the branch of the South-Western Railway from Guildford to Godalming, gave way, falling in with a fearful crash. Fortunately no person was injured. This accident will delay the opening to Godalming some time, as the great quantity of chalk, earth, &c., which has fallen in will occupy some days in clearing away.

A decree is about to be issued by the chief of the French Executive Government for adding to the cross of the Legion of Honour the profile of its founder (Napoleon), and for inscribing on the reverse the words "Honneur et Patrie," with the name of the Republic.

We have, on more than one occasion, had reason to allude to the importation of some packages of hops, the produce of the United States of America, and consigned to one of the eminent brewing firms of the metropolis. The American line of packet ship Hendrick Hudson, from New York, has lately brought so many as 100 packages

At Blackpool, a watering-place on the coast north of Liverpool, nearly a dozen bodies have been thrown up by the sea, of persons who had been passengers by the Ocean Monarch. A figure-head, supposed to be that of the illfated vessel, has been thrown on shore also; and on other parts of the same coast dead bodies recently continued floating to land while the wind continued westerly.

Marshal Radetzki has proclaimed a general amnesty to all Italian soldiers having deserted the Austrian colours since the 18th of March last, on condition of their presenting themselves within three weeks from the 3rd inst

According to the official statement, the losses of the Austrian army from July 26 to the close of the campaign (Aug. 11) amounted to four staff officers, 103 officers, 2068 soldiers, and 73 horses; while the Piedmontese lost on the field, and in consequence of wounds, 2900 men; wounded, 1500; missing, 300; sick of the fever at the time of the retreat, 12,000; total, 16,000 men hors de combat

On Thursday night, last week, after or during prayers, six convicts in the Dartmouth, moored off Gosport, effected their escape in a boat belonging to that ship. Four of them are said to have belonged to the ship's gig, used in conveying to and from the shore the convict keepers, chaplain, and other officers on service with the establishment, and one of them a convict who has been for before sentenced to transportation.

A new helmet for the Gentlemen-at-Arms, devised by Lord Foley, Lieut.-Colonel, is now in preparation, and will come into use at the commencement of the coming year. It will be a very handsome piece of head gear, being of burnished gold, elegantly ornamented, in shape corresponding with the Life Guards' Horse Guards, surmounted by a white plume

Prince Gustavus, Landgrave of Hesse-Homburg, died on the 8th inst., of apoplexy He is succeeded by his brother Prince Ferdinand

Paris is beginning to re-assert her title to the appellation of "gay" Fêtes, receptions, and balls are becoming the order of the day, and it is announced that the chief of the Executive, the President of the Assembly, the Prefect of Police, and the Minister of War, have mutually agreed to expend their entire salary and emoluments in such entertainments

The commission appointed to prepare a report as to the choice of a colony to which to transport the French insurgents of June, has unanimously resolved that Algeria is the fittest place of transportation

The funeral of the late General Baudriand took place on Monday, with great military pomp, at the church of the Madeleine, in Paris

In Lyons, suicides are following each other with frightful rapidity. There have been four in one street within a few days, one of whom was a merchant ruined by the events of February

The Ateliers Nationaux of Lyons cost that city 1,650,000 f. the work done is estimated at 30,000

In the county of Kerry the value of the agricultural property and labour has so diminished under the burden of poor-rate, grand jury cess, and the depreciation of land rental, that several prizes recently signified to Bishop Egan their absolute inability to maintain the sacerdotal station with ordinary decency, much less with comfort, such is the destitution of their flocks, and that they were going as curates in the larger and comparatively affluent parishes of the county

Colonel Somerset, Lieutenant-Colonel Cloete, and Lieutenant-Colonel Mackinnon, are appointed Companions of the Bath for their services in the late war

The Ecclesiastical Commissioners have an increased revenue in Ireland this year of £1500 by the death of the late Bishop of Cork; and they have also upon an addition of not less than £16,000 annually to their funds at the demise of the present Archbishop of Armagh, the Bishops of Derry and Clogher

A peace convention, to which alone those are invited who deem all war incompatible with the teachings of Christianity, is to be held at Brussels, on the 20th, 21st, and 22nd inst., for the purpose of influencing the public opinion of the Christian and civilised world in favour of substituting some ordinance of settling international differences by an appeal to arms. The three practical points to be brought forward for consideration are: The introduction of an arbitrating clause in all international treaties; the establishment of a high court of nations for the settlement of international disputes; and the general dissarmament of nations

Amongst those who perished on board the Ocean Monarch were the wife and daughter of Mr. Murphy, the manager of the Killarney Savings Bank, whose deductions amounted to a large sum, and who fled to America, whither his wife and only child were hastening to join him, when they met with their terrible and untimely deaths.

A soldier of the Athlone garrison, who has within the last few days been found guilty of having cursed the Queen and cheered for repeal, has been sentenced to seven years' transportation.

Mr. J. R. Barry, of Cork, is appointed a Commissioner to carry out the fishing laws in Ireland, at the large salary of £1500 a The Assistant Commissioner, [illegible] is a gentleman of [illegible] appearance; and they will be a [illegible] addition to the present worn and fatigued appearance; and they will be a [illegible] addition to the present station, even in time of war, more harassing duty. For several weeks night and day, they were obliged to be ready at a moment's notice.

The guards of the mail coaches robbed at Abbeyleale during the late abortive attempt at insurrection have, after a consideration of the circumstances by the authorities, been restored

A Galway paper states that the "Most extensive estate in Ireland is about to change hands." This can only refer to the estate of Mr. Martin, of Galway, which in surface extent may be considered a principality, though not of such vast intrinsic value. The encumbrances thereon are said to be enormous, and the statement made is that the owner is to have £60,000 for his interest purchaser assuming all liabilities

Mr. Monahan, the Irish Attorney-General, is threatened with opposition at the election for Galway, in the person of Mr. Gregory, the late member

Captain Miller, Royal Engineers, who arrived on Monday last in the Deucalion, at Portsmouth, has come home from the Cape on account of the perpetual anxiety which unfortunately deprived him of the sight of both eyes. Captain Miller was using a gun cotton, when it accidentally exploded, and caused the calamity he has now to deplore.

The Act of Parliament (11th and 12th Victoria, cap. 108) which occasioned so much discussion, entitled "An Act for enabling her Majesty to establish and maintain diplomatic relations with the Sovereign of the Roman States," contains only three short clauses. By the statute her Majesty is empowered to establish diplomatic relations with the Sovereign of the Roman States; no person is to be received as an Ambassador, &c. from the Court of Rome who shall be in holy orders, &c.; and nothing in the Act is to affect any laws now in force for upholding the supremacy of the Crown.

The Archbishop of Canterbury has licensed the Rev. S. Gambier, M.A., formerly British Chaplain at Leghorn, to the incumbency of Sandgate, Kent, rendered vacant by the resignation of the Rev. Baptist G. Greene, M.A., on the nomination of the Hon. F. D. Pelham

It was announced on Saturday last in the lobbies of the National Assembly at Paris that J. Dufaure, Representative, had been sent as Ambassador extraordinary of the Republic to England, that the King of the Belgians [illegible] month [illegible] M. Dufaure had also left Paris [illegible]

HER MAJESTY'S VISIT TO SCOTLAND.

THE ROYAL PROCESSION PASSING CASTLE-STREET, ABERDEEN.

(Continued from page 165.)

Queen's room, looks to the east, or down the river. Down a few steps are three rooms, entered from a narrow lobby. In the first of these is the room for the Princess Royal and her maid. Next, there is a small room for the "governess. Both these look eastward. To the west is the nursery a large, well-aired room. I enjoyed the prospect of the Royal nurselings sporting on these heathery braes, amidst cran, craw, and blaeberries, and the rippling of the water, and the sough of the wind mellowed through the gumle trees, the unrodden ground below, and the smokeless heaven above, more than the thought of slain deer and Highland gatherings. These three rooms are papered, and hung with white dimity

"The garden is to the right as you enter, quite close to the house. It occupies something less than an acre. It is sown principally with annuals."

BALMORAL CASTLE, HER MAJESTY'S RESIDENCE IN THE HIGHLANDS.

THE NORWICH MUSICAL FESTIVAL, IN SAINT ANDREW'S HALL.

MUSIC.

NORWICH MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(From our own Correspondent.)

NORWICH, TUESDAY.—The ninth Norfolk and Norwich Musical Festival will commence this evening, with a concert. Her Majesty the Queen is the patron: and the Queen Dowager, Prince Albert, the Duchess of Kent, and Duchess of Cambridge, Vice-Patrons. The Earl of Leicester, the Lord-Lieutenant of the county, is President; and amongst the Vice-Presidents are the Bishop of Norwich and the Very Rev. the Dean of Norwich, the High Sheriff, the Marquis of Douro, M.P., the Mayor of Norwich, the Marquis of Bristol, the Earls of Orford, Roseberry, Gosford, and Stradbroke, Earl Jermyn, M.P., Lord G. Bentinck, M.P., Viscount Ranelagh, Viscount Jocelyn, M.P., Viscount Acheson, Lords Hastings, Berners, S[illegible]ford, Sonde, Walsingham, Wodehouse, Colborne, Rev. Lord Bayning, [illegible]nson, Hon. Baron Alderson, Hon. Baron Rolfe, Hon. E. R. Coke, [illegible] and Thetford, the [illegible] R. F. J. Harvey [illegible] ers, Esq., M.P., E. S. Gooch, Esq., M.P., E. Fel[illegible] &c. The arrangements for the festival are in the hands of a Committee of Management, of which Edmond Wodehouse Esq., M.P., is the Chairman; J. Finch, Esq., Deputy-Chairman; T. Steward, Esq., and Mr. F. J. Blake, Treasurers; and Messrs. G. Simpson and R. Kerrison, Hon. Secretaries.

Although these triennial gatherings are of no ancient date, having commenced only in 1824, [illegible] with [illegible] interest both by [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] per[illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [

Spohr—was creditable to these musical energies, neglect was exhibited towards the living genius of Mendelssohn, who alone, since Handel, has been enabled to establish a novel and high standard of oratorio composition. The success of 'Elijah' at the Birmingham Festival, in 1846, having proved that Mendelssohn was the only existing oratorio-composer possible, the Norwich committee, through the Rev. R. F. Elwin, addressed to him an invitation, both in 1846 and 1847, to compose a new work for this Festival of the present year, or to conduct either "Paul or "Elijah." Mendelssohn's reply to the last communication, written a month prior to his lamented and premature decease, will be perused with deep interest:—

"Leipsic, October 2, 1847.

"My dear Sir,—Having been obliged to give up my intended journey to Italy, I returned to this place, and found your letter of the 18th of September, for which I beg to return my very sincere thanks. I am afraid I shall not be able to offer a new oratorio or sacred cantata for performance next year; for, although I have been at some work of the kind, I have the winter so entirely taken up with performances in different parts of Germany, and with other occupations, that I shall not be able to finish that work in time for your festival. But as you intend doing my 'Elijah,' in that case, I have only to say that it would afford me great pleasure if I could find the opportunity to conduct at such a festival as yours, of which I have always heard the most interesting and brilliant accounts, and from which I may anticipate so great a musical treat.—Believe me, &c., FELIX MENDELSSOHN BARTHOLDY."

"To the Rev. R. T. Elwin.

Scarcely a month had elapsed after the gifted composer had written the above, and he was no more; and within a few months, Mr. Elwin, to whom the letter was addressed, who had been the life and soul of the Festival, was struck with paralysis, and the meeting is deprived of his fervid enthusiasm for the good cause. Another fatality has attended the celebration. A near relation of Mr. Wodehouse, a most active and popular member, was struck the other day with apoplexy; and the Festival is thus deprived of the presence of the members of the Wodehouse family.

With every continuity, and with the drawback of very unsettled weather, the Festival bids fair to be prosperous. Those amateurs who arrived early, and heard the musical services on Sunday morning and afternoon at the Cathedral, had reason to congratulate themselves on their early coming. The edifice itself is alone sufficient to attract the antiquarian and architectural admirer to Norwich. The noble nave and the glorious cloisters, the lofty tower, the elegant spire, offer to the eye the effect of the purest Gothic, and the beautiful. The organ, with the superb chanting and singing of the choir fall upon the ear, and excite reverential and devotional feelings in harmony with the architectural attributes of the building. In the morning the Sanctus and Responses were by Mr. Buck, the organist; the "Te Deum" by Hall and Hine; and the anthem, "Lake as the hart," by Greene. The Precentor of Canterbury, Mr. Stratton, stated that he had never heard the anthem so well sung, especially the execution of the very difficult and continuous passing shakes. In the days of Greene and some of the old writers, the shakes were frequently used, and they must have had more expert singers than we have now, or execution must have been indifferent. Mr. Buck, in his responses, has judiciously introduced to the alternate commandment the major and minor. In the afternoon, Gibbon's masterly service, in E major, was done very beautifully; the observance of the light and shade was in the best taste by the entire choir. The anthem, "How beautiful the feet," was sung by Master's Mann and Bennett. I never heard more exquisite vocalisation; there is a touching by in the quality of the boy Mann's voice which has never been surpassed, and it affected the auditory powerfully. Many services have I heard, in various countries, but I must state that in Norwich Cathedral is one of the finest; and such an authority as that of the Precentor of Canterbury, and of a dignitary of another cathedral, with whom I had the pleasure of conversing, confirmed me in the opinion I had formed. Mr. Buck's execution of the "Samson" overture, of Handel's, as a voluntary, was also remarkable.

Visitors who did not attend the guinea rehearsal on Monday morning had ample attractions in viewing the antiquities of the town, which, with its gardens and bridges over the river Yarrow, has in many parts the aspect of a Dutch town. St. Andrew's Hall, in which the Festivals are held, is admirably adapted for the purpose. Upwards of two thousand persons can be accommodated. It was a conventual church, commenced in 1415 by Sir Thomas Erpingham, and finished by his son, Sir Robert, a monk on the foundation. The nave, in which the meetings take place, is one hundred and twenty-four feet long, with two aisles seventy feet broad. Twelve pillars sustain the roof; and there are fourteen windows on each side in the upper tier, and six in the lower. The orchestra at the western window, appears which is a clock ornamented by the Royal Arms in carved-work, and a gilt figure of Justice. The Hall is filled with paintings, amongst which the portraits of Nelson, Queen Anne, Prince George of Denmark, and a few others now visible, are the most distant of the galleries fissure at both sides the extent of the Hall. The Patrons' Gallery, to which the guinea tickets are admitted, is at the east end; and in the centre of the first row is a chair of state for the Duke of Cumberland. The effect of the orchestra is imposing, but I do not think that the vocalists and instrumentalists are judiciously placed. The arrangement is thus:—Beneath the organ, which reaches nearly to the arched roof, are the violoncellos on each side, the trombones and ophicleides, horns and trumpets, beneath. Then come the clarionets, flutes, oboes, and bassoons, flanked by stringed instruments. Beneath are the first and second violins and the violas. In the front row are ranged the violoncellos and double basses, the leader being just behind, with the conductor's desk behind the principal singers. To the right and left of the instrumentalists in the aisles—the former are entirely in the nave—are posted the chorus singers, up to the ceiling. The fault in this distribution of the forces is obvious: the first violins, from which the subject or melody emanates, play through these of basses and violoncellos from the aisles are heard through the phalanx of players in the nave. The German mode of placing the executants at a festival is the most effective. The choral singers are posted in advance of the instrumentalists, and the brass band is united with the double basses and violoncellos; and the first and second violins are brought the most forward. The policy of a special conductor for the chorals, whenever there is a large body, I think, should be abandoned.

However "doctors may differ" as to acoustics, justice must be rendered to the Committee for their spirit and intelligence in the engagements; and it is highly creditable to Nor- ich that it can indeed produce such a vast and efficient body of choristers. The numbers given are 80 trebles, 80 altos, 68 tenors, and 76 basses; in all 270, of whom not above 80 are taken from London and other towns.

The Choral Societies here are in constant practice, and reflect the highest credit on their master, Mr. J. F. Hill, for their executive facility, nature having certainly bestowed a beautiful flow of voice upon them, especially amongst the fair trebles and the boys. The instrumental troops are first-rate. Amongst the first violins are Blagrove, W. Thomas, G. A. Griesbach, J. Loder, Dando, E. W. Thomas, W. Cramer, Baker, J. Day, R. Bray, Banbers, &c.; second violins—Watts, Watkins, H. Westrop, Day, Ferry, Patey, Newsham, T. Westrop, Hall, &c.; violas Hill, Wagstaff, Alsept, S and J. Calkin, &c.; violoncellos Lindley, Lucas, Hatton, Bonner, Hausmann, W Loder, Lavenu, W. J. [illegible], &c.; double basses—Howell, Flower, Severa, Casolani, Remagle. & Card, senior and junior; oboes G. Cooke, Mubach, &c.; clarionets [illegible], Maycock, &c.; bassons—Baumann, Godfrey, &c.; horns—Jarrett, Harper, trumpets—Harper, jun., Irwin, &c.; trombones—the Smithies, Bowhill; ophiecleides—Prosperle and Brighton; Chipp, Goodwin, and Norton, at the drums. The total was thus divided, the violins, 59; second violins, 52; violas, 10; second violas, 10; violoncellos, 11; double basses, 11; wood band, 17; brass, 17. The total forces approach 400 performers.

The musical conducting of the Festival was originally confided to Beethoven, who had the distinguished post at the meeting in 1845; and, judging from the rehearsals of yesterday and of to-day, the programme will be executed with judgment, taste, and energy. Mr. Harcourt, as president proferred, is the organist. All the great artists have arrived. Viardot, who left Paris on Friday, was here on Sunday. Alboni, who sang at Plymouth on Saturday, and at Reading yesterday, arrived at Norwich during the morning. Mesdames Castellan, who came from Worcester; as also those celebrated vocalists, the Misses A and M. Williams, Sims Reeves, and Lockey. Mr. H. Phillips and Mr. Whitworth are the basses

To add to the musical excitement, there has been a loyal demonstration in favour of the Duke of Cambridge, who arrived here by a special train at four, P.M., yesterday, having come from Lincoln at Lynn, Downham Junction, and Eastern Railroad. His Royal Highness was received by the Mayor and Corporation; conducted by an escort of the 16th Lancers to the Guildhall, the ancient customs of the "whifflers" clearing the way as being observed; and an address presented. The Royal Duke then went to the Palace of the Bishop, and a banquet and concert were given. This by his Royal Highness attended Divine Service at the Cathedral; the musical selection was from Handel's "Messiah," the Choruses "Lift up your heads" and the "Hallelujah," and Master Mann singing the air, "But thou didst not leave his soul," with rare perfection. Mr. Buck presided at the organ. The Duke of Cambridge afterwards visited the Government School of Design, and attended the Horticultural fete at the Corn Exchange.

There have been four choice Concerts given at St. Andrew's Hall, the receipts of which are devoted to the Festival. The last one, last night, was crowded to excess, and nearly £100 was taken; but the performance was not of a nature to call for criticism. The profits of the Festival are appropriated for the benefit of the Norfolk and Norwich, the West Norfolk and Yarmouth Hospitals, the Dispensary, the Eye Infirmary, the Blind Institution, &c. The admission tickets to the body of the hall and side galleries are fixed at half a guinea

WEDNESDAY.—The first performance was given last night, and the receipts exceeded those of the opening concert last Festival considerably. In 1845 there were 76 in the guinea gallery, and 1150 in the side galleries; but last night there were 152 guinea tickets, and 1150 half-guineas, making a total of 727 guineas. Thus the meeting commenced most auspiciously, and the brilliancy of the weather yesterday, with a most brilliant morning to-day, afford every promise of continued success. The first movement of the No 8 Beethoven Symphony in F had been executed, and the picturesque second movement was in progress, when the presence of the Duke of Cambridge was announced. He entered, accompanied by the Bishop of Norwich and his diocesan, and the third being given by Madame Viardot. The conductor then returned to Beethoven; but whether it was the attraction of Royalty, or whether the Norwich Concert frequenters are not amateurs of symphonies, the work passed off without a hand, although energetically played, and with slow blemishes to take notice of.

Misses A and M. Williams obtained the first encore by their neat execution of the cadenzas in Mr. W. H. Holmes's duo, "The Swiss Maidens." The blending quality of the voices of the two sisters, and the perfect precision with which their roulades were rendered, gained for them at once the suffrages of the audience. Madame Castellan sang the Polacca from Donizetti's "Linda," "O luce di quest' anima," brilliantly; and Mr. Sims Reeves, whom we have heard in better voice, delivered Weber's scena from "Oberon," "O ! a glorious sight," with immense power. Then came Labloche, rapturously received and encored in the "Largo al factotum;" and next Viardot, with the "Ah non credea," from Bellini's "Sonnambula." The exquisite beauty of her delivery of the adagio did not render her hearers so much as her fire vocalisation merited; but when she poured forth the "Ah non giunge," she produced an electrical effect. Her deep contralto notes in the passage, "Ah! mi abbraccia," recalled the voice of her sister Malibran; and when she took the highest notes in the upper octave of the soprano register, finishing with a most marvellously articulated shake, there was no end to the plaudits, and she was compelled to repeat the finale. Her début was thus triumphant, and it was the greatest achievement of the night. In the "Larzo Concertola" finale; but here again we remarked that her beautiful execution of the adagio, "Nacqui all' affanno," was not sufficiently appreciated; while the vocal dexterity in the "Non piu mesta" was applauded vehemently, and she was encored.

The first part terminated with a selection from Cimarosa's "Il Matrimonio Segreto," comprising the trio "Le faccia," the popular duo "Se fiato," and the cavatina "Tu me dien," sung by Castellan (Orsolina), Viardot (Lesetta), Alboni (Fidelina), Sims Reeves (Paolino), H. Phillips (Il Conte), and Lablache (Geronimo). This selection was badly placed—it ought to have come first in the order

The second part opened with gleanings from Mozart's "Nozze di Figaro," beginning with the overture; and then the Page's cavatina, "Voi che sapete che duo, "Crudel, perche," between the Count and Susanna; the aria, "Dove sone," of the Countess; the "Non piu andrai" of Figaro; the duo, "Sull' aria," of Susanna and the Countess; and the finale of the first act. It was thus cast:—Madame. Castellan, the Countess; Viardot, Susanna; Alboni, the Page; Misses A. Williams, Marcellina; Lablache, Figaro; Whitworth, the Count; Mr. Lockey, Basilio; and H. Phillips, Bartolo and Antonio. The "Sull' aria" was encored. The selection was executed with great spirit

Lockey sang Mendelssohn's song, "The Garland," expressively, and the Prayer from Rossini's "Mose;" and Sims Reeves Bishop's glee, "The Chough and Crow," terminated the concert; which, with five encores, was over at half-past eleven, beginning at eight o'clock. The Duke of Cambridge remained until the conclusion.

Amongst the company were Dowager Lady E. Suffield, Lady Buxton, Lady Mest Stanhope, Lady Stafford, Lady Stanley, Lady Colborne, Lady Flower, Rev. Canon Freer, Sir W Foster, Colonel Smith, Sir W. Folkes, E. Wodehouse, Esq., M P., Sir J. Preston, &c

The first morning performance, to-day was very fully attended—Haydn's "Creation" being always attractive at these meetings. There were 152 guinea tickets in the Patrons' Gallery, and 1134 half-guineas—a total of 769 guineas. In 1845 the receipts were 258 guinea tickets, and 1077 half-guineas—a total of 796 guineas; so the balance is in favour of Monday's performance. The Duke of Cambridge (attended by Baron Knesebeck), the Bishop of Norwich, Lady Stanley, Viscount Raceaich (who arrived expressly from Scotland to attend the Festival), the Mayor of Norwich, and a long list of the town and county gentry, were present. The brilliant rays of the sun through the windows set off the toilettes of the Norfolk belles to the best advantage.

The scheme opened with Spohr's "Christian Prayer," translated from the German by Professor Taylor. This work in its least worthy of all Spohr's compositions, which are greater in opera than in oratorio. The composer's peculiar modes of thought and expression, his monotonous mannerism, and his chromatic crudities are conspicuous in his version of the "Lord's Prayer." The poetry, through Mr. Taylor's filtered translation from German to English, is not of an elevated nature, the musical imagery is gloomy and unimaginative, and the fugal writing is slipshod. It was excellently executed—Madame Castellan, the Misses Williams, Messrs. Lockey, Whitworth, and Phillips singing the soli

A miscellaneous selection succeeded, beginning with Alboni's impressive delivery of Cherubini's "Oh! sdegno bosila." Lablache then sang Rossini's scena, "Chi puo nederli," from the "Passione," with stupendous force, conquering its florid divisions with surprising flexibility, sustaining his great reputation as a singer who loves to act, and who is great in all schools, from grave to gay—from lively to severe. Marcello's Psalm, "I cieli immensi," so popular at our Ancient Concerts, was sung by Alboni, and was encored by the Royal Duke. Mr. Sims Reeves next gave a magnificent rendering of the "Power and deeper still," from Handel's "Jephtha," developing his declamatory powers with overwhelming force—the recitative and breathing forth the air "Waft her, angels," with truly devotional feeling.

The genius of Viardot then asserted its supremacy by a splendid interpretation of the air "Farewell ye limpid streams." The fervour with which she poured forth the movement, "Brighter scenes I seek above"—her exquisite musical accent, and her refined and intellectual conception of the sublime composition, up and altogether a prodigious sensation; and although applause at these sacred performances is strictly refrained from, there was what indeed could be termed of delight at the close of her pathetic singing, which proved how deeply it was felt and appreciated. This part terminated with Rossini's chorus "La carita," proving how great effects may be produced by the simplest means. The solemn subject of this chorus, and the gentle tinge of melancholy pervading its stately and massive harmonies, raised the most pleasing emotions.

On such a work as that of Haydn's "Creation" it would now be as useless to dwell on its points as the beauties of Handel's "Messiah" or Mendelssohn's "Elijah." These great and musical epics at once took their stand as marvellous and unapproachable oratorios, perfect in their conception and design, marvellous in their development and treatment, and truly in their effects Of the execution of the "Creation" the praise cannot be too earnest Every lover of the art must have been delighted with the choral singing and the orchestral accents in the "Representation of Chaos." Viardot, Misses Castellan, Miss A. Williams; Messrs. Reeves, Lockey, Whitworth, and H. Phillips; the first, with Whitworth, having the duo, "Graceful consort," Misses Castellan, the air "With verdure clad," Miss A. Williams, the marvellous world "On mighty pens;" Messrs. Reeves, "In native worth," Mr. Lockey, "In splendour bright" and "In rosy mantles;" and Mr. Phillips, the music of "Raphael."

THURSDAY.—The second concert, last night, was not so fully attended as on the first evening. The numbers were 79 in the Patrons' Gallery, and 901 in the body of the Hall. The scheme opened with Mendelssohn's "Walpurg-s Night," the solos and recitatives sung by Miss M. William, Lockey, Whitworth, and Phillips. The singing of the choruses "Pizzaro," "Come with torches," and the concluding chorale was superb. The Storm Movement was finely played by the band

The encores were seven, namely, Mdme. Castellan, in the "Nel dolce encanto" of Benedict and De Beriot; Mr. Lockey, in Lachner's song, "When midnight's darkest veil;" the horn obligato of which, played by Jarrett, was one of the finest pieces of execution, whether as regards tone or dexterity, I have ever heard; Mdlle. Alboni, in Rossini's "Una voce;" Mdme. Viardot and Lablache, in the "Ah guardate" from "La Prova;" Mr. Sims Reeves, in Benedict's song, "Tis sad thus to fall;" Lablache, in his Neapolitan song; Mdlle. Alboni, in "I Segreto;" and, finally, Mr. H. Phillips, in Handel's "Mans from, eyrny," with the laughing chorus. It may be perceived that the concert went off with spirit, as, in addition to the above, there was the "Semiramide" duo, "Serbami ognor," most wonderfully sung by Viardot and Alboni; the "Dunque io son," duo, between the latter and Lablache; besides the grand vocalization of Viardot in Weber's "Der Freyschütz" scena, which she sang in German. Lablache's humourin the Neapolitan peculiarities produced intense merriment, and Phillips in his jovial rendering of Handel's song. Wallace's anthem, "Oh preserve and bless the Queen," terminated this fine concert

THURSDAY EVENING.—The weather continues magnificent, and the attendance at the second morning performance to-day was very great. There were 152 visitors in the Patrons' Gallery, and 1264 in the other places, making a total of 1645 persons. The Duke of Cambridge, Baron Knesebeck, the Bishop of Norwich, and a distinguished array of rank and fashion, were present. His Royal Highness had the scene before him, and gave the signal for the encores in the finale of the first part, "Sons in ether vibrate." The trio "Left thine eyes," sung perfection by the Misses A. and M. Williams and Viardot

Of Madame Castellan, the Misses A. and M. Williams, Messrs. Sims Reeves and Lockey, we had to regret most deservedly in our account of the Worcester Festival; they were in good voice to-day, and sang conscientiously and impressively. The readings of Benedict were highly judicious; his beat was steady, and his accompanying was unexceptionable. The concerted instrumentalists were encouraged and inspired by his example, and took up their several points with unerring precision and immense fire

My account of this third and last concert, this evening, and of the final performance to-morrow morning (Friday), will not be in time for your early publication, and the general results of the festival, terminating with a ball to-morrow night, for the present season, must be given next week; but up to this moment it has progressed triumphantly, as the attendances for four performances in 1845 were 650 guinea tickets and 3719 half-guineas, whilst this year there have been sold 724 guinea tickets and 4530 half-guineas.

WORCESTER MUSICAL FESTIVAL. We are compelled to postpone our general summary of this meeting, together with an account of its financial result, until our next publication, in consequence of the non-arrival of the Norwich gathering

MDLLE LIND. The Swedish Nightingale's Concert at the Town Hall, Birmingham, with M. Roger, Signori Belletti and F. Lablache, and Balfe as conductor, was a complete success. The receipts were £800, and the artists for the two concerts at Her Majesty's Theatre. On the 7th, Mdlle. Lind sang at a concert in Liverpool; and on the 9th and 11th performed in "Lucia" and the "Sonnambula," at the Theatre Royal, Manchester. On the 14th she sang at Hull; and next Monday will be at York

THE ITALIAN OPERA IN DUBLIN Grisi and Mario have terminated a most successful season of performances in Dublin. Bellini's "Sonnambula," in which they appeared twice, drew enormous houses, as did "Norma," the "Puritani," and "Gazza Ladra.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER. M. Panofka, the composer and violinist, has taken up his residence in this town, where he will no doubt meet with the co reception due to his distinguished abilities

MARGATE On Friday evening, September 8th, Mr. Gardner gave, in the Assembly Rooms, a concert of Sacred Music, consisting of selections from Handel's "Judas Maccabeus" and "Messiah," which was well attended It is solos were sung by Miss Wells, Miss J. Wells, Mr. Pettman, and Mr. Henry Smith, supported by an efficient band and chorus.

THE THEATRES.

There has been next to nothing done in the theatrical world during the past week. The Adelphi company at the HAYMARKET has gained by the appearance of Mrs. Yates, in the "Wreck Ashore," and the house has been crowded to inconvenience Mr. Phelps and the principal members of the SADLER'S WELLS company have been starring at the SURREY, playing in "Lady of Lyons" with great effect; Miss Cooper performing Pauline Deschappelles, and Miss Laura Addison. The drama of "Time tries all," which we noticed last week, is firmly established in the minor theatres such as the OLYMPIC; and Mr. and Mrs. Keeley conclude this evening a most prosperous engagement at the MARYLEBONE At this theatre, a young lady, said to be a daughter of Mr. F. Vining, made her appearance, under an assumed name, on Monday, in the farce of "Perfection." She has a prepossessing figure and face, and sings agreeably; but is, as yet, scarcely calculated for a metropolitan theatre. Mr. Hudson will appear on Monday in some of his most popular Irish characters

There appears to be as little going on in the Parisian dramatic circles, just at present, as in our own; and it is difficult to tell what our translators will do, by reason of the dearth of new French pieces. None of the leading Paris dramatists will set to work upon the chance of having their plays and spectacles eclipsed by the performance of more terrible and interesting ones out of the theatre; and none of the managers feel disposed to go to much expense upon their stages, when they may be, upon the shortest notice, all turned into hospitals. If this "stoppage of supplies" has the effect of driving our authors to trust to their own invention, it will not be such a misfortune after all.

An amateur dramatic performance will take place at the Strand Theatre on the 4th October, supported by the members of the Whitington Club, under the direction of Mr. W. J. Hurlstone, in aid of funds for increasing the Library of the institution. The pieces selected are "The Rent Day" and "The Loan of a Lover."

THE PHILOSOPHY OF ENDURANCE.

WERE the lonely acorn never bound
In the rude cold grasp of the rotting ground;
Did the rigid frost never harden up
The mould above its bursting cup;
Were it not for the rain and hail,
Or chill'd by the breath of the wintry gale,
It would not sprout in the sunshine free,
Or give the promise of a tree;
It would not spread in the summer air
Its lengthening boughs and branches fair,
To form a bower where, in starry nights,
Young Love might dream unknown delights;
Or stand in the woods among its peers,
Fed by the dews of a thousand years.

Were never the dull, unseemly ore
Dragg'd from the depths where it slept of yore;
Were it never cast into searching flame,
To be purged of impurity and shame;
Were it never molten 'mid burning brands,
Or bruis'd and beaten by stalwart hands,
It would never be known as a thing of worth;
It would never emerge to a nobler birth;
It would never be form'd into mystic rings,
To fetter Love's erratic wings.
It would never shine amid priceless gems,
On the girth of imperial diadems;
Nor become to the breast in power and a pride,
Cherish'd, adored, and deified.

So, thou, O man of a noble soul,
Starting in view of a glorious goal,
Wert thou never exposed to the blasts forlorn—
The storms of sorrow—the sleets of scorn;
Wert thou never refined in pitiless fire,
From the dross of thy sloth and mean desire;
Wert thou never taught to feel and know
That the truest love has its roots in woe,
Thou wouldst never unriddle the complex plan,
Or reach half way to the perfect man;
Thou wouldst never attain the tranquil height
Where wisdom purifies the spirit,
And God unfolds to the humble: gaze
The bliss and beauty of His ways.

CHARLES MACKAY.

THE WEATHER.

The weather during the past week has been, for the most part, fine. A remarkable fall in the mean temperature of the air took place between Sunday, the 10th, and Monday, the 11th. Owing to illness I am unable to give the usual meteorological weather each day in the following, however, is the mean temperature of ever- day; viz Thursday, 55°; Friday, 61°; Saturday, 59°; Sunday, 58°; Monday, 51½°; Tuesday, 49°; and Wednesday, 4 ; and that for the week ending this day was 54°

The following are the extreme thermometrical readings for each day —

Thursday,	Sept. 7,	the highest during the day was 64½ deg., and the lowest was 49½ deg
Friday,	Sept. 8,	.....	67½	 53
Saturday,	Sept. 9,	.....	67½	..... 49½
Sunday,	Sept. 10,	.....	67	 53
Monday,	Sept. 11,	.....	60½	 41
Tuesday,	Sept. 12,	.....	58	 39
Wednesday,	Sept. 13,	.....	46½	 32

I am unable to give the temperature of the air on Wednesday declined to the low point of 32°: in fact it was less than 32° at about the time of the eclipse of the Moon, which was visible, the sky being clear; but, owing to illness, was not seen by myself.

Blackheath, Thursday, Sept. 14 J. G.

HALO.—The inhabitants of London had, on Thursday night, an opportunity of witnessing one of those celestial phenomena which sometimes, though rarely, occur in this latitude. For several hours the moon, when full, was surrounded by a well-defined and magnificent halo, of the largest dimensions we ever remember to have witnessed Instead of the ordinary size, the arch seemed to embrace a full third of the visible horizon, and the moon, at about ten o'clock, being nearly south, the appearance was beautiful. The rim of the halo was at perfect and well defined as the arc of the rainbow, having the advantage of being a perfect circle. It lasted until near one o'clock

PAYMENT OF DEBTS OUT OF REAL ESTATES.—The Act (11th and 12th Vict., cap 87) to amend the law as to the payment of debts out of real estates is now in force. As the law stood before the 31st ult., when the Act received the Royal Assent, the heir-at-law, by 3 & 4 Will. IV. cap. 104, was subjected to the case of lands, tenements, or hereditaments of a deceased debtor which were by descent or otherwise than by devise vested in the heir or coheir of such debtor, subject to an executory devise over in favour of a person or persons not existing or not ascertained; but it is now declared that the provision recited, in the Act mentioned, shall extend to lands, &c., of any deceased debtor, and the Court of Chancery may order the property to be sold, and a conveyance so made to be as effectual as if the heir or coheirs were seised or possessed of the fee simple or other whole estate so to be sold, and if an infant or infants was or were of full age.

WESTMINSTER WORKING MAN'S EMIGRATION CLUB.—On Monday evening a numerous public meeting of the labouring classes, the majority of whom were bricklayers, bricklayers' labourers, &c., took place at the Working Man's Institute, Pearl-street, Struton-ground, a very densely populated but wretched part of Westminster, for the purpose of receiving the report of a committee appointed to inquire into the practicability of forming an emigration club for the working classes, Mr. Attchison in the chair, who opened the business by observing that the subject of emigration had of late years attracted a large share of the attention of the working classes, and he rejoiced to think that the benefits might be extended to the over-crowded population of Westminster. It was only necessary for him to explain that a short time ago a lecture had been delivered in that room on the subject of emigration, when it was decided on the appointment of a committee, in order to consider the propriety of organising an emigration club. The committee had met several times, and he was now prepared to submit their report to the meeting. The chairman then proceeded to read a voluminous report. It proposed that a society should be formed, to consist of an unlimited number of members, and to be connected with the Society for the Promotion of Colonization, that the subscription should be 2s. per week, per share, and one shill ng entry, and that the election of members for emigration should take place every three months, and be decided by lot. It was calculated that the society would send out one hundred persons in four years Mr Staunford moved the adoption of the report and the formation of a society based on the resolutions of the committee He entered at much length into the question of surplus population, contending that to that surplus and the ruinous competition which it entailed, the present low rate of wages and general distress in the manufacturing districts was to be attributed. He saw from the returns of the trades' Union, that, of 200,000 working men in London, one-third were in employment; one-third in only partial employment, pawning their clothes, and partly dependent on charity; and the remaining third wholly relying on charity. He was ashamed to see the rate of wages in our Australian colonies, and to the small [illegible] on of human beings to the soil, and concluded by contrasting the advantages to be derived from properly organised emigration clubs, with the visionary projects held out by the Chartists and their land scheme. The motion was [illegible] and a committee formed for the purpose of carrying out the views of the club.

DRAWING OF A RACING SWEEP.

RACING "SWEEPS."

LOTTERIES have long since been declared public nuisances; and all raffles and other devices under the denomination of sales, which are equivalent to lotteries, are prohibited, under heavy penalties, by a great variety of statutes. Nevertheless, of late years, lotteries, in which the names of favourite horses in racing lists are prizes, have been tolerated in the metropolis, and other parts of the Kingdom, to an almost incredible extent. The practice has been condemned as illegal by magistrates from the Bench; and her Majesty's Attorney-General has declared it to be his intention, in future, to prosecute newspapers under "The Lottery Act," for inserting advertisements announcing "sweeps;" and this has been followed up by an official letter from the Home Office to the Solicitor of Stamps, directing that, in the event of any infringement of the law in this respect hereafter, he shall take immediate proceedings against the offenders.

On the other hand, there seems to be no inclination on the part of the Attorney-General to suppress the more innocent amusements themselves. The racing season is now at its close, and, before the commencement of another, there will, we trust, be time to abate waist must, in its social bearings, be regarded as a pernicious practice.

The form of decision, or the "drawing" of a Sweep, which our Illustration represents, is briefly as follows:—A number of tickets are issued, at 1s. each, or more, according to the amount of prizes; a corresponding number are placed in a wheel, and in an other the names of the horses and blanks. These numbers and names are drawn by boys; they hand them to a person, who calls out the number; a prize or blank. If a horse be drawn, the fortunate number is entered in a book provided for the purpose, and the holder is entitled to receive a sum of money, according to the position of the horse in the race.

Some "Sweeps" are devoted, like the Art Union awards: there are no blanks, but the horses alone are drawn; and the holder of the number drawn at the same time receives the prize or horse named. It should be added, that money lost or won in the "Sweeps" cannot be recovered by law.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

THE GREAT ST. LEGER!

We are much afraid
As dreams are often found to be,
That we are dreaming now.

One man begins to snore before his head touches the pillow, another "sleeps with an eye open;" but all are dreamers. So said Plato and Anacreon Moore; and so says the experience of every twenty-four hours, as often as there are seconds in them. But when we "steep the senses in forgetfulness," it matters little what dreams may come; it is the waking fantasy that does the mischief. Somnambulism won't answer in Cheapside, nor any where else. Such being the case, need it be observed that Yorkshire is the sort of place wherein people ought to be wide awake? And was this the case during its great Olympic festival of the present week? Were its multitudes drowsy, dreamy, or whose-eyed? That is the question. A King once said in the Tuileries, "La France, c'est moi." Your Yorkonians pronounce "The Leger" to be Doncaster Races. There is no doubt about it, no more than there is about its being the filthiest [illegible] carcases and a suit of the carcasses of ninety-nine hundredths of those who experience it. Did you ever see an auto-da-fé if not, look at the Grand Stand at Epsom or Doncaster when the Derby or Leger is being run for, and you will have a fair idea of such a spectacle. . . . . .

The Doncaster Meeting for 1848 was not suspiciously ushered in. The Corporation had a misunderstanding with the Jockey Club, or, rather, with its representatives; but one must make allowances for such misunderstandings. The clouds, however, cleared away, and there was sunshine when the curtain drew up for the ceremonies. The scene was as miscellaneous as that in which we are introduced to Mrs. Jeppe. It is at Doncaster that you meet every body you meet elsewhere—and many that are never seen anywhere else. Your mere "Yankee Doodles and Windsor" are its commonplaces: the adjacent country furnishes scenes that beat the (——) in "Frankenstein" all to smash. On Monday the regulars were en route from London and their other resorts; and the same evening they were as busy as circumstances permitted at the Rooms. The character of the communications at that rendezvous resembles (——), by the style and spirit of the "Thousand and one nights." You Listen while it is stated "upon ex edifici d," that a certain sum(m) cannot avoid winning the approaching St. Leger though, of your particular knowledge, it was turned to discontent in the course of last Leni. You hear this, and your surprise is no less than was that of the Arabian Caliph. In the eve of the meeting, as aforesaid, I drew a considerable company after dinner to the place where betting people congregate—but the business transacted was small and little worth. Out of a lot of from twenty to thirty, that at one time or other found speculators at one price or another, but four were mentioned at any price at all. And the favourite only was fancied, her backers at 6 to 4 hang the call to themselves

This may serve as well as saying that all was flat and unprofitable. Springy Jack, so long the great creature of Scott's lot, was declared not to start, and Justice to Ireland began to look a hopeless affair. To sum up, as people are apt to say when they have something disagreeable to communicate, the meeting had all the symptoms of a milk-and-water flavour. There could not be a more seasonable day than Tuesday—but that was all. The racing was below zero in the matter of interest. The Flying Dutchman flew away with the Champagne in a canter. The great Four Old Sweepstakes was a walk over; there was a match, which Lord Glasgow lost of course; two other wretched apologies for sport; and that ended it. The morrow, moreover, cast its shadows before.

Now were the dreamers about to learn what stuff their brains were made of. The morning came in bright and joysome; and, as of yore, came also in its pleasure people by thousands. Doncaster, moreover, has become the centre of a radius of railways; consequently, the concourse had increased with the facility for their gathering together. True, there was not the manifestation common to the days of the road, when key-bugles and tin a—ns announced the advent of the company; but not the less was the fair town full on the noon of the Leger. And as all the race was the theme and the cynosure—for, in Yorkshire, the spirit of the turf is common to both genders. It looked not promisingly; nevertheless the excitement was mighty; and ere the turn of day a flock-like set towards the course. The sport began with a couple of pairs, followed by the Municipal biddies for two-year-olds, which Lord Clifden won with his colt to Ennui; and the observed of all observers was now to be put upon the scene.

From an entry of 134, the effective force of the great northern race [illegible] Stake had dwindled to nine, the number announced by Lord [illegible]. And not the half of these had a friend in the world would give a maravedi for their prospects. Cancrou was backed at 7 to 4 as the average; surplice vacillated between 2 and 3 to 1; Flatcatcher was nominally at 4 to 1; and at a point worse may be quoted justice to Ireland. When the final began to muster, and people's hearts to beat quicker, it was pretty obvious that Surplice was in a very different form from that in which he showed at Goodwood, and as if to point the moral, Dis...ima ran third in the opening race of the day for a Fifty Pound Plate! And now with bright weather, and a course like velvet, the great turf problem was once more put to the issue. For the Great St. Leger of 1848, nine animals rose, and after a fast and true race, Surplice was the Conqueror by a neck—time running both Derby and St. Leger, a performance but once before accomplished by Champion in 1811.

Waving technical details, which are rarely of general interest, it may be handful to exist in the issue of the St. Leger—If only because it so rarely affords such occasion. After a short of eminent services to our first of National Sports, Lord George Bentinck has seen the produce of his stud achieve the most notable performance accomplished by a British race-horse. No shade of manœuvre tars shed the laurels he won; all was unalloyed, as well in the course pursued with the winner as with those opposed to him. It was a passage of true English sporting—may it be the herald of good omens for the turf!.....Turning to the deeds of the Graftons, Exeters, Chesterfields, Peels, Jerseys, and all the strong men of the Calendar, who would have dreamt of a young nobleman making his début on the turf by winning, in his first season, with one colt, both the Derby and the Leger?

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"E——d"—You were misinformed. Of the games lately played in Paris, between our distinguished amateur, Mr. Buckle, and M. Kieseritzky, the celebrated Livonian player, one only was preserved, and that we have been favoured with. Eight games were played in all: of which Mr. Buckle won three, M. Kieseritzky two, and the remaining three were drawn.

"M. P."—You are mistaken in supposing mate can be given, in No. 241, in the way suggested. Look at it again attentively.

"H. B."—In the case mentioned Black would take the Kt with his B checking, and then defer the mate some moves.

"J. [illegible]"—Easy in three moves.

"[illegible]"—I may be obtained through any bookseller, or by post if you prefer it. Direct to the publisher, Hurst, King William-street, Strand. Your letter has no signature.

"J. W."—In the opinion of many problem-makers, the King may be allowed to Castle in a Problem. We think differently, but willingly yield the point.

"Sopranista"—You have failed in No. 230 and 232.

"J. Mac[illegible]"—Your last attempt, as amended, is a palpable mate in two moves:—

1. Kt takes Kt (double ch), 2. Kt to Kt 1th (double ch) and mate. With respect to the strateem to which you allude, we are sorry to pronounce it quite unadapted for publication. As we before said, there are not half a dozen players living who would look at a Problem wherein the mate was to be given under such restrictions. Try your hand at an ordinary position, as much like as actual end game as possible, with the simple condition that mate is to be given in three or four moves, and, if it possess merit, you may rely on its insertion

"A. Z. Y."—It would rank as about a match or seventh-rate player.

"J. M. H." 1. If spurred, and found to be more than seven days old, it would be liable to be sent to the Dead Letter Office. 2. A Knight can Castle after he has been checked. 3. In Castling on the Q's side, the King is placed on the Q B sq, and the Rook on the Q sq.

"E. and T." Strictly speaking, we should say that "T." had resigned the game; but the best way, perhaps, would be, to play it out from the point in question

"W. L." Is an enigma, in No. 230, you cannot see the impossibility of White's checking on his Q B 2d, where there is one of his own Pawns

"C. E. B."—If thoroughly examined, they will be pretty sure to prove acceptable

"Juvenis" For an instructor in Chess, we should recommend you to apply to Mr. Harrwitz, at the London Chess Club. The Treatise mentioned is a very serviceable one, both to young and old players.

"J. G." "T. V." "M——n" and others.—We hope next week to have room to resume the publication of our Chess-game.

"G. S. T." problem shall be examined, and reported on forthwith.

"W. D." It may be accomplished in six moves easily.

"F. R. S."—It would seem invidious to institute a comparison; both are players of the first order

Solutions by "T. V." "A. Z. B. Y." "H. P." "W. B." "J. W." "F. G. R." "G. T. N." "Myles," "G. A. H.," "W. L.," "A. T.," "A. B. K.," "A. B. T." "Mp. Βάμβλε," are correct.

 An old rusty amateur is anxious for a chess competitor in a game by correspondence. His simple request is, that no youngster will be barking at him but some fine fellow that can keep his wicket against some stubb overhand bowling. Address, "A. B. C.," Post Office, Newport, Isle of Wight.

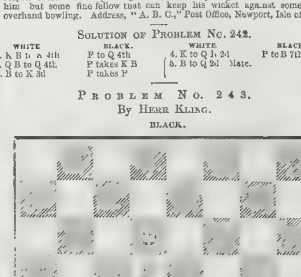
SOLUTION OF PROBLEM NO. 242.

WHITE	BLACK.	WHITE	BLACK
1. B B to 4th	P to Q 4th	4. K to Q 3d	P to B 7th
2. Q B to Q 4th	P takes K B	5. B to Q 2d Mate.
3. B to K 3d	P takes P

PROBLEM NO. 243.

By HERR KLING.

BLACK.



White to play, and mate in four moves.

MATCH BY CORRESPONDENCE

BETWEEN THE CHESS CLUBS OF LONDON AND AMSTERDAM.

WHITE (Amsterdam).	BLACK (London).
15. P takes P

London to play.

CHESS ENIGMAS.

No. 359.—By Mr. Silas Angas.

White. K at his K 4th, Q at her K 4th, B at Q B sq, Kt at K 4th; P's at K Kt 4th and Q 2d

Black. K at his B 5th.

White to play, and mate in three moves.

No. 360.—By Mr. Edney.

White: K at his Kt sq, R at Q B 4th, B at K Kt 4th, B at K sq, P at Q B 2d.

Black: A at K 6th: P's at K Kt 6th and K 7th

White playing first, can mate in four moves.

No. 361.—By Mr. C. E. Banker.

White: K at his Sq, R at Q Kt 5th, Kt at K 4th, P at Q R 4th.

Black: K at Q B 5th, P at K 4th.

White to play, and mate in five moves.

THE SALE AT STOWE.

WE resume, from our Journal of last week, our notes upon the Sale; and next week we shall complete the series of Illustrations of the rarities.

The second day's sale of plate (the 6th inst.) proved very attractive; and the prices realized were very high. It would, however, be of little interest to our readers (had we space), to report the price at which gadroon-edged plate was sold per ounce, or the name and residence of the purchaser.

Among the more noticeable lots were—

Lot 413. A noble oval salver, with Adonis bringing the head of a boar to Venus, in high relief, in the centre, the borders of scrolls pierced, and handles; sold at 12s. 8d. per oz., to Mr. Poljzno.

Lot 414. A beautiful epergne, with centre baskets and four small stands supported on the tails of dolphins, with four branches for lights, and four extra stands, of very fine old design, and stated to be the only piece of plate in the mansion formerly belonging to the Grenville family. It was purchased at 8s. per oz. by Mr. Roberts, as was understood, for presentation to the Marquis of Chandos.

Lots 416 and 418. A magnificent pearl nautilus, supported by Tritons and sea-horses beautifully modelled. This exquisite work of art, which, with the companion ornament, weighs 196 ounces, was bought by Mr. Hennell, after much competition, at 17s. 6d. per ounce.

Lot 419. A magnificent urn for the centre of a sideboard, the bowl ornamented with three dolphins, and enriched with flutings and mouldings, surmounted by a figure of Neptune. This urn is of very ancient date; it was bought by Messrs Garrard at 7s. 6d. per oz

Lot 420. A superb tankard with Alexander crossing the Granicus, with numerous figures, chased in high relief, after Le Brun; a warrior on horseback on the top, the handle formed of a group of a faun and children. This tankard, weighing 140 oz., was bought by Mr. Evans, at 16s. per oz

Lot 421. An ovform sideboard vase and cover, fluted, with two handles: formed exclusively of snuff-boxes presented to the Marquis of Buckingham, grandfather to the present Duke, by the cities and corporations in Ireland, 1779; at 9l. per oz

Lot 450. The mace of the borough of St. Mawe's, in Cornwall, presented to the borough, by the Marquis of Buckingham, and returned by the corporation to the late Duke on the dissolution of that borough. Mr. Emanuel bought this lot for £30.

Lots 456 and 457. A pair of superb large sideboard vases, enriched with masks and scroll-work, actually produced 40s. per oz.

On Thursday, the most interesting items were a beautiful ewer and dish, of ancient Italian manufacture, sold to Messrs. Garrard at 56s. per oz. The address Testimonial presented to the Duke of Buckingham by the farmers of Bucks, was withdrawn; its weight is 2200 ounces, and it was purchased at £772 3s. 9d. on behalf of the subscribers, to restore this tribute to the Duke

Lot 515. A pair of the two Waverley centre-pieces, designed by Cotterell, and executed by Garrard, for the Duke of Buckingham, produced 17s. 11d and 17s. 9d. per ounce.

Lot 779 and 780. Two beautiful stands for flowers, with female figures supporting a shell-shaped basket, with reliefs of Cupids, were sold to Mr. Redfern, at 56s. per oz.

Lot 516. A running footman of gold and enamel on a pedestal of jade and lapis lazuli, set with stones, and gold mounted. Purchased by Mr. Durlacher for £10 5s.

Lot 817. A ring with emeralds and brilliants, formerly belonging to the Countess of Shrewsbury, to whom it was given by Charles II. Bought by Mr. Hawkins for £10 10s.

The Sale was not resumed until Tuesday, the 12th, when was commenced the disposal of

THE PICTURES

The first division of the paintings commencing with portraits, the following being worthy of notice in this class. 2. John Duke of Argyll, by Hoibein, 7½ guineas. 3. The Duchess of Montague and Miss Molesworth, £6 6s. 6. Helena Forman, by Hudson, 12 guineas. 7. Miss Penelope Seregen, by Sir P. Lely, 14 guineas. "Henrietta Maria, a copy from Vandyck, 25 guineas. 11. Peace and War, by Giovanni d'Udine, after Rubens, 30½ guineas. 12 Mrs. Siddons as the Tragic Muse, painted by Mary Marchioness of Buckingham, herself a pupil of Sir Joshua Reynolds, after the original of that name, 16 guineas. 16. Lord Cornbury: this was the first of a series of portraits of members of the Beefsteak Club, 12 guineas. 18. Philip Earl of Chesterfield and John Earl Granville, two other members of the club, 17½ guineas. 29. James Duke of Monmouth, by Kneller, 11 guineas. 31. Francis Bertrer, formerly M.P. for St. Mawes, by Owen, 30 guineas, bought for Sir Robert Peel. 34. Two small portraits—Sir Thomas and Lady More, by Holbein, 18 guineas. 39. The Siege of a Town on a River in the Low Countries, by Wm de Velde, was secured by Mr. Norton for 84 guineas. 40. The Fire of London, by Scott, 84 guineas. 46. Mary Queen of Scots, by Janet, 80 guineas, bought by Earl Spencer. 47. Edward II. and Queen Jane Seymour, by the same artist, 14½ guineas. 48. Charles I. and Henrietta Maria, after Vandyck, 23 guineas. 50. Margaret of Parma, by Russell, 4½ guineas. 51. Holbein's Portrait of Charles Brandon, Duke of Suffolk, founder of the house of Buckingham, 21 guineas. 54. Calvin and Anne Boleyn, by Holbein, 27 guineas, bought by Earl Spencer. 55. Mary Queen of Scots and Lord Darnley, by Zucchero, 60 guineas, bought by Earl Spencer. 58. A Head of Christ, by Carlo Dolce, 10 guineas 59. A Boy with a Bird's Nest, by Metsu, 12 guineas. 63. A River Scene, with boats and figures, by Van Goyen, 15 guineas. 64. An Old Woman and a Boy, candlelight, by Schalken, 15½ guineas 66. A pair of small landscapes, after Ruysdael, 10 guineas. 71. The Adoration of the Shepherds; and the Return of the Prodigal, two pictures, by Bassano, 10½ guineas. 72. A classical landscape, with a bridge and figures, by Claude, 28 guineas. 73. The Virgin and Child with St. Joseph, by Van Leyden, 10 guineas. 77. A Horse Fair, by Van Falens, 11½ guineas. 83. Viscount Cobham, 10 guineas. 85. Sir William Wyndham, in robes, by Kneller, 18½ guineas. 87. The Hon. Mrs. Greenville, by Hoare, 16½ guineas. 90. Charles, Duke of Somerset, after Kneller, £5 5s. 101. St. Christopher and a Companion, £11. Two pictures by Fuseli, illustrating passages in "A Midsummer Night's Dream," one 63 and the other 53 guineas. 105. The Emperor Paul of Russia, presented to Lord Grenville, bought by Earl Spencer for 26 guineas. 107 and 108. Portraits of Frederick, Prince of Wales, and his Princess, by Kauffman, 12 guineas. 110. Charles I. on horseback, after Vandyck, by Thornhill, £51. A set of four pictures, by J. F. Cippel, followed the next lot: they consisted of a Fancy Concert, a group of eight figures; a Quadrille Market, with an old woman weighing cherries; Two Young Noblemen, with a Group of Gipsies, and Italian Peasants at their Repast: the four together, 80 guineas. 117. Hagar seated in the Desert, with Ishmael before her, by P. da Cortona, 38 guineas. 118. The Reclining Venus, after Titian, 21½ guineas. 119 and 120. Two full-length Portraits of George III. and Queen Charlotte, by Ramsay, 14½ guineas each. 125. Henry VIII. and his Queens, miniatures, [illegible], 30½ guineas. 127. Portrait of Henry Duke of Gloucester, 10½ guineas. 132. Portrait of Camden, 19 guineas. 135 and 136. These two pictures were by old Bonnar: they represent the Duchess of Hamilton and the Countess of Coventry, the one as a washerwoman, and the others being engaged in ironing, 38 guineas. A water-colour drawing of her Majesty, by Denning, after Sully, the American artist, 32 guineas. The sale ceased by the day's sale exceeding £1800. A supplemental catalogue, extending over five additional days, has just been issued. The catalogue contains the valuable contents of the museum, and the whole of the remaining effects. It has been determined that the library of manuscripts, and the collection of miniatures, shall be entrusted to Messrs. Christie and Manson for sale at their rooms in London during the ensuing season.

We have been favoured by an accredited Correspondent with the following instances of the extraordinary prices brought by certain lots of the antique plate, originally furnished to the Duke of Buckingham by Messrs. Lambert and Rawlings, of Coventry-street:

Lot.			Price at Sale.
Lot five Chased Dish and Ewer	..	£150 ..	£330 .. 0 ..
,, 102 and 633. 2 Oval silk Toilet Boxes ..	..	80 ..	101 .. 0
,, 779 and 780. 2 Stands for Flowers	..	70 ..	327 15 0
,, 326. Gilt Chalice and Cover	..	95 ..	99 10 0
,, 765. Toilet Glass	..	126 ..	129 4 0

THE CHOLERA.—Letters from the frontiers of Galicia state that the cholera has appeared with such violence in the government of Lublin, in Poland, that in the small town of Krasnystaw alone more than 400 persons died. The malady declared itself after the arrival of some regiments of Cossacks, of whom a considerable number were the first victims. It appears, from letters received from St. Petersburgh to the 31st ult., that the cholera is drawing to a close in that city. On the 27th of August there were but 36 new cases and 18 deaths, and on the 28th only 22 new cases and six deaths. There remained but 376 patients suffering under that dreadful malady. At Moscow, likewise, the cholera appears to be about to expire. On the 17th and 18th ult. three cases had appeared, and 24 deaths. There remained 379 under cure. At Riga 220 new cases were declared between the 16th and 22d ult., and 68 deaths. At Helsingfors, the capital of the grand Duchy of Finland, the cholera had attacked 48 persons, of whom 27 had died.

GREAT FIRE AT CONSTANTINOPLE ON AUGUST 16.—BURNING OF THE YAGH KAPAN.—FROM A SKETCH BY A CORRESPONDENT.

GREAT FIRE AT CONSTANTINOPLE.

We have been favoured by a Correspondent at Constantinople, with the accompanying Sketches of a Conflagration of vast extent, even for this fated city, which took place on the 16th ult. For the details of the catastrophe—a spectacle of fearful magnificence—we are referred by our Correspondent to a letter in the Morning Herald of the 4th instant, the writer of which, we are assured, has spared no pains to ensure the authenticity of his information.

"As an eye-witness (says the narrator), I must endeavour to give a description of the dreadful disaster, which, on Wednesday last, astounded the whole population of this vast capital. The weather was particularly fine—not a leaf was stirred by the slightest zephyr; the dark cypress groves bordering on Pera seemed, by their stillness, transformed to black marble, so unruffled was the atmosphere. Towards seven in the evening of the 16th, a straight column of grey smoke was seen from Pera to ascend slowly into the sky. Some said it must be from Galata, others that it was evidently the beginning of a fire in Constantinople, on the other side of the water. At a quarter-past seven the alarm guns were fired, and in a very few minutes people were seen running in different directions, in order to gain information as to the locality, or some height by which to ascertain from whence the threatening smoke was proceeding; now bright flames shot upwards, and it soon became evident that a fire had broken out in Yemi-h Iskelessi (dried fruit bazaar), situated between the two bridges. The intensity of the conflagration acquired such force, on account of the surrounding inflammable matter, that in a short quarter of an hour it had extended itself in a fearful manner. The non-existence of wind was a sad occurrence on this occasion, as the fire spread in different directions, whereas had there been any wind it would have driven the flames in one direction alone. In the immediate neighbourhood of the fruit bazaar was the Yagh Kapan, or oil depôt, the magazines and warehouses being well stocked with this inflammable matter; on the other side, towards the arsenal, was an immense timber-yard, the greatest in the city, a quarter of a mile it. length, one hundred feet in height, and five hundred in breadth. By eight o'clock, both these places were in flames. When the whole line of sphere on which the timber was piled was one blazing sheet of vivid flame, the appearance was that of one burning mass of liquified gold. A compact mass of shipping was moored opposite this spot, and the masts of several Turkish vessels, laden with oil, wheat, and timber, soon took fire.

"Kaiks darted in all directions over the Golden Horn, some containing a few curious and idle foreigners, rowing along the shore to view the scene, others transporting from the flames what property had been saved. The towers, the mosques, with their elastic and delicate minarets, the reflection of the roofs of houses, and minute lines of carved woodwork in the windows, were discernable from a great distance, on account of the blaze of light that filled the heavens. Among the many sights that such scenes necessarily furnish to the observer, none were more striking than the innumerable groups congregated in the burying-grounds that line the declivities of Pera, from whence an excellent view of the fire could be obtained.

"Towards nine o'clock, the fire in one direction was travelling at a rapid rate towards the Cal-mouniljar, in another towards the Uzun Charski, whilst on the other it was raging at the Odun Kapoussi. Notwithstanding great efforts were made to prevent its spreading towards the hill, which gradually rises until it reaches the crest, on which stands the mosque of Suleymanieh, and close to that the palaces of several vizirs, the Sheik-ul-Islam Kapoussi (Porte of the Ulemas), and other extensive public and private buildings, with their hanging gardens and kiosks, it was all of no avail. The houses were destroyed one after another. The flames rushed up the walls, and stood like pyramids of fire in the air. At length, at about eleven o'clock, the pinnacle of one of the minarets of Suleymanieh, on the extreme height, and fully one mile from the scene of destruction, caught fire; whilst the flames in a vast body kept beating like waves against the angle of the Sheik-ul-Islam's palace, after having destroyed, in rapid succession, all the intervening buildings.

"At about midnight it had reached Baluk Bazaar, in the immediate neighbourhood of the new bridge, and great anxiety was entertained respecting the Drug Bazaar, which is a splendid building, well known to tourists who visit this city. In the opposite direction it had reached the Skemnjelar, and was proceeding at a rapid rate towards the Oun Kapan. The efforts made by the Turks to extinguish the fire were useless; they everywhere ceased, and were mostly employed in pulling down buildings. With the poor inhabitants it was a general sauve qui peut; indeed, many were so surrounded by the flames as to be unable to escape, and were burned to death. Near Oun Kapan a dreadful destruction of life occurred, and it is said that upwards of 30 persons have perished. The gaps caused by the demolition of buildings were mere child's work, for the fire leaped over them; thus successively destroying house after house, shop after shop, and shed after shed. At about two o'clock in the morning the fire had sensibly decreased in its violence for want of fuel to ailment it, and at about half-past three no more danger was anticipated.

"The fire has consumed, according to a detailed estimate, about 2500 shops and 500 houses; about 40 of the latter were splendid palaces belonging to the Sheik-ul-Islam, Moustapha Pacha, Said Pacha, Irvec Pachs, Hassan Pacha, and others. The general loss is calculated at averaging from £2,000,000 to £4,000,000 sterling; but some have carried it to £5,000,000. I should state it at, approximatively, about £3,500,000. To account for this great loss, it must be understood that vast depositaries of merchandize were kept there, besides whole bazaars of oil, fruit, wax, rice, spices, tallow, coffee, sponges, &c., as well as the establishments of the knife grinders, wholesale grocer, nut sellers, &c. In addition to these must be noted nineteen khans, seven mosques, four baths, two public granaries, 13,000 barrels of rice belonging to the Pacha of Egypt, a government steam-mill, and seventeen vessels, and among the rest an Austrian and a Russian vessel, &c.

"This fire exceeds the conflagration at Pera two months back, not only in the extent, but in the value of the objects destroyed; in the former case, the houses were burnt, and here and there a pianoforte, table, chair, or bed, that could not be extricated from the flames, but here the people are positively ruined, as their all was there—it was their means of subsistence as well as their fortune. A fearful night of havoc indeed it was. The Sultan went incognito to the scene of destruction, and subsequently took up his position in a steamer in the arsenal. Chairs were placed on the old bridge for some pachas, and the people were kept from accumulating and obstructing the road."

FIREMAN OF CONSTANTINOPLE.

Our Correspondent has appended a characteristic sketch of one of the firemen of Constantinople—a regularly organised body of men, whose services are very frequently called into requisition to save from destruction this "triple metropolis."

COUNTRY NEWS.

BOLTON ELECTION.

On Tuesday, the election of a representative in Parliament for Bolton took place, to supply the vacancy caused by the death of Mr. Bolling. The circumstances of the election were somewhat peculiar. Mr. Stephen Blair had issued an address accepting the invitation, but had excused himself from being present on the ground that heavy rains had rendered the roads impassable in the neighbourhood where he was sojourning. The Chartists had also prevailed upon a candidate, the Rev. Joseph Barker, of Sheffield; but the police had laid hold upon him on the night previous to the election (Monday), and conveyed him to Manchester, his name having been included in the indictment preferred by the authorities of Manchester against 46 Chartists at the late Liverpool Assizes, for conspiracy, and a bench warrant granted by Mr. Justice Creswell being out against him.

Shortly after ten o'clock A.M., Mr. P. Rothwell proposed, and Mr. Alderman Grey seconded, Mr. Blair, as a fit and proper candidate to represent the borough. Neither proposer nor seconder said anything about the political opinions of their candidate; but it is understood, from the short, vague address issued to the electors, that Mr. Blair is a Peelite Conservative.

Mr. Flitcroft, Chartist, proposed the Rev. Mr. Barker, and the nomination was seconded by a "Working Man.

There being no other candidate, the Mayor called for a show of hands, when several hundred hands were held up for Mr. Blair, and more than as many thousands for the Rev. Mr. Barker. After a pause the Mayor called for another show of hands, on the ground that he was led to believe the distant parts of the crowd had misapprehended the call. The result was more decidedly, if possible, in favour of the Chartist than before. He then declared the show of hands to be in favour of Mr. Barker. The proposer of Mr. Blair demanded a poll, and, after an altercation between some of the parties and the Mayor, in consequence, as was understood, of an inuendo thrown out that Barker's friends were only kept from going to the poll by the uncertainty as to whether their candidate could be liberated from prison on bail in time to appear the next day (Wednesday), the latter said, "I hereby declare, that, a poll having been demanded on behalf of Stephen Blair, Esq., this court stands adjourned till Thursday morning at ten o'clock."

Mr. Flitcroft here came forward, and said he withdrew his candidate, and would not be answerable for any expenses.

The Mayor: You have heard Mr. Flitcroft withdraw Mr. Barker; therefore, to save the borough the time and money which would result from an adjournment, I hereby declare Stephen Blair, Esq., duly elected as one of the representatives of the borough. The proceedings lasted only an hour.

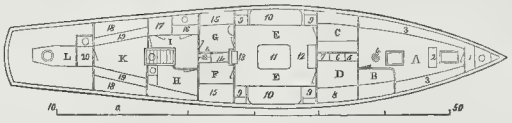
F. M'NAUGHTON, who forged the cheque on the Bank of England purporting to be signed by A. and S. Henry and Co., for £3500, and who escaped to Newfoundland, was brought up at the Borough Court, Manchester, on Saturday morning last. A gentleman from the office of Mr. Freshfield, solicitor to the Bank of England, attended to prosecute; and at his request the prisoner was remanded until Wednesday, when he was committed for trial on the evidence adduced.

POISONING IN ESSEX.—The cases of poisoning in this county are still under investigation. The case to which the authorities are now directing their attention is that of a person named Nathaniel Button, formerly a resident in the parish of Ramsay, who died on the 30th of September, 1846, a few days after the death of Mary May's first husband, about whom some suspicion also exists. The next case is relative to a person named Palmer, resident in Ramsay, who died shortly after Button. Almost immediately after his death Mrs. Palmer left Ramsay, accompanied by a man with whom she had long been intimate. The town of Great Holland is the Tendering Union has also, it is suspected, been the scene of one, if not more, of these dreadful poisonings. From the investigation which has taken place, it appears that a man named Brudger died suddenly some time since in great agony, having been well and at his work until within a few hours of his death. Two other cases are under consideration—one in the parish of Tendering, and another in the parish of Bradfield. In the investigation of these cases it has been ascertained that most, if not all, owe their origin to the existence of what are in this part of the country called "Death Clubs." A person (man or woman) enters one of these clubs, agreeing to pay a sum of 7d. per quarter, at the same time appointing a nominee, at whose death the subscribing party receives £10 or £8, according to the number of persons enrolled. In addition to this subscription each member of the club pays 6d. extra on the death of any nominee. Mrs. Southgate was a member of one of these clubs. Mrs. Button was also a member, and received £8 on the death of her husband.

THE "VOLNA" (WAVE), IRON SCHOONER YACHT, BUILT AT BLACKWALL, FOR THE GRAND DUKE CONSTANTINE OF RUSSIA.

THE SCHOONER YACHT "VOLNA" (WAVE).

THIS beautiful sailing yacht, built for the Grand Duke Constantine of Russia, Lord High Admiral of the Empire, left the Thames for Cronstadt on Sunday week. She was designed and built of iron by Mr. Ditchburn, of Blackwall. She is 83 tons burthen, of shallow draught of water, being only 7 feet 6 inches, to admit of crossing a bar. Her internal fittings, especially the state cabin, are surpassingly beautiful and spacious; the height under the deck-beam to the cabin flooring being 6 feet 6 inches. To furnish the reader with an idea of the cabin accommodation of this superb yacht, we have Engraved an outline of its plan.



A, Sailors' mess-room
B, Master's cabin
C, Steward's pantry
D, Ladies' cabin
E, State cabin
F, Grand Duke's private cabin
G, Gentlemen's cabin
H, Grand Duke's dressing cabin
I, Passage and entrance
K, Attendants' cabin
L, Hall and smoking-room
1, Sailors' closet
2, Cook's galley
3, Seats and lines
4, Masts
5, Washhand-stand
6, Closet
7, Wardrobe
8, Bed place
9, Bookcase and sideboard
10, Sofa seats
11, Table
12, Fireplace
13, Fireplace
14, Desk and library
15, Sofa-bed
16, Closet
17, Store-room
18, Bed places
19, Sofa seat
20, Closet

THE PROGRESS OF A BILL.

BY W. BLANCHARD JERROLD
ILLUSTRATED BY KENNY MEADOWS.

(Continued from page 158.)

CHAPTER II.—THE BILL IS CASHED.

WHEN Henry Pursey was fairly out of sight, Macfum shaped his course in the direction of Furnival's Inn. He drew the bill from his pocket, and read it over, chuckling the while, and then he hastened onwards. "I wonder whether the old rascal is at his office yet," he soliloquised, "or whether he has shut up that vile swindling shop of his for the night." The current of Macfum's thoughts then ebbed back to the café; and, as he hastened to the inn, he recalled the points of his manœuvre to mind, and felt serenely conscious of his talents as a trickster. Among his associates Macfum numbered a few young Lords and a sprinkling of mushroom Baronets; and these green and "fast" noblemen, the height of whose ambition was to train a winner for the Derby, or make more famous than anybody else, and who had promised their progenitors to turn presently from a study of horseflesh to that of politics, patronised Macfum, and associated with him, because he was a jolly fellow and an aristocratic-looking dog. He was an expert practical joker, and was admired for his daring, and for his unfailing impudence. He had gained a bet with Lord Rappee, that he would get a Scotchman to accept a bill; and his success in the matter had established his reputation for consummate tact. It was generally believed that Macfum had accomplished what the persuasive powers of fifty special pleaders would have failed to bring about, namely, the acceptance of a bill by a Scotchman. Indeed, it is reported that the duped Scot was thenceforward looked upon by his countrymen as a disgrace to his fatherland, and that his family, for this one false step, disinherited him.

Macfum's spirits never failed him, and he had the rare faculty of making his liveliness contagious. He once induced a funeral party to make a night of it, and in the character of witness made the Lord Chief Justice shake with laughter in his ermine. So, his friends were always pleased to meet him, and did not busy themselves about the purity of his principles or the gentility of his descent. They accepted his story about his uncle in India as a true tale, because they did not care to satisfy themselves that the said uncle was an apocryphal personage, inasmuch as this discovery would have condemned their jovial friend as an adventurer, and consequently have rendered the continuance of companionship with him impossible. And thus matters stood between Macfum and the world. Macfum did not disguise the humbleness of his sleeping-room from his aristocratic acquaintance. He called his apartment his perch, and talked of finding his roosting-place when he was about to withdraw for the night. He was an open admirer of the style of dwelling patronised by Diogenes, and would ask his bachelor friends (if he had decided upon honouring their domicile for the night with his presence) whether they had a convenient tub wherein he might shake down till morning. This facetious philosophy disarmed the scandal of the world, and up Julius Macfum flourished, unquestioned and unsuspected.

He stopped before the dirtiest house of the dirtiest of inns, and having summoned a lean clerk by means of a dusty and rusty knocker on the right-hand door, under which was painted "Mr. Zachariah Moss" (a gentleman who repudiated his Jewish descent), that consumptive and tightly-clad functionary declared that Mr. Moss had left office for the day, but would be in town by ten o'clock on the morrow morning.

"You're sure he'll be here at ten, eh?" asked Macfum.

"Yes, sir; he'll be glad to see you at that hour."

"Don't doubt it. You can tell Moss from me that I was never up but once at that disgraceful hour; and that was when I was roused by a relation of his to take an early trip across the water. Tell him I'll call at one, and that he must be at home. But you need only say that a gentleman of an eccentric turn of mind wishes to be swindled out of forty pounds to-morrow, and that he naturally comes to him to do the business, and Moss will be here to the minute."

The clerk's face wrinkled into a grin as Macfum disappeared. "Well," thought the clerk, as he resumed his seat at his desk, "that chap must have had a deal to do with attornies; he's up to the dodges; but we shall have him all right and tight yet, I'll bet a wager." And at this thought a malicious grin—an expression quite horrible on the beardless face of youth—showed how effectually and earnestly Mr. Moss was inculcating the principles of his profession in the mind of his articled pupil.

Meanwhile Macfum hastened homewards to dress for the Opera. He lodged in a second floor of a house in or near the Waterloo-road, with a miserable woman, who, in a rash hour, had given him five hundred pounds and her hand. She was the daughter of a small tradesman, who had amassed the above sum after a long life of humble industry, and who had bequeathed it to his daughter, telling her that she might become a lady if she acted prudently. Miserable lesson! The young woman's vanity was flattered by her father's words, and she followed his parental teaching by marrying Mr. Julius Macfum. And what was the result?—life-long, irreparable misery! Macfum married because he was in a desperate condition from want of money. He looked upon himself as a bill which his wife had accepted and cashed. He breathed to no man the fact of his marriage; but resolved to live with his wife in an obscure lodging, where she might vegetate and die. He never positively ill-treated her, yet he never considered her in any of his plans. She was merely part and parcel of the luggage that encumbered his lodging. The reader must pardon the writer if he lingers over this melancholy scene (this reckless waste of a woman's life. The utter prostration of the wretched creature's spirit—her silent and almost idiotic obedience to every beck or nod of him of whom she had expected so much, and from whom she had received nothing—presented the most depressing picture of a wasted life it is possible to conceive.

THE BILL IS CASHED

When Macfum returned home from his visit to the office of Mr. Moss, he found his wife leaning over a flickering fire in a state of half stupour. She raised her eyes as he entered, yet spoke not a word. He threw down his hat and gloves, and said, without turning his eyes towards the woman, "Now, Polly, I'm hare. Let me have some clean linen and my evening dress. Do you think I want shaving?"

The wife turned vacant eyes for a moment upon the fine, pulpy face of her husband, and then a half-suppressed smile stole upon her lip, and she was about to approach nearer to him. She checked herself, however, and made answer in a quiet tone of voice, so that Macfum did not perceive the momentary struggle that passed within her. The history of this woman's life is a tragedy fraught with a most solemn warning to her wayward and ill-advised sisterhood. It is a tragedy, however, upon which—as it does not bear upon the present history—the author must here drop the curtain.

Macfum, in common with many men of no importance either in literary or theatrical circles, had the right of passing a friend, together with himself, into the pit of the Opera. On the evening in question, he accompanied Pursey thither, and introduced him to one or two sporting celebrities, to the great delight of the young novice. And Pursey returned home to his wife with a long account of the condescension of the aristocrats, who had, in truth, vouchsafed him but the stiffest obeisance

Macfum was half an hour behind the time of his appointment with Mr Archariah Moss, a fact which that gentleman noticed rather angrily previous to the arrival of Macfum, but which he begged this gentleman not to mention when he made his appearance. The extreme of Moss was by means unpossessing. He had a hooked nose, thick, prominent lips, black, crisp, curly hair, a sallow complexion, and a habit of converting the letter W into a V; yet he declared that was not a thumbprint of the purest blood in his veins. Macfum, who had perceived that Mr. Moss was guilty of the weakness of disavowing his unmistakeable descent, determined to turn this perception to account, and had turned it to account accordingly to the tune of £40, which he persuaded the attorney to give upon a £50 bill. On the present occasion, Macfum resolved to play again upon the attorney's weakness

"I'm surprised to find you here to-day, Mr Moss—Saturday! Bless me, isn't this your Sunday?" commenced Macfum.

"Now, you know, Mr. Macfum, that my sabbath is your sabbath. You are jesting upon my personal appearance. Shall we to business? What can I do for you?"

"A friend of mine swears he saw you at a suburban synagogue last Saturday," continued Macfum. "But he must have been mistaken. You'll pardon my blunder also, Mr. Moss, I trust."

"Certainly, Mr. Macfum; certainly. Don't say another word about it. Now, what can I do for you?"

"This," answered Macfum, throwing Pursey's acceptance upon the table.

"A hundred pounds! Really, Mr. Macfum, you come to mock me in my poverty."

"Not I; it is you who intend to swindle me in mine. Don't start, sir; it is your profession. I don't blame you," said Macfum, coolly eyeing the attorney.

"And who is Mr. Pursey?"

"A householder in Chel- ."

"Upon my word, I don't know where to turn for the money, Mr. Macfum."

Macfum laughed outright, and, in answer to the questioning of the astonished attorney, said, "Hang it, Moss, you'd make a first-rate actor. But it doesn't do with me. I know very well that you don't contribute all the hundred and-twenty per cent per annum which you clear upon your capital to the charitable institutions of the country. Come, let me have no more of this absurd whining, but tell me at once what you mean to give me on this bit of paper."

"Are you a lover of the fine arts?" asked Moss suddenly, as though a new thought had struck him.

"What, have you a batch of pictures just come home from the bakehouse, eh? A half-dozen portraits of a particular of the Minories by the starved Baggins, just baked for Rembrandts; or a ragged boy with his finger to his nose, daubed in ten minutes by the same luckless individual, for a sketch by Wilkie, a bargain, at twenty guineas? No, I don't care about the fine arts."

"You are severe, Mr. Macfum," answered Mr. Moss, with forced equanimity

"It does you good to tell you a little truth now and then, or in your old age you may be doubling your pace with the idea of being led an honest career. Once for all, my good fellow, remember that your acting is thrown away upon me. Tell me at once how much rubbish in the shape of wine and pictures, and what amount of cash you are prepared to give me on this bill, and let's have no more of this child's play."

The little attorney eyed his lecturer angrily. He felt the force of Macfum's sarcasm; he saw that he had to deal with one as shrewd and worldly as himself. He smarted beneath the lashes of Macfum's satire, and wished to resent them; but his interest forbade the indulgence. He contented himself with the hope that the day would come when Macfum would be in his power, and then he garnered up his spite for that day.

"Well," he said at length, "I think you had better get it cashed by Mr. Abrahams, for I'm afraid my terms would not satisfy you. Money's extremely valuable in the city—so valuable, indeed, that it is, I may say, rashness to trust cash out on uncertain bills, when it will realise so much in the city with no risk whatever"

"Hang it, Mr. Moss, I'm not here to discuss the monetary question with you. I simply ask you what you are prepared to advance on that bit of paper?"

"I've some splendid port."

"Of course; recommended strongly for salads and pickling, I suppose. I know the stuff! Good for bruises, and, mixed with water, for blotches. Well, and how many dozen of this eye liquor do you propose to throw in?"

"The wine to which I allude, Mr. Macfum, has been pronounced by first-rate judges to be of most excellent quality. I could let you have four dozen of it at fifty shillings a dozen."

"That's ten pound. Well: Now for the Rembrandt by Baggins."

With tat utmost gravity, and without noticing the comment made by Macfum, Mr. Moss proceeded to descant upon the beauties of the sketches by Wilson which he proposed to include in the bargain. He directed his clerk to fetch the masterpieces in question, and the paintings were forthwith produced. Moss, with a mock air of gravity, raised his glass to his eye, and proceeded to dilate upon the airiness of the distance, the masterly execution of the foliage, the graceful curve given to the tail of one of the sheep, the exquisite taste displayed in parting the hair of another of the flock down the back, the liquidness of the water, and the melting tones of the half-distance, until Mr. Moss was well nigh overcome with rage.

"Well," said Macfum at length, having ended his criticism, "Buggins has talent. It required a genius to give that graceful curve to a sheep's tail."

"Perhaps so," returned Mr. Moss sharply. "I intend to have twenty pounds for those two pictures."

"And quite right, Mr. Moss, quite right," continued Macfum, pleased to perceive that he had roused the anger of the attorney, yet anxious not to provoke a refusal to cash the bill. "What is your percentage?"

"Thirty. That leaves forty, which you may have in cash; that is to say, if I have as much as forty pounds by me. Like, what money is there in the box?"

"Forty-two pounds, sir," shouted the clerk

"You son, Mr. Macfum, that I have done my best for you."

Certainly. Your splendid is worthy of imitation. You are a man of truly Christian spirit, Mr. Moss. I accept your terms."

And on these terms the bill was cashed.

"Where am I to send the pictures and wine?" asked Moss, as Macfum rose to depart. "The Wilsons would hang well in your hall," added the attorney, with his malicious grin

"Do you imagine so? I believe there is a vacant space left in my back kitchen; or perhaps it is occupied by the last masterpiece you let me have at such a woful sacrifice; so, you had better keep them for the present."

"And the wine?"

"I shan't pickle this season. Stay, you may direct both the wine and pictures to Henry Pursey, Esquire, Briar Cottage, Battersea-lane, Chelsea, and inclose my card in the parcel." Pursey is a young man, and an inexperienced man, thought Macfum, and doesn't know how to get wine from bad. "Will you allow me to write a word to Mr. Pursey?"

"Certainly."

Macfum seated himself at Mr. Moss's desk, and wrote the following sprightly epistle to his friend:—

"Cry, Gentle.

"MY DEAR PURSEY,—Herewith you will receive a small sample of the same vintage as that of which we were talking yesterday, at the club. It has all the ruby hue of the rare wine, and is as fruity and clear as the most fastidious alderman could wish. The accompanying pictures are two Wilsons—exquisite specimens of that master, as you will, doubtless, perceive. They were given to me by the late Colonel Bagshaw. They are thrown away in my bachelor tub; so, pray accept them, with the sincere friendship of JULIUS MACFUM.

"Lord Condiment is delighted with you. He says we must all have a day of it out of town next Saturday. We can't do without you, so you must hold yourself disengaged for that day.

"To Henry Pursey, Esquire."

"There," said Macfum, giving the letter to Mr. Moss; "let the bearer of the whole basket have with him."

"You're a clever man," answered Mr. Moss, glancing at Macfum with a look half of envy and half of satire.

"I wish I could return the compliment, Mr. Moss."

"You're hard upon a man of humble pretensions. Have I not dealt with you like a Christian, Mr. Macfum? Have I acted as though there were a thimble full of Jewish blood in my veins?"

"No, that you certainly have not, my dear Mr. Moss; you have acted as though you had brickdrills. Good day."

The lawyer muttered some angry words to himself as his customer departed, and then summoned a grey headed, wrinkled old man—a piece of human mortality, wholly devoid of that gentleness and softness which give a sanctity to age—into his presence.

"Has Solomon effected an entrance in Berners-street yet?

"No, sir."

"I suspect that he's a careless fellow. Carelessness won't do for us—tell him that from me, do you hear? He was three weeks getting into Peckham Rye, and that is only effected an entrance in a wine-bin per, though to my certain knowledge there were three distinct entrances to tus house."

"Yes, sir, but people has got so sharp of late, as the principle of sealin' is spread (with the progress of civilisation, I suppose), that it wants an uncommon sharp un to get into a house now-a-days."

"I've a job for you to set about directly. You'll have to convey some wine and pictures to Chelsea in the course of Monday. Now just attend to what I am going to tell you. You will be bearer of a letter to Mr. Henry Pursey (to whom the goods in question are to be consigned), when you will insist upon delivering into his hands or into his wife's. Well, when you get into the house, run your eye over the furniture, and judge, as far as you are able, whether there are a hundred pounds' worth of goods in the house. Do you hear?"

"Yes, sir; very well, sir. A hundred pounds' worth. It must be a decent room full to fetch that. Did you hear, sir, that Mr. Isaacs's Clapham execution only fetched an odd nine hundred, sir?"

"I said Isaacs would burn his fingers. Mind you have your eyes about you on Monday. And just notice where the back entrance lies, and whether the servants are a drunkenness that way. Dence take it, I'm obliged to teach you fellows your business—"

"I'll not be blind, sir, depend upon it," answered the hideous old man, as he hobbled out of the office

(To be continued.)

COURT AND HAUT TON.

ACCOUCHEMENT OF THE EMPRESS OF BRAZIL.—Her Majesty the Empress of Brazil was safely delivered of a son and heir to the throne on the 19th of July last

LORD CONDE DE MONTEMOLIN.—The Conde de Montemolin and his Royal Highness the Infants Don Fernando Joseph, and Don Leopold Philip, Duke of Madrina Somella, left town early on Tuesday morning for Alton Towers, on a visit to the Earl and Countess of Shrewsbury, where the august Princes met a large and distinguished party, comprising the Duchess of Inverness, Viscount and Viscountess Villiers, Viscount and Viscountess Mahon, Sir Robert and Lady Peel, &c; and many other guests were expected at the Towers before the close of the week

LORD J. RUSSELL.—On Saturday evening Lord and Lady John Russell took leave of their Excellencies the Lord Lieutenant and the Countess of Clarendon, and, attended by Mr. Wood, his Lordship's private secretary, proceeded by a special train to Kingstown. His Lordship, accompanied by Lady Russell, arrived at Greenock about half-past five on Sunday afternoon, per her Majesty's steamer Banshee, which had been specially appropriated to the conveyance with the landing-place for passengers, as his Lordship and family were landed by a small boat at the potato-quay. The noble party immediately proceeded to the Tontine Hotel, where they remained all night. Lord John Russell was very pressed to meet the Lord Provost, the Lord Provost, the Lord Provost, and had it not been for the loungers on the quay, some of whom recognised the Premier, he would have been enabled to reach the Tontine Hotel unobserved. On Monday, at 9 o'clock, a considerable crowd followed the party to the hotel. The Banshee was afterwards brought up to the steam-boat quay, and his Lordship's travelling carriage and luggage landed. She then put about and proceeded to sea.

CHRIST'S HOSPITAL.—On Thursday next, being St Matthew's Day, the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Sheriffs, with the Governors of the several Royal Hospitals, will attend during service at St. Sepulchre's Church, Newgate-st., where a sermon will be preached by the Rev. Samuel John Phillips, M.A., of Pembroke College, Cambridge; after which they will repair to the Gre. t Hall in Christ's Hospital, where the usual collations are to be held. In Hall quadrangle will be delivered, according to annual custom, by the four senior scholars, who are proceeding to the Universities.

FETE OF THE UNIVERSITY AT HAVRE.—This fête was celebrated on the 16th and 17th inst. The National Guards of Havre and its banlieue had gone to the Havre Railway on the 10th, to meet the Fifth Legion, which had left Paris that morning by special train for the occasion. The Parisian column marched forth to the Place de Provence, and there separated, to be feasted in divers quarters during the evening. On the 11th festivities of all kinds were carried on; all the vessels in the harbour were dressed with colours, and the whole population of Havre was on foot in holiday attire. A detachment of National Guards from Rouen, headed by M. Senard, Minister of the Interior, was received in state, and the whole of the troops having assembled on the Place de Provence, the clergy came forward in solemn procession Two flags, having been previously blessed by the Abbé Senard, were exchanged between the fraternisers, appropriate speeches being made for the occasion. The Parisian column marched forth to the Place de Provence, and there separated, to be feasted in divers quarters during the evening. On the 11th festivities of all kinds were carried on; all the vessels in the harbour were dressed with colours, and the whole population of Havre was on foot in holiday attire. A detachment of National Guards from Rouen, headed by M. Senard, Minister of the Interior, was received in state, and the whole of the troops having assembled on the Place de Provence, the clergy came forward in solemn procession Two flags, having been previously blessed by the Abbé Senard, were exchanged between the fraternisers, appropriate speeches being made for the occasion. The artillery thundered forth a salute to celebrate the auspicious event; the officers came forward to give each other the friendly accolade; and, whilst the colours were paraded in triumph through the town, the bands played patriotic airs. The guests were then followed by a gigantic banquet, in which two thousand five hundred persons took part. Appropriate toasts were given, and the day was closed by a brilliant display of fireworks.

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

TUESDAY, SEPT. 12.

WAR OFFICE, SEPT. 12.

1st Regiment of Life Guards—Assist.-Surgeon J. Chesshyre to be Surgeon, vice Campbell

7th Dragoon Guards—Lieut C E Wood to be Captain, vice Campbell, Cornet N de la Cherois to be Lieutenant, vice Pett

8th Foot—Lieut Edmund Cornet vice de la Cherois

28th Foot—Lieut Edmund Lieut Hunt F Lee to be Paymaster, vice Barlow. Hunt—Ensign J W O'Beirne to be second Lieutenant, vice Gray. Thos. Ensign T W Poole to be Lieutenant, vice Hunt. Ensign John J Hoffe to be Lieutenant, vice Chambers. Brevet Major A A Barlee to be Major, vice Hollis

Captain, vice O'Beirne, who exchanges. Thos. Barnes

Lindsell, Ensign H Pelsley to be Lieutenant, vice Cuthbert

Smith, W Y Bone to be Ensign, vice Poole. Ensign J Gordon to be Ensign, vice Chamberlain. Brevet Assist.-Surgeon J S Grant, M.D, to be Assistant-Surgeon, vice Gordon. Sergt Major H Ward to be Quartermaster, vice Barnes. Sergt Major Sergeant Sir Fowell Buxton, Bart., to be Lieutenant, vice Hamilton; H R Alexander to be Ensign, vice Chamberlain. Sergt J W Hall to be Ensign, vice Poole. Sergt Major Sergeant W J Gordon to be Ensign, vice Chamberlain. Sergt Assist.-Surgeon J S Grant, M.D, to be Assistant-Surgeon, vice Gordon. Sergt H Ward to be Quartermaster, vice Barnes. Sergt Major Sergeant Sir Fowell Buxton, Bart., to be Lieutenant, vice Hamilton; H R Alexander to be Ensign, vice Chamberlain. Sergt J W Hall to be Ensign, vice Poole. Ensign J Gordon to be Ensign, vice Chamberlain

ADVERTISEMENTS.

ASTLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE.—Proprietor, Mr W. BATTY. Last Week but Two of the Season, and of the present unequalled Performances of Mazeppa. The brilliant Scenes of the Circle and Lady Godiva formine an unprecedented realities of attraction.—On MONDAY, Sept. 18 the Performances will commence at a quarter to Seven, with the Equestrian Drama admired Spectacle of MAZEPPA; or, The Wild Horse. To be succeeded by Novel Scenes in the Arena. To conclude with the Extravaganza, Pageant of LADY GODIVA and P[illegible] VENTRY. Box-office open from Ten till Five. Mr W. West.

WILSON'S FAREWELL NIGHT.—CONCERT HALL—On THURSDAY EVENING, 21st September, at Eight o'Clock, Mr. WILSON will give a FAREWELL ENTERTAINMENT on the SONGS OF SCOTLAND, when he will sing a variety of his most admired Songs and Ballads, it being his intended Last Appearance previous to his departure for America. Pianoforte, Mr JOLLEY.—Tickets and Programmes may be had at the Music-shops.

CREMORNE.—BALLOON NIGHT AS-CENT, with FIREWORKS.—On MONDAY, Sept 18, at 10 o'clock precisely, Lieut. CHARLES, R.N., will make a Second Ascent in his splendid Balloon, the Royal Cremorne, with a brilliant Display of Fireworks, by the Chevalier Mortram. Vocal and Instrumental Concert. The Ballet of "Jeannette" is dances with entirely New Music, Scenery, Costumes, and Appointments, produced at Her Majesty's Theatre for Dancing Slavin's Troupe of Arabian Tra We Covered Promenade, 400 feet in length, will be thrown open, brilliantly illuminated with gas. Magnificent Illuminations and Grand Pyrotechnic Display.—Doors open at 5 o'clock; Close at Twelve o'clock. Admission in the entire Gardens, Three Is LAURENT'S CASINO, ROYAL ADELAIDE GALLERY, Strand, will OPEN on MONDAY, SEPT 18. The Lessee has the honour to announce that this highly popular Establishment, unequalled in Europe will Open for the Season on Monday next, Sept 18th, on a scale of the most splendid character. The palatial [illegible] ated by the [illegible] ...

...ously description. The Band of 30 Performers has been selected from the orchestras of Her Majesty's, the Royal Italian Opera, and the Philharmonic Concerts, and will be under the direction of M. LAURENT. In addition to these, he has made arrangements for his repertoire with the most eminent resources for the ... [illegible] ... half-past; Half at 9, and terminate at half-past 11 o'Clock. Admission, 1s

ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION.—The Cause of the Fatal Explosion in Albany-street explained, and illustrated by Experiments, in a Lecture, by Dr. Ryan, on ... Morning, in which [illegible] ... Lecture on the Steam-Engine, by Mr. ... Dan at the Half-past Three o'Clock; and in the Evening at Eight o'Clock, on Tuesday, Thursday, and Friday. A Lecture on the History, Uses, and Manufacture of Glass Forks, by Dr Bachhoffner, daily, at Two o'Clock; and in the Evenings of Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. The various Optical Effects Diver and Diving Bell Working Models explained. The Music is conducted by Dr Wallis —Admission, to Schools, Half-price. New Series of Dissolving Views.

THE ROYAL CHINESE JUNK "KEYING," manned by a Chinese Crew. This neat interesting Exhibition, which has been justly called the "greatest novelty in Europe," has been visited by her Majesty the Queen, the Royal Family, and an immense number of persons, including nearly ... the nobility and foreigners of distinction in London. The "Keying" is now open for Exhibition, from Ten to Six, at the East India Docks, adjoining the Railway and Steam-boat Pier, Blackwall.—Admission, ONE SHILLING. Junk Decorations, including Chinese Lanterns, are issue by the Blackwall and Eastern Counties Railways. Cards ... also by Cuming, and by Steam-boat from the Pier between ... and Woolwich; fare 6d.—Catalogue to obtainable on ... board price 6d

HALL OF ROME, Great Windmill street, Haymarket.—Extraordinary Novelty and Attraction.—A burning chasm for the illusion, patronage he has received, begs to state that in consequence of the immense success of the "Ci Tolonea Aerial, entitled "Daria and Emerelda," and "The Fairy Queen," ... that they will be repeated every evening until further notice.—On ... new groups are in active preparation. Morning Performances ... Three; Evening at Eight. Stalls, 3s.; Reserved Seats, 2s.; Promenade, 1s

CALDWELL'S SOIREES DANSANTES. Every Tuesday, from 8 till 12.—Admission, 6d.; per Quarter, £1.—The best Music in Town. Dancing begins the moment the Band ... practising with 500 in a room capable of accommodating 1000. Six Private Lessons, at any hour, £1 1s.—Hall, 3 and 4, Dean street, Soho

THE GROTTO of ST. CATHERINE will not be opened for two days this month, for the benefit of the WEYBRIDGE PAROCHIAL SCHOOLS. Omnibuses at minute half-hourly from Weybridge Station of the South-Western Railway Trains leave the Waterloo-bridge Station at 20m past 10, 30m past 12 and 30m past 2 o'Clock. Fare, 1s. Return Tickets, 1s 6d. Children half past 3, at 4 2 min past 5, and 45m. past 8.—Tickets, 1s. each, to admit two grown persons and their children under the years of age. A limited number will be issued to be had at the Schools, Weybridge, and of Messrs Cowan & Co., Hall The Grotto is said to have cost the Duke of Newcastle £40,000.

DANCING TAUGHT in the most Fashionable Style, at WILLIS'S ROOMS, 41, Brewer-street, Goldensquare, by Mr. GEORGE JARRETT (late assistant to Mr Willis) Private Lessons at all hours to Ladies and Gentlemen. Evening Class Monday and Friday. Assembly on Wednesday and Saturday. Terms may be had on application. The Rooms to be let for Private Parties

LESSONS in MILLINERY and DRESS-MAKING, by Miss Upper, 30, Kingsgate-street, Portman-square, and Mrs BARRETT, continues, by her unrivalled system, to perfect persons this art of Cutting and Fitting in 12 Lessons, for 10s, 6d

RICH BLACK SATINS and WATERED SILKS, At £2 10s the dress usually sold at £5 Patterns sent for inspection. 2 and 3, of New Mr N ... Regent-street, Corner of Brook-street, KING and SHEATH, 256, Regent-street

THE NEW PATENT UTRECHT MANTILLA—The novel and elegant novelty, highly recommended, and trimmed with velvet in every colour, price 25s 6d and 31s 6d; and WORMS, 106 to 110, Wholesale and Retail, Sent to ... part of the Kingdom on receipt of

EXTRAORDINARY SALE of HER MAJESTY'S LACEMAN, DISON'S STOCK. As she is absolutely retiring from the business. Every article in Lace and Embroideries. Infants' Robes, Frocks, Monthly Gowns, Bodice Caps, are to be selected from the extensive assortment, at nearly half value. Some old friends, in large muslin caps, of the year 1830, at 2s 6d. each, cost 20s Such beautiful bodice ... and sleeves, at DISON'S No. 337, Regent-street

WINTER HOSIERY.—An unlimited choice at the period of every description of newly-manufactured Hosiery for the approaching season. Spanish merinos, Scotch cashmere, Gauze Cashmere, and other soft and warm woods, in every variety of stocking, drawers, vests and mohair under dresses; also Ladies' elastic gaiters, at POPE and PLANTE'S, 4, Waterloo place, Pall-mall. Orders from the country, enclosing pattern, can be forwarded by post

WEDDING ORDERS & INDIA OUTFITS for the first year's wear, at the lowest prices. An extensive assortment of Ladies' linen and under clothing drawers, and robes in 3s 6d. merino, in flannels, print, silk, and net; flannel, with a beautiful variety of baby linen and children's dresses, are kept ready made. The Ladies' Registered Bachelor Shirt can only be obtained at MRS NORTON'S, 73 Strand, Adelphi

FORD'S AMERICAN SHIRT is made of the very finest Scotch cambric, with linen fronts, well and set smoothly in any position The body is of India long-cloth, the cuffs and wristbands of the finest Linen, at 1s prize Sent for Forty Shillings; they cannot be equalled. Coloured Shirts, cloth or fancy spuns, and dress, 3s 6d, to 6s 6d each. Patterns sent free of charge Post-office orders, payable to RICHARD FORD, 27, Poultry, opposite Grass Church. Detailed Catalogues of India Silk Handkerchiefs, Scarves, Shirts, Cravats, &c., sent free by post

[illegible] POND, 180, Strand, London

SHIRTS, 4s. 6d. each, or Six for 26s.—These Shirts are of a superior description, and cannot fail to give satisfaction to the wearer. A choice assortment of more than 200 new patterns in Fashionable Coloured Shirts, 4s 6d each, or six for 26s. The largest assortment of Shirts in London, making every description, and always have some beautiful specimens of superior needlework, at very moderate prices.—HOSKINS and Co., Shirt Makers, 59, Saint Martin's-lane, Charing-cross Strangers are requested to observe that the premises are situated at the corner of New-street, Lyon garden, where the same business has been carried on for 60 years

CHILDREN'S FROCKS, COATS, and PELISSES, in all the new materials and unrivalled styles, a ... ge portion of which are expressly adapted for SCHOOL WEAR, at SHAND'S, 3, PINSBURY PAVEMENT, Moorfields

[illegible] the Bank and Finsbury

SEVERAL THOUSAND PAIRS of new, from the ... [illegible] 1d., 2s 6d., 3s 6d.; Medium, 3s 6d., 7s 6d., 10s 6d. ... [illegible] ... 1s. 6d.; 1s. 9d., 2s 6d., 3s 6d., up to the richest goods ... [illegible] ... wools, Three Four, and 5 ... Gloves

HOLLAND DRESSES of all kinds. Frocks, 1s 6d., Pinafores ... wove, 3s 6d., 4s 6d.; and 5s 6d

[illegible] JACKETS, CLOAKS, for all ages above two years

INFANTS' CLOAKS, HOODS, HATS AND BONNETS ... [illegible] ... FIRST RUSHES, French Cambric Caps, Day ...

... [illegible] ... Lawns and Cambric Nightcaps, Open and ... Shirts, Flannel Nursery Bodices, Pinafores, with or without ... Blankets, &c., with every other article in BABY LINEN, ... which will be usefully required for a YOUNG FAMILY, ... [illegible] ... lating the trouble and inconvenience in going to various shops when JUVENILE CLOTHING is required. An assortment of Infants' Cloaks, Hoods, Robes, &c., sent to any part of the country to select from on the receipt of Five Pounds.

PUBLICATIONS, &c.

PORTRAIT of ALBERT BARNES, the American Concentrator. India Proofs, 2s 6d Prints, 4to. 1s. 6d 16mo and square 12mo, to bind with ve umes, 6d. Proofs in handles on frame, with glass, 10s. Prints, 2[illegible] 6s.

CORDING'S Copyright 12mo Edition of BARNES' NEW TESTAMENT, in black cloth, 2[illegible] cloth. The GENUINE ETCHINGS, separate, 3 6d., with ... and OAKEY, Fleet ... nostor-row, and all Booksellers

Pianists Office, 67, Paternoster-row

LES HUGUENOTS.—This splendid opera is just added to the PIANISTA, Nos. 85 and 87, price 2s. each Also, Lucrezia Borgia, Linda di Chamouni, Puritani, Sonnambula, and 20 others, 2s. each Pp ... All full Books are Catalogues gratis.

NEW SONG.

WILL YOU LOVE ME THEN, AS NOW. Price 2s. Post-free, 24 stamps. This very charming song is decidedly one of the most ... the season It conveys a sentiment which comes home to ... heart, and ... beautiful, &c., in which ... words are touching in the extreme When sung with ... is called number of [illegible] very effective.

DURY and HODGSON, 65, Oxford-st

CHARLES GLOVER'S New Song, "MY SHADOW, FOLLOW ME!" Sung with the Chorus of Waves at Sadler Boy, price 2s. The beautiful Ballad has already found its way into the drawing-room, and is a very melody will be found ... Pianoforte of all persons of taste

"Isle of a Sailor," "Life of a So ... Charles Glover's "Venice," Charles Glover's "Rest," "Spirit-Stirring Song," "Fear not but trust in Providence," "The Pilot," price 2s. 6d. Beautifully Illustrated in Gold and Colours. Post-free by Bracknell.

A New Ed tion, price 6s. of

WADES HAND-BOOK to the PIANOFORTE, Containing an Abridged Introduction to the Study of that Instrument and Music in general, the Art of Fingering, ... [illegible] ... operated by examinations from study, consisting of Popular Melodies and ... [illegible] ... a Dictionary, and a new Vocabulary of Terms ... the late J AUGUSTINE WADE

Published at CHAPPELL'S, Music Publishers, New Bond-street; and by WHITTAKER and Co., Ave Maria-lane.

THE ELEGANT PRESENT. THE ILLUSTRATED LONG TESTAMENT. (AUTHORISED VERSION) Is elegantly bound, embossed and gilt sides, gilt edges, price Five Shillings, in paper covers, Half-a-Crown. With 96 Spirited Engravings from Drawings executed by Eminent Artists, ... [illegible] ... NEW TESTAMENT contains some full bold and ... [illegible] ... elections. Much has been done of late in the choice of subjects, and even those which have been, as it were pictorially used up, are treated with a quality of conception, ... [illegible] ... lately Novel ... "A publication characterised by the spirit of the well-known proprietors of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, and destined, we doubt not, to circulate far and wide The illustrations are characterised by a daring originality, yet bonded with a delicacy and beauty that ... them immensely attractive."—Weekly ... London Printed ... at the Office of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, 198, Strand ... and all Booksellers

Just publish ... Price 8d., Thirty-third Edition,

ODELL'S SYSTEM of SHORT-HAND, by which the nature of any Sentence, Lecture, Trial, ... [illegible] ..., may be acquired in a few hours, without the aid of a Master.

... ware of Spurious Editions, and ask for "Odell's Short hand, price 8d." ... For Sale by all Railway Bookstalls

"The best, and at the same time the cheapest, book of the sort which has ever fallen under our notice."—Atlas[illegible]

Post-free for 9d., or post-free 10d.

A SUPPLEMENT to the ABOVE POPULAR TREATISE, containing the Reporting Characters ... London: GROOMBRIDGE and Sons, 5, Paternoster-row, and may be had of all Booksellers

COMPLETION OF THE WORK Now ready, price 3s. 6d. PART IV. OF THE HISTORY and ART of WOOD ENGRAVING; CONTAINING AN ... [illegible] ... HISTORY AND ART OF WOOD ENGRAVING FROM THE EARLIEST PERIOD. The Part just published is ... [illegible] ... and also the following subjects, which have been selected from ... THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS. And each ... in various styles the capabilities of Wood Engraving:— Drayton Manor ... [illegible] ... Opening of the Great Exhibition (Illustrated) ... Review near Folkestone (Clint) Relvoir Castle ... A Tale of the Wars (J. J. Jenkins) The Fate of Marriage (F. Goodall) ... Garden Scene (Watkins) Portrait of Rembrandt ... Bridge Church, Stratford-on-Avon (Duncan) Hampton Court Palace (W. L. Leitch) ... Cottage and Rhododendrons ... Anne Hathaway's Cottage (From Sketches by R. H. The Lovers' Walk (F. Danby, Prince Albert) ... A.R.A.) Rich Courtship (A. Fripp) ... The Autumn Trail (W. Harvey). This Work is printed in the most careful manner, upon a worksmanlike paper, expressly for the purpose, which considerably enhances the beauty of the Engravings. To be completed in FOUR PARTS, 3s. 6d. each.

Published by W. LITTLE, 198, Strand: and ... [illegible]

Publish[illegible] Months, ... nate sixpence, THE MAN IN THE MOON ... A Monthly Review and Re ... of New Mr N ... Books, New Plays, New Jokes, and N ... ; being an Act ... nation of the Brain, with the Natural Wonders of the Nation, the Various Gangs of Rast, and the Great General Amusement Band

... [illegible] ... "This amusing publication furnishes the reader with a large and particularly good sixpennyworth of fun."—Plymouth Times "A very amusing book for the table—good-humoured ... and witty remarks being in a stable articles."—Bridgewater Times. An amusing little work, well calculated to relieve ennui, and to drive away, for a time, the pains of unappointed love, rheumatism, gout, and other like causes of human misery and feeling." Sussex Gazette It is brimful of mirth and satire Bimmerch ... "This witty little periodical has permanently attracted to itself the ... [illegible] ... the laughter-loving portion of the community. Some ... cuts are remarkably ... [illegible] ... The sixpennyworth is the best ... [illegible] ... made as laugh heartily as some of the whimsical ... [illegible] ... ing that we have said all that is ... The 'Man in the Moon' is a good cure for the Blues Bridgewater Times ... The Illustrations are grotesquely comic, the parodies ... [illegible] ... and not a few of the ... [illegible] ... are very good."—Bell's Life in London ... "No pleasanter companion can be found for the traveller by railway or steam-packet than the 'Man in the Moon.' ... will be a welcome budget of comicalities There are no less than twenty-six literary articles and fifty-three comic illustrations to that part before us Limes-house Times ... "An excellent sixpennyworth of fun, and well calculated to meet ... trates the effect of the late damp, cold, wintry weather." Stafford-shire Mercury ... All ... Back Numbers have been Reprinted ... London Published at 80, Fleet-street ... Sold by all Booksellers, and at ... [illegible] ... Railway Stations in the United Kingdom

... [illegible] ... hung, a Novel and Exquisite Print, called ... [illegible] ... KIDDY. ... [illegible] ... vers of which they are the types. This print ... [illegible] ... fall to charm admirers of female loveliness, or to call forth the ... [illegible] ... ral artistic talent ... [illegible] ... ist is to tyrnly two flowers, 'the Lily and the ... [illegible] ... ' Beauty's empire The Rose a characterised ... [illegible] ... or personified by a coy maiden, who, on a pair of lens with the boisterous chaise of a flower, while an eglantine butterfly a settling on her bosom, and which, finding the delicacy of the floral incrustation, which is a specimen of produce of gushing beauty—buds, ... books, and wreathed smiles, has a great mind to pilot ... [illegible] ... as their genius. The figure is in part concealed by a rose-bush, ... [illegible] ... with large and lovely flowers, a colour of which is admirably relieved by the maiden's black hair. The lady, 'the Queen ... [illegible] ... ' is a splendid specimen of ... [illegible] ... ' ... [illegible] ... ' ... [illegible] ... '

KILMAINHAM GAOL, DUBLIN.

SKETCHES IN IRELAND.

KILMAINHAM AND PHŒNIX PARK.

THESE are localities of considerable attraction at the present moment in Dublin, though their interest is fraught with melancholy associations.

Kilmainham is a village on the western side of the city of Dublin. It has a military hospital of the nature of that at Chelsea, a county court-house, and county prison. The latter, when viewed from the south, at the distance of a hundred yards, across an orchard filled with trees at present bending to the ground with their ripe fruit, presents a dead wall, and within it the upper stories of three unequal ranges of buildings. That in the centre is the state prison. In one of the apartments lighted by the window nearest the centre Mr. Smith O'Brien is at present lodged. The number of people who visit the locality from curiosity, or from political sympathy, to obtain an outside view of this celebrated prison, is considerable; the only benefit derived from which visits seems to be confined to car-drivers and the landlords of the public-houses.

The second Illustration shows the beautiful domain of Phœnix Park, with an encampment of troops. In the foreground is seen the Wellington Testimonial, 205 feet high: it was erected at a cost of £20,000.

On Tuesday a grand military spectacle was produced in the Phœnix Park, before Lord John Russell, who, with his lady and the Countess of Clarendon, passed three or four hours in witnessing it from an open barouche. At eleven o'clock the following regiments took up their positions on the ground:—6th Enniskillen Dragoons, 7th and 8th Hussars, 17th Lancers, Royal Horse Artillery, Field Brigades, 2d or Queen's Light Infantry Regiment, 9th, 48th, 49th, and 58th Regiments, 60th Rifles, 74th Highlanders, &c. After performing various military evolutions, a sham battle was got up, and carried on after the most approved system of military tactics; the roar of the artillery with the echoing peals of musketry keeping up an incessant din for some hours; while the various movements of the several columns in advancing, charging, retreating, &c., produced a most imposing effect. There was a large staff of general and field officers present, among whom were Sir Edward Blakeney and staff, Prince George of Cambridge, Major-General M'Donald, &c. The movements of the troops did not terminate before three o'clock.

POSTAGE OF NEWSPAPERS.—By the Act 11 and 12 Vict., cap. 117, which came into operation on the 4th instant, it is provided that newspapers from the Channel Islands or from the Isle of Man shall be liable to the payment of rates or duties of postage. This enactment was rendered necessary by newspapers being printed in the Channel Islands and forwarded to various parts of England.

PIRATES IN THE CHINA SEAS.—On June 1, her Majesty's sloop, Scout, captured two large pirate junks, on the east coast of China, between Amoy and Chunno Bay. The first junk was taken without difficulty; but the second was boarded under a sharp fire. The Scout had one man killed and eleven wounded; and of the junk's crew twenty were killed, sixty-four drowned by the sinking of the junk, fifteen wounded, and thirty-six taken prisoners.

THE NORTH BRITISH RAILWAY.—Mr. Hudson, who has lately become the purchaser of the Newcastle and Carlisle, and Maryport and Carlisle Railways, is likely to become the possessor also of the North British. At the half-yearly meeting of the shareholders of this line, held at Gibb's Hotel, Edinburgh, on the 13th inst., a committee was appointed to negotiate with Mr. Hudson for the sale or lease of the line, and the meeting stands adjourned till the 14th of October. It is said the terms will be six per cent. for three years, and seven per cent. in perpetuity afterwards, being the same as were offered to, and accepted by, the Carlisle and Newcastle Company.

THE "GREAT BRITAIN" STEAM-SHIP.—On Monday the wreck of this noble but unfortunate vessel, recovered from Dundrum Bay, was put up for sale at Liverpool, by the brokers, Tonge, Curry, and Co. This immense iron vessel, which, at one time, enjoyed a national interest, is of not less than 3442 tons per register; her length, 319 feet; breadth, 50 feet; height between decks, 32 feet. As the advertisement stated, her great strength enabled her to withstand the shocks of the heaviest seas whilst stranded on the rocks, throughout a whole winter, without in the slightest degree altering her lines. There was a very large attendance of merchants and others at the auction, but, as the result showed, curiosity alone drew the company together. The vessel was put up by Mr. Curry, who acted as salesman, at £20,000, an amount, he said, offered for her in private. Five minutes' entreaties, however, did not secure a single bid, and she was withdrawn on behalf of the owners at £40,000

ENCAMPMENT IN PHŒNIX-PARK, DUBLIN.

MODEL WESLEYAN CHAPEL, AT POPLAR.

THE commercial and moral living status of the extensive parish of Poplar presents a very anomalous picture to the mind of the Christian and true philanthropist. Here is a population of more than 36,000 persons, ranking with the most inventive, enterprising, hard-working people of any locality within the metropolis, or its environs. Such an observer would note with astonishment the enormous property and merchandize of the East and West India Companies' Docks, the vast ship-yards and dock-works, and the various oundries and manufactories with which this locality is so thickly studded. Our observer will then say, Poplar is no home for drones; yet, impressed as he is with the sight of this hive of human industry, a question of grave and serious import suggests itself as to the spiritual welfare of these sons of toil—where, indeed, do these thousands worship their God? How painful is the reply, that all the places of public worship in the parish cannot accommodate more than 6000 persons at any one time; so that there is an out-door mass of 20,000 persons for whom religious teaching is not provided. To supply in part this lamentable deficiency, the Wesleyan Methodists in Poplar resolved some time since to build a chapel to accommodate 1500 persons. They were, at an early stage of the good work, greatly encouraged by the munificence of a gentleman resident in the parish, a member of another religious denomination an earnest promoter of the Protestant faith and of religious education—who most generously contributed the sum of £500 toward the noble object; this nucleus soon drew other contributions, until the subscription amounted to about £1400; and with this means has been raised the house of prayer represented in our Illustration

MODEL WESLEYAN CHAPEL, AT POPLAR.

The site of the new chapel has been well chosen: it occupies part of the lawn of F. Stock, Esq., abutting on the south side of the broad East India-road, faced by handsome villas, and easily approachable from every point. The architect is Mr. James Wilson, of Bath, who has introduced many improvements into the plan, which are to be adopted in similar structures; hence this is termed a "Model Chapel." The style is Decorated, and the materials are Caen and rag-stones. The exterior dimensions are 62 feet in breadth, 105 feet in length, and about 60 feet in height. The elevation facing the road has a large centre window, with mullions and rich flowing tracery. It is flanked by octagonal crocketed turrets, each 80 feet high. Adjoining are the entrance-doors, with moulded jambs; and above them are two decorated windows. Each side has six large and lofty windows, with mullions and rich tracery, between which are massive buttresses which give solidity and effect to the building; the end buttress meeting another, flanking the smaller front windows, both being capped with an open crocketed pinnacle. The entire edifice is surmounted with an open flowing tracery parapet; the gables are finished with crocketed pinnacles, and the ridge of the roof has a line of cresting.

The interior is richly fitted: the pews have carved fleur-de-lis ends; the pulpit and screen are of Caen stone, beautifully sculptured, and enriched with crocketed pinnacles, and panels filled with flowing tracery. The organ (a very fine one, by Hill) is placed in the rear of the screen; and above it is a large rose window, filled with coloured glass, digit with appropriate emblems. The other windows are also filled with coloured glass, so as to impart to the whole interior an unusual degree of richness and solemnity, akin to the "dim religious light" of our cathedrals. The glass-work is by Wailes, of Newcastle; and the windows, screen, and pulpit are the gift of certain ladies of the congregation. The ceiling is divided by moulded ribs into compartments forming an obtuse arch, with ornamental bosses at the intersections of the ribs, terminating with carved spandrils and moulded stone corbels.

For the design of this handsome Chapel, the architect, Mr. Wilson, F.S.A., obtained a premium. The work has been substantially and well executed by Messrs Curtis, of Stratford.

The Chapel has 1453 sittings, of which 800 are free. The cost has been about £7350.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

NEW CHURCHES.—The twenty-eighth annual report of her Majesty's Commissioners for Building New Churches has just been printed. In the last report it was stated that 391 churches had been completed, in which accommodation was afforded for 449,957 persons, including 251,388 free seats appropriated to the use of the poor. In the whole, four hundred and twenty churches have now been completed, and provision has therein been made for 464,608 persons, including 267,606 free seats for the poor.

BISHOPRIC OF GLASGOW AND GALLOWAY.—At a Diocesan Synod of the Clergy of the Episcopal Church in Scotland, in the diocese of Glasgow and Galloway, on the 30th ult., the Rev. W. J. Trower, rector of Wiston, Sussex, was elected bishop, in the room of the late Michael Russell, LL.D. Mr. Trower resigns his preferment in England, and will reside in the city or immediate neighbourhood of Glasgow. It is expected that the consecration will take place in Glasgow on or about the 21st September.

Amongst the Royal contributors to the fund for the completion of the Cologne Cathedral, are the Queen of England for £350, the Emperor of Austria for 8000 florins, the King of Holland for 1000 florins, Archduke John of Austria for 300 ducats, and the Duke of Baden for 2000 florins.

STEAM TO ITALY.—An alteration will shortly take place with regard to steam communication between Southampton and Italy. Hitherto there has been a monthly communication by means of one of the Peninsular Company's small steamers. It is, however, intended that for the future the communication shall be kept up by running one of the Company's large steamers every six weeks. This will be more economical for the Company, and afford greater accommodation to the public, since one of the large steamers will carry twice as much cargo as any of the smaller ones that have hitherto been employed. The trade between this country and Italy has not fallen off so much as the troubled state of that country would lead persons to expect. The Peshs brought home a valuable freight on her last voyage. The passenger traffic, however, to and from Southampton and Italy has entirely ceased since the war with the Italian States and Austria.

LONDON: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by WILLIAM LITTLE, 198, Strand aforesaid.—SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 16, 1848.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

No. 336.—Vol. XIII.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 23, 1848. [Sixpence.

THE CONDITION OF THE MASSES IN FRANCE AND ENGLAND.

It is some years since the "Condition-of-the-people-of-England question" was announced as the one great question alone worthy of occupying the attention of every man who aspired to the rank of a statesman and a philosopher. In the interval that has elapsed, the question has lost none of its importance. On the contrary, its urgency has been augmented from day to day. The increase of population—the added keenness of competition—the intensity of the struggle for mere subsistence, which grows with our civilisation, and with the numbers of the people, have all combined to invest the subject with a practical and abiding interest. Not only in the densely-peopled cities of Great Britain, and in the swarming potato-fields of Ireland, has a kindred subject inspired fear in the minds of those who make politics their study. The whole of Europe, with some few exceptions, offers the same problem for solution. The more civilised the nation, the greater is the urgency of the danger that menaces society from the growing numbers of the multitudes who are compelled to live by their labour, but that too often find none to employ them. We have seen the terrible convulsions to which the subject has given birth in France; and the chaos of ideas, passions, delusions, and frenzies, which it has let loose to astonish and to alarm Europe.

The sad experience of that country will not be without its uses to us. We shall read in their book. We shall learn from their lesson. The wisdom they acquire in sorrow and suffering will extend to us. We shall grow wiser by their faults. Hitherto, we have escaped with comparative impunity, and have not had to pass through any such fiery and disastrous ordeal as that of their last revolution. The immense and rapid growth of our commercial and manufacturing systems, which have in all ordinary times found productive employment for the great bulk of our people, and the existence of a Poor-Law (an ancient institution, founded long anterior to the present circumstances of society), have, by their combined operations, enabled us to weather all the social or political storms which have, from time to time, arisen in our country. France has never had such safety-valves as these. She has never established a poor-law to provide for the minority of her labouring classes, when old age, sickness, or calamity rendered them unable to find work for themselves. She has never had a manufacturing development, such as ours, to give remunerative employment to the great majority of her industrious classes. She has, moreover, to her own cost and sorrow, as well as to those of Europe, been a war-like nation—a people of wealth expenders, rather than of wealth producers. Our case has been different. We, too, have been war-like; and we are paying, and must continue to pay, the penalty. But if we have greatly expended, we have immensely produced. Of our Poor-Law, it may safely be said, that however burdensome may be its weight, and however demoralizing it may have been before its recent unpopular but most necessary amendment, it enabled Great Britain to preserve her institutions amid the rise and fall of nations, and amid political convulsions unparalleled in the history of the world. By acknowledging the right of all men to live, without, at the same time, recognising the duty of the state to provide work for all men, we solved, if not quite effectually, at all events, temporarily and safely, the problem of modern society in Europe. That problem is the peaceful and industrious existence of large multitudes upon a confined area. There are symptoms somewhat painfully apparent, that, without a very considerable increase of our trade, the old expedient of a Poor-Law may prove insufficient in the future, however sufficient it may have proved in the past, to preserve us from social calamity; but they are symptoms only. France, unluckily for herself, and perhaps providentially for us, is in the very thick of the difficulty. Against her will, she has made an attempt to solve the problem by means of a change in her form of Government. The working classes have been taught to regard this change as the mere preliminary to those social re-arrangements which are to re-construct society upon the broad and equitable basis of a fair day's wages for a fair day's work for every man whatsoever. The doctrine of the "Organisation of Labour" has been propounded. Theorists have taken up the practical subject—so full of difficulties. It is easy to see that France will fail in the attempt. The great reason is that perfect success is impossible. If it were possible, France has not as yet entered upon the track of truth. She does not seem inclined to take experience for her guide; and, unhappily for her, she is not in a condition to do so, even if she were inclined. The evil has ramifications which no laws can reach, or changes of Government eradicate. To establish a poor-law upon the English system amid a nation of small landed proprietors, many of them little better than paupers themselves, would be a task which it would be useless to attempt. To rival Great Britain in manufacturing industry, and thereby provide remunerative employment for the people, would be somewhat easier. It would, at all events, be a possible undertaking. But it would require much more than the lifetime of a generation; and a more slow and cautious development than France at this present moment can afford. Commerce and manufactures cannot be forced. We can no more make a prosperous manufacturing nation in a day, than we can raise an oak from an acorn in the same period. The Communists and others in France, pretending to the title of social philosophers, have imagined other and more sudden remedies. They have seen, as we all see, the danger of allowing large masses of the people to increase in numbers and in poverty at the same time, and have thought to remedy the evil by a rapid process which they call Communism, Socialism, Icarianism, Owenism, or Fourierism. All these "isms" differ widely in some respects, but agree in their praises of co-operation or union as the new bond of society, and in the anathemas they launch against "Competition." M. Thiers, who seems to be to France in September what M. Lamartine was in March—"the bright particular star" of his age—has, in the debates on the Constitution, done ample justice upon this theory. He has shown that it offers no solution of the difficulty; that an "organisation of labour" upon the popular principle is a delusion pregnant with disappointment and misery. He has shown that if every man had a right to demand work from the State, the State would have a right to demand work from every man; and that the realisation of the project would end in the slavery of the people. It is clear as algebra that if the State is to furnish work, it must be allowed to prescribe the sort of work to be done, and the locality in which it is to be carried on. If the State must find work for five hundred thousand men, and has none to give them in France, it must be allowed as a matter of logical as well as practical necessity to give it them in Algeria, if it has reason to believe that in Algeria these men can be profitably employed. There is no escape from the dilemma. Every bargain has two sides. If the workman be master of the State to compel work, the State must be master of the workman to compel the kind of work and the locality of its exercise. In other words, the workmen must be slaves; and the world would once again behold such a state of slavery as that which existed among the nations of antiquity, and by which every man was converted into a machine in the hands of the ruler or rulers of the people.

"SURPLICE." THE WINNER OF THE GREAT ST. LEGER, DONCASTER, 1848.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

In fact the "Organisation of Labour" is as "old as the hills." It built the Pyramids of Egypt, and terraced the mountains of Peru. It existed amid the semi-civilisation of Eastern and Western antiquity; and to restore it now would be to drive society backwards, instead of urging it forwards. The organisation of labour, and the right to demand labour after the fashion of the French Communists, would be but slavery under a new name. M. Thiers has shown this effectively, and in so far he has done great service to the cause of common sense and rational liberty throughout the world. But, in exposing the errors of Communism, or bee-hive humanity, he has propounded no remedy of his own for an undoubted and increasing evil. He has proved the Communist to be wrong in the remedy they propose; but he has not disproved the disease, or even hinted at the true means of restoring society to a healthful state. He has not rendered justice to the principle of co-operation for the purposes of productive labour. This principle, we firmly believe, is calculated to be of immense service to all countries where land is scarce and population enormous, and more especially to France, where the extreme sub-division of property has rendered so many men, that ought to be hired labourers at good wages, the under-paid and under-fed cultivators of their own miserable plots of ground. Neither has he dwelt, as a philosopher and statesman should have done, upon the war fever, that lies like an incubus upon Europe. M. Thiers is a war statesman, and therefore he ignores this portion of the subject, and is, in his own way, as mischievous a man as M. Prudhon, M. Pierre Leroux, or any other crack-brained enthusiast of the beehive school. As clear-headed men as M. Thiers, who have not been infected as he is with the war mania, trace most of the evils which afflict Europe to the mutual jealousy of the various States that compose it—a jealousy which forces them to keep up large armies, wage war, contract debt, and burden all posterity with liabilities that wise States would never have contracted. More work, and more trade, and the emigration of large masses to new countries which shall in their turn become customers for the produce of this increased work and trade—these are the practicable remedies for the sufferings of the masses, both in England and France. While all the nations of Europe employ under the name of soldiers large and increasing multitudes of unproductive men to consume the fruits of the labour of the industrious, poverty and suffering must exist amid the people. All the states of Europe not only maintain and perpetuate this system, but groan under the accumulation of debt which it has entailed upon them during the last two centuries. We suffer for the errors of our forefathers; and we continue the error in our own persons. M. Michel Chevalier, the most formidable opponent that the Communists have yet encountered, is fully alive to this gangrene in the heart of Europe. In his famous reply to M. Louis Blanc, he says:—

"This immense display of military armaments with which all Governments surround themselves, whether to frighten each other, or to keep down their subjects, is paid out of national capital, and lost for the nation. The military expenditure of three-fourths or five-sixths of modern states is a sterile outlay, a criminal onslaught on capital—the material instrument of social progress—a baneful enjoyment with which the ruling or dominating classes itself

"In their ambition, the Sovereigns of Europe have constantly kept up, each in his own dominions, a military establishment of exaggerated dimensions, waiting, like Louis XIV., to repent of it on the deathbed. It is in this way that hitherto European Governments have been devouring the very substance out of which are formed the greatness and prosperity of nations; and it is thus that, after several centuries devoted to labour with great ardour and tolerable intelligence, Europe finds herself still poor."

M. Thiers, in his speech, said nothing so truly wise as this. It is because France, with all her schemes for the improvement of the social condition of the masses, is still so deeply and so perniciously imbued with the military spirit, that we despair so much more of her being enabled to effect any good for the great majority of her people, than we do of the efforts of England or any other country in the same cause. We do not imagine that either France or England can put an end to the war system in Europe; but until that system be abolished, or greatly modified, we do not think that Emigration, Organisation of Labour, or Poor-laws will do much to improve the social condition of the multitude in any country. With extended trade, increased labour in all the productive arts, and the abolition of war establishments, there would be no need of speculative theories such as those which M. Thiers has undertaken to demolish, to increase civilization, and to add to the happiness and social welfare of all classes. Let us hope that in due time France and all other countries will grow wiser in this respect; and that wealth and the means of subsistence will increase in a greater ratio than population. If so, the great problem will be solved, and a new era will indeed dawn upon humanity.

"SURPLICE,"

THE WINNER OF THE ST. LEGER. DONCASTER, 1848.

"SURPLICE," who has not only won the St. Leger, but also the Derby, in the present year—a rare instance of twin success—is a bay horse, sixteen hands one inch high; head lean, and tapering towards the nose, and a little white in the forehead; strong and straight neck, good shoulders, immense muscular arms; powerful back, somewhat drooping towards the tail, which is thin; strong quarters, immense thighs and gaskins, good small legs and feet. He is stated in Bell's Life in London to be the first horse that has won the Derby and Leger since the year 1800, when those feats were accomplished by Mr. Wilson's "Champion." "Surplice" was bred in 1845, by Lord George Bentinck.

THE LORD MAYOR'S ANNUAL VISIT TO CHRIST'S HOSPITAL. On Thursday, being St. Matthew's Day, the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Sheriffs, with the Governors of the various Royal Hospitals, attended divine service at Christ Church, Newgate-street. The service was preached by the Rev. Samuel John Phillips, M.A., of Pembroke College, Cambridge, from 1 Peter iv. 10—"As every man hath received the gift, even so minister the same one to another, as good stewards of the manifold grace of God." After the service, the party proceeded to the great hall of Christ's Hospital, where the annual orations were delivered, commencing with those by the four senior scholars who are about to proceed to the Universities—"On the Benefits of the Royal Hospitals." They were delivered, in Latin, by C. D. Craven, second Grecian, proceeding to Lincoln College, Oxford; in English, by D. W. Thompson, third Grecian, proceeding to Trinity College, Cambridge; in Greek, by R. Black, fourth Grecian, proceeding to Pembroke College, Cambridge; and in French, by J. L. Hammond, first Grecian, proceeding to Trinity College, Cambridge. Seven other of the senior scholars, viz. A Sweeting, H. C. Hellbrown, L. Craven, T Hellbrow, J. G.l., H. C. P. Jones, and G. H. Croad then delivered poems in Greek, Latin, and English. The hall was completely crowded, the greater part of the company consisting of elegantly-dressed ladies.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE

The elections of three members of the National Assembly for the Department of the Seine formed the chief political topic of the week in Paris: and it will be seen from the result given below that the "Red" Republicans have not been indifferent in discharging the functions of their anarchical mission, as one Socialist at least, and that stumbling-block of the Republic, Prince Louis Napoleon, have been returned.

Throughout the week Paris was in a great state of excitement. On Saturday last a violent discussion took place in the National Assembly, which threw much light on the tone of feeling among the Moderate majority, who are, in fact, only Republicans for the nonce. For some days previously, unusual excitement existed among the members of this party in the Chambers, by rumours of certain rapprochements which were manifested between Gen. Cavaignac and the leaders of those parties in the Chamber which their opponents designate by the names of the Mountain and the Red Republic; and these alarms were engendered by a report circulated, to the effect that the chief of the Executive had held private communications with a number of members of the Assembly connected with the above-mentioned parties, and in their confidence; that a project was entertained of constituting these members into Government Commissioners, to be sent into the departments for the purpose of republicanising them, or in effect doing, in person, what the Ledru-Rollins and Caussidières have intended to effect before the convocation of the Assembly. These rumours assumed a consistency on Friday, which left no doubt of their being well-founded. In fact the deputation from the provinces, for the purpose of consolidating public opinion, and to enlighten the population as to the real intentions of the National Assembly and of the Government, was said to be absolutely necessary in consequence of the reaction which had been produced against the Republic by the horrible insurrection of June, the omission of certain Socialist doctrines, the state of trade, and the consequent distress amongst the labouring classes.

Meanwhile the Club of the Rue de Poitiers held a meeting to take into consideration this subject, and it was decided that the question should be raised in the Assembly, and hence the discussion above mentioned. The Minister of the Interior, M. Sénart, in answer to M. Baze, admitted in substance that the measure adverted to had been decided on by the Government; and the announcement by M. Marie, Minister of Justice, that, if a vote of the Assembly were not given to sanction the measure, the Government would resign, was followed by a scene which it is totally impossible to describe. The members rushed from their benches to the floor; a dense mass collected round the Ministerial bench; all spoke together, the noise became stunning, and the confusion and uproar quite indescribable. M. Marrast, President of the Assembly, who did not occupy the chair on the occasion, was in the midst of the crowd, vainly endeavouring to conciliate and pacify. At length M. Pagnerre, as Vice-President, occupied the chair, put on his hat, and the sitting was suspended. The Ministers and Generals then assembled in the Salle des Conférences, and were joined by M. Marrast, and were absent for nearly an hour. On resuming, it was stated they deliberated in a private room, and it was falsely supposed that a resolution of the Government would be the result. A member of the moderate party had, however, meanwhile, drawn up the following resolution: "The Assembly having heard the explanations of the Ministers, leaves to the responsibility of the Government the measures which they announce they have proposed, and passes to the order of the day." The intention of this resolution was to avoid a direct vote of censure on the Government, and to recommend it to reconsider the project, after having learned, as it did on that occasion, the sense of the Assembly upon it. This draft was sent in to the Ministers as an olive branch. On returning to the house, and the Vice-President, M. Pagnerre, resuming the chair, Général Cavaignac was in the act of ascending the tribune, for the purpose, as was understood, of resigning, when he was prevented by M Marrast, President of the Assembly, who immediately ascended the tribune himself, and without putting the question, read the above resolution, which was adopted by an immense majority of the Assembly, on the understanding that the offensive project contemplated by the Government would be abandoned. The Assembly then separated amidst a scene of the strongest confusion, tumult, and agitation

The number of insurgents of June confined on the 15th of September was—

Prisoners in good health	..	..	..	..	..	1869
Ditto sick	..	..	..	..	..	414
Women	..	..	..	..	..	153
Children	..	..	..	..	..	53
Total	..	..	..	..	..	2483

Of the 414 sick, 182 were convalescent wounded, which reduces the number of prisoners labouring under internal, acute, or chronical affections to 233, or about one out of 20

The Moniteur contains a long letter of Général Cavaignac refuting two columnies directed against the memory of his father by the Mémorial Bordelais. M Cavaignac, the Conventionnalist, was charged with having seconded a motion made in the Popular Society of Arras, for the purpose of bringing to the scaffold a number of members of the Convention. M. Cavaignac, as chairman of the meeting, had put the question, and hence it was inferred that he had approved and supported it. General Cavaignac cites, in vindication of the memory of his father, the debats which took place on the subject in the Convention, on the 19th Prairial, year III., and which completely exonerated him from the charge. The Mémorial Bordelais had, moreover, stated that the same address contained contradictions of that report, printed in 1816 and 1844, and thus concludes:

"It is notorious that Mademoiselle Labarère, who, according to certain biographers, 'had disappeared from Dax a few days after the death of her husband and never returned thither,' never quitted that town. She there contracted a very honourable marriage, and in 1835 her son, protesting by his proceeding against a calumny that had been circulated in Denmark to injure the memory of his father, the debats which took place on the subject in the Convention, on the 19th Prairial, year III., and which completely exonerated him from the charge. The Mémorial Bordelais has

RUSSIA.

Letters from St. Petersburgh, of the 8th instant, announce that the Emperor Nicholas had instructed his envoy in England to support the indissoluble union of Schleswig with Denmark, at the conference about to be held on the subject in London.

The Emperor maintained that the Duchy of Schleswig had, ever since the transactions of 1767 and 1773, been always considered by the Imperial Cabinet as an integral part of the Danish kingdom. He moreover referred to a declaration signed on the 20th (31st) May, 1773, by the Emperor Paul, then Grand Duke of Russia, renouncing for himself, his successors and heirs, all rights and pretensions to the Duchy of Schleswig, in favour of King Christiern and the heirs to his Royal crown, without making any distinction between the male branch of the Royal House of Desmarck and the female branch. The renunciation further provided that in case the latter was called to the throne of Denmark, the Duchy of Schleswig should nevertheless continue to form part of the Danish Monarchy; and the Emperor Paul pledged himself in his name, and in that of his successors and heirs, to respect and support the right of the Kings of Denmark to its possession. The Emperor Nicholas contended that the declaration of 1773 was still in full force.

TURKEY.

Advices from Constantinople of the 30th ult. announced that the Divan had sent fresh instructions to Soliman Pasha, inviting him to be very reserved towards the Provisional Government of Moldavia, to avoid holding any official intercourse with it, and not to repair to Bucharest until further orders. The Wallachian deputies had been received by the Minister for Foreign Affairs, to whom they exposed their grievances against Prince Bibesco, and other matters which constituted the object of their mission. All Pasha replied, that the question was to be debated and adjusted at Bucharest, and that the Porte could not at this moment adopt any definitive resolution. This sudden change in the attitude of the Ottoman Government respecting Wallachia had been produced by the menacing language of Russia, prudence requiring that at this juncture Turkey should not openly break off with that Power. The British Government, besides, was reported to have declared to the Divan that the principalities of Moldavia and Wallachia not being recognized states, it would be difficult for England to interfere in the question. The support of France being as uncertain, the Turkish Government was obliged to act with the utmost caution towards Russia, and it was considered probable that it would ultimately regulate the Moldo-Wallachian question in conjunction with that power. The last accounts from the principalities state that the Russian army in Moldavia has been of late considerably reinforced.

Accounts to the 31st of August, from Constantinople, state that Ibrahim Pacha had arrived at the Court of the Sublime Porte, for the express purpose of being invested with the sovereignty of Egypt by the Sultan; his father, Mehemet Ali, having become childish. The cholera continued to rage in Constantinople. A fresh conflagration in Galata had consumed upwards of 200 houses.

UNITED STATES

Advices from New York to the 5th inst. have been received this week by the Britannia, arrived in Liverpool on Wednesday last. The yellow fever has caused great alarm among the inhabitants of Staten Island, about seven miles from the city of New York, several of the residents having died of the disease. It is probably introduced by soldiers returned from Mexico.

The presidential election is to take place on the 6th of November. Mr. Webster, the eminent orator and statesman, in a speech made by him at Marshfield, on the 1st of September, considered the choice of candidates to be merely between Cass and Taylor.

In United States politics everything is quiet.

The Irish agitation has entirely ceased.

The weather for all the growing crops continued to be very fine, and nothing has yet occurred to render a full cotton crop doubtful.

A fire at New York had destroyed one of the large gas-works, and plunged part of the city in darkness.

In New Orleans telegraphic accounts, dated Sept. 4, it is stated that the fever prevails there, but not to an alarming extent.

Mexico continues quiet.

THE RIVER PLATE.

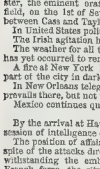
By the arrival at Havre of the French vessel Paysabet Parana, we are in possession of intelligence direct from Monte Video to the 13th of July.

The position of affairs was not materially changed since our last advices. In spite of the attacks directed by Oribe against the capital of Uruguay, and not withstanding the embarkation on board the French steamers of part of the French force, the city still held out; but the situation of the unfortunate inhabitants was exceedingly precarious. Coin had become very scarce in consequence of continued exportation, and commerce was de facto at a stand still since the re-opening of the Argentine ports, which had drawn away the European ships to them. Emigration on a grand scale was consequently the order of the day, and every vessel was carrying off to Europe or the Brazils some families with all that they could realise.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

SIR RICHARD LEVINGE, BART.

THIS respected gentleman dropped down dead, while walking in the grounds of his beautiful seat of Knockdrin Castle, on the 12th inst. Up to the fatal moment he appeared to be in his usual health. He had not quite reached his 63d year. Differing from the great majority of his class, Sir Richard resided constantly on his estate; and, by the extensive improvements he made on his demesne, as well as by his encouragement of agriculture, afforded employment and encouragement to the peasantry of the district. He was the first to introduce into the province of Leinster the manufacture of tiles for the purpose of draining, which have since been so extensively and so profitably used.



The family of Levinge is of very ancient date, being derived from Sir Walter Levinge, a soldier of the Cross, and companion in arms of Richard Cœur de Lion. The first who settled in the estate Ireland was the Right Honourable Richard Levinge, of Parsonstown County Derby, who distinguished himself as a lawyer, became successively Solicitor-General for Ireland, Speaker of the Irish House of Commons, and Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas in that kingdom. He obtained in 1704 the patent of Baronetcy, which is still enjoyed by his descendants. Of the eminent person, Sir Richard Levinge, whose death we record, was great-great-grandson. He succeeded to the title at the decease of his father, Sir Charles, in 1795; and married, in 1810, Elizabeth Ann, eldest daughter of Thomas Boothby, first Lord Ratcliffe, by whom he had nine sons and two daughters; the eldest of the former is the present Sir Richard George Augustus Levinge, seventh baronet of Knockdrin Castle.

HENRY MANNING, ESQ.

THE decease of this gentleman occurred at St. Ives, Huntingdonshire, on the 11th instant, aged sixty-three. He was the last male representative of his branch of the ancient family of Manning, founded by Simon de Manning, Lord of the town and castle of Betrede, in Kent, who accompanied Richard I. to the Holy Land. He also derived, through his grandmother, the heiress of James Mingaye, of Woodbridge, from the old Norman family of Mingaye of Amringale Mr. Manning has died without issue.

THE LANDGRAVE OF HESSE HOMBURG.

GUSTAVUS ADOLPHUS FREDERICK, Sovereign Landgrave of Hesse Homburg, was a General of Cavalry in the Austrian service. He was born on the 17th Feb., 1781, and succeeded his brother, the late Landgrave, Philip Augustus, on the 10th January, 1847. He had married, on the 12th February, 1818, the Princess Louisa, daughter of Frederick, late hereditary Prince of Anhalt-Dessau, by whom he leaves two daughters. His Serene Highness died on the 7th instant, of apoplexy; his title is inherited by his only surviving brother, Ferdinand Henry, now the Sovereign Landgrave.

JOHN ADAMS, ESQ.

THIS gentleman was the eldest son of Mr. Sergeant Adams, the assistant judge at the Middlesex Sessions. Mr. Adams, junior, was called to the bar by the honourable society of the Middle Temple, the 25th of January, 1839. He practised as conveyancer and equity draughtsman, and also in the Courts of Chancery in London, and on the Northern Circuit. He died on the 18th instant, at his residence in Connaught-square.

By an Act of last session (11 and 12 Vic., cap. 82), the limitations declared by the statute of 7 and 8 Vic., cap. 101, with respect to the area of school districts, the expenses of building, and the amount of expenditure are removed in certain cases. The provisions in the 5 and 6 Vic., cap. 57, relating to guardians, are extended to members of district boards. The object of the Act is to provide further accommodation for the education of the infant poor, under the management of the Poor-Law Board.

THE "OCEAN MONARCH." The Liverpool Albion has published the following letter from honest but unlettered Jotham Brugdon, "late chief mate of the Ocean Monarch." "Liverpool, 13th, 1848. Being about to leave Liverpool, I take this opportunity to express my deep sense of gratitude to the inhabitants of Liverpool and its vicinity, also to the captains and officers of several ships in port, for their unbounded kindness to me since my escape from the burning ship Ocean Monarch. While on board of the steam-frigate Alfonso I received every attention; and, on my arrival on shore, the hand of friendship was offered by all; and, indeed alone, but my friends contributed to my every want, which enables me to leave Liverpool in far more comfortable circumstances than I had hoped; a kindness I can never forget, and for which I shall feel under greatest of obligations as long as my life is spared. May God bless them all. No man never can, be he ever so wilfully and liberal. I would also acknowledge the receipt of a medal from the Liverpool Salpwreck and Humane Society, as an expression of their opinion of my conduct during that trying scene, and also to encourage me and others to do what is really our duty that is, to save life and relieve suffering whenever it is in our power; for which they have my sincere thanks, and may God bless them in their labour of love while on earth they live (but may a like scene never come before them again), and, when done with time, may they receive their reward in that bright world above, where shipwreck and suffering never enter; which is the humble prayer of JOTHAM BRAGDON."

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

Prince Albert, who is president of the Society for the Encouragement of the Arts and Manufactures, has been pleased to give two gold medals for competition during the ensuing sessions: the first, for the best account of any new and improved machinery or processes employed in the cultivation or preparation of sugar in the British Colonies, designed to economise labour and increase production. The other, for the best cement for uniting glass, particularly for cementing glass pipes or glass roofs

It is stated on good authority, that Lord Palmerston is at the present moment negotiating another treaty with the Brazilian Government for the more effectual suppression of the slave trade. His lordship has proposed that the Brazilian subjects captured in the act of conveying African negroes, for the purposes of slavery, shall be delivered up to the Brazilian authorities, to be tried by their own national tribunals, and punished accordingly, if found guilty.

The Earl and Countess of Arundel and Surrey, with their daughter and suite, left Blackwall, on Saturday morning, by the General Steam Navigation Company's mail steam ship Ocean, en route to Marseilles, on the Rhone.

The revision of the list of voters for the City of London commenced on Tuesday last at the Court of Common Pleas, Guildhall, before T. Y. M. Christie, Esq.

F. Bayley, Esq., the barrister appointed to revise the lists of voters for the borough of Westminster, will commence such revision at the Vice-Chancellor's Court, Westminster Hall, on the 26th instant. The same gentleman will begin the revision for Finsbury, at the Vice-Chancellor's Court, Lincoln's-inn, 27th instant.

On Monday a large number of the Society of Friends met at the Hall of Commerce, and proceeded to Blackwall, and there embarked for Ostend, en route to Brussels, to attend the great peace meeting held in that city on Wednesday last.

Emigration meetings are becoming general among the working classes in the metropolis. On Monday evening one took place at the Educational Institute, Great Suffolk-street, Southwark, and was intended to explain the plans of the "Canadian Land and Railway Association:" there was also a meeting of the "Westminster Working Man's Emigration Club," at which its promoters impressed on those present the great and certain rewards that wait on industry in Canada and Australia.

There is now in Drummond Castle gardens a great American aloe, whose flower stem stands nearly thirty feet high, supporting upwards of 2800 blooms.

Since the opening of the great trunk lines of railway, so extended has been the demand for grouse shooting on the Scotch moors, that advanced and most exorbitant rents are exacted for the privilege. In one instance the rent of a moor for £900 a year to shoot in two glens, for which the tenant farmer, to whom they pay it, pays but £140 to the owner: thus he has his farming profits on the £140, and £200 per annum for bad shooting into the bargain

One of the essays sent by the candidates for a prize offered for the best essay on the observance of the Sabbath, was written by the daughter of a labourer living in a village in Berkshire, and possessed so much merit that Lord Ashley submitted it to the Queen, who has granted permission for it to be dedicated to her.

It is her Majesty's intention to honour the Earl of Aberdeen by a visit to Haddo House, near Old Meldrum, before she returns to Aberdeen to embark on board the Royal yacht, and it is said will sleep there two nights. The Marquis and Marchioness of Abercorn and a select party are to have the honour to meet her Majesty and the Prince Consort while at Haddo

The Archbishop of Canterbury has, it is stated, refused to preach at St. Mark's College, Chelsea; the reason being, that the forms there employed during Divine Service are too numerous, and that too much singing is introduced.

The mansion which the Duke of Bedford is building at Ardsallagh, about twelve miles from Dublin, and which has been visited by his noble brother, the Premier, will cost upwards of £40,000. It is understood that his Grace, on the completion of the edifice, will occasionally reside on his Irish property.

Mr. Pusey, M.P., Chairman of the Journal Committee of the Royal Agricultural Society of England, has reported the final adjudication of the prizes for essays, &c., offered in 1845 and 1846; and the judges' award of the prize of £50 for the best report on the farming of the North Riding of Yorkshire, is to M. M. Milburn, land agent, of Sowerby.

The new two-shilling piece, recently finished by Mr. Wyon, resembles the five-shilling-piece which he completed some time since. The obverse is the Queen's head, with a lettering; the reverse is medieval like the other, but less elaborate. The workmanship is considered excellent.

On Saturday last, William Adams, who was convicted at the last Liverpool Assizes, before Mr. Justice Cresswell, of the murder of Dinah Thomas, at Manchester, on the 26th July last, was publicly executed in front of Kirkdale Gaol, in the former town

On Friday last night, information was received at the Post-Office, St. Martin's-le-Grand, that a letter posted in London, addressed to Messrs. Hand J. B. Larson and Co., of Liverpool, containing notes and bills of exchange to the amount of £1,000, had been stolen whilst passing through the Post-Office

Last week, at a new meeting-house at Bradford, now in the course of erection, four or five large stones that had been deposited in their place a few days previously, and weighing probably six tons, fell from the top of the building on to the men, killing three instantaneously, and wounding another badly on the feet

The herring fishing season has just closed, after a course of almost unprecedented success, many of the boats belonging to the port of Berwick having greatly exceeded their usual complement, viz. 200 barrels.

Farmings sown in September will produce an abundant crop, fit for use early in June, and of superior quality to those sown in the spring, and would be found an excellent substitute for the potatoes. Carrots should be sown now, and will be ready for the table at the beginning of May, and much finer than the spring sown will be at Midsummer

The Ulster Gazette quotes a rather odd announcement from the Hue and Cry—"Found straying on the 1st of August, supposed to have been stolen by the constabulary at Ballymally! a three-year-old heifer," &c.

The American papers, by the Cambria steam-ship, we regret to say, have brought us the melancholy intelligence of the almost sudden demise of the popular comedian Mr. W. G. Hammond, of diarrhœa, at New York, where he had been performing with great success.

The salmon fisheries north of the Tweed have closed. The fisheries in the Tay have been unproductive and unprofitable to the lessees upon the whole

From the Moors in Scotland, we learn that although not more than a month of the grouse season is gone, the birds are already so wild, that, with a long day's work, a tolerable bag can scarcely be got. Long-range cartridges are in request to reach the old cocks, who congregate on the bare hill tops. In the drier corries some very fine stags have been shot during the last week

Several Wiltshire farmers, especially in the northern division, have been drawn into a bubble joint stock society, termed "The Agricultural Cattle Insurance Company," by which many of them will be involved in utter ruin The scheme was got up in London, by parties who have since absconded from the country, and the unfortunate shareholders are now called upon to make up a deficiency of £45,000. It is said that some of the Wiltshire agriculturists are holders of 1000 shares, nominally of £20 each; others of 700 shares, &c.

The Ashby-de-la-Zouche Agricultural Association—which was the first of the kind established in the Midland Counties—held its 15th anniversary on Monday. The show of stock and vegetables took place on the land adjoining the ruins of the ancient castle, and was considerably larger than the display of last year.

"Repeal" is on the wane in the United States, if we are to believe the New York papers, which mention, among other indications, that a meeting has been lately held there of the Smith O'Brien Club, for the purpose of dissolving, and refunding the money, which had been collected, to the contributors.

The Duke of Richmond gave his annual entertainment to his principal tenants on the family estates in Scotland, at Gordon Castle, last week, on the occasion of the yearly exhibition in the neighbouring village for prizes of cattle bred by the different occupants of farms.

It is deserving of remark that at all the great autumnal flower shows this season there have been no plants so greatly and universally admired as the varieties of the truly beautiful Japanese lily (Lehum lancifolium), and which have been produced in the greatest perfection of growth.

A return moved for by Mr. Ricardo, M.P., shows that the quantities (in tons) of the articles, the produce of Europe, imported into England, amounted in 1847 to 2,429,244 tons, viz. 1,252,872 in British, and 1,176,372 in foreign ships; in 1846, to 1,815,722 tons, viz. 947,176 in British, and 868,548 in foreign ships; and in 1845, to 1,483,363 tons, viz. 731,934 in British, and 751,369 in foreign vessels.

The importation of Indian corn into Cork and other ports of Ireland from America, which had ceased last year, has recommenced, in anticipation of an extensive demand for that article; several cargoes having lately arrived from other ports or delivery. It is satisfactory to know that by this early importation provision is beginning to be made against excessive prices for food.

A pistol has recently been registered under the Act for the protection of articles of utility, which is so ingenious, by contrived, that it primes and caps itself by the most simple and unerring operation.

A Stockholm letter of the 8th states that the works for the formation of a railroad between Orebro and Hulst, the first undertaking of the kind in Sweden, were commenced on the 4th

In the evening of the 14th, at Bagnères de Bigorre (Hautes Pyrenées), a shock of earthquake so strong that it overturned the furniture of the houses was taken, and the glass of windows vibrated. The heat of the day was not excessively great, and rain fell the whole of the afternoon and the following day; the night between being perfectly calm.

The Admiralty are about to commence forthwith the erection of storehouses on Spike Island, off the south coast of Ireland. Lighters are ordered at Woolwich to convey the timber materials thither.

Mr. Doheny, who took a leading part in the insurrection in Ireland, has arrived at Paris. The Times.

The vacant Deanery of Carlisle has been given the Rev. Dr. Hinds, first Chaplain to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland.

THE ROYAL PROGRESS TO BALMORAL.

IN our Journal of last week we promised to complete our artistic illustration of her Majesty's Progress to Balmoral, with a few more sketches of the striking commemorations.

First is the elegant Arch raised at the Lodge, at the east gate of Inchmarlo: it was tastefully ornamented with shrubs and exotics. Last week, the reader will recollect, we engraved the Arch near the west gate of Inchmarlo Next is the pretty arch raised at the entrance to the village of Kincardine O'Neil, the sketch showing the village church in the distance The arch has two piers, resembling watch-towers, bearing two flags, between which is suspended upon a wreath a Royal crown. Several of the villagers decorated their houses; and the worthy Postmistress, who has been in the service of the

ARCH AT INCHMARLO.

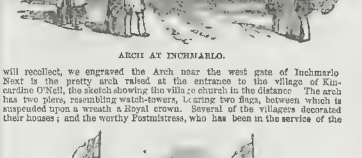
ARCH AT KINCARDINE.

Crown fifty-two years, displayed a magnificent flag in honour of her Royal mistress.

At Banchory the loyal display was universal. We engrave three of the scenes, and quote the details more fully than last week

At the entrance to the village was erected a triumphal arch of gigantic dimensions, composed entirely of heather, and surmounted by a figure of the British crown, six feet high by three feet wide, formed of dahlias and other flowers. The centre arch and the two side ones were wreathed round with heather sprigs of flowers, and surmounted with two large banners, bearing the following inscriptions:—"Welcome Victoria" on the banks of the Dee;" and "Welcome Victoria and Albert to your House of the Heath." On the arch were planted Union Jacks, which, together with the crown, the banners, and the flowers, had a beautiful appearance.



ARCH AT BANCHORY.

Next is the Burnett's Arms Inn, where the Royal party changed horses. In front were erected spacious hustings for the accommodation of the gentry of the county. These were carpeted and covered with crimson cloth, and flanked at the corners with Union Jacks. On the porch in front of the Inn, which was crowded with ladies, stood a flagstaff 32 feet high, bearing a large Union Jack with pennant. The front of the Inn was beautifully decorated with ensigns of various nations, and immediately opposite, two Union Jacks and a large flag were suspended from the Stamp Office, with the inscription, "Long may our Queen sway the sceptre over a free and loyal people."

The arrival of the Royal party, and the presentation of the address to her Majesty, were detailed last week.

The next Illustration shows the arch erected by Mr. Skene, farmer, of Kinneskie, at the distance of 100 yards above the village: it consisted entirely of oats, barley, and wheat, so neatly arranged that the ears only were visible, and bore the motto, "Peace and Plenty."

Above the spoils of "forest green and garden fair" were put to a pretty purpose, under the tasteful superintendence of the Lady of the district. A broad massive arch stood opposite the Hotel: the inside bore "Victoria" and "Albert," with a regal crown in the centre, and beneath it the Gordon badge and motto, "Ce n'est mon vouloir." ("For ever!") composed of leaves sewed on a white ground, the work of the fair hands of Lady Aboyne herself. The Inn was also handsomely ornamented, and small galleries were erected for spectators, one of them by the venerable Marquis of Huntley.

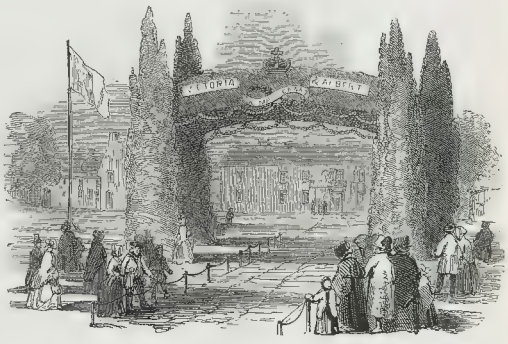
The remaining Illustration shows the preparations for the Royal reception at Ballater, described en route last week. Here we have a triple arch, surmounted with flags, and a flagstaff on lofty Craigdarroch, which unfolded its welcome the instant the Royal cortège came in sight

We find some interesting sketches of Ballater and its neighbourhood from the graphic pen of William Howitt:—

"The vale of the Dee, or the Deeside, as they call it, all the way from Aber-

SKETCHES ON THE DEESIDE.

ARCH AT THE ENTRANCE TO BANCHORY.



ARCH AT CHAULSTON OF ABOYNE.

deen, a distance of forty miles, is fine; beautifully wooded by places, the hills as you advance become more and more striking. You pass the Castle of Drum, one of the oldest inhabited castles in Scotland; a seat of the Burnetts, of Bishop Burnett's line, finely situated on the right hand on rising ground, and various other interesting places. But it is as you approach Ballater that the scenery becomes most striking. It becomes truly Highland. The hills get lofty, bare grey, and freckled. They are, in fact, bare and tempest-tinted granite, having an air of majestic desolation. Some rise peaked and splintered, and their sides covered with débris, yet, as it were, bristled with black and sharp-looking pine forests. Some of the hills run along the side of the Dee, covered with these woods exactly as the steep Black Forest hills in the neighbourhood of Wildbad.

PRESENTATION OF THE ADDRESS AT THE INN, AT BANCHORY.

"As you approach Ballater, the valley expands. You see a breadth of green meadow, and a neat white village stretching across it, and its church lifting its spire into the clear air, while the mountains sweep round it in a fine chain of peaked hills, and close it in. All up Deeside there is well cultivated land, but, with the exception of this meadow, on which Ballater stands, all is now hill, dark forest, and moorland; while below, on the banks of the winding and rapid Dee, birch woods present themselves in that peculiar beauty so truly belonging to the Highlands. On your right first looks out the dark height of Culbleen, mentioned by Byron in his earlier poems:—

> When I see some dark hill point its crest to the sky,
> I think of the rocks that o'ershadow Culbleen.

Then, 'Morven streaked with snow;' and Lochnagar lifts himself long and lofty over the lower chains that close the valley beyond Ballater.

"Ballater, though a neat village now, did not exist when Byron was here. There were a few cottages for the use of visitors, near the other side of the present bridge; but those who came to drink the waters generally located themselves in farmhouses as near as they could to 'the wells,' which are two miles down the opposite bank of the Dee. Mrs. Byron chose her summer residence in one of the most thoroughly secluded and out-of-the-world spots which it was possible to find, perhaps, in the whole island. It lies four miles below Ballater, on the same side of the river as the spring—that is, two miles beyond 'the wells,' as they call them—some chalybeate springs which issue from the hills, and which now bring many people to Ballater in the summer

"And here was the place to which Byron's mother used to retire, in the summer months, from Aberdeen, with her boy. The valley is divided by a wild brook hidden among green alders, and its slopes are hung with the native birch and a few oaks. At the upper end stands a farm-house, but this is new, and the farmer, to show me the house in which Byron lived, took me into his farm-yard. The house Mrs. Byron inhabited is now a barn, or sort of hay-loft rather, in his yard. It was exactly one of the one-storied long Highland huts, and is now included in the quadrangle of his farm-yard, but the bed on which Byron used to lie is still there. It is one of the deal cupboard sort of beds that are common in Highland huts. There it stands amongst his straw. He says many people come to see the place, and several have tried to buy the bed from him, but that he should think it quite a shame to sell it. Imagine, then, Mrs. Byron living here upwards of forty years ago, and Byron a boy of about ten years of age; soon after which he left for England, to be converted out of a poor Highland boy into a Lord."

THE VILLAGE OF BALLATER.

HER MAJESTY AT BALMORAL.

Our report of last week extended to Monday evening.

TUESDAY.

We quote the following from the Balmoral Correspondent, a very interesting record of the Royal visit, interspersed with some very clever historical and topographical descriptions of the Highland localities.

ONE OF SIR ALEXANDER DUFF'S DEER-STALKERS.

This was a most pleasant autumn day; there was a considerable breeze in the morning, but in the after part of the day it became calm and beautiful, and her Majesty and the Royal family, after the last few cold days, eagerly took advantage of the change. The Queen, accompanied by Lady Canning and Prince Albert, with Sir G. Grey and Sir James Clark, rode out about eleven o'clock on horseback. They passed Crathie Bridge. Prince Albert passed over the hills to have a few hours, shooting on the grounds of Sir Benjamin Hall, who has leased the shootings of Gairn Shiel. Sir Benjamin's shooting-lodge is situated on the banks of the Gairn, a considerable stream that takes its rise near the source of the Don, at the south side of Ben-Avon, and falls into the Dee above Ballater. The Gairn is an excellent trouting stream, and the neighbouring moors well stocked with game; but the scenery on its banks is bleak and mountainous, with little wood to give it warmth, beauty, or variety. Her Majesty and Lady Canning continued their ride towards Invergeldie, and returned a little past one Her Majesty, accompanied by her ladies, again rode out a considerable way along the south side of the river and about four o'clock, the whole Royal family with the ladies in waiting, enjoyed a drive of four miles up the river side. The scenery is truly magnificent.

SKETCHES ON THE DEESIDE.

THE LOCHNAGAR DISTILLERY.

THE PARISH CHURCH OF CRATHIE.

After passing Craig-nordie, at the base of which is Cairn-na-guiheen, from which the Farquharsons of Invercauld, in the days of old, derived their slogan, there opens up a vista of mountain and crest on one hand, through the narrow pass between the hills of Craig Spannie and Craig Spinie, the latter meaning "the hill of the nose," from its a.leged, though somewhat fanciful resemblance to that feature; and, on the other, after passing the handsome bestidry of Invergeldie, in the fine valley between Craig Spinie and Balloch-bowie.

After their return, the Royal party honoured the Lochnagar Distillery with a visit. Mr. Begg, the proprietor, met the Royal visitors on their approach, and conducted them through the works. The distillery was fortunately in full work, and it was the last day on which it can be in operation till the new crop be ready.

BALMORAL CASTLE, FROM THE ROAD ON THE NORTH SIDE OF THE DEE.—SKETCHED BY PERMISSION OF HER MAJESTY.

Mr. Begg and his brewer explained each department, from the drying and mashing of the malt to the time the liquor comes out in its perfection at the worm end. The Prince tasted the result of the operation which he had witnessed, and her Majesty condescendingly put it to her lips. It is needless to say that an honour of so signal a nature was celebrated with due festivity by all connected with the distillery, which, in all probability, will win a popularity in the country to which the prestige of its name, derived from the "vallies of dark Lochnagar," will in some degree add, if we are at all judges of the native spirit its produce is so well calculated to support.

WEDNESDAY.

This was another delightful day, of which her Majesty and the Royal Family took advantage to enjoy the beautiful country. The Queen, early in the morning, ascended the Craig-an-Gowan by the foot-path that leads from the Castle; and, with the Royal children and the Ladies in Waiting, drove out in the course of the day. Prince Albert was the whole day on the hills. In the evening a ball was given to the servants at the Castle.

CORRIEMULZIE COTTAGE.

MAR LODGE, THE SHOOTING-BOX OF THE DUKE OF LEEDS.

THURSDAY.

The "Gathering of Braemar" was the great event of this day; and a fine scene it proved of mustering clans and olden Celtic sports.

The Queen and Prince Albert honoured the gathering with their presence, and took a lively interest in the novelties of the occasion; and such was the kindness and condescension of the Royal visitors, that their loyal subjects in the "heart of the highlands" will never forget their visit to Braemar. Before we describe the festival, we quote the following outline of the majestic scenery of the locality from the Times report:—

Braemar lies in the heart of the Grampian range, at the southern extremity of Aberdeenshire. Invercauld, the seat of the demonstration, stands on a rising ground, which forms the southern terrace of Craig Helk, a finely wooded mountain, that rises about 3000 feet above the level of the sea. In the foreground, in front of the mansion of Invercauld, the eastern extremity of the haughs of Castleton forms a spacious lawn, skirted by the Dee, from which rises up in rugged grandeur a noble range of richly clad hills. To the north-east a large mass of mountain scenery appears in a bold chain, topped by the peaks of Lochnagar. Below there is the opening of Balloch Buy, an immense fir-wood. Stretching round to the south are the wild cliffs and precipitous sides of another range, and westward, about a mile and a half distant, stand the Castle and town of Braemar, backed by the Cairngorum Mountains, the vale being shut in by vast screens of granite hills folding before each other, Benaros towering above the group with its summit covered with almost perpetual snow. The Castle of Braemar, which stands in the midst of the glen, is a picturesque object from Invercauld House. It is said to have been built by Malcolm Canmore for a hunting seat, but is now held on lease and garrisoned by the British Crown. This is the scene of the "Stag Hunt" in "Waverley," where the standard of rebellion was raised in 1715.

In the order of proceedings for the gathering of to-day, the clans of Farquharson, Athol, and Fife were to marshal on the Greenbank terrace to receive the Queen. They reached the ground with music and banners about noon, commanded by Mr. Farquharson, and dressed in the dark green tartan of the clan, with red hose and philabeg. The Fife can were next in place, under General the Hon. Sir A. Duff, of Delgaty, and formed in line with the Farquharsons on the north side of the lawn. The Duke of Leeds and his well-appointed company; but the "men of Athol," under his Grace the Duke of Athol, were the most imposing troop, and formed two sides of a square. This body was organised in 1845, when her Majesty raised Half-Athol, and are honoured with the distinction of being the Queen's body guard of Highlanders in Scotland. Their approach from Mar-lodge, where they had met on the previous night on their way from the Highlands of Perthshire, was a fine sight, arrayed as they were, in the Athol tartan, armed with swords, dirks, and Lochaber axes, with new banners, and headed by the Duke in person. The men of Athol stand six feet in height, and include a grenadier company which the regular army falls to match

On the Terrace, besides the Dukes of Athol and Leeds, the Marquis of Huntly, the Earl of Aboyne, and General Duff, were a large number of noblemen and gentlemen from the surrounding country, and not a few from England, who are now in sporting quarters in the highlands at Braemar; the Duchess of Leeds, the Countess of Aboyne, and other ladies of rank, were also on the Terrace to welcome the Royal Family.

At a quarter to three o'clock, the Queen and Prince Albert, with the Princess Royal, the Prince of Wales, and Prince Alfred, arrived in the Royal carriage, and were received, in front of the mansion, by Mr. and Mrs. Farquharson, of Invercauld. On alighting from the carriage, the Queen was presented with a bouquet of wild flowers, interspersed with garden roses, by Master Alexander Ricardo; and the Princess Royal, the Prince of Wales, and Prince Alfred were each presented with an elegant bouquet of flowers, by Master Alexander Ricardo, Master Francis Dundas Farquharson, Master George Murray Farquharson, and Master John Athol Farquharson. These youths were clad in the Highland garb, and the Royal children were dressed in the Stuart tartan. Her Majesty and the Prince being seated on a rustic chair, set on a carpeting of the Farquharson tartan, General Sir A. Duff gave orders for the games to commence; and then followed such exhibitions of agility and Celtic endurance as could only be appreciated by being seen. In half an hour there was such a display of sword-climbing, hammer-throwing, and caber-tossing as only the highlanders of Braemar can produce, and none but men in the dress of Athol and Breadalbane can perform. One herculean Highlander threw a sixteen pound hammer ninety feet seven inches; and five stalwart Celts ran up Craig Clunie for a distance of half a mile in from seven to nine minutes. The foremost runner in the race climbed the mountain and crags as nimbly as a deer, and accomplished the feat so cleverly that her Majesty, who had viewed the race through a telescope, left £5 as a reward for his agility

When the games were over the Royal family retired to the ball-room, where a number of chosen dancers were honoured to dance a variety of Highland reels and strathspeys before the Queen, this concession to the Celtic taste being a special honour of being present: The Duke of Athol, the Duke and Duchess of Leeds and Miss Lane Fox, the Earl and Countess of Aboyne, General the Hon. Sir C. A. and Lady Duff and the Misses Duff, the Marquis of Huntly, Lord Adolphus Fitzclarence, Lord Brooke, Lord Cranleigh, Lord James Murray, the Countess of Gainsborough, Viscountess Canning, Sir George Grey, M.P., Sir James Clark, the Hon. Captain Alexander Benjamin Hall, M.P., Lieutenant-Colonel Mercer Henderson, Colonel Challoner, Mr. Mark Wilks, Colonel Wallace and Miss Wharton Duff, Mr. and Mrs. Farquharson, Miss Farquharson, and their six sons, Mr. Farquharson of Broughdearg, Captain Lewis Ricardo, M.P., and Mrs. Ricardo, George Duff, M.P., the Hon. James Dutton, John Murray Drummond, Master of Strathallan, the Hon. Captain Devereux, Mr. P. Small Kelly, Mr. and Lady Ann Gordon, Mr. Carnegie, of Pitarrow, Mr. William Farquhar, Mr. Archibald Clive and Mrs. Clive, Mr. W. C. Campbell, Miss Burnett, Captain and Mrs. Ross, of Rossie, Mr. Mark Milbanke, Mr. Leonard Edwards, &c. The Marquis of Huntly's piper stood on the top of the house, and kept 800 persons. It was divided into two compartments—the one being appropriated for the ball the other supper, and the other for the use of the performers with their dancers.

Along the sides of the marquee there were two tiers of raised seats, dressed with heather and wild flowers; the west end was arranged into five sides of an octagon, with an elevated platform and rich crimson velvet canopy. A splendidly covered sofa in rich damask was set for her Majesty and Prince Albert, and placed on a carpeting of clan-tartan. The marquee was supported in the centre by five pillars, dressed with flowers and evergreens, topped with deers' heads and antlers. The eastern division was formed of wicker-work and evergreens, interspersed with variegated lamps and ornamented with deers' heads and antlers. The dancers were all in the Highland garb, and went through the dances with great spirit. The sword dance, which is performed in the angles of crossed swords, was a great feat. When the exercises were over, the dancers selected each the best in his clan, and her Majesty presented the prizes to the men in the most affable and condescending manner. Before leaving the marquee, Mr Farquharson submitted to her Majesty and Prince Albert some very fine specimens of the topaz and other precious stones found in the mountains of Braemar.

At four o'clock her Majesty and Prince Albert, with the Royal children and suite, left the mansion of Invercauld, at Balmoral, and on passing the lawn were again received by a loyal burst of acclamation.

When the Royal party left, the dinner was laid in the dining room of the marquee. The chiefs were seated at the tables. The Queen, as the President, was honoured with a seat at the principal table. Here it was profusely decorated with evergreens, deers' heads, and antlers, and when a dram of Bich was drawn for the occasion, a flourish of trumpets announced the toasts were given, the effect was exceedingly fine, and when her Majesty's health was drunk with Highland honours, each clansman having a foot on the claret and the other on the table, while the President gave the "Queen, Heads, Hearts, and Hands," the English "Hip, hip, hurrah," and the boisterous loyalty of the Highlanders found expression in long-continued cheers, the true character of Highland devot on was realised. At 10 o'clock the watch-word of the Highlands was given, and the clans rose to begin the dance, which they continued to a late hour.

FRIDAY.

The morning her Majesty and Prince Albert walked to the Forest. Sir George Grey had arrived, and the Royal dinner party in the evening included Lord Adolphus Fitzclarence, Sir Benjamin Hall, and Colonel Challoner.

SATURDAY.

This morning, immediately after breakfast, her Majesty and Prince Albert left Balmoral to make an excursion to Lochnagar: the members of the party, besides the Queen, Prince Albert, the Princess Royal, the Countess of Gainsborough, Viscount Canning, Sir Benjamin Hall, and Mr. G. E. Anson. "This mountain (says the Daily News report), which forms a conspicuous object in the rough, hilly scenery that surrounds Balmoral Castle, owes much to Byron's poem, in which he attributes the pleasure he experienced in gazing upon its cliffs to Parnassus, but it is known to few more than to those fond and deep-felt associations of his boyhood and Lochnagar. Its intrinsic claim on those who admire the grandeur of nature is great, without the halo of romance by which it is invested by the noble poet; more especially because it is the highest of the more easterly Grampians, not for the extent and magnificence of the prospect that is obtained from its top, but for the solemn sublimity of the scene on its eleven summits. Her Majesty and Royal party chose a rather circuitous, although the most pleasant route, up the valley of the Garwald. A new carriage-way has been made for several miles up the glen for a considerable distance, and the Queen and Royal party saw two beautiful waterfalls, on something a small scale, but yet attractive.

All the way through the wood the scene is very attractive, till gradually the trees on the rocks become fewer and less vigorous, and the wild bleak hollow between Lochnagar and Balloch-bowie is opened to the view. In ascending the mountains the Highland ponies, with the gear for a considerable distance, and the Queen and Royal party saw two beautiful waterfalls, on something a small scale, but yet attractive.

All the way through the wood the scene is very attractive, till gradually the trees on the rocks become fewer and less vigorous, and the wild bleak hollow between Lochnagar and Balloch-bowie is opened to the view. In ascending the mountains the Highland ponies, with the gear for a considerable distance, and the Queen and Royal party were visible to each other at a distance of a few feet, and her Majesty and attendants were speedily drenched with rain. It is computed that the precipitous steep rises 1300 feet from the loch, which is itself 2500 feet above the level of the sea. Prince Albert shot two fine ptarmigan on the hills during the journey to the mountain. It was 3 o'clock when the Queen and party returned to the Castle."

In the evening, the Duke and Duchess of Leeds and Miss Lane Fox, Sir Alexander and Lady Duff, and Mr. and Mrs. Farquharson, of Invercauld, joined the Royal dinner party.

SUNDAY.

Her Majesty and Prince Albert attended divine service this morning, at the parish church at Crathie. The Queen was attended by the Countess of Gainsborough, Viscountess Canning, Lord John Russell, and the rest of the Royal suite.

MONDAY.

Her Majesty and the Prince went this morning to Invercauld Forest. In the afternoon, the Queen, accompanied by the Countess of Gainsborough, drove to Abergeldie.

TUESDAY

Her Majesty, attended by Viscountess Canning, walked out this morning into the Forest, sketching. The Princess Royal, the Prince of Wales, and Prince Alfred, attended by Miss Hilyard, also walked out. Lord John Russell arrived at Balmoral on Friday evening, having come from Perth across the hills. It was expected that her Majesty would leave Balmoral on Monday next, the 25th, and pay a visit to Lord Aberdeen at Haddo House, before embarking.

THE ILLUSTRATIONS.

FIRST is a capital likeness of one of Sir Alexander Duff's Deer-Stalkers; he is a characteristic specimen of his class.

The parish church of Crathie and Braemar is built on a foundation hewn out of a rocky terrace, which juts out at the basement of Craig Loun, on the north side of the new Deeside road. The building is oblong in plan, a plain structure, with semi-Gothic windows and low open belfry. The interior is capable of seating 600 persons, and is fitted up in the simplest style. On the south side, on the dead wall between the windows, the pulpit, with its lectern, or clerk's desk, is placed. The ground-floor is occupied with square pews; and the gallery is composed of five sides of an octagon, softly painted in blue ground panels, with dim white mouldings. The Presbyterian population connected with the Established Church of the united parishes of Crathie and Braemar worship here, each parish having its own sittings. The second compartment from the wall in the gallery to the left of the pulpit is covered with crimson cloth, and was occupied by her Majesty, Prince Albert, and the Court, on Sunday last, when the Queen attended. When the wooden ladle was sent round, it received a handsome contribution from the Royal pew. The Queen and Prince Albert, on leaving the church, walked nearly half a mile to the chain bridge, where the Royal carriage was in waiting. The church commands a very fine view of the noble valley of the Dee. Nearly opposite, only a little to the westward, the Dee makes a noble sweep round a fair and spacious

(Continued on page 184.)

CALENDAR OF THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, Sept. 24. Fourteenth Sunday after Trinity.
MONDAY, 25. The Sun rises at 5h. 52m. and sets at 5h. 52m.
TUESDAY, 26.—St. Cyprian. Old Holyrood.
WEDNESDAY, 27.—New Moon at 9h. 30m. A.M.
THURSDAY, 28.—The Moon, Mercury, and Venus are near together.
FRIDAY, 29.—Michaelmas Day.
SATURDAY, 30.—St. Jerome. Venus sets at 6h. 16m. P.M.; Mars sets at 5h. 50m. P.M.; Jupiter rises at 1h. 9m. A.M.; Saturn rises at 3h. 39m. P.M.

TIMES OF HIGH WATER AT LONDON BRIDGE,

FOR THE WEEK ENDING SEPT 30.

Sunday	Monday	Tuesday	Wednesday	Thursday	Friday	Saturday
M. h m	A. h m	M. h m	A. h m	M. h m	A. h m	M. h m	A. h m	M. h m	A. h m	M. h m	A. h m	M. h m	A. h m
24 12 3	0 30	25 1	40	26 1 55	2 15	27 2 30	2 50	28 3	3 20	29 3 30	3 50	30 4	4 20

* During Sunday there will be but one high tide only, which takes place at five minutes after noon

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"G. M.," Guernsey, is thanked for his amusing note about "The Nonce," though we have not room to print it.

"Nimrod."—Received properly.

"G. A. R."—Black is the absence of all colour; whereas, when all the prismatic colours are returned or reflected, the object is white.

"A. P. P." Stamford.—The terms are by no means uncommon in the midland counties to this way.

"A. Q."—The information is correct.

"A Constant Reader." Walsall.—The Norwich Union Reversionary Interest Society.

"Neo Bridge-street, Blackfriars.

"G. B.," Cheltenham.—We have not room.

"T. A. D." Cavendish.—Declined.

"Mary."—The arrest would be illegal.

"J. T. S." Greenwich.—Apply to Mr. Webster, medallist, 17, Great Russell-street, Covent-garden.

"A Constant Reader." Raffaelle is said in his youth to have painted, or to have given designs for painting, in arabesque on glazed earthenware; and such works are commonly known by the name of "Raffaelle ware."

"S." Enfield.—Ineligible.

"W. W.," Hartlepool.—Australasia consists of the very large island of New Holland, called also Australia, and a vast number of smaller islands, situate partly to the south of Asia, and partly in the Pacific Ocean, between Asia and America.

"A Braintree Subscriber."—It is not known.

"M. S.," Ansvell.—We do not know of any institution specially for the maintenance of aged servants. Almshouses can scarcely be better appropriated than for such a purpose.

"An Admirer of Ruins."—We shall be glad to receive a Sketch of the present state of the ruins in Sussex, with a few particulars.

"S. D." had better consult a solicitor.

"An Invalid" may hear of the book by applying to a respectable bookseller.

"A Subscriber," Huddersfield.—We cannot spare room

"W. B." Birmingham, should apply to a Mexico-bond Company.

"A Constant Reader," Liverpool.—See the "Government Colonisation Circular," to be had in your town.

"B. A." See Lardner's "Naturalist's Library." There are a few works published on Druidical antiquities discovered in England, for example, Duke's "Druidical Temples of Wilts," which contains researches into the history of the priests and worshippers.

"D. H." Carters, the Royal Mews, Pimlico.

"A Subscriber from the First."—By the death of an only brother, without issue, his sister becomes heiress, and confers on her husband the right to bear her arms on an escutcheon of pretence. It is unnatural how long after marriage the death of the brother occurs. Whenever it does take place, the right to the escutcheon of pretence arises. The sister's children will be entitled to quarter their mother's arms, at that lady's

"H. B. Q." Dublin, is mistaken.

"H. H." Garnet is not the least valuable of gems; though the precious garnet is not properly garnet. Common garnets sometimes possess all the forms of the precious garnet; but green and brown are the usual colours.

"G. S." Dropping German silver will produce a white deposit.

"An Admirer" We had not room for the "Peckham" ceremony.

"Lover" Apply to Law and Co., booksellers, Fleet-street

"A Subscriber for Twenty Years" Heath, Neale, and Co., the English "Hiphip, hurrah," and the boisterous loyalty of the Highlanders found expression in long-continued cheers, the true character of Highland devot on was realised. At 10 o'clock the watch-word of the Highlands was given, and the clans rose to begin the dance, which they continued to a late hour.

"J. M'C." Liverpool We cannot decide without seeing the drawing, or a sketch from it.

"E. S." Edinburgh, is thanked; but the place he has sketched has no immediate interest, like the Scottish localities engraved in the present Number

"Delta."—The only legal separation of man and wife is by Act of Parliament.

"Beta," Cambridge.—We are not "behind the curtain."

"Gympus."—Waller's "Manly Exercises"

"Senex." We had rather not give the recommendation.

"Miss W." Pimlico, is thanked

"C. G. S." Lavenham.—The word reels is often, in England, understood to imply a Mulatto; but the term means a native of a West Indian Colony, whether white, black, or of the coloured population.

"J. M." Waterford.—Declined.

"J. O. H." Hayle.—Apply at the Admiralty.

"L. G. H. R." Chesapeake.—Apply to Orr and Co., publishers, Strand.

"M. B. B." Burdett.—We have not room.

"* Benevolence."—Messrs Smith, Duke-street, Lincoln's Inn Fields.

"H. J." Llangollen.—Declined.

"H. C." Ely.

"Pharm." Dr. James Johnson's Treatise on the Liver.

"F. H." Conway, is thanked, though we had not space to print his contribution.

"Lennox."—A surgeon has precedence.

"H. H" There has been no alteration in the tax on armorial bearings. The use of a single crest would render the bearer liable. Our correspondent suggests that the repeal of the tax would be the means of giving employment to hundreds of embroiderers and engravers.

"C." Whitaker.—Apply again; your statement

"J. B. C." New Brunswick.—"B." N. America. There was no error in the calculated time of occultation of Aldebaran on August 22nd. This occultation was visible at all places between the parallels of latitude of 60° N. and 1° S.; beyond these parallels no occultation took place. The latitude of New Brunswick is 45° nearly, and the nearest approach of the moon and star at this place was 4° nearly, the moon being south of the star by the amount.

"S. B. F." Everton, Liverpool.—See the "Illustrated London Almanack" for 1846 and 1847, in September, for particulars relative to the Harvest Moon.

BOOKS, &c., RECEIVED DURING THE WEEK.

Deshon on Cold and Consumption.—On Byrne's Mathematical Papers.——Pictures from the North.——Clairvoyance Explained.
Music.—Songs of my Native Land.

ERRATUM.—In the article on "Secular Education," in our Journal of last week, page 162, last line but two, for "considerable" read "insuperable."

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 23, 1848.

PARISIAN politics are undergoing once again one of those extraordinary transmutations which alternately bewilder and alarm, but always interest and affect, Europe. General Cavaignac has proved himself by word and deed too obstinate and sincere a Republican to be altogether to the mind of the Orleanists and Legitimists, who form the majority in the National Assembly. The reaction that months ago set in against the Revolution itself, threatened some days ago to overwhelm the man who defended society from the Red Republic; and General Cavaignac stood in a slippery position between three rival parties—the Reaction, the Moderate Republic, and the Mountain. The first-mentioned distrusted him for his republicanism, which is in him a life-long conviction; and the last-mentioned had a feud with him not easily to be pacified, for the successes of June, which seemed in their eyes to have been directed against the Republic itself. His chief if not sole reliance was, therefore, on the moderate Republicans. Aware of this, he seems to have looked for support from the members of the Mountain, and to have planned, after the example of M. Ledru-Rollin, a general agitation of the provinces in favour of the Republic, by means of emissaries from the National Assembly. The mere mention of such a project led to a violent scene, and nearly caused the resignation of office by General Cavaignac and the whole of his Ministry. Owing, however, to the prudence and presence of mind of M. Marrast, and to a desire on the part of the majority to avoid a premature quarrel with a man to whom France is so greatly indebted, the matter was hushed up, on the understanding that the project should not be persisted in.

Several elections for Paris and for the departments have since taken place, the results of which are not a little curious and perplexing, but which may probably tend to strengthen General Cavaignac in the Assembly. For Paris, the chief favourite is Prince Louis Napoleon; he has been returned at the head of the poll by a large majority, and has also been returned for five, or, as some account say, for even six or seven of the departments. In fact, the elections prove incontestably that the French people are, to a large extent, governed by traditions of the military glories of Napoleon. This is a sad spectacle, and one full of danger for France and for Europe. It shows a deplorable absence of that commercial and industrial spirit which can alone, in these times, be of permanent advantage to a great nation. If France could realise the dream of a new Napoleon, she would be an Ishmael in Europe, and the hand of all nations would of necessity be raised against her. Of this, however, there is little fear, as far as the claims of Prince Louis are concerned.

Military, like all other genius, is a personal gift; and the sons of Napoleon's brothers, though to some extent the inheritors of the fame that attaches to the name of Buonaparte, are not necessarily the inheritors of any portion of that transcendant ability and astounding fortune by which the fame was acquired. Nevertheless, the popularity of a Buonaparte in France, simply because he is a Buonaparte, is, to our thinking, of most unhappy augury. Next to Louis Napoleon, the Communists seem to be the especial favourites of the majority. M. Raspail, now in the prison of Vincennes, for participation with Blanqui, Barbès, Albert, and others, in the attempted invasion of the Assembly in May last, has been elected; whilst M. Cabet and M. Thoré, also Communists of well-known zeal and talent, have had high votes in the Parisian list. M. Raspail has been returned for Lyons. Many of the Buonapartists in Paris supported the Communists, so that the elections show a tendency towards a hybrid Republic—Red in colour, Communist in principle, and with a Buonaparte as its President!

It is to be hoped that the National Assembly will take warning by these facts. Orleanism and Henriquinquism, to which large sections of that body are inclined, can neither of them be restored without a civil war; whilst Buonapartism in alliance with Communism, could not be established without a similar struggle. In this latter case the struggle would be peculiarly envenomed, and peculiarly useless; for no such result could by any chance be a permanent one. There is no safety for France but in a Moderate Republic: and if the Assembly would calmly look upon its own position, and that of the country, they would resolve to give the Republic a fair trial, as the only possible solution of the difficulties and the exigencies of the time. If, however, after voting the Constitution, they should throw the election of President upon the country, instead of taking it upon themselves to nominate the man who has saved France from anarchy, they will but pave the way for the temporary triumph of Buonapartism and Communism.

Such a triumph would cost the country much; and all the work of the last four months would have to be done again. There are already symptoms that some of the cooler heads of the old dynastic Opposition and the practised statesmen of that era have awakened to the peril, and that an attempt will be made to unite all parties in support of General Cavaignac, as the first President of the Republic. It is earnestly to be hoped that these symptoms are not delusive; and that power will be confided to the firm hand, the clear head, and the honest heart of General Cavaignac, whom events have rendered the most prominent, as well as the most valuable, man in France.

PUBLIC attention has been very painfully excited to the horrible system of infant poisonings which the inquiries of our assize courts have recently disclosed. The Thuggism of Hindostan is not more atrociously systematic than the murders committed by English parents upon their offspring, for the love of gain. We have not heart to dwell upon the degrading details of the disclosures that have been made; and we would fain believe that the practice is not so widely spread as has been represented. The idea that even one woman, in this age of civilisation and refinement, should be wicked enough to compass the death of her child for the sake of pecuniary profit, is horrible enough; but that the success of one scheme of the kind should have led to its imitation in hundreds or thousands of instances, and that child-poisoning should have been reduced into a business, almost amounts to a stain upon the national character. It appears from the facts which have been elicited, that both in the rural and in the manufacturing districts, parents have entered the names of their children in three, four, and in one case in nineteen burial clubs, and that the sum derivable from one scheme of the kind would

POSTSCRIPT.

INSURRECTION AT FRANKFORT.

Intelligence has been received of very serious riots at Frankfort, on the 18th inst., with great loss of life. The mob are stated to have succeeded in dispersing the Assembly—and Prussian and Austrian troops have mastered the mob. An angry sitting, at which mutual recriminations within doors were frequently interrupted by the tumult of a frenzied populace without, ended in an early and enforced adjournment; and then followed barricades, a sanguinary conflict, with immense loss of life, and the proclamation of a state of siege. The military (mainly Prussians and Austrians) everywhere behaved well, and were everywhere victorious. The Government is now in the hands of Schmerling, as Provisional Minister for the War, Foreign, and Home Departments. The account states:—"The firing of musketry and artillery continued from seven, with little intermission, till half-past eight o'clock. An immense number of the insurgents have fallen, nor has the slaughter on the side of the military been inconsiderable. It has been a fearful crisis. The brave Prince Lichnowsky has been barbarously murdered. He was riding in the environs of the town, when some vile assassin fired at him, and wounded him in the arm. He took refuge in a cellar, whither he was pursued and massacred. Such is the universally confirmed report."

SEPT. 19, 5 P.M.

The insurrection has been suppressed. The Assembly has passed a vote of confidence on Ministers. Martial law has been proclaimed. There have been disturbances in Coblentz.

DEATH OF LORD GEORGE BENTINCK.

NOTTINGHAM, Friday, 9.45 A.M.

A messenger from Welbeck Abbey has just arrived, announcing the death of Lord G. Bentinck. His Lordship left the Abbey on foot, and unattended, at 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon, for Thoresby-park, the seat of the Earl of Manvers, where he had an engagement to dine. Not arriving, inquiries were made, and at 9 o'clock last night he was found on the footpath, quite dead, having evidently expired of apoplexy. Thoresby is about six miles from Welbeck.—Times.

DEATH OF THE EARL OF RATHDOWN.

We regret to announce the death of the Right Honourable the Earl of Rathdowne, which occurred on Wednesday, at his seat, Charleville, in the county of Wicklow. His Lordship suffered a protracted illness. The Earldom becomes extinct, but the Viscountcy passes to his brother, the Honourable Charles Monck. The late Earl has left several daughters, but no male issue.

THE CHARTIST TRIALS.

At the Central Criminal Court, yesterday (Friday), Wm. Dowling, aged 22, artist, Joseph Ritchie, aged 42, bricklayer; Alfred Able, aged 23, porter; Wm. Gurney, aged 42, shoemaker; John Shepherd, 34, tailor; James Snowball, 32, joiner; James Richardson, 30, joiner; George Greenslade, 36, shoemaker; Henry Small, 31, joiner; Edward Scudding, 28, brass turner; Wm. Burn, 44, shoemaker; Philip Martin, 45, newsman; Wm. Lacy, 38, bootmaker; Thomas Fay, 23, clicker; Thomas Jones, 30, shoemaker; Charles Young, 38, shoemaker; and Henry Coyne, 33, shoemaker; were placed in the dock, before Mr. Justice Erle and Mr. Justice Williams, charged with that they feloniously did compass, imagine, invent, devise, and intend to levy war against her Majesty, within that part of the United Kingdom called England, in order, by force and constraint, to compel her Majesty to change her measures and counsels, &c.

Application was made on behalf of the prisoners (with the exception of Dowling, Burn, and Greenslade) for the postponement of their trials, and, after considerable discussion, Monday next was the day fixed.

William Dowling was then put upon his trial.

THE COURT.—Her Majesty and Prince Albert, with the Prince of Wales, the Princess Royal, and Prince Alfred, will, according to present arrangements, arrive at Osborne, from Balmoral Castle, on Tuesday next. The Court will remain in the Isle of Wight for about a week, and then take its departure for Windsor Castle, where her Majesty is expected to arrive on the 4th of October, orders having been received for the Royal residence to be prepared for the reception of the Court by that period. About the middle of the ensuing month (November) her Majesty will arrive in town, remaining at Buckingham Palace until the few days of Christmas, when the Court will return to Windsor Castle for the holidays.

THE STATE APARTMENTS AT WINDSOR CASTLE.—Nearly the whole of the State rooms at the Royal residence at Windsor have been for some time past (in consequence of the extensive works connected with the heating of the interior of the castle by means of hot air) necessarily closed to the public. The whole of these works having now been completed, the following rooms will be thrown open to the public on Monday next:—The Queen's Audience Chamber, the Vandyck Room, the Queen's Drawing-room, the State Ante-Room, the Grand Staircase, the Grand Vestibule, the Waterloo Chamber, the Grand Reception-Room, St. George's Hall, the Queen's Guard-room, and the Queen's Presence Chamber. These apartments will, for the future, be shown to the public in the order above given, on Mondays, Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Fridays. Every facility is afforded to visitors to obtain tickets of admission to the same, by simply applying to Mr. Roberts, at the Winchester Tower. The Royal stables and riding-house are open every day, with the exception of Sundays, to the public.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

FRANCE.

Thursday, at mid-day, the result of the election was officially proclaimed at the Hôtel de Ville, with the usual ceremonies. It is as follows:—

Electors inscribed	.. ..	900,804
Electors voting	.. ..	240,657
MM. Louis Napoleon	.. ..	110,753
Fould	.. ..	7[illegible],041
Raspail	.. ..	[illegible],[illegible]2

The above are returned

The National Assembly is exceedingly agitated; but it has adopted, after a very uninteresting discussion, the 9th, 10th, 11th, and 12th articles of the Constitution.

SPAIN

The Madrid journals of the 16th inst. state that arrests continued to take place in that capital, in consequence, it was said, of the discovery of an extensive Carlist conspiracy.

Letters from Seville announce that the Carlist band, under the orders of the Cabrera Benemech, had been completely routed, in Lower Aragon, with the loss of ten killed, and a great number of prisoners. The chief of the band was amongst the latter.

ITALY.

The Corriere Mercantile of Genoa, of the 16th inst., mentions that Admiral Albini had retired from Venice, after obtaining a positive assurance that the neutrality of that city should be respected. He refused to listen to any other arrangement, until he was informed that an Anglo-French diplomatic note insisted on the maintenance of the status quô, and that the Consuls of Great Britain and France had joined in a protest against all further delay on the part of the Sardinian squadron to put to sea.

IRELAND.

THE Marquis and Marchioness of Lansdowne arrived in Dublin on Saturday afternoon, by the Banshee steamer, from Holyhead. The illustrious visitors immediately set out in a private carriage for the Marquis's seat in the vicinity of Bodyke, where they will remain the guests of Lord Clarendon while they sojourn in Dublin.

THE accounts from the disturbed districts in the south are various and vague; in some cases announcing certain disaffected localities as tranquil, and in others as presenting a "menacing aspect." The only thing that appears certain is, that the peasantry keep clear of the troops, and only show themselves in disorganized crowds to the constabulary.

REMOVAL OF THE STATE PRISONERS TO CLONMEL.—Monday evening, shortly before nine, a special train was in readiness at the King's Bridge station for the removal of the principal state prisoners, who are to be tried at the ensuing commission at Clonmel. At the hour above mentioned the police van arrived from Kilmainham, bearing Mr. William Smith O'Brien, M.P., Mr. Thomas Francis Meagher, Mr. Maurice Leyne, Mr. M'Manus, and Mr. O'Donoghue. There were also some other prisoners of lesser note, who were accused of having taken a part in the affair at Ballingarry. A portion of the constabulary, with fixed bayonets, sat in the carriage with them, and the rest were disposed in the other carriages composing the train, to which also three vans were attached, conveying a carriage and four horses, in which the prisoners are to be brought from Thurles, where they will leave the train, to Clonmel. At five minutes past nine o'clock the train started. There were very few persons collected at the station.

THE CHARTIST MURDER AT ASHTON.—The parties in custody on suspicion of being the murderers of James Bright, the policeman, on the 14th of August last, were, after several remands, brought up for examination on Monday last, at the Town Hall, Ashton under-Lyne. It will be remembered that a mob surrounded the poor fellow when on duty, and pressed him with their pikes. A poor batter, named Warren, who was out in the street looking for his children, tried to save the deceased, and received a thrust right through his hand in the attempt, and the ruffians then shot the policeman dead. The evidence was very lengthy, and turned chiefly upon the proof of identity. After a careful consideration of the case, the magistrates decided to commit, as principals in the murder of Bright, Radcliffe, Constantine, Kenworthy, and Walker; Winterbottom as accessory after the fact, Scott accessory before the fact, and Tasmaker and Sefton for unlawfully assembling and rioting, and on being drilled Lee and Edwards were remanded. It was stated that bail would be accepted for Tasmaker and Sefton, in two sureties of £50 each, and their own recognizances in £100.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

PUBLIC MEETINGS.

MERCHANT SEAMEN'S ORPHAN ASYLUM.—On Friday se'nnight, the 31st anniversary of this excellent charity was celebrated at the Asylum, Bow-road, in the elegantly laid-out grounds of which the subscribers and their friends were received; the Lord Mayor, who has become a life-governor, and Lady Mayoress honouring the festival with their presence. The design of the establishment is to afford suitable relief to the orphan children of merchant seamen, by providing them clothing, maintenance, and education on sound religious principles, and ultimately placing them, either at sea or on shore, as far as may be practicable, where those principles shall not be endangered, and the prospect of an honest livelihood secured. At present there are 160 orphans on the establishment; and with the view of providing accommodation for 200, a new dormitory, costing from £1,000 to £2,000, has already subscribed, has been opened. The children, whose appearance and behaviour elicited universal commendation, on the present occasion were plentifully regaled with tea and coffee, and were subsequently addressed by Captain Henry Nelson, the treasurer, and Mr. G. Somers Clark, the honourable secretary of the institution, as also by the Lord Mayor and others of its benefactors. The grounds were decorated with flags, and several refreshments besides tea were created. The excellent band of the Royal Marines was in attendance, and contributed much to the gratification of the company.

CITY COMMISSION OF SEWERS.—On Tuesday, a Court of Commissioners of Sewers for the City of London was held at the Guildhall, Mr. Deputy Cornelius Stevenson in the chair. Mr. Deputy Bridge called the attention of the Court to the present system of using deodorising fluids in the sewers. He believed, though these fluids caused a temporary cessation of the stench, yet that in a few weeks they caused a much more offensive smell than before existed. He recommended that a Committee should be appointed to consider the practicability of carrying off the offensive effluvium by means of shafts or chimneys.—Mr. Alderman Lawrence admitted that deodorising fluids deserved the censure which the worthy Deputy had passed upon them; but he was strongly opposed to the erection of chimneys throughout the City. No doubt the sewers must be well cleansed, but he should recommend a good system of flushing, such as had been adopted by the Metropolitan Commissioners. A rate of sixpence in the pound for the ensuing half-year was then agreed to; and the report of Messrs. Walker, Brunel, and Cubitt, on the state of the City sewers, having been ordered to be printed, the Court broke up.

SOUTH-EASTERN AND CONTINENTAL STEAM-PACKET COMPANY.—On Tuesday a meeting of proprietors in this company was held at the Bridge-house Hotel, T. L. Pritchard, Esq., deputy-chairman, in the chair. The proceedings having been opened by the secretary, the chairman proceeded to read the report, from which it appeared that the sum paid up on shares was £6,062, and the outlay on ships, machinery, &c. (exclusive of the reserve fund, £10,619 3s.), was £121,777 12s. 7d., being an excess over the receipts on shares of £12,5[illegible] 7s. 7d. The revenue account for the last six months is £16,739 19s. 7d., and the [illegible] ture, £7811 19s. 8d.; leaving an amount applicable for dividend of £2984 [illegible] 10d. Having stated these items, the report recommended a dividend of 5s. per share, leaving a balance in hand of £167 19s. 10d. In the concluding paragraph, the report, will not only restore but increase the traffic. The chairman, in moving the adoption of the report, called the attention of the meeting to the fact, that the revenue account of the last half-year, as compared with that of the immediate predecessor, exhibited a falling off of £3572 2s. 6d., owing solely to the unsettled state of the Continent. If that sum had been added to the revenue, they would have been enabled to offer to the proprietors a dividend of 9s. instead of 5s., while the South-Eastern Railway Company would have been benefitted in their traffic to the amount of £14,000. He thought they had a claim upon that company for having kept their boats running during the last six months, and it was the intention of the directors to bring that claim forward at an early day. Resolutions confirmatory of the report were then agreed to, and the meeting separated.

THE ROYAL GENERAL ANNUITY SOCIETY.—On Tuesday evening, a meeting of the Board of Directors of this Institution was held at their offices in Basinghall-street, City, for general business. The report congratulated the subscribers on the steady progress which was being made, there being at present ten male and nineteen female annuitants; the former receiving £2 5s., and the latter £1 10s. per month. These persons comprised decayed merchants, bankers, professional men, tradesmen, master manufacturers, and their widows; and single females, daughters of persons of such classes. The Directors also had the pleasure to state that the former rule, limiting the benefits of this important charity within twenty miles, was altered, leaving it open to applicants from all parts of the kingdom. The receipts for the past year were £1396 3s. 2d.; the expenditure left a balance of only £50.

THE NELSON COLUMN.—The Athenæum devotes a portion of its columns to "a further dip into the report of the Committee on Miscellaneous Expenditure and its appendix," from which some details on the manner in which the funds have been appropriated are extracted: In May, 1844, the subscriptions amounted to more than £21,000, and yet, at that very time, the Nelson Statue Committee memorialised for £12,000 more. The statue itself, including the cocked hat which Mr. Bailey put on it with regret, did not cost one-twentieth part of the original sum subscribed; and the question arises, "Where, then, has become of the money?" The estimate now published shows that Messrs. Grissell and Peto received £3065 for the granite steps for the column. Four lions, to be carved in granite, are to cost £3000, being £750 each. The amount paid for the four basi-relievi commemorative subjects in bronze. The Athenæum sums up its remarks by saying: "The cost, then, of the statue and of the art-decorations for the base will have been about £20,000; while no less a sum than £24,000 will have been lavished on the construction of a mere column! Out of a sum of £33,000, collected by private subscriptions and public grants, for a feature of embellishment to one of the finest sites in London, a Board called, £2000 has gone for the architect's commission—£3000 for the lions—£23,000 has been pocketed by the builders for constructing a column for the capital, of which Government furnished the stones—and £5000 has been expended on the sculpture. A monument of the kind, so richly endowed, should have been a proud expression of our national art. But the sons of genius are certainly not the spoilt children of the English Government."

THE NEW PARK AT BATTERSEA.—The new park at Batterses, which has been for some time in abeyance, will be commenced without delay, notices having been conveyed on Saturday to all the residents in the district, that three-quarters of the land in question, the intention being at once to remove the houses. The waterworks will remain. The park will extend the whole distance between Battersea bridge and Nine Elms, and from the bank of the river to the public road across Battersea fields, making the length of the park about two miles and a quarter, and its width a little more than a mile. A carriage drive forty feet in breadth will be formed along the bank of the Thames, and a suspension bridge will be thrown across the river to the spot where the Red House now stands. Towards the construction of this bridge the Marquis of Westminster has contributed the sum of £60,000. At the south-western boundary of the park an elegant church has been erected, and will be ready for consecration in the course of the present autumn.

ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION.—An excellent lecture has been delivered by Dr. Bachhoffner, at this well-known establishment, on the history and uses of Gutta Percha. This substance has become so important, entering as it does into so many of our manufactures, the accoutrements of our troops, and the ornamental portions of our furniture, that a knowledge of its character, its origin, and capabilities seems absolutely necessary. From the natural history, and the chemical analysis of this recently-discovered material, the learned lecturer proceeded to point out its advantages in an economic point of view, together with its various applications. The Gutta Percha Company have supplied the Doctor with a great variety of articles beautifully manufactured, which, placed around the lecture-table. The lecture embraces practically every style of solution and fabrication, experimentally shown. We would strongly recommend all interested in the bearings of discovery and of science upon the progression of civilisation, to visit the Royal Polytechnic Institution, for the purpose of hearing this admirable lecture by Dr. Bachhoffner.

FIRES AND LOSS OF LIFE.—On Saturday morning a fire broke out, shortly before three o'clock, on the premises of Mr. A. F. Watkinson, a stay-maker, No. 45, Whitechapel-road. With the aid of the police, the residents were made sensible of their danger; but the fire by that period had obtained possession of the shop and staircase, so as to cut off all means of escape except from the upper windows, from which some of the inmates escaped by means of a ladder. Mrs. Pitts and her daughter, a girl about nine years of age, were both pulled out of the blazing building most frightfully burnt; the latter subsequently died of the injuries she sustained. A youth, named Samuel Pitts, was unable to effect his escape, and perished in the flames. With as little delay as possible the parish and other engines arrived, and succeeded in extinguishing the flames, but not before the house was destroyed. As soon as the ruins were sufficiently cool, search was made, and the body of the unfortunate boy was found, and removed to Whitechapel workhouse to await an inquest.—The firemen had barely succeeded in getting the above fire extinguished, when they were called to another, which had broken out upon the premises belonging to Mr. J. Penman, a cabinetmaker, No. 19, Myrtle-street, Hoxton. The flames began in the workshops at the rear of the dwelling-house, and, owing to the inflammable character of the contents, but few minutes elapsed ere the place was in a general blaze. The Whitecross-street brigade engine was soon on the spot, but the fire could not be conquered until the workshops were destroyed, the entire rooms severely damaged.—On Sunday night, at 9 o'clock, a fire attended with a serious destruction of property broke out upon the spacious pile of premises known as the Ship Tavern, situate in Wardour-street, Soho, the property of Mr. Robert John Pearce. There was an immediate supply of water obtained, and several engines having been set to work, the flames were by 9 o'clock extinguished. The damage done, however, to the premises and their contents is very considerable. Mr. Pearce was insured to the extent of £[illegible],000.—Three other fires occurred in the metropolis on Saturday last. One at the house of the Rev. W. Dodsworth, Gloucester-gate Regent's-park. Another at Mr. Carter's, 24, Whitcombe-street, Leicester-square; and the third at the King's Head Tavern, Green-bank, Tooley-street, Southwark. At neither of these was the damage done of any considerable amount.

BIRTHS AND DEATHS.—The weekly return of the Registrar-General states the number of deaths during the past week, within the limits of the districts of London, to be 995, while the births are 1372. The average deaths during the last seven weeks are 1001, which, with the exception of the year 1847, when they were 1043, is far greater than for a similar period during the last eight years.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

Timeo Danaos, et dona ferentes.—VIRG.

It is just three years since a gigantic speculation agitated this kingdom from one end to the other. Men of practical policy and great experience were divided in their opinions as to its operation and consequences. Its advocates and opponents had each their special organs, in which the scheme was publicly canvassed day by day; it was the problem that monopolised the philosophy of the press. Well, time has proved that those were right who opposed the measure as a commercial agent, as matter for trading venture, but unhappily not before a miserable mass of public and private ruin attested the soundness of the premises from which they had drawn this definition. That which was a mere bubble crumbling in railway shares, by the foolishness of racing sweeps and lotteries—the only difference being that the latter description of lunacy is contrary to law. It is fair to assume that nobody will gainsay the fact of its having illegal according to the statute which prohibits lotteries. But there are those who argue (whatever they may think) for the continuance of the system; with them we are at issue, and upon these grounds

We will not charge the advocates who have opened the case of Racing Sweeps and Lotteries with

Misquoting, misstating,
Misplacing, mudding,

We simply object against them, that they are doing a good cause a heavy disengagement. We are the friends of our National Sports, and would uphold them in a manner calculate them to popular favour. The man who spoke with authority has said, "We never had any great sympathy with that 'march of intellect' which altogether outran the commissariat of the body;" and we follow in the same way of thinking. The Circus might have adopted [illegible] less appropriate motto than "Mens sana in corpore sano." Gambling in "Little Goes" is the prevailing epidemic. Dealing with these as with "all the employments of life," we cannot but come to the conclusion that they are sources of great gains to those engaged in them, seeing the anxiety they manifest to uphold and promote the system, and to make it a monopoly. But it is an offence against common sense to suppose that racing sweeps are amusements peculiarly appropriate to places of convivial resort. They entail vast trouble and considerable expense upon those who get them up, requiring a set of officials exclusively for conducting and working the schemes. They act as inducements to long sojourns among scenes and associates, that, it may be said in all courtesy, have never been recommended to the young or old of any class, and directly promote the illegitimate use of money in that particular class of society the least of all able to afford it.

Upon the eve of the separation of Parliament, a member of the Government stated, in answer to some urgent applications bearing upon the subject, that the Solicitor of Stamps had received instructions, the effect of which would be considerably to abate the prevalence of racing lottery speculations. It is impossible to suppose this assertion made for the mere purpose of saving of a disagreeable importunity—that it was spoken in bad faith, with a view to afford facility to the system until the assembling of another session. In a sporting character if any such they may claim—these gambling contrivances are injurious to the true interests of the turf: they cannot promote any social good they may produce, on the contrary, much social mischief. We speak of them here as ocular notions of a leisure hour investments for chance pocket-money. As grave entanglements of mind and money for those whose means are wholly dependent upon their patient industry and cool perseverance, they are the most dangerous of all seductions, if they are to assail them in their hours of hoon recollection and social excitement. Let them look at this statement without prejudice. It is not with them a question of winning or losing; but it involves the bias of habit and the frame of mind which shall return them to their houses and their duties such as their calm convictions may approve. There are, moreover, those who should not avoid this serious social question by passing it by on the other side. They, at least, cannot but grasp the nature of the retainers that frame the system such zealous advocacy, and well understand the application of the five words prefixed to these observations

TATTERSALL'S.

MONDAY. The betting on the Cesarewitch extended over a wide field, but was on a very limited scale: it is not likely to improve, a vast deal of money remaining, and likely to remain, unpaid on the St. Leger. Means. C——t, B——t, P——t, and the Roy Jones are "wanted" to the tune of nearly £20,000.

CESAREWITCH.

12 to 1 agst Sarpilo	7 to 1 agst Pocpo-Loy Hoy	25 to 1 agst Lonestone
12 to 1 —— The Dar	7 to 1 —— Lanesboro (t)	25 to 1 —— Remembrance
12 to 1 —— Alexander	25 to 1 —— Antactious (t)	30 to 1 —— Fandi
16 to 1 —— Palma	25 to 1 —— Dacia	30 to 1 —— Geraldine
20 to 1 —— Baugh	25 to 1 —— Cawrough	30 to 1 —— Gemma

CESAREWITCH.

5 to 1 agst The Flying Dutchman (t)	12 to 1 agst El Dorado	50 to 1 agst Honeycomb (t)
	13 to 1 —— Montagu (t)	50 to 1 —— Threscine (t)

THURSDAY.—The "ring" continues in a sad state of depression, and are so little disposed to open fresh accounts, that we have found it somewhat difficult to knock up a quotation. Lanesboro and Palma are the only animals in any request.

TRIENNIAL STAKES

5 to 2 agst Elsthorn	9 to 1 agst Nina (t)
4 to 1 —— Tadmor	10 to 1 —— Monneato (t)

A great field is expected.

CESAREWITCH

12 to 1 on the field	20 to 1 agst Lonestone	25 to 1 agst Dough
16 to 1 agst Palma	20 to 1 —— Dacia	30 to 1 —— Cawrough
16 to 1 —— Lanesboro'	Either	Remembrance
	CESAREWITCH.
	20 to 1 on The Field

DERBY

5 to 1 agst Scott's lot (t)	15 to 1 agst Ethiroe	45 to 1 agst Escalade (t)
5 to 1 on Red Rover	33 to 1 —— Vitrial (t)	1000 to 15 —— Newport (t)

1000 to 20 agst Flying Dutchman winning the Derby and St. Leger, and Escalade the Oaks

THE WEATHER.

THE weather during the past week has been uninterruptedly fine, and the following are some particulars of each day:—Thursday till noon the sky was mostly overcast, and after noon the greater part was covered by clouds, chiefly of a thin fleecy nature; the direction of the wind very variable, and the average temperature of the air was 52½°. Friday, with the exception of a few light clouds, the sky was cloudless; the direction of the wind was chiefly N.N.E., and the average temperature of the air was 51°. Saturday, the sky was cloudless; the direction of the wind was S.; the day was fine, and the average temperature of the air was 52°. Sunday, the sky was almost cloudless; the direction of the wind was S.W., and the average temperature of the air was 52½°. Monday, the sky was about one-half covered by clouds of a fleecy character, with cumuli and send; the direction of the wind was S.W., and the average temperature of the air was 53½°. Tuesday, for some time during the early morning the sky was cloudless, and the reading of a thermometer placed on grass was 24°; it was again cloudless during the evening and night, and towards midnight the reading of the thermometer on grass was 30°. During the day a good part of the sky was covered by cloud, consisting of cirrostratus, cumulostratus, cumulus, and send. The direction of the wind was S., and the average temperature of the air was 52°. Wednesday the sky was nearly free from cloud; the directions of the wind were S. and W., and the average temperature of the air was 54°; and that for the week ending this day was 52°.

The following are the extreme thermometrical readings for each day:—

Thursday,	Sept. 14	the highest during the day was 64	deg., and the lowest was 41	deg.
Friday,	Sept. 15	.....	63	 36
Saturday,	Sept. 16	.....	66	 39
Sunday,	Sept. 17	.....	68	 41
Monday,	Sept. 18	.....	65	 40
Tuesday,	Sept. 19	.....	66	 35
Wednesday,	Sept. 20	.....	70	 36

Blackheath, Thursday, September 21st, 1848. J. G

NEW SHERIFF'S LIVERY.—The State Livery of Mr. Alderman Finnis, Sheriff-Elect, made by Doudney, is in superb taste. The coat is green, richly embroidered with gold; the principal feature being the Shield, a portion of the Alderman's crest, worked in its natural colours.

LONDON AND NORTH WESTERN-RAILWAY COMPANY.—It will be recollected that the late unhappy disputes between the authorities of the above company and the old engine-drivers and firemen, the guards and brakesmen readily undertook, at the request of the board, to ride on the foot-plate of the engines, in order to ascertain the merits of the new drivers with the character of the road, and point out to them the signals at the various stations. We learn that the manager of the line brought, a few days since, their good conduct before the attention of the directors, who passed the following resolutions:—"That this board has much pleasure in recording its sense of the excellent conduct of the guards and brakesmen during the period of the line being worked by the new drivers. That the ready and obliging manner in which the whole of them undertook the duty suddenly imposed upon them merits the approbation of this board. That the freedom from accident, in the conduct of the service during the period alluded to, is in no slight degree to be attributed to the active assistance of this class of their [illegible]; and that their attention to orders, under very peculiar circumstances, [illegible] this testimony from the board in corroboration of that general good conduct which had so long characterised them as a body." It has likewise resolved "That a gratuity be given to each man employed in this extra duty. That the minute be printed, and that a copy of it be given to the guards and brakesmen, with the name of the party to whom it specially applies." It is stated that nearly £200 has been thus distributed among the guards and brakesmen.

CURIOUS BILL OF ENTRY.—The directors of the Customs Funds, and patentees for punishing the bills of entry, having laid before the board an extract of a new patent, and requested, in virtue of the powers therein granted, that officers may be issued to the officers of the Customs Department at the several ports and places throughout the United Kingdom, to afford the patentees or their deputies the accommodation and information that may be requisite for carrying the purposes of the patent into execution, directions have been given for an extract of the said patent to be delivered to the proper officers at the port of London, and transmitted to the collectors and comptrollers at the several out-ports of the Kingdom, with instructions to afford the patentees or their deputies a convenient place in the Custom-house for the transaction of their business, and allow them free access to all books, bills, warrants, certificates, ships' entries, and contents of ships, general lading and other books as shall be kept and preserved at the Custom-houses of their respective ports, and enjoined not to permit other persons to have access thereto, nor furnish any information therefrom, except in the usual and regular performance of duty.

THE BRAEMAR GATHERING AT INVERCAULD HOUSE.

(Continued from page 182.)

haugh, whereon stands the Castle of Balmoral, surrounded by ancient and stately trees. Our Artist's view is taken from the road on the north side of the Dee, the best point. The hill which rises proudly at the back is called Craigowan. Upon its summit is a pole, which was erected to commemorate the successful termination of a lawsuit which Earl Fife (the late owner of Balmoral) had with his trustees. Early in the present year, the reversion of the lease of Balmoral was bought from the trustees of Sir Robert Gordon by his Royal Highness Prince Albert.

The Castle and grounds of Balmoral are stated to have exceeded the expectations of her Majesty and Prince Albert. Mr. Smith, the architect, of Aberdeen, after whose plans the present house of Balmoral was built, was sent for by command of his Royal Highness Prince Albert, and instructed to furnish plans of several additions that are considered necessary for the future accommodation of the Court. The garden is also to be enlarged, and the arable land about the Castle improved.

Mar Lodge, the shooting quarters of the Duke of Leeds, is in the neighbourhood of Balmoral, at about a mile from Corrimulzie, on the haugh on the opposite side of the river. This retreat received great scaith from the floods of August, 1829, when a stately bridge was entirely swept away. The hill on the south side of the valley, opposite to Mar Lodge, is called Craig Nich, and is said to signify the Rock or Hill of the Eagles Corrnaulzie is another of these Highland retreats, which, for quiet loveliness, has no equal on all Deeside. Our view shows the shooting lodge of General Sir Alexander Duff, taken from the north side of the Dee. In another column we have portrayed one of the General's Deer-stalkers.

Invercauld House, with the Braemar Gathering, has been already described. The mansion was built in 1715, when the first rising was made for the Stuarts. It is environed with stately old trees, and behind it rises a noble hill.

Lochnagar has likewise been described. Lord Byron has enshrined it in his undying verse:—

Ah! there my young footsteps in infancy wander'd,
My cap was the bonnet, my cl-ak was the plaid
On chieftains long perish'd my memory ponder'd,
As daily I strode through the pine-cover'd glade.
I sought not my home till the day's dying glory
Gave place to the rays of the bright polar star,
For Fancy was cheer'd by traditional story,
Disclosed by the wailves of dark Lochnagar.

* * * * *

Years have rolled on, Lochnagar, since I last you;
Years must elapse ere I tread you again
Nature of verdure and flowers has bereft you,
Yet still are you dearer than Albion's plain.
England! thy beauties are tame and domestic,
To one who has roved on the mountains afar:
Oh! for the crags that are wild and majestic,
The steep frowning glories of dark Lochnagar!

We should add that this famous hill is in Prince Albert's forest of Balmoral.

The locality is thus sketched in a Scottish Journal: The south bank of the Dee, at about 50 miles from Aberdeen, is a fine peninsula and verdant lawn, encircled by a belting of luxuriant birch trees. The foreground is formed by the slope of "Craigoun," a hill which rises from the valley, by a gentle acclivity, to the height of 1000 feet above the level of the sea. The face of the hill is covered with wood, and forms part of the forest of Mar. Over the left shoulder, when seen from the north side of the river, the snow-capped peak of "Lochnagar" rises into view, while a noble range of heath-clad mountains disposed in a curve within a radius of ten miles, constitute a background at once majestic and sublime. In the centre of peninsula, within this magnificent amphitheatre, and just at the base of Craigoun, stands the Castle of Balmoral. Nothing can be more beautiful than the situation—nothing more sublime than the entire scene.

LOCHNAGAR

F I N E A R T S.

THE CONCEPTION.—PAINTED BY MURILLO.—FROM THE SPANISH GALLERY IN THE LOUVRE, AT PARIS.

Oh! Mary, mother, Queen of Heaven,
Fairest and best of mortal birth,
Hope of the sad and unforgiven,
Type of all loveliness on earth;
Thy very name in every clime
Attracts, enhallows, and endears,
And forms a melody sublime
Amid the music of the spheres.

Star of thy sex! if we could bend
At human shrine th' adoring knee,
We'd raise our eyes to sorrow's friend,
We'd kneel confidingly to thee.
For thou hast suffer'd—thou hast known
All peril, anguish, and distress;
And thou couldst make our woes thine own,
With all a woman's tenderness.

Oh! Mary, mother, Queen of Heaven
We may not deem thee all divine;
But we can strive as we have striven,
That love and reverence shall be thine.
The chasten'd beauty of thine eyes
Imbues the world with pitying grace,
And Love's most holy mysteries
Beam from the splendours of thy face.—Chas. Mackay.

This fine picture is one of the treasures of the Galerie Espagnole, in the Louvre. It was painted by Murillo, about the year 1680; it was drawn and engraved by A. Bridoux, in 1845, and published by Goupil and Vibert.

Murillo's unapproachable pre-eminence in representing this charming subject procured for him the name of el ventor de la Concepcion. The crowning and protecting mystery of Spain is the belief that the Virgin was born free from all taint of original sin. This is peculiar and national, and occurs frequently in church, chapel, and gallery; while it has occupied innumerable pens, pencils, and chisels.

The dispute of the Immaculate Conception of the Virgin originated in the thirteenth century; and when it was revived in the seventeenth century, the Franciscans of Seville took the lead in asserting their belief of the sinless nature of the Virgin. Hence it is natural that some of the most perfect conceptions of Murillo should have been devoted to the embodying of this incorporeal mystery; "and never," says Mr. Ford, in his clever "Handbook of Spain," "has dignified composure and innocence of mind, unruffled by human guilt or passion, pure unsexual unconsciousness of sin or shame, heavenly beatitude past utterance, or the unconquerable majesty and hidden strength of chastity, been more exquisitely portrayed. The retiring virgin loveliness of the blessed Mary seems to have stolen so gently, so silently on her, that she is aware of her own power and fascination."

The able author of the "Hand-book" continues:—

"It may be as well to mention the proper manner in which this mystery should be painted. Pacheco requires that the Virgin should be about fifteen years old, very beautiful, with those regular features which the Greek artists selected to express the perfect passionless serenity of the immortal gods, devoid of human frailties, 'the unpolluted temple of the mind;' that her attitude should be—

Her graceful arms, in m[illegible] bonding
Across her gen[illegible]

that she should be clad in a spotless robe of blue and white—the colours, also, of Juno, Regina cœli—because she appeared in them to Beatriz de Silva, a Portuguese nun. She should bruise with her heel the serpent's head; thus trampling on the author of original sin. She should stand on the moon in a crescent shape: thus combining at once the symbol of Pagan and Moslem, the crescent of Isis, of Diana, and of the Turk. The horns should be placed downwards, because, in fact, the moon is always solid, although it appears to us, from the sun getting between it and the earth, to be occasionally a crescent. The moon is introduced because the Virgin is held to be the 'woman clothed with the sun, and the moon under her feet, and upon her head a crown of twelve stars' (Rev. xii. 1). These stars should never be omitted. The body of the Virgin should float in an atmosphere of light, derived from herself. The cordon of San Francisco, sacred as the Zennaar cord of the Brahmins, should encircle the whole, because it is the badge of that order which defended her immaculate conception. The subject is often surrounded with smaller pictures, which represent those different attributes and manifold perfections of the Virgin, which are celebrated in her Hymn and Litany. Murillo often painted the Virgin in a state of ecstatic beatitude, and borne aloft in a golden ciber to heaven, to which her beauteous eyes were turned, by a group of angels, which none could colour like him. It should be remembered that the draperies of the Virgin must be very long, and her feet never shown."

The Late Mr. Collins, R.A.—Mr. Wilkie Collins is preparing for publication, with a portrait from Linnell, and two Vignettes, memoirs of the life of his father, the late William Collins, R.A., with extracts from his private journals and correspondence (including letters from Coleridge, Wilkie, Allston, and other eminent contemporaries), descriptions of all his principal works, and a list of his pictures, with the price received for each.

MUSIC.

NORWICH MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

Our report, in last week's Number—which contained the Engraving of St. Andrew's Hall as fitted up for the meeting—extended to Thursday morning. The third and last concert on that evening produced 115 guineas (tickets and 1st Lady guineas. The scheme was not attractive enough to the provinces events. It opened with Haydn's Symphony No. 5, in C Minor (of the Solomon set of 12). This was well executed; the patriarch Lindley being loudly encored in the minuet of the trio. The duo from "Linda," "Da quel dì," sung by Castellan and Reeves, and the air "In si barbara," from "Semiramide," sung by Alboni, created no sensation. Blagrove's playing of his "Pirate" fantasia was nice in tone and finished execution, but frigid in style and expression. The selection from Beethoven's "Fidelio" terminating the first part, afforded Mdme. Viardot the occasion to prove the versatility of her powers, for she sang the scena of Leonora magnificently.

The "William Tell" overture, beginning the second part, was spiritedly executed, and the last movement was encored, but the flute and oboe dialogue was by no means well rendered. The adagio of the celebrated "William Tell" trio was not effective, albeit sung by Reeves, Whitworth, and Lablache. Alboni produced immense excitement in the Tyrolienne, "In questo semplice," and was encored when she substituted the cavatina, "Lucrezia," drinking song, which she received another encore. An insipid glee, "The Gipsies' Tent," followed, and then Viardot and Castellan were encored in Benedict's duo from the "Crusaders." "The ties of friendship!" but we cannot compliment them on their execution of the bravura finale. Lablache's "Tarantella," given with such vivacity, was demanded, of course, a second time. Balfe's trio for three soprani, from "Falstaff," was well sung by Castellan, Viardot, and Alboni. Mr. Sims Reeves, in Mercadante's Romance, "Bella adorata," and the Misses Williams, in Walter Maynard's graceful duo, the "Gondoliers," acquitted themselves efficiently. Mr. Phillips ought then to have sung a ballad by Kraust, but he did not show—why and wherefore, was not explained. "Rule, Britannia," executed in the most execrable style ever heard, finished the Concert. Our national air was a complete failure—it was sung in all keys, and with every kind of words.

The attendance on Friday, for the third and last morning performance, was not great, which may be attributed to the mistake of not having given Handel's "Messiah." The receipts were 177 guineas and 78 half-guineas. The scheme opened with Mozart's "Davidde Penitente," which is heavy and antiquated, although it contains some fine pieces. It was well sung; the Misses Williams particularly distinguishing themselves. Handel's oratorio, "Israel in Egypt," with the interpolations made by Professor Taylor in 1836, formed the last part of the morning's programme; but the gratification to be derived from the colossal choruses of the master-work was nullified by the annoying and unjustifiable introduction of pieces having little or no connection with the poem and with the composer's intentions. The execution, however, was remarkably fine; the choral singing and the "Hallelujah" and "Horse and his Rider" choruses were encored. Mr. Reeves sang a restored air of Handel superbly. Mr. Lockey, Mr. Whitworth, Mr. Phillips, Mdme. Viardot, Mdme. Castellan, and Miss M. Williams executed their allotted pieces unexceptionably, and in some instances nobly.

Scarcely had the last notes of the final chorus in "Israel" been heard, than the ball was cleared for the Dress Ball, which took place in the evening, and was well attended. Jullien conducted the band, in which were Koenig and Collinet; and the dancing was kept up until the small hours—the blaze of beauty being transcendent.

The receipts for the six musical performances were—1090 in the patrons' gallery (guineas), and 6986 in the body of the hall and side galleries (half-guineas); making, in all, 4123 guineas. In 1845, the amount was 4375 guineas. It is, however, anticipated that, with the donations, the charities will be as much benefited by this meeting as in 1845 as Mr. Peel has sent £50, Mdlle. Lind £50, the Dean of Norwich £20, the Duke of Cambridge £20, &c. The largest sum ever realised was in 1824, the foundation year, when the surplus of receipts over expenditure was £2411. In 1845, it was £1991.

On the whole, there is little to blame in the arrangements for this festival. The honorary secretaries, Messrs. G. Simpson and R. Kerrison, in the administrative acts, deserve every eulogium; whilst Benedict has gained great glory for his musical arrangements, and for his skill as a conductor

Norwich has an immense advantage, in its admirable choral societies, for such meetings; and we quite agree with the suggestion thrown out by the Norwich Mercury, that every endeavour should be made to supply a local band. The same energy and perseverance exhibited in the choral schooling would ultimately produce an orchestral phalanx. The boys of the cathedral choir have been also of great value this festival. It must also be recorded as a great musical event, that Viardot has established for herself as great a name by her singing at this meeting as her father, Garcia the tenor, and her sister, Malibran, had done at former festivals

The vocalisation of Mdme. Viardot in sacred and secular music has, indeed, been one of the grandest successes in our modern times. Is of as much importance also for such performances to have two such tenors as Reeves and Lockey, as Continental aid, with such artistes, is quite unnecessary. A new basso is certainly wanting. Phillips was fine in "Elijah," but organ is fatigued; and Whitworth, although he has good taste, has not the force requisite to carry out his conceptions. The Misses Williams are now indispensable for every festival: they are safe and sometimes vocalists of a high order. Castellan, charming when in harness together for their duos. Mdme. Castellan has opened a new career for herself, in which we should prefer to hear her for the future, instead of the stage. She has a want of dramatic fire; but is very superior to her ever taking a first-rate position. Of Alboni and Lablache it would be a waste of space to write—their popularity is unbounded.

WORCESTER MUSICAL FESTIVAL. We are glad to learn that the financial results of this meeting have been so gratifying. The gatherings of the three choirs may be turned to certain account for the interests of art; hitherto should most strongly urge the appointment of an experienced conductor at future meetings. The three professors who hold the appointments of organists at Gloucester, Hereford, and Worcester, are highly competent musicians, and we should be sorry to see the direction of the general arrangements out of their hands; but in these times, when the perfection of an ensemble is so much regarded, it is of the utmost importance that the band and chorus should be conducted by a thoroughly competent person, and that it should not be controlled by a professor who only takes the bâton once in three years.

MUSICAL TOURS.—Mdlle. Lind continues her successful career in the provinces. She sang at York last Monday, and will be in Edinburgh this evening (Saturday).——Alboni sang at Newcastle last Monday; and with Grisi and Mario at Edinburgh, on Tuesday. The Italian Opera at Liverpool, with the two tenors Tagliafico, &c., has been immensely successful.

ABERGAVENNY EISTEDDFOD.—Great preparations are making for this meeting of Welsh Bards in October, at which Mr. Richards will act as Judge, as in 1845.

MILLE ALBONI.—The great contralto will sing on Monday at Exeter Hall, for Mr. Lavenu's concert, and will depart the next day for the Continent.

MR. WILSON.—This very popular singer of Scotch melodies is about to depart for the United States, and gave a farewell concert at Exeter Hall on Thursday.

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

SIR C. NAPIER'S SQUADRON.—COVE OF CORK, SEPT. 16.—The squadron are here still, and are likely to remain; the Admiral has just received orders from Charing-cross, superseding previous admiralty orders, and to hold his squadron in readiness to act on any instructions he may receive from the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, with the view of suppressing tumult and mob, taking tranquillity in the country. The Melville is only waiting for her new commander to join, when she will proceed at once to the West Indies, relieving the Hecate.

THE REINFORCEMENTS FOR IRELAND.—The Cyclops steam-frigate, six guns, Captain the Hon. George Hastings, left Portsmouth between nine and ten o'clock on Sunday night, with 200 officers and men of the Marine Artillery corps, rocket brigade, field battery, &c., and a quantity of small arms of various descriptions for the use of the supernumerary constabulary, &c., in Ireland. The Druser steamsloop, Commander Johnson, six guns, which was put in commission suddenly on Saturday, has been victualled and stored, and embarked on Tuesday 100 marines, who were sent express from London for that purpose, and with whom she sailed the same night for Cork and Waterford. The Seraphis steamer, Lieutenant Bernard, R.N., commanded by the crew of the gunnery ship Excellent, and armed with four 24-pounder brass howitzers, also with a store of small arms and ammunition, has sailed for Waterford, together with the Inverness screw-steamer, fitted and stored, and armed with two 12-pounder brass howitzers

The Cyclops, steam frigate, Captain the hon. G. F. Hastings, put into Plymouth Sound on Monday afternoon, and took in a few supernumeraries, and then sailed for Waterford

IN WEDNESDAY instructions were received at the naval rendezvous on Tower-hill, and at the different ports of entry, for the coast-guard and revenue officers in the metropolis, that, no men or lads being required for the Royal navy, all entries were for the present to be suspended.

POST-OFFICE NOTICE.—On Thursday, a notice was issued at the General Post-office, St. Martin's-le-Grand, that ship letter mails would be made up and despatched for Malta, Constantinople, and the Black Sea, by the Euxine steamer, to sail on the 25th inst.; and by the Seraph Sands, to sail for New York on the 15th of October

JOHN TAYLOR GORDON, Esq., M.D., having wholly retired from the exercise of his profession, has resigned his appointment in the household of the Duke of Cambridge, as Physician to his Royal Highness.

TIME OF DEPARTURE OF THE LISBON MAILS FOR ENGLAND.—A serious disagreement has for some time existed between the Peninsular Packet Company's agent at Lisbon and the agent of the British post-office at that port, as to who has the right to fix the time for the departure of the mail-steamers. As the latter carry cargo, they are, of course, not exempted, even though they have mails on board, from foreign custom-house regulations. Their departure from a foreign port, therefore, is almost in the power of the private agent, who can retard or facilitate their obtaining custom-house clearance just as he thinks proper. It is to put a stop to this disagreement, which is grown very serious, and to inquire into other more important privileges claimed by the private agent of the company, that the Lisbon Packet agent has been ordered to this country.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"M. P."—The same position was kindly sent to us by the Rev. H. Bolton, a few days ago. He is ignorant, as we are at the moment, whose it is; but we remember to have seen it. Our version stands thus: White King on Q B 8th; R at Q R 5th; B at K 2d 8th; P at 5th; P at K B 5th. Black King at Q R 7th; R at Q R 2d; P at Q B 3d; P at 6, B 2d. White mates in four moves.

"G. T. L."—Such a match is certainly on the tapis. The members of the Brighton Club, being desirous of playing one or two games by correspondence with the well-known Liverpool Club, have solicited the intervention of Mr. Staunton to promote the contest; but no formal challenge has been tendered, and it would be premature just now to offer an opinion on the subject.

"Epsilon."—Your emendation is of no effect. Make may still be given in three moves easily.

"Ben Mazes."—It reached us too late for examination this week.

"Juvenis."—Apply by letter to Mr. Harrwitz, at the London Chess Club.—"His terms for instruction, we are told, are moderate, but we do not know what they are.

"An Enthusiast."—It is not the custom in this country to warn the opponent's Queen of danger by saying "Check." A Castle is called, indiscriminately, a Rook or a Castle.

"F. N. M.," M.D., Nova Scotia.—The suggestion shall not be forgotten. With respect to your Problem, too, that shall have due attention.

". . . ."—We are not aware of having seen it in any other of your Problems unpublished.

"Voyerinensis"—Neither in the case mentioned nor in any other could the King go into check of an adverse man, although it is a common error among inexperienced players to believe that under such circumstances he might

"F. W. C."—Not without merit. We shall try and find a niche for it ere long.

"J. D."—It must be good enough to send to solution, as it is our practice never to look at a Problem till we can compare it with the author's solution.

Solutions by "M. D.," "F. B. S.," "Exon," "J. A. F.," "G. A. H.," "A. B. K.," "Sigma," "W. L.," "R. H. T.," "S. N.," "G. P.," "H. W.," "W. B.," "G. S.-T.," "F. V." are correct.

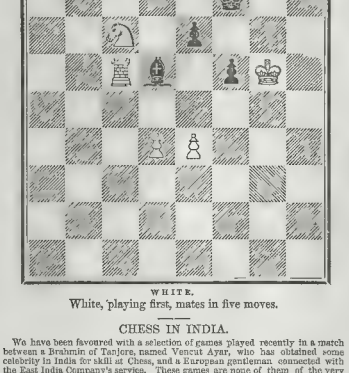
SOLUTION TO PROBLEM NO. 243.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
1. B to Q B 5th	P to Q 7th	3. Kt to Kt 4th (disch)	K to B 6th
2. Kt to K B 2d	K to Kt 8th	4. Kt to K B 2d—Mate

PROBLEM NO. 244.

By MESSRS. KLING and HORWITZ.

BLACK.



WHITE.

White, playing first, mates in five moves.

CHESS IN INDIA.

We have been favoured with a selection of games played recently in a match between a Brahmin of Tanjore, named Vencut Ayar, who has obtained some celebrity in India for skill at Chess, and a European gentleman connected with the East India Company's service. These games are none of them of the very highest order of excellence, but, in many there are points of interest which render them well deserving publicity. The two following are among the best —

(IRREGULAR OPENING.)

WHITE (V. Ayar).	BLACK (Mr. ——).	WHITE (V. Ayar).	BLACK (Mr ——).
1. P to K 4th	P to Q B 4th	15. Q Kt to R 3d	P to Q R 3d
2. K Kt to B 3d	P to K 3d	16. P to Q Kt 4th	Q Kt to Sq
3. K B to Q B 4th	P to K B 3d	17. Q to K 4th	P to K B 4th
4. Castles	Q Kt to B 3d	18. Q to K R 4th	P to h R 3d
5. P to Q 4th	P to Q 4th	19. P to Q Kt 5th	Q to K B 2d
6. P takes P	K P takes P	20. P to Q Kt 6th (d)	P to K B 4th
7. R to K sq (ch)	K to B 2d (e)	21. Q to K R 4th	P to h R 3d
8. K B to his sq	K B to Q 3d	22. Q takes P (ch)	Q to K B 2d
9. P to Q B 4th	Q B to K 3d	23. Q takes Q (ch) (e)	K takes Q
10. R takes B (ch) (f)	K takes R P (ch)	24. Q B takes P	P takes B
11. Kt takes B	K takes R	25. Q takes P (ch)	Q to K B 3d
12. Q P takes P	P to Q 5th	26. Q takes Q (ch) (g)	K takes Q
13. K B to Q 3d	Q to Q R 4th	27. P takes Kt	P takes P
14. Q to K 4th (ch)	K to B 2d	28. Kt to B 3d	Kt to K 2d
15. Q P takes P	P to Q 5th	29. Q Kt to Q B 2d	K to B 3d
16. Q to her 5th (ch)	K to Kt 3d	30. R to K sq (f)	P to Q R 4th
17. Q B to Q 2d	Q to her B 2d	31. Q Kt takes Q P	R to K R 8th (g)
		32. R to K 6th (ch)	K to B 3d
		33. R to K Kt (ch)	K takes R
		34. Kt takes E, and wins (h)

(c) Forcing to crowd his game by interposing a piece

(d) This is very well conceived; for if the King take the R, White takes P with P (ch); and if then the King re-take, he must be mated in two moves.

(e) It would not have been safe to take the K Kt P with the B, on account of the impending mate with Black a Queen.

(f) The Brahmin plays all this part of the game extremely well.

(g) Simplifying (as Bacbuss, to make assurance doubly sure

(f) Taking the Q P would have involved the loss of two pieces for the Rook.

(g) A merely desperate venture.

(h) The termination is neat and very clear

BETWEEN THE SAME PLAYERS.

(GIUOCO PIANO.)

WHITE (V. Ayar).	BLACK (Mr. ——).	WHITE (V. Ayar).	BLACK (Mr. ——).
1. P to K 4th	P to K 4th	16. K to R 2d	K Kt to K 3d
2. B to Q B 4th	B to Q B 4th	17. B to Q Kt 5th	K to K t 4th
3. K Kt to B 3d	Q Kt to B 3d	18. R to K B 2d	Q to her B 2d
4. Castles	K Kt to B 3d	19. Q R to K B sq	Q R to Q B sq
5. P to Q 3d	P to K R 3d	20. K to R 3 5th (b)	Q Kt to K Kt 3d
6. Q B to K 3d (a)	B takes B	21. P to K R 4th	K Kt to K 3d
7. P takes B	Castles	22. P to K R 5th	Q Kt to R sq
8. Q Kt to B 3d	P to Q 3d	23. B takes K Kt	K B P takes B
9. P to K R 3d	Q B to K 3d	24. Kt takes R P (ch)	K to R 2d
10. Q Kt to Q th	B takes Kt	25. P to K R 6th	Q Kt to R sq
11. K P takes B	P to Q B 4th	26. B takes K Kt	K B P takes B
12. Kt to K R 4th	K Kt takes P	27. R takes R	R takes R
13. Q to K B 3d	P to Q B 3d	28. R to Q Kt 8th	P to Q Kt 3d
14. Q to K Kt 3d	Q to Q R 3d	29. Kt to K Kt 4th	And Black surrenders.
15. R to K B 3d	K Kt to K B 5th

(a) Instead of this move, which is not indeed, the choice of moves is remarkable in one who, as we understand, has never possessed a chess-board, and, as, there is, perhaps upon his [illegible]

(b) [illegible]

MATCH BY CORRESPONDENCE

BETWEEN THE CHESS CLUBS OF LONDON AND AMSTERDAM.

WHITE (Amsterdam).	BLACK (London).
	15. Kt takes P

Amsterdam to play.

CHESS ENIGMAS.

No. 362.—By a French Amateur.

White: K at K B 6th, R at Q B 8th, B at Q sq., P's at h R 2d and K 2d.
Black: h at h R 5th, P's at K B 2d and Q B 3d, K at K 6th, K 6th, and Q R 4th.

White to play, and mate in four moves.

No. 363.—By the same.

White K at Q B 2d, Q at Q Kt 2d, B at Q 2d
Black: h at K B sq.

White to play, and mate in three moves.

No. 364.—By the same.

White: K at Q Kt sq, Q at K B 8 sq, R at Q R sq, B at K Kt sq, Kts at K 3d and Q Kt sq, P's at K Kt 3d, Q 5th, Q B 4th, Q Kt 2d, and Q R 2d

Black: K at K R sq, R at K B sq, R at Q R sq, B at K Kt sq, Kts at K 3d and Q Kt sq, P's at K Kt 3d, Q 5th, Q B 4th, Q Kt 2d, and Q R 2d

White, playing first, can mate in four moves.

COUNTRY NEWS.

THE LATE CHELTENHAM ELECTION.

It will be remembered that at the late election for Cheltenham, Mr. Craven Berkeley, who was unseated at the previous election by the decision of a Committee of the House of Commons, of which Sir William Clay was chairman, applied some offensive epithets to that committee. The following correspondence has taken place on the subject:

"The Queen's Hotel, Cheltenham, Sept. 9.

"Sir, Though I cannot divest myself of the conviction that the decision of the committee was erroneous, unsupported by evidence, and that in consequence I was unjustly deprived of my seat for Cheltenham; and in this conviction I am supported by the opinion of more competent persons than myself; I am nevertheless bound to state that under the influence of excited feelings I made use of observations and expressions touching yourself which my cooler judgment totally disapproves of. These I beg therefore completely to withdraw, and to tender you my sincere apologies for having given utterances to them.

"I have the honour to be your obedient servant,

"To Roundell Palmer, Esq., &c." "CRAVEN F. BERKELEY.

"P.S. You are at liberty to make what use you please of this communication; I have forwarded Lord Palmerston a copy, accompanied by the enclosed note.

"Kilin, Loch Tay, Sept. 15.

"Sir,—Being on a tour in Scotland, I did not receive your letter of the 9th inst., until after post-time yesterday. I have much pleasure in assuring you that I accept with thanks your handsome and gentlemanlike retractation of expressions which I am satisfied you would not have used except under the influence of a temporary excitement of feeling, and which from this moment will be entirely dismissed from my mind. As I consider your letter no less honourable to yourself than satisfactory to me, I shall not hesitate to use the permission you give me to make it public, together with this reply.

"I remain, Sir, your very obedient servant.

"The Hon. C. F. Berkeley." "ROUNDELL PALMER."

A precisely similar letter having been addressed by Mr. Berkeley to Sir William Clay, the following is Sir William's answer

"Sir,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of yesterday's date, which can have no bearing on stating the opinion, in reply, that I consider it a full reparation for the observations and expressions to which it refers. I willingly admit that the position in which you were placed by the decision of the committee, and the circumstances under which you spoke when the observations in question were made, were both of a character to produce not unnaturally much excitement of feeling on your part; and, as you now state, with an explicitness that becomes you honour, that the cooler judgment you regret and disavow the expressions of which, under the influence of that excitement, you were tempted to make use, you may rest assured I shall think of them no more: they will henceforth be to me as if they had never been uttered. I abstain from any remark on the opinion you express upon the merits of the decision of the committee, the rather that I perceive that it is your intention to bring that question by petition under the consideration of the House of Commons; but I may state, without impropriety, that the result of a review of the whole case, as brought out in evidence, was to create in the mind of, I believe, every member of the committee, regret at the decision which they yet felt—and as I think rightly felt—they had no alternative but to adopt

"I have the honour to be, sir, your obedient servant,

"To Craven Berkeley, Esq." "W. CLAY."

MANCHESTER TRADE REPORT.—TUESDAY.—We have again to report a depressed market. Little has been done during last week, and to-day there was no disposition to purchase on the part of buyers. The fluctuations in the cotton trade have somewhat affected our market. It was expected that the conclusion of the arm.stice would have given an immediate stimulus to trade, but hitherto it has not done so. The harvest is most favourable, and no sense days has continued so, but it has failed to inspire confidence. Prices generally may be said to be drooping; some cloth printers and a few others remain firm. Business is more promising in the woollen trade, and a fair amount was transacted to-day. The Macclesfield trade continues good, especially the trimming department. The return of the state of employment is not so favourable as last week. There are 914 more hands at present at work, a decrease of 710 working full time, and of those working short time 57. Last week the total number at work was 41,164, this week it is only 40,831; working full time last week 38,539, this week 37,569; short time last week 2630, this week 9582.

THE EXPORT COAL TRADE.—We have again to record the gratifying fact that the coal exports continue to eat a respectable figure, and to contrast, consequently, most compliments with the experts generally of the kingdom. The coal exports of the month ending August 5, 1848, amounted to £106,[illegible]2; whereas those of the corresponding month of 1847 only amounted to £84,577; showing an increase for the month of £21,475. This increase of our staple trade, we repeat, is cheering amidst the cries of distress which are to be heard on almost every side.—Gateshead Observer

FATAL ACCIDENT ON THE GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY.—THREE LIVES LOST.—A most melancholy catastrophe happened on the afternoon of Friday se'nnight, on the Great Western Railway, near the Hatherley Bridge, between Gloucester and Cheltenham. That portion of the line is used in common by the Great Western broad gauge and the Midland narrow gauge companies, a line of four feet nine-inch rails being laid within the broader ones. A number of men in the employ of Mr. Blakmore, contractor, were engaged in removing old and laying down new ballast; and in consequence of the almost constant traffic of the two companies passing over this particular part of the line, the work was liable to frequent interruption, and a watch was kept by the navvies to give notice of the approach of a train. About four o'clock, a train of about 60 luggage-trucks on the narrow gauge line passed by. The bell was sounded as usual, and all the men thought they stood upon the down-line, coming the trucks as they passed. Whilst they were so engaged, the Great Western train, which left Paddington at 12 o'clock, appeared in sight. The boy rang the bell, and the driver of the engine, Firefly, sounded the steam whistle; but the poor fellows seemed not to hear it, for they made not the least attempt to move off the line. The driver of the engine, perceiving the terrible fate that awaited them, endeavoured to prevent it by steam, and reverse the action of the engine. All, however, had but little effect in thwarting the shocking accident that ensued. The Firefly reached the two unfortunate men, and in an instant they were thrown to the ground by the passing of the train a melancholy catastrophe presented itself. The remains of three of the poor fellows were stretched on the permanent way, shockingly mutilated. Their names were Joel Wing, James Newman, and Henry Ford, whose deaths were instantaneous. The other two men, James Wilkes and Joseph Ford, were discovered to be alive. The survivors with every care were conveyed to Cheltenham Hospital. There it was ascertained that Wilkes had sustained a compound fracture of the arm and leg; Ford, a fracture of the thigh and arm. Eventually, however, Ford's th.gh was amputated, so severely was it shattered. The remains of those who were killed were removed to Cheltenham. The five poor fellows were married. Wilts and Newman have left as many as eight children each. The survivors remain in a bad way. Wilkes says that they were so engaged in notching the luggage-trucks, that they altogether forgot the approach of the Great Western train.

POLICE.

WORSHIP-STREET.

THE SEMI-BENEVOLENT SCHEME OF CONVICT EMIGRATION.—On Wednesday, Anne and Emma Lodrick, two married women, who attended at this court last week to complain that their husbands had been induced to emigrate to New York, through the instrumentality of Mr. Jackson, of the City Mission, leaving their families behind in a state of utter destitution, again presented themselves before Mr Hammill to report the result of their endeavours to obtain some assistance from the gentleman referred to. The first complainant, Anne Lodrick, stated that, pursuant to the recommendation, she called on the previous Thursday evening to see Mr. Jackson, at a ragged school in the Minories, where he was in the habit of holding prayer meetings, and, upon reminding him that her sole support for assisting her husband to emigration was a promise from him of rendering her assistance, couched in such terms as to induce her to believe that she and her child were to be sent immediately after him, he told her that she had misunderstood him, and that, by no means, all that he intended to do for her was to send her some tea and sugar after she had entered the workhouse. He added, that he would speak to the gentlemen subscribers on her behalf, but that he could not promise her any thing, as

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

WESTMINSTER COUNTY COURT.—TUESDAY.

(Before D. G. Moylan, Esq., Judge.)

FITZ v. DEARDEN.—This was a DETAINED [illegible] action brought by the plaintiff, an architect, against Mr. Edward Delafield, the proprietor of the Royal Italian Opera, to recover the sum of 10s. 6d., the price of an orchestra stall ticket, numbered 210—for the evening of the 5th of August he purchased a stall ticket for the orchestra, at the Opera Box-office, in New street; but on presenting himself with it in the evening he was refused admission, on the ground that he was not in evening costume. He then demanded the return of his money, but it was refused. The next day he sent to the proprietor for his money; but he could get no redress; no money was returned, nor would any reason be given for it. The great objection to him was in consequence of his wearing a frock-coat. The Judge said the proprietor had a right to make regulations with respect to dress, but no right to refuse to return money when the party presenting one of the tickets was not [illegible] and if he had been aware of the regulations, or that they were [illegible] would not have gone. There was no other objection: it was only to his dress. —The Judge: Well, it seems to me that, as you purchased your ticket at the box-office, you are entitled to recover back the money you paid for it. As [illegible] was then made for the payment of the money with costs forthwith.

CITY SMALL DEBTS COURT WEDNESDAY.

(Before Mr. Commissioner Phillips.)

SOUTH-EASTERN RAILWAY COMPANY v. SMITH AND ANOTHER. ELECTRIC TELEGRAPH CHARGES.—This was an action to recover the sum of £1 7s. 2d. for messages forwarded by the electric telegraph for the defendants, Messrs. Smith and Atkinson, solicitors.—Mr Rush, the manager of the electric telegraph at the London station of the railway, proved that on the 23th of May Mr. Atkinson gave him a message for Messrs. Laver and Cresswell, Folkestone, to go to the station there, to communicate with him (Mr. Atkinson). The message was transmitted at 4 48, P.M., in two minutes, of course, there would be no answer, unless sent by Messrs. Laver. Two hours afterwards, at 6 14, defendant requested him to send down again, to know whether the messenger had been to Laver and Cresswell, and in two minutes he returned an answer in the affirmative, but that those gentlemen were not at home. The answer was then made, but when Mr. Atkinson refused to pay. Witness admitted that there was no scale of charges that the public could see, but any person applying could have one. He refused Mr. Atkinson another message through—on a subsequent day, 25th inst., there are frequently secret communications.—The clerk at the Folkestone station proved the receipt of the message, and that he delivered it to the first person who came to the station to be applied for—viz., at 6 14, defendant requested him to send down again, to know whether the messenger had been to Laver and Cresswell, and in two minutes he returned an answer in the affirmative, but that those gentlemen were not at home. The answer was then made, but when Mr. Atkinson refused to pay. Witness admitted that there was no scale of charges that the public could see, but any person applying could have one. He refused Mr. Atkinson another message through—on a subsequent day, 25th inst., there are frequently secret communications.—The clerk at the Folkestone station proved the receipt of the message, and that he delivered it to the first person who came to the station to be applied for—viz., at 6 14, defendant requested him to send down again, to know whether the messenger had been to Folkestone. He complained of the delay, and denied giving any order for the second message, and had been waiting for an answer to the first.—Mr. Rush said it was a note direction, and the message having been delivered, the matter rested with the parties.—Mr. Atkinson then complained of the charges His Honor said, it would be difficult to say what was a fair charge. It depended very much upon circumstances, but, in this case, he thought the company had performed the contract, and that their charges were fair.—Judgment for £1 7s. 6d.

CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT.

(Before Mr. Justice Erle and Mr. Justice Williams.)

TRIAL FOR SEDITION.

On Wednesday, John Shaw, 41, undertaker, surrendered in discharge of his bail, to take his trial upon a charge of misdemeanour, and he was placed in the dock. The Attorney-General, Mr. Welsby, Mr. Bodkin, and Mr. Cork, appeared for the Crown. Mr. Parry was for the defence.

The Attorney-General briefly explained the nature of the charge against the defendant. The indictment contained two counts—the first charging him with sedition, and the second with being present at an unlawful assembly assembled for the purpose of exciting their hearers to outrage and violence. The defendant, he was instructed, was a person who filled a respectable position in society, and his proceedings in what appeared to be a public meeting were the subject of complaint of being placed in his present position, but should have passed before he acted in the manner that rendered him amenable to the law. The meeting at which the speech, of which he was delivered was held on the 26th of July, at the Mint-street Theatre, the day following the circulation of a report that there was an insurrection in Ireland, that some of the railway stations had been destroyed, and that the troops were disaffected, and under these circumstances, when the greatest excitement prevailed, the defendant made a speech to a meeting composed principally of the lower orders, comprising a great many Irishmen, smarting under the imagined wrongs of their country, and the effect upon such he apprehended they would not entertain any doubt as to the object for which it was delivered. He then read the speech at length. The meeting was convened by a placard, headed "Is Ireland to be free?" and was held upon the question of chairman. Among the portions of the speech of the defendant, dwelt upon by the Attorney-General as sustaining the charge of misdemeanour, were the following:—

> My friends, [illegible] and I verily believe it, that Ireland is to be free. Notwithstanding the garbled reports that we receive continually day by day, one every expense that is going on in order to delude the people of Ireland, [illegible] are sanguine that Ireland is up, and I believe that Ireland will do its duty to itself. The time has now arrived, when it is not to be supposed that the Irish people are afraid to look their enemies and Irishmen show it do up to do their duty. I have just received intelligence which I deeply regret, that one of our worthy colleagues, Meredith Hughes, a weighbourer, living in Bridge, Dublin, has been taken into custody, upon a charge of high treason, and, as soon as ever the Government can find out a pretext, they will murder him, as they murdered Smith O'Brien, they will murder him the same. However, I am glad to tell you that they have not got him yet, and I do believe that they will have nothing to do to take him, too. While Ireland is surrounded by 30,000 brave Irish hearts, the Government will have something to do to "shoot" him. I believe that the last thing we should think of would be to [illegible] upon the people. I do not believe there is one man who will advocate any such thing. But I sincerely hope to God that such is the fact, and the first drop that is shed in our own uniform or other wearing that lays a drop of Irish blood, or any other man that dares to vindicate the rights of his country, I trust that [illegible]
>
> Here (said the Attorney-General) the defendant stopped, and after observing that there were Government short-hand writers present, he did not finish the sentence, but there was no doubt that what he intended to have said was, that any person who attempted to apprehend the persons to whom he referred should be shot. The defendant then proceeded:—
>
> [illegible] and up! I would like to answer that in an Irish method, practised in this country, by putting another question. Is England up? If I was we are up, at all events we are up this night, my friends, to listen and be advised by those gentlemen who will presently address you. I do not believe there is one man who will advocate any thought but what is your best friend, consequently they will give you no bad advice. At the same time I think it is the duty of every man here to register the Government's vote, and I will never rest until both England and Ireland have obtained their rights
>
> [illegible] in Waddington has allowed to petitioning. I merely mention the fact to [illegible] rights, that is not the intention to petition any more. I believe so. I [illegible] that is one and several resolutions, but I hope and trust that you will present every man who is prepared, with his own petition. I have no patience with those sort of resolutions. I have no allegiance for such a Government as the Government of Ireland. I hold no allegiance to either Queen, Lords, or Commons that would do those things. I hope and trust that Irishmen will not be satisfied, and that Englishmen will also fraternize with them, by giving support for a repeal of the Union, but that you will never rest satisfied until they are out with one thundering voice, "Repeal or for ever!" I do not wish the Queen to visit Ireland, and I would call upon her to send a letter of recall to her Ambassador, Lord Clarendon, to the Queen, but I declare myself now, and in the presence of this meeting, I would be sorry that the noble and valiant Field-Marshal, Lord Clarendon, should be called to his task, and to Lord John Russell, too, express my unqualified opinion that the sooner we throw off the yoke of tyranny the better. I am a republican. My friends, we can bear this no longer, and would to God that every Englishman and Irishman would shake hands, as has been recommended, every man armed to the teeth.

The defendant concluded this portion of his address by saying, "Mind, I am not recommending you to arm—decidedly not." The Attorney-General read some other portions of the speech, and he contended that when the jury had heard the evidence before them, it would be their duty to say whether the speech came within the scope of fair, honest discussion, or whether it was not, as suggested by the indictment, intended to operate upon the persons who heard it, as a means of exciting them to acts of violence and disorder.

Mr. James White, the Government short-hand writer, was then called as a witness, and read from his notes the speech delivered by the defendant

Mr. Parry having addressed the jury for the defendant, and the Attorney-General having replied,

Mr. Justice Erle summed up very briefly, and the jury almost immediately returned a verdict of "Guilty" upon both counts. The defendant was then removed from the bar, the judgment being respited.

A bill against six of the Chartists was found by the grand jury, bringing true bills for felony and misdemeanour against each of the Chartist prisoners.

DUTIES AND PENALTIES UNDER THE HACKNEY CARRIAGE ACTS.—It is provided, by an Act passed on the 4th inst. (1 and 12 Vic., cap. 115), that every information for the recovery of penalties, &c., under the Hackney Carriage Acts, may be brought before the Commissioners of Excise or justices of the peace within six months after the commission of offences.

DESTRUCTION BY FIRE OF "VERNOVIGNETTE," THE SEAT OF THE HON. CAPTAIN HARRIS, M.P.—The total destruction by fire of "Vernovignette," the seat of the Hon. Captain E. A. J. Harris, M.P. for the borough of Carlisle, Hants, situate at Bocombe, between three and four miles distant from that town, took place on Thursday, last week. On that morning, about eight o'clock, an alarm was raised that a portion of some thatched roof near the kitchen was in flames, and ere means could be adopted to stay their progress the building was on fire at different points. It therefore appeared evident that little of the seat could be saved, as the nearest engines were stationed full two or three miles distant. The domestics exerted themselves to the utmost in preserving the furniture; they succeeded in saving nearly all that was valuable, but in the course of two or three hours the mansion itself was reduced to ashes, nothing remaining but the blackened walls. These appears to be little doubt that the fire was caused by a spark from the kitchen chimney being carried on to the thatched roof, where it is supposed it lay smouldering during the night, and burst forth as stated. The mansion and furniture are stated to be insured in the Phœnix Fire Office.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS FOR THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

The principal topic of the week has been the meeting of the Bank proprietors, in the purpose of declaring a dividend. A numerous attendance testified the anxiety which existed with regard to its amount. By the directors, it was proposed to reduce the dividend from 4½ to 4 per cent. for the half year. But this proposition having the first time of being submitted to the Court, received the larger amount, displayed no inclination to agree to the lesser. In [illegible] to larger dividend, it was urged that a Rest of three millions was ample for all purposes of security, and that the present holders of Bank Stock ought not to be expected to accumulate reserves for the benefit of "posterity." Mr. Samuel Jones Lloyd, with several other influential gentlemen, addressed the Court in a different direction. The Governor explained that the profit for the half-year had not attained 4½ per cent., in addition to which the market value of the various Government securities held by the Bank was at present depressed and any immediate increase of business did not appear probable. It was ultimately left for the ballot to decide the question.

The English Funds opened with steadiness on Monday, the only fluctuation during the day being a fall of ¼ per cent. in Consols, arising from some speculative sales. The closing quotations were 88½ to 88 for Money, and 88½ for Account. An advance of ¼ per cent. was registered on Tuesday; and on Wednesday intelligence arrived of great increase in the revenue, upon the receipt of intelligence that the Assembly at Frankfort had rescinded the veto upon the Danish armistice. Consols advanced to 89¾ for Money; but this improvement bringing sellers into the market, the closing price became 89½. On Thursday prices were firm, Consols [illegible] at 89¾ sellers, soon after going to 89¾ ⅝ for Account. The Money price was firm 89¾ to ⅝. Bank Stock being closed, no quotations can be made. Exchequer Bills have not materially varied, notwithstanding some large sales supposed to be made on Banking accounts. The closing quotations of the week were—Three per Cents. Consols Annuities, 89¼; India Bonds, £100a, 3½ p.; Consols for Account, Oct. 17, 89⅛; Exchequer Bills, £1000, March, 30 p.; £1000, June, 27 p.; £500, June, 29 p.; Small, June, 29 p.

The Foreign Market has been scarcely attended this week; fluctuations have, consequently, been only the difference between buyers and sellers. Dutch Stock is the only security in which an advance of about ¼ per cent. has been registered. In Russian Bonds the above was the nearest approximate—for Dutch, 57½; Buenos Ayres Bonds, 8ix per Cent., 21½; Mexican, Five per Cent., 1846, 16½; Portuguese, Five per Cent., 8½; Ditto, Four per Cent., 22; Russian Bonds, 90 ½; Spanish, Five per Cents., 1841, 11½; Ditto, Deferred, 3½; Ditto, Two-and Half per Cent., 12 Guild., 4½; Ditto, Four per Cent., Certificates, 71

Railway Shares have displayed some symptoms of reaction during the past week; and although the change is almost present to any great extent, still increased firmness in prices is apparent. The following quotations of actual bargains will best display the state of the Market:—Caledonian, 20½; Ditto New, £10 Pref., 21; East Anglia, £3 10s. Rail; Eastern Counties, 12½; Ditto, New, Guaranteed 5 per Cent., 5⅝; Ditto, Extension, 5 per Cent., No. 1, ¼ dis.; Edinburgh and Glasgow, Half Shares, 9¼ x. d.; Great Northern, 6; Great North of England, 225; Great Western, 77¾; Ditto, Half Shares, 44¾; Ditto, Fifteen and Wyre, 35; London and Blackwall, 4¼, Ditto, Extension, 8¾; London, Brighton, and South Coast, 27; London and Greenwich, 8¾; London and North-Western, 110; Ditto New, 6¾; Ditto, £10 (M. and B.), 15, 9¾; London and South-Western, 37¾; Midland, 84; Ditto, Consol. £50, 10¾; Ditto, ditto, Bristol and Birm., 6 per cent 116; North British, 18¾ x d.; Ditto, Quarters, 4¼; North Staffordshire, 8; Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton, 20¾; Royston and Hitchin, 1; South Eastern, No. 1, 14¾; South Wales, 9¾; York, Newcastle, and Berwick, 27; Ditto 1 xtension, No. 1, 14¾, Ditto, ditto, No. 2, 14¾; Ditto, Great Northern and Eastern Presences, 6¼; Ditto, Preference, 10; Paris and Amiens, 5½; Northern of France, 6½; Orleans and Bordeaux, 1; Paris and Lyons, 5; Paris and Rouen, 16½.

SATURDAY MORNING.—The English market was fluctuating. Consols closed at 89⅛ for Money and Account. In the Foreign and Share markets there was no alteration of importance.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE (Friday).—Although several runs of English wheat have been received for our market since Monday, the show of samples of that grain this morning was small; nevertheless there is no demand for all sorts, owing to the fall in the duty on foreign wheat, to 4s per quarter, even in a very sluggish state, and, where sales were pressed, rather lower prices than on Monday were submitted to. Barley and oats have varied little since this week. As the importers are now remaining their stocks for home consumption, the quantity on offer to-day was large. There was very little enquiry for any quality, and the trade in malt must be called a [illegible] quarter cheaper. For all kinds of barley the demand was in a very limited state and late rates were not supported. Scarcely any English barley was on show, sales for malt was extremely dull, and prices [illegible] per quarter. The best parcels of oats were quite as dear. Others were the out trade was dull. In beans, peas, Indian corn, and flour no alteration.

ARRIVALS.—English, wheat, 2680 [illegible] Irish, barley [illegible] oats, [illegible] 4,0, barley, 5,0 [illegible] 2,0 [illegible] 3,0 oats, 2,0 [illegible] 3,0 oats, 2,0 [illegible] 3,0 oats,

THE SALE AT STOWE.

In our Journal of September 2 the State Bedstead is set down as purchased by Mr. Walesby, for 51 guineas; whereas it cost him 86 guineas. An engraving of this costly Bedstead will be found among our Illustrations of the Royal Visit to Stowe, in 1845.

The interest attached to the sale has scarcely any precedent; and, as a record of the result, immediately after the close of the sale, there will be published the catalogue, with the names of the purchasers, and the price of each lot; and anecdotes illustrative of the historic rarities.

THE ENGRAVINGS.

Our Illustrations comprise, this week, some of the pieces of furniture of historic as well as artistic interest, and also a representation of the beautiful naval column in the gardens at Stowe, called the Grenville Column. This latter is, perhaps, the best of all the architectural enrichments of the gardens, which generally, as we have before observed, are of poor design and character. Surrounding this view of the column is a border composed of the frame to a very beautiful toilet-glass, of the time of Queen Anne, and, indeed, which probably belonged to that monarch. The frame is composed of tortoise-shell, and ornamented with ormolu; and under the canopy at top is a medallion, having a full-length portrait of the Queen in relief upon it; while the oval compartments at the sides and bottom of the glass contain small paintings of vases surrounded by curtains, &c. This is a very beautiful specimen of the decorative furniture of Queen Anne's time. Beneath this illustration we give a group of furniture, the principal object in which is the travelling organ of King James the Second. The organ is of small size, being but six feet nine inches high, and about five feet wide by two feet and a half in depth. Our Illustration shows the front of the organ as ready for the player; that is, a glazed window which can be elevated or lowered (in the latter case shutting up the instrument), is represented as thrown up. The stops of the organ are the following:—fifteenth-bass, sesquialtra, twelfth-bass, trumpet, fifteenth-treble, cornet, twelfth-treble, and stop-diapason. The notes, ranged in two rows, are 43 in number, the lowest having black, the upper white keys. The false pipes to the front are merely flat pieces of wood, painted to resemble pipes, gilded, and ornamented with arabesques, and above and below them are some pieces of pierced carving of good design. The case of the organ is painted a dull red colour, the mouldings to the panels and frames to the windows being gilded, as is also the carved fruit and foliage, and architectural enrichments in the frieze and other parts of the organ.

The brief notice of this historical relique, given in the catalogue, is as follows:—James the Second's organ, used in his camp on Hounslow Heath. After the revolution, it was conveyed to Lord Wharton's seat at Minchenden, and purchased by Mr. Grenville at the sale of the effects there.

The Table represented in the foreground of the Engraving possesses more claims to notice from its history than for its beauty, as it was given by George Villiers, Duke of Buckingham, to the profligate Countess of Shrewsbury. The ornamental enrichments to the top of the table are most exquisitely designed and carried out, as is also the pattern round the frame of the table, and the stretcher between the legs; and we imagine, from the delicacy of the workmanship, that the silver portion of the table is the work of either French or German artists. The legs of the table are wretchedly meagre in character, and are of light wood stained to look like ebony.

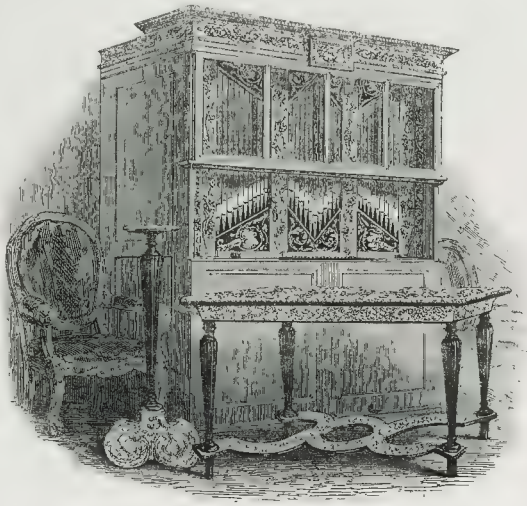
The tall stand with the tapering shaft, for holding a vase of flowers, possesses many characteristics of the table—such as the style of ornamentation, &c.; and from this resemblance we imagine most probably it graced the Countess of Shrewsbury's apartments at Avington. The base and enrichments at the top are covered with thick plates of silver, richly wrought—the shaft being merely of stained wood.

The two other subjects we have engraved are two figures (from a set of four), exquisite carvings in yew-tree, personifying the four quarters of the globe. The two we have selected are Asia and Africa; and the elegance of the design, richness of detail, and vigour of execution, are alike remarkable: the attributes of each being exquisitely varied in arrangement and character. The two figures we have not represented are Europe and America: the former being sculptured as a fisherman offering a handful of fish for sale; the latter in the usual style in which an American Indian (or, rather, a native of Virginia) is portrayed. All of these figures are designed as holding baskets on their heads, and thus serve as pedestals either for lights or beautiful specimens of Sèvres porcelain. The figures, we presume, were sculptured about a hundred years since.

In the Manuscript Library at Stowe were some beautiful chairs made of ebony which once graced Fonthill, and some of the chairs, tradition asserts, belonged to Cardinal Wolsey. We should not, however, ourselves consider those so traditionally honoured as of so old a date; but they are evidently of Oriental workmanship, whilst their companions, from the style of decoration, show their European origin. In general character, these chairs bear great resemblance to a couple in the Ashmolean Museum, at Oxford, and were given to Elias Ashmole by King Charles II.; and, from this general similarity, we should presume them to be of like age.

TOILET-GLASS FRAME, TEMP. QUEEN ANNE; AND VIEW OF THE GRENVILLE COLUMN, AT STOWE.

YEW TREE STAND.—ASIA.



TRAVELLING ORGAN OF KING JAMES II.—TABLE GIVEN BY GEORGE VILLIERS, DUKE OF BUCKINGHAM, TO THE COUNTESS OF SHREWSBURY.—FLOWER-STAND FROM AVINGTON.

YEW TREE STAND.—AFRICA.

THE IRISH INSURRECTION.

THE renewed outbreak in Ireland appears to have been strongest in the county of Tipperary, where the main body of the rebels are believed to have been 4000 strong, encamped on Ahony Hill, but immediately adjoining the Slate Quarries. The position is an extremely strong one: the peasantry were drilled daily; they were chiefly armed with pikes, but many had rifles. The commissariat was regularly supplied by the neighbouring farmers, who sent in cattle and other provisions, knowing that otherwise they would have to surrender them. At about 4 o'clock, P.M., on the 12th inst., a detachment from the camp proceeded to the Police Barracks of the Slate Quarries, which the constabulary had only quitted about twenty minutes previously to take refuge at Piltown. The insurgents at some distance from the house fired through the windows; but finding that there was not any person within, they soon took possession of it, and ultimately set it on fire, reducing the entire dwelling and furniture to ashes. It was rumoured that all the surrounding constabulary stations were attacked, and that in some cases the police were disarmed, whilst in others the men had fortunately quitted their barracks previously, and retired upon Carrick and Clonmel.

POLICE BARRACK AT AHENY-HILL, BURNT BY THE INSURGENTS.

We have received from a Correspondent the accompanying Sketch of the scene of the above incendiarism.

LOUIS BLANC.

LOUIS BLANC was born at Madrid, on the 28th October, 1813. His grandfather and uncle died on the scaffold in the Revolution; and his father, a rich merchant, was actually incarcerated and on the point of sharing a like fate, when, by the intervention of a friend, he contrived to make his escape in female attire. After many dangers and adventures, having regained a considerable fortune, he proceeded to Corsica, where he married Mdlle. Estelle Pozzo di Borgo; and shortly after was appointed Inspector-General of Finance at Madrid, under Joseph Buonaparte, by the Comte Ferri Pisani, the uncle of his wife, and son-in-law of the Marechal Jourdan. Here Monsieur Louis Blanc and his brother Charles were born. At the age of seven, he was sent to be educated at the College of Rhodez, where his progress was so remarkable that at fifteen his education was entirely completed; and, having attained the highest honours, he repaired to Paris, where his father—who had experienced the most severe reverses of fortune—then was, and where his mother had died a short time previously. Finding his only parent, whom misfortune and distress had reduced to the most melancholy prostration of mind and body, entirely dependent on the Comte Ferri Pisani, who himself had not escaped in the general confusion of affairs, he resolved to accept any employment by which he might obtain an honourable subsistence for his father and himself. He entered the office of an attorney of the Cour Royale, and in his leisure hours gave lessons in mathematics. With some difficulty, on account of his extreme youth, and even childish appearance, he succeeded in obtaining the place of tutor to the son of a celebrated mechanician at Arras; there he made the acquaintance of M. Frederic Degeorge, editor of the Journal du Progrès du Pas de Calais, in which paper he wrote some remarkable articles. At the University of Arras he competed successfully for three prizes offered, viz. for the best essay in verse on the "Hôtel des Invalides," for an "Eloge de Mirabeau," and an "Eloge de Mannel." He then returned to Paris, and having written some articles for a paper entitled Le Bon Sens, and presented them without other introduction to MM. Rodde and Cauchois Lemaire, the editors of that journal, they were so struck with the unusual ability displayed in them, that they immediately gave him a regular engagement on the paper; and, on the retiring of M. Cauchois Lemaire, which was at no great interval followed by the death of M. Rodde, the collaborateurs of M. Louis Blanc wrote in a body to the proprietor of the journal, M. Lefebvre Meuret, a rich Belgian senator, to request that he would place M. Louis Blanc at the head of the paper. To this, however, his youth again offered an obstacle; and, in order to satisfy the forms of the public, M. Martin Maillefer (afterwards principal editor of the National) was appointed as his colleague. Owing, however, to a disagreement with the proprietor, M. Martin Maillefer withdrew before very long; and at nineteen M. Louis Blanc found himself sole editor of one of the most important journals of France. Here it was that M. Louis Blanc first laid the basis of the system which he has since so ably developed in his writings, and which, then entirely new, has made so great a progress in France as to determine one of the most striking characteristics of the Revolution of February. One of the most remarkable traits in this journal (while under the superintendence of M. Louis Blanc) was the spirit of independence which influenced it—whether with regard to the predominant interests or the reigning ideas; and his firmness and disinterestedness are best proved by his having quitted the paper because his desire to sustain the principle of the execution of railroads by the State was opposed by M. Lefebvre Meuret, who was interested in their execution by companies. Such was the esteem and affection that M. Louis Blanc inspired among his collaborateurs in the Bon Sens, that, on his leaving it, he was followed by every one connected with it. He then founded La Revue du Progrès, in which the members of the democratic party, such as François Arago, Lamennais, Cormenin, George Sands, &c., wrote, and which contributed more powerfully than any other means to the constitution of the Republican party. It was in the Revue du Progrès that M. Louis Blanc published a series of articles on the Organisation of Labour, which produced so deep a sensation, that, on their being collected in a book, the sale of 20,000 copies has not exhausted their success. The labours of journalism not being sufficient to occupy the intellectual activity of M. Louis Blanc, he formed the bold resolution of writing the history of his time; and, notwithstanding the most strenuous attempts of his friends to dissuade him from a project likely to bring upon him a host of enemies, cuels, and persecutions of all sorts, he persisted in his plan, and in the "Histoire de Dix Ans" carried it out with such singular success, that the book has not called forth a single refutation, notwithstanding that it was written with the most unsparing boldness. The last work of M. Louis Blanc is the "History of the French Revolution," of which but two volumes have yet appeared.

The part which, throughout his career, M. Louis Blanc has taken in defence of the rights of the people, naturally placed him in a most conspicuous situation in the late Revolution.

MAIL-COACH GUARDS.—The mail guards are rapidly diminishing in number. There are not above 200 in England, Wales, and Scotland. A small batch of them have very recently been compelled to accept of the gratuity of £200 allowed them by the Treasury, and leave the service. These were all juniors, who had not been in the Post-Office service ten years; some of these have been offered, and have accepted, the situations of postmen. It is now intended to induce some of the senior guards to retire from the service upon a superannuation allowance of 7s.6d. a week. The guards, however, are about to petition the Postmaster-General for a higher scale of allowance. It appears that formerly, when mail guards became aged and infirm, they used to be appointed to situations where the duties were easy, upon full salaries; and, when they were really obliged to retire from the service altogether, 7s. 6d. a week was considered a sufficient pension. The Treasury scale of wages for mail guards is £70 a year for those who have been in the service under three years; £105 for those who have been in between three and ten years; £115 between ten and fifteen years; and £130 above fifteen years. When a guard is laid up through illness, he only gets 10s. 6d. a week; and when temporarily out of employment, through the cessation of a mail-coach, he is obliged to perform duties in the London Post-Office for 12s. a week. It appears that, with the exception of a single instance, no guard was ever convicted of a breach of trust while performing his duties.

POSTAL ARRANGEMENTS BETWEEN GREAT BRITAIN AND THE UNITED STATES.—We are pleased to learn that a letter has been received here from the American Legation in London, giving strong assurance that the basis of an international postage law with Great Britain has been agreed upon, leaving only the minor details to be settled; and we hope in a short time to be able to announce the adjustment of all differences on these insignificant matters, and that the mail arrangements between the two countries are placed upon a more liberal foundation than they have ever before occupied.—New York Shipping List, Aug. 30.

PORTRAIT OF LOUIS BLANC, BY THE COUNT D'ORSAY.

THE PROGRESS OF A BILL.

BY W. BLANCHARD JERROLD

ILLUSTRATED BY KENNY MEADOWS

(Continued from page 174.)

CHAPTER III.

MRS. PURSEY ASSERTS A WIFE'S PREROGATIVE — MR. PURSEY ENTERTAINS MR. JULIUS MACFUM

OLD Solomon obeyed the injunctions of his master to the letter; and, as this piece of antiquated hideousness surveyed the weak points of Mrs. Pursey's establishment, and noted the internal economy of her household, a sneer played upon his lip, for he foresaw no demand upon his cunning—inasmuch as the place was extremely easy of access.

Though in her "heart of hearts" Mrs. Pursey was delighted with Mr. Macfum's kind present, and particularly with the wine, she did not feel entirely satisfied as to the rectitude of the donor's character. He was certainly very gentlemanly in his manners, and very good-looking, and, above all, evidently accustomed to high female society (he paid many compliments to Mrs. Pursey); but she could not dislodge from her mind a certain "she knew not what," that made her very uncomfortable. She believed that she was not generally a suspicious person; far from it; but in this case she must say, she had her doubts. Henry might mark her words, and see whether or not she was right in her suspicions. All she would say to her husband was, "Beware." It is indisputable that women are more suspicious than men. How is this to be accounted for? Are they generally of a less generous disposition; or is it the greater acuteness of their sympathies, that enables them to discern with a quicker gaze the scoundrel beneath the bland shipments of a dandy man of honour, or to read hypocrisy where blinder man reads consummate virtue?

The visitors who honoured the Purseys with their company unanimously declared that the two Wilsons were the finest specimens of that master it had ever been their good fortune to behold. At last Henry's vanity was so tickled by this inordinate praise of his friend's presents, that he caused two lamps to be made to throw a light upon the rich browns and greens of the flattered Buggins

The fine fruity port that had been in bottle some twenty years, to the certain knowledge of Mr. Macfum (though old Solomon, who helped to bottle it, had been in the employ of Mr. Moss but eighteen months), was proudly treasured by Henry Pursey. In short, Pursey declared the filthy concoction manufactured by the Jew attorney to be the finest wine he had ever tasted, and he flattered himself he had swallowed some good wine in his time. His heart bounded with gratitude towards Macfum. It was flattering to his self-love that he should have awakened so instantaneous and sincere a friendship as that which it was very evident Macfum entertained for him; and he forthwith requested his wife to confine her disgraceful suspicions to her own bosom, and if she could not think as she ought to think, at least to treat his friend with the utmost courtesy whenever he might honour them with a visit. The wife, as in duty bound, promised to obey the commands of her husband, though, as she affirmed with some pertinacity, she still had her doubts. To show his utter disregard of his wife's suspicions, as well as to parade his most excellent wine, Pursey determined to bring all the resources of his diminutive establishment into requisition, and give a select dinner party, to consist of Macfum and two or three of his (Pursey's) young associates. It was in vain that Mrs. Pursey urged the absence of a fish-kettle, and the utter inefficiency of the kitchen-range for the purpose. Henry was firm in his resolve—he would give the dinner. Whereupon (to do Mrs. Pursey justice) the little woman busied herself making the necessary preparations, shaping their slender means to the end in view with a skill worthy of Miss Gobbet. Macfum deferred to the advice of his generous friend, but made up his mind to uncork a dozen of his port at least on the occasion. He took care, however, out of deference to Macfum's suggestion, to provide some light claret, so that his generous friend might indulge his preference. The party was to consist of six persons only, and on the day appointed for the festivity poor little Mrs. Pursey was in a fever of excitement. In the early part of the day she was in a desperate state of anxiety lest the man she had hired to wait should disappoint her: then there was the chance of the salmon breaking; and then who could tell?—the chimney might catch fire. In short, she was heard to declare to a female friend afterwards, that she would not bear so heavy a responsibility again for all she could think of. Tet maternal responsibilities in no way pressed heavily upon this lady's mind. She must have been oddly educated.

MR. PURSEY ENTERTAINS MR. JULIUS MACFUM.

Pursey's four ordinary associate were punctual to the dinner hour. As they declared unanimously on their way to Chelsea, "they were always in time for a feed." Mr. Macfum, however, impressed the company with a sense of his importance, after the fashion of most lions, by keeping the dinner waiting for half an hour. This delay on the part of Macfum was never forgiven by Mrs. Pursey. Take this for a general rule—a man who has once kept a lady's dinner waiting for the space of half an hour, has lost her favour irrevocably.

Pursey's dinner passed off very quietly. With the dessert came the famous port. Macfum begged to be allowed to keep his wine-glass, as he had been recommended to drink no other wine, and very little of that. Pursey examined his friend, and passed the bottle on to his other guests, severally assuring them that they would find that port no common wine. They were all young men. They accepted the proffered port as of the very finest vintage, and tried to persuade themselves that they liked it.

Macfum drank them scarcely, and was pleased to find that they agreed with him in calling the wine in question a very fine glass of port.

"Danced fine upon my honour, Pursey," said Mr. Augustus Foxon, a young man with an indifferent moustache and a lisp. "The beswewing is perfect."

"My idea of a fine port, exactly," declared Mr. Arthur Murton. "There's a fine flavour of the wood." Mr. Murton's distinguishing characteristics were a love of the Brixton style of hair-cropping, and a weakness in favour of French women.

"It's a nice dry wine—not too sweet," thought Mr. Muskey, whose mind was wholly absorbed in an unceasing contemplation of his symmetrical proportions. "Though I'm always afraid of port—it's apt to discolour my face."

And Mr. Alma could not appreciate the wine, inasmuch as his mouth was out of taste—his tongue rough. Thus the five young men drank from Pursey's pet bin; and, such is the force of imagination or blind ignorance of youth, they conceived that they were imbibing the very choicest vintage. Macfum made a study of this scene, for it was pregnant with a hopeful lesson to him. It was strong evidence of the gullibility of human nature, and the moral he drew from it was to this effect: If you wish to dazzle a young man, you should spend to his judgment without allowing him to exercise it. Thus, you would say to him, "The best judges have pronounced the port to be an exquisite wine: I give it to you, for I know you are a judge of these matters." He will then drink the most execrable stuff, and declare it to be of first-rate quality. You have appealed to his judgment, and forestalled it by giving the decision of the highest authorities on the question. An old man will not be cajoled in this way. When you have to deal with a man of the world that is to say, with one who is used to the pettiness, the chicanery, and the vice of the world—for in the estimation of most men he is but a poor simpleton or an unnatural monster who does not go the grosser phases of life—you must appeal directly to his judgment, accept it as final, and, moreover, thank him for it.

The young men, though they vowed that they had seldom tasted so fine a wine, were particularly abstemious while any of it remained upon the table. At first they smacked their lips as they sipped it, and passed the bottle about merrily; but very soon their "natural effervescent" cooled, and they sedately cursed to the claret-jug. Macfum noted this effect of Moss' concoction, and chuckled thereat. Macfum had a marvellous contempt for human nature, a contempt resulting from long study of its many failings. If you would dazzle a young man, Macfum, to his thinking, were but so many chess-men: life, the chess-board. Now the king held all in check; now the castle frowned defiance on the king; and now, in desperate straits, the king's refuge lurked in a pawn. And Macfum, in his complacent judgment, believed himself to be the Staunton of the game—the subtle player who could turn the tables upon his foe, in spite of the most confounding disadvantages. He felt sure that if any one of the five young men about his little finger, as the saying runs; and so, in the plenitude of his own power, he contemplated their moral weakness their forlorn gullibility, and pitied them.

The party over, the commotion in Mrs Pursey's establishment gradually subsided, and again the tide of time rippled on quiescently.

In the first flush of wedded happiness, Henry had given his wife permission to open his letters: he now repented of this generosity. Macfum had lately persuaded him to rescind the absurd license, if he wished to lead a happy life Macfum urged that it was the only refuge left to a man who has given up his implicit confidence, but that men of the world knew that it was impossible for any length of time. "Suppose, for instance," said Macfum, "I want you to join me in a visit to Middle Dellaford, to which you object, how can I know what you will wipe opens your letters? The thing is impossible. And—hang it! when we want to have a jolly night, how are you to be got at, if your wife sees all your letters? For heav'n's sake, as well as for your own, withdraw that license."

Pursey, accordingly, ventured one morning to suggest that, as he did not see the letters that came to his wife, he thought she should restrain herself from opening his. To this proposition the wife replied that her husband was perfectly welcome to see every line she received, and that it was his own fault if he did not; and that, as she had always opened his letters Minerva, she should do for the future. Henry met this assertion with a positive command that letters be delivered to him unopened. This provoked a truly conjugal dialogue, and the two parted with mutual assurances of profound hatred. The boom of Mrs. Pursey heaved with indignation, and, having turned the matter over in her mind, she came to the conclusion that she had never been so grossly insulted before, that she had made a wretched mistake in selecting for a husband the man whose hated name she bore. And then her thoughts turned to Pursey the lover, to Henry Pursey the devout worshipper at her feet, and she wept, and wished their courtship would come back again: she would be very good to him, unpack her wedding garments, and cried over them, and thought of the day when she pronounced the fatal "I will." Presently a postman's knock resounded through the house, and Mrs. Pursey dried her eyes in the second. Then came upon her a fluttering and trembling her right to open her husband's letters—at least some semblance of his past confidence should yet be had.

The letter was marked immediate, and ran as follows:—

"MY DEAR HARRY.—I wish to see you immediately on the most important business. The Overland Mail is in, and by it I have a letter from my uncle: the dilatory old ruffian excuses himself from sending any remittance per this post, and promises a double supply by the next. This is most unfortunate, inasmuch as the bill to which you were kind enough to attach your name for me becomes due the day after to-morrow. You know me too well to imagine that I would allow any harm to come to you if I could possibly prevent it. Really, one cannot place the least confidence in relations; they are so deuced crotchety. Pray meet me to-morrow at Perkins's. I think I can arrange matters to our mutual satisfaction. Excuse haste, as I have many calls to make, and rather than allow you to be saddled with my bill, I am, as ever, dear Harry

"To Henry Pursey, Esq. "JULIUS MACFUM.

"I would not mention the matter to Mrs. Pursey. Women do not understand these matters. Perhaps it is a great blessing that they do not.—J. M."

Mrs. Pursey had but the most indistinct notion of the nature of a bill. All she did know upon the subject was that it was some awful instrument that worried men to death. She now fully appreciated Henry's reasons for withdrawing his confidence from her; and she made up her mind to this, namely, that to mutual life confidence and truth are synonymous, and that secretiveness foreshadows wrong.

(To be continued.)

THE GROTTO AT OATLANDS PARK.

At eleven miles and a half from the metropolis the South-Western Railway crosses the beautiful domain of Oatlands, which has been a place of celebrity for some three centuries and a half. One of its noble possessors, Henry, Duke of Newcastle, enlarged the park, made great plantations, formed an ornamental piece of water, and constructed a Grotto at a cost, it is said, of £40,000. The property lies in the parish of Weybridge, at about half a mile from the railway station; and advantage has been taken of this locality, by consent of the present proprietors of the estate, to render the Grotto tributary to a charitable purpose. Yesterday (Friday), this curious work of art was opened for exhibition—the proceeds of which are to be appropriated to the support of the Parochial Schools; and the exhibition will be continued through to-day (Saturday).

The railway ride is pleasant enough. Our agreeable companion, Felix Summerly, says: "Weybridge offers scenery more varied than any other spot within the same distance from the metropolis. Hills almost as steep as mountains at the south of the line—the park of Oatlands—meadows towards Chertsey—the Thames, ever sparkling, musical, peaceful, yet animating Years of acquaintance have not exhausted its beauties, or made them stale."

Below the brow of the terrace, nearly in the middle of Oatlands Park, is the scene sheet of water, chiefly supplied by the ground springs; and, from the judicious management exercised in its formation, it is made to appear as though connected with the Thames, and crossed in the distance by Walton Bridge. A delightful walk through the shrubbery leads to the romantic Grotto we have mentioned and illustrated. It was constructed by three persons (a father and his two sons), who are reported to have been employed in the work several years. It consists of several apartments and passages, of the most elaborate execution: the walls and vaultings of the lower passages mislead various devices with coloured spars, and minerals, and shells; the lower parts wholly composed of coral rock, united with wonderful skill. The upper room has a dome of some height, and here the artificial stalactites, formed of satin spar, are of a large size, and made to depend with extreme art and elegance from the roof. In this room are fine specimens of cornelians, cockles, cones, and minerals. It was here that George IV., when Prince of Wales, entertained his select friends with a sumptuous supper. Here also are preserved the Chinese chairs, the covers of the cushions of which were worked by the hands of the lamented Duchess of York, who in this beautiful apartment used to spend great part of her time. Round about—seen the tombs of her favourite dogs: all of whom, to the number of 60 or 60, have their separate monumental tablets; whilst to "Julia" and others, especial favourites, complimentary verses are inscribed. In the bath-room is the fine copy in statuary marble, life-size, of the Venus of the Baths, and a terra-cotta of the Infant Hercules. In the hermitage is a terra-cotta of the Struggling Faun, and a fine statue of Ceres, carved in wood. There is, also, an assuarium from Pompeii, and a seat formed with inlaid marble from the mausoleum of Akbar Khan at Agra. At the entrance to the upper room is a specimen of bronze coral, of remarkable dimensions.

The Grotto is a magnificent work of its kind; and in the last century, when such things were greatly admired, it must have been much admired: it is, however, in too recoco taste to afford high gratification in the present day.

Oatlands first became a Royal property in 1538, when Henry VIII. received it in exchange for the Lordship manor and estates in this county. Queen Elizabeth was at Oatlands in 1599: and again in 1603, when she is said to have shot with a cross-bow in the paddock. Anne of Denmark, consort of James I., was also some time resident at Oatlands, and had an apartment erected here, called the silkworm room. Charles I. granted the estate for life to his Queen Henrietta Maria; and their youngest son, Henry, created Duke of Gloucester, was born here in 1640, and here styled Henry of Oatlands. In Manning and Bray's "Surrey" is a bird's-eye view of the palace as it appeared "about the time of Queen Elizabeth," presenting a curious assemblage of embattled gateways, octagonal towers, gable roofs, and very numerous chimneys. Most of these buildings were destroyed, and the land was disparked, during the Interregnum; but, after the restoration of Charles II., the Queen Dowager regained possession of Oatlands, in the aforesaid state of dilapidation

ADVERTISEMENTS.

ASTLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRI. — Proprietor, Mr W BATTY. Last Week but One of the Season.—Arrangements having been made for the company to appear at Edinburgh —Crowded houses to witness "Astopia," which has been produced with all its original effects. Triumphant career of Miss ROSALIND BRUT 35, the performance will . . . . . Quarter to Seven precisely, with Le d Ry . . . . . Spectacle of MAZEPPA, or, the Wild Horse of Tartary . . . . . Scenes of the Circle, introducing the talented artistes of this . . . . . Institution. To conclude with the Extravaganza Burlesque of LADY . . . . . and PEEPING TOM of COVENTRY —Box-offices open from Eleven till Five Stage Manager, Mr. W Wo . . . . .

CREMORNE.—STARTLING NOVELTY.—The FIRST of the AUTUMNAL FETES on a scale of extended splendour will take place on MONDAY next, Sept. 25, when, at six o'clock precisely, will be exhibited the most extraordinary and exciting novelty ever presented On this occasion, in addition to the beauty of the grounds and the manifold attractions of Cremorne, many auxiliaries will be employed, so as to render the fete the most brilliant of the season Gymnastic Feats on the Lawn Grand Vocal and Instrumental Concert.—New Ballet, "Jeannette and Jeannot" First appearance of Mr. J. F. Bailey, the inimitable Burlesque Player and Delineator of Negro Life and Character.—Silvani's Troupe of Acrobats Mr E. Green, the Scotch Sprite &c. The new covered promenade 400 feet in length, will be thrown open. Quadrilles to commence at eight. Magnificent illumination and grand pyrotechnic display Doors to be open at 4 and 5 o'clock. Admission to the entire entertainments 1s

LAURENT'S CASINO, ROYAL ADELAIDE GALLERY, Strand.—Open Every Evening during the Week.—Brilliant Success.—Vocal and Instrumental CONCERT, Band of Performers, selected from the orchestras of Her Majesty's Theatre, the Royal Italian Opera, and the Philharmonic Society, under the direction of Mr. Laurent, jun., who, during a recent tour, made arrangements for the immediate transit of his leading musical novelties. The music for the Ball will, perhaps, be a selection never before performed in this country Mr. Laurent's Grand Monster Orchestra. Admission, 1s. Doors open at 7, commences at half-past. Refreshments and Saloons furnished in the first style.

THE ROYAL CHINESE JUNK . . . KEYING, manned by a Chinese Crew — This most interesting Exhibition, which has been just "pronounced the most wonderful in Europe," has been visited by her Majesty the Queen, all the Royal Family, and an immense number of persons, including nearly all the nobility and gentry of distinction in London. The "Keying" is now open for Exhibition, from Ten to Six, in the East India Docks, adjoining the Blackwall Railway and steam-boat Pier, Blackwall. Admission, ONE SHILLING. Junk Tickets, including fare and admission, are issued by the Blackwall and Eastern Counties Railways. Conveyances also by Omnibus, and by Steam-boat from the Piers between Westminster and Woolwich, fare 6d. Catalogues obtainable only on board, price 6d

ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION. An entirely NEW PHANTASMAGORIA, by CHILDE, on a magnificent scale, for the MIDSUMMER HOLIDAYS and Autumnal Evenings, in addition to various other Optical Effects. The Pepys Explosion by Allsop stress explained and illustrated by Dr. Ryan; also the new Patent Gas Apparatus of Stephen Wade, Esq. A Lecture on the History, Uses, and Manufacture of Gutta Percha, by Dr Bachhoffner. Diver and Diving Bell. Working Models explained. Admission, 1s; Schools, Half-price. New Catalogue, 1s.

THE GROTTO in OATLANDS-PARK will be opened on the 23rd and 30th inst., for the Benefit of the WESTBURNE, the PAROCHIAL SCHOOLS and HOSPITAL of Stanhope, a mile from the Weybridge Station of the South-Western Railway Trains leave the Waterloo-bridge Station at 10m. past 10, 30m. past 12, 30m. past 2, and 30m. past 4, and return from Weybridge at 55m. past 8, at 4, 37 min. past 5 and 4.1m. past 8—Tickets, 2s each, to admit two persons, or three children under ten years (of which a limited number will be issued), to be had at the Schools Weybridge, and of Messrs. Graves, 6, Pall-mall. The Grotto is said to have cost the Duke of Newcastle £10 000

PIANOFORTES, the first of every description, New and Second-hand, Foreign and English, for SALE or HIRE, at CRAMER, BEALE, and Co.'s, 201, Regent-street.

PIANOFORTES, by MOORE and Co.— The finest Pianofortes, with all the latest improvements, at manufacturing prices, are to be had at J. and H. MOORE and Co.'s, 104, Bishopsgate-street Within. A great stock of second-hand pianofortes of 15 guineas to 15 guineas. N B A short credit allowed if desired

PEACHEY'S PIANOFORTE ESTABLISHMENT Under patronage of Her Majesty the Queen's Royal Family, the Queen Dowager, the Archduchess Sophia of Austria, the Princess Wasrourou, 74, Bolsograde-Street Within, opposite the Marine Society. An assortment of One Hundred Pianofortes for HIRE or SALE in Town or Country (at the lowest possible prices for instruments that really can be WARRANTED), and double their value if not approved of. A second-hand Pianoforte by every Compasiteur of the most celebrated manufactories, also, a short and easy introduction to Harmony and Counterpoint, and a series of Lectures on the Art and Science of Music by the late J AUGUSTINE WADE

Published at CHAPPELL'S Music Warehouse, New Bond-s reet, and by WHITTAKER and Co., Ave Maria-lane.

AN ELEGANT PRESENT.

THE ILLUSTRATED NEW TESTAMENT. (AUTHORISED VERSION.)

Beautifully bound in leather embossed and gilt sides, gilt edges, with Five Hundred Engravings, Half-a-Crown With Six Splendid Engravings from Drawings executed by Eminent Artists expressly for this Edition, Three Shillings and Sixpence. Handsomely and unbelished by a novel Panoramic Picture of the Holy Land and Jerusalem, presenting at one view the principal sites and places mentioned in the Old and New Testaments, executed in a style fire reference

THE ILLUSTRATED NEW TESTAMENT contains some find bold and sing ular ve hatches. Much text has been shown in the choice of subjects and many which have been set down, plentifully used up, are treated with originality of conception."—Daily News.

A pictorial work conducted by the spirit f the well-known proprietors of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, and deserved we doubt not, to attain a wide circulation —Morning Herald.

A daring originality, and flushed with a bolder style than is common, make them immensely attractive —Weekly Times.

London Published at the Office of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, 198, Strand, and sold by all Booksellers

COMPLETION OF THE WORK.

Now ready, price 7s. 6d.,

THE HISTORY and ART of WOOD ENGRAVING, CONTAINING AN INTERESTING ACCOUNT OF THE ART OF WOOD ENGRAVING FROM THE EARLIEST PERIOD. BY W. J. CHATTO.

With Fac-similes of curious Specimens of Ancient Wood Engraving; and a Treatise on the Practice of the Art, by JOHN JACKSON.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS,

And exhibit the progress of the art in the establishment of Wood Engraving by Drayton Minor (G Dodson) View near Folkestone (Clint)

Orwell Cottage (Linton) A Tale of the Wars (J. Jenkins)

Portrait of Hemmings (Wright) Gordon Scotus (Watteau)

Newby Bridge (Cuitt) Lowther with Brougham Castle (Cuitt)

Hampton Court Palace (W. L. Walton) Arundel (Duncan)

Sebastopol (Bellin) Shakespeare Gallery—Anne Hathaway's Cottage

Cobourg and Rhenish-bridge (Dore Schaeffer) Lear (R. R. Reinagle)

Prince Albert) Clarence Walk (F. Danby, A.R.A.)

Windsor Castle (Cuitt) The National Trait (W. Harvey)

This Work is printed in the most careful manner, upon a warm-tinted wove paper, and the wood engravings, a character of which is enhances the beauty of the Engravings. Now complete in Four Parts, 2s. each.

Published at W. LITTLE'S 198, Strand; and sold by all Booksellers.

THE LILY AND THE ROSE.—From the graceful pencil of KENNY MEADE. Engraved in the first style of Art, by that celebrated Engraver, W. WILLMORE.

The design represents two lovely girls in interest ally grouped, surrounded by the choicest flowers in full bloom. The great merit of this print cannot fail to charm admirers of female classes, or to all forth the approval of critical taste.

The design of the artist is to typify two flowers, 'the Lily and the Rose,' as emblematic of Beauty—Beauty in the Rose is characterised or personified by a coy maiden, who is tempting a bee out of one well the voracious chalice of a flower; while an opposite brother is seeking the honey-dew from the more delicate beauty of the floral incarnation, which is a specimen of proffered guessing beauty—"nods, and becks, and wreathed smiles," such as poets and painters love to exalt into their genius. The figure is in part concealed by a rose-bush, richly laden with large and fragrant flowers, a character of which is admirably relieved by the maiden's black hair. The Lily, the Queen of flowers, is typified by a maiden of more intellectual expression than her companion—both equal but opposite beauties. The pensive cast of the features of the latter is admirably contrasted with the joyful air of the lower figure. The graceful form of the wreathed lily, is a study for artists, as well as the contour of the fair form it encircles, and the bright flowers are relieved by the dark butterflies, or shine with vivacity where in the shade a dark hue The tint of its distance, too, is cleverly executed, with the title-line in letters of rich fancy, engraved by a bright butterfly as emblems to render it a most charming production.—ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

A most delightfully elegant and graceful design from the pencil of Mr. Meade, whose vicious [illegible] has a most extensive scope. The flowers—dearest of all flowers to [illegible] touched by the painter with skill and the happiest effects, but the title refers more emphatically to two fair girls, about whose delicate forms the butterfly plays with delight The Rose is full and fair-child, playing with a butterfly, the Lily, a maiden moving into womanhood, and more sedate and staid than that of her gay and joyous sister. The artist has produced a page of true poetry, his mind as full of rich fancies; now and then he indulges in the grotesque, but more often in those refined delineates of thought that prove his genius fitted for the refined pursuits in art. This very charming print is an example of an high ability to call forth topics as far removed from the "com monplace" as are the stars from earth" —ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

One Hundred Proofs before Letters . . . . £1 1s 0d.
One Hundred Proofs after Letters 0 15 0
Prints 0 10 6

Published by J. HOGARTH, opposite the Opera House, Haymarket, London

PUBLICATIONS, &c.

NEW WORK BY DOUGLAS JERROLD, Author of "The Caudle Lectures," &c. &c.

A MAN MADE OF MONEY. —The desirable Individual will be introduced by DOUGLAS JERROLD, on the 1st of October, and every succeeding Month, until Christmas, in six Parts

The Man who, every month but TWO PLATES (to be supplied [illegible] For a Shilling.

Punch's Pocket Book.

Now Ready, price Eighteen Shillings, Vo. XII. of

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS,

Elegantly bound in cloth, gilt edges, rich in Illustrations of the Important Events of the last Six Months, forming a most complete and valuable ILLUSTRATED CHRONOLOGY, together with a mass of useful and highly interesting articles on Art, Literature, and Science—The Cover for Binding Vol. XII, with the New Engraved Frontispiece each May be obtained, [illegible] in the Numbers, and in the Monthly Volumes

Price 7s. 6d. (Proof Impressions on India Paper),

A PANORAMIC PICTURE of the HOLY LAND, Jerusalem, and the Principal Places mentioned in the Old and New Testament. With 80 References to the Pl ts, 28 Engravings on Wood

Published at the Office of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, 198, Strand; and sold by all Booksellers

Now Ready, price 1s. 6d.,

LES HUGUENOTS: A Social Libretto of the Opera.

Translated into English Verse by JAMES Pott, Esq., and 29 others at 2s. each. Post free, 33 stamps. Full music size.

CHARLES GLOVER'S New Song, "MY NATIVE HOME," with a Portrait of the Prince of Wales's Boy, price 2s. 6d This beautiful Ballad has already found favour with the Aristocracy, and is now sung by [illegible] Also, Mr. Glover's Pianoforte arrangements, as Solos, and as Duets with their Ballads and longitud...

"Mr Glover's Ballads are [illegible] 3s. 6d.; or with 30 maps on steel, 5s. 6d.

A SCHOOL GEOGRAPHY. By JAMES CORNWELL, Ph.D. Fourth Edition

"We confidently recommend Dr Cornwell s Geography to parents and teachers."—Douglas Jerrold s Weekly Newspaper.

London: SIMPKIN and Co., HAMILTON and Co.

Third Thousand, price Sixpence,

ACCIDENTS and EMERGENCIES; a Guide for Non-Professional Persons. By WILLIAM SHEE, F.R.S., Surgeon to the Bank of England, and Lecturer on Surgery This short, but complete treatise, by numerous wood engravings, is hung up at every police station by order of the Commissioners of Police, and is to be found at most of the public offices in London It forms an invaluable guide for the immediate treatment of accidents and emergencies, and it should be placed in a conspicuous situation in every dwelling

Published by Mr. DRUMMOND, 14, Tavistock-street, Bedford-square.

NO MORE MEDICINE for Indigestion, Nervousness, Bilious ness, Torpidity of the Liver and Intestines, &c. Procure by DU BARRY'S Free 661, or 50 Cures, 10s. 6d. Du Barry and Co., 77a, New Bond-street, London.

CONVENIENT RESIDENCE.—To be LET, Furnished or Unfurnished, delightfully situate on the Surrey side, with Shrubbery, Lawn, and Kitchen Garden attached, ready to a railway station —Apply to Mr WHITEMAN, Solicitor, Eastbourne.

TO PARENTS and GUARDIANS.— WANTED, on Reversionary Property, the LOAN of £300 To this security would be added, if desired, an introduction to a permanent and remunerative appointment. The Advertiser is capable of making his family and good education, with a prospect, if steady and studious, of considerable advancement. Satisfactory references will be treated with. Address by letter only, in the first instance, to C. V., 35, Sherard-street, Bedford-row

EDUCATIONAL ESTABLISHMENT FOR YOUNG LADIES, No. 28, Clarendon-road Villas, Kensington.

Mother's Practical Guide, 2s. 6d.

Clarendon-road Villas are pleasantly situated on the western declivity of Campden-hill, in the most healthy localities in the neighbourhood of London, and affords every facility for combining the Comforts of a Home with the strictest study, and all the domestic arrangements are regulated with a special reference to health.

Prospectuses and Cards of Terms may be obtained on application to Mrs. Bakewell, or to Mr J snow, 25, Paternoster-row, London

COUNTY FIRE OFFICE, 50, Regent-street, Piccadilly, and 14, Waterloo-place, Pall-mall.—Notice is hereby specially notified to assurers holding Policies in this Office, that the terms of which fall due at Michaelmas, that the same should be paid on or before the 14th of October. A Bonus will be added at the time of settlement to all the policies of the several agents

The forms of the County Fire Office are highly advantageous to the Insured, and have secured to it a large share of public approbation as will appear on reference to the Annual Reports, which may also be immediately furnished to parties applying personally or by post, to the Secretary, at the Office, as above.

All the principal towns of the United Kingdom

By order of the Board, JOHN MONTGOMERY, Manager and Secretary.

CHARING-CROSS HOSPITAL MEDICAL SCHOOL, West Strand, London.—WINTER SESSION, 1848, to commence on the 1st of October and end on the 1st of April

Introductory Address, October 2, 3 P.M.—Dr. Willshire.

Chymistry—H. H. Lewis, A.M., from 9 to 10

Materia Medica and Botany—Dr. Wilshire, from 9 to 10.

Descriptive and Surgical Anatomy—Mr. Hird, from 10 to 11.

Demonstrations &c.—Mr. Hird at 11

Medical Practice, from 12 to 2

Surgery, &c., as shown, from 2 to 3

Midwifery and Diseases of Women, PRS., from 3 to 4.

Medical Jurisprudence—Dr. Lankester and Dr. Howland, from 4 to 5

Clinical Lectures, from 5 to 6

Medical Practice—Dr. Lankester and Dr. Howland, from 4 to 5

Chemistry—Dr. W. H. Bowman, F.L.S., from 5 to 6

Medical Jurisprudence—Dr. Chowne and Dr. Lewis from 5 to 6

General Practice—Dr. Lankester and Dr. Howland, at the College of Surgeons and Society of Apothecaries, 42 guineas, without Practical Chymistry, £42

Pupils are admitted to the Practice and Surgery of the Hospital and School at reduced fees, and have admission on the same to the Lectures on the Principles and Practice of Medicine and Surgery of the University of London, Royal College of Surgeons, and Society of Apothecaries.

For further particulars, apply to the Dean, Dr. Lankester, at the Hospital

SPARKLING CHAMPAGNE from M. PERNAY and RHEIMS. 42s. per dozen, pints, 24s. SPARKLING BURGUNDY, 42s. per dozen. SPARKLING SP PENAY, 48s. per dozen—REDDIE and BUTLER. Wine Merchants to her Majesty and Regent-street, from exporting for last their wines direct from the vineyards, can confidently recommend them as of the finest quality. On receipt of a post-office order, or reference, samples and a list of prices of every description of wine, will be forwarded by the Agents to the Regent-street, 98a and Gordon's Golden sherry, 36s and 38s. per dozen

FORD'S AMERICAN SHIRT is guaranteed to fit well and all smoothly in any position. The cloth from which they are made is of the finest quality, manufactured expressly for making the AMERICAN SHIRTS. At the price, six for forty shillings. Any size, colour, or length of sleeve. Whatever material is used, the very newest styles, many of them are registered under the Designs Act, price 6s 6d each. Patterns free of charge. Also orders, payable to RICHARD FORD, will receive immediate attention. Detailed Catalogue of Hosiery, Handkerchiefs, Hosiery, Gloves, Shirts, Cravats, &c., sent free by post

RICHARD FORD, 38, Ludgate-hill, London.

BERDOE'S NEW OVER-COAT for the Winter, the PALLIUM PENDUS.—This superior garment is made of a new material of beautiful texture and appearance, is richly lined and trimmed, handsomely braided over Hessian, and is considered to combine a truly respectable, gentlemanly, and first-rate garment, is confessed by those who have purchased it, and is guaranteed to resist any amount of rain. Price 55s., or without the extras, 10s less

Also, at the well-known WATERPROOF DEPOT, the most established reputation and extent of sale, may justly be termed the most popular garment ever invented Price 42s and 50s A large assortment of Boys' and ready Waterproof Over-coats, Cloaks, Capes, Cuffs, Shooting Jackets, &c., kept to select from.—96, New Bond-street and 1, Royal Exchange.

CHILDREN'S FROCKS, COATS, and PELISSES, in all the new materials and prevailing styles. A collection of which are constantly selected for SCHOOL WEAR, at MILLIANS, 5, PINSBURY PAVEMENT, LONDON.

SEVERAL Thousand Yards of Fine Cambric Frilling, useful for dress at 1s. 1½d., 2s 9d., 3s. 6d., Mode, 4s 6d., 7s. 6d., 10s 6d., 12s. 6d.; Handkerchiefs, 10s. 6d., 12s. 6d., 15s. 6d. per dozen; all goods made in Nos Velvets, Three, Four, and Five Guineas.

ROUND DRESSES of all kinds, Flounces, Trimmings, Collars, Ladies', Gentlemen's, and Children's Dress Caps, Jackets, CLOAKS, for all ages above two years, in great variety.

LADIES' READY-MADE HOODS HATS AND BONNETS, LONG AND SHORT ROBES, French Cambric Caps, Day and Night Gowns, Fine Blankets, Linen and Cambric Nightcaps, Open and Round waists, Trimmed Nursery Baskets and Bassinets, with or without hoods, Blankets &c., with every other article in BABY LINEN, together with what is more required for a YOUNG FAMILY, thus obviating the troubles and inconvenience in going to various shops when a JUVENILE CLOTHING is required. An assortment of Infants' Cloaks, Hoods, Robes, &c., sent to any part of the country to select from on the receipt of Five Pounds.

A VOICE from ENGLAND to the ITALIANS, Exhorting them to Unite with one another—not to call in Foreign Assistance. Small Second Edition, published by W. STRANGE, Paternoster-row; and sold by H Storie, 23, Tichborne-street, Regent-circus, Piccadilly; at Paris, by Stassin and Xavier, Rue du Coq, St Honoré. Price Twopence.

WINTER FASHIONS, in the LADIES' GAZETTE OF FASHION for OCTOBER, price 1s. Four splendid Plates, 70 Figures, 130 Patterns of Winter Walking and Evening Dresses, all of the latest novelty and beauty. Descriptions, Tales, Poetry, &c Post-free, 1s. extra

G. BERGER, Holywell street, Strand; and all Booksellers

THE PRIZE KNITTING-BOOK is now reprinted This book consists of the Patterns which gained the Premiums awarded for Cable Patterns It may be had at every Berlin shop, or of every Bookseller, or by enclosing Sixteen Stamps to I HOF Bamberg

DOMESTIC ECONOMY, EDUCATION, SANITARY REFORM, and COTTAGE GARDENING AND FARMING

THE FAMILY ECONOMIST, a Penny Monthly Magazine, is devoted to the promotion of the above objects among the industrious classes. Practical essays on different branches of Domestic Economy, by the best writers, Social Sketches, Moral Tales, Family Secrets, and a variety of valuable economical recipes, appear in every number of the work. This is one of the most useful and entertaining periodicals now published. Its moral principles are unexceptionable. Nine numbers are on sale, and may be readily obtained by order of any bookseller. Price a Penny a Month.

London: GROOMBRIDGE and SONS, Paternoster-row.

Just published, price 2s. 6d. plain, 4s coloured,

A SCHOOL ATLAS. By JAMES CORNWELL, Ph.D.

This Atlas consists of thirty beautifully executed small maps —1, which contain all the names occurring in Dr. Cornwell's School Geography, and also a few of minor importance, to enable them their localities and longitud...

"We confidently recommend Dr. Cornwell's Geography to parents and teachers."—Douglas Jerrold's Weekly Newspaper.

London: SIMPKIN and Co., HAMILTON and Co.

Third Thousand, price Sixpence,

ACCIDENTS and EMERGENCIES; a Guide for Non-Professional Persons. By WILLIAM SHEE, F.R.S., Surgeon to the Bank of England, and Lecturer on Surgery This short, but complete treatise, by numerous wood engravings, is hung up at every police station by order of the Commissioners of Police, and is to be found at most of the public offices in London It forms an invaluable guide for the immediate treatment of accidents and emergencies, and it should be placed in a conspicuous situation in every dwelling

Published by Mr. DRUMMOND, 14, Tavistock-street, Bedford-square.

NO MORE MEDICINE for Indigestion, Nervousness, Biliousness, Torpidity of the Liver and Intestines, &c. Procure by DU BARRY'S Free 661, or 50 Cures, 10s. 6d. Du Barry and Co., 77a, New Bond-street, London.

THE NATURAL REGENERATOR of the DIGESTIVE ORGANS, with numerous cases practically illustrating the Restoration of Health to the most Delicate, Debilitated, or Inattered constitution, without Medicine, Pain, or Expence.—Du Barry and Co., 77a, New Bond-street, London.

CONVENIENT RESIDENCE.—To be LET, Furnished or Unfurnished, delightfully situate on the Surrey side, with Shrubbery, Lawn, and Kitchen Garden attached, ready to a railway station —Apply to Mr WHITEMAN, Solicitor, Eastbourne.

TO PARENTS and GUARDIANS.— WANTED, on Reversionary Property, the LOAN of £300 To this security would be added, if desired, an introduction to a permanent and remunerative appointment. The Advertiser is capable of making his family and good education, with a prospect, if steady and studious, of considerable advancement. Satisfactory references will be treated with. Address by letter only, in the first instance, to C. V., 35, Sherard-street, Bedford-row

EDUCATIONAL ESTABLISHMENT FOR YOUNG LADIES, No. 28, Clarendon-road Villas, Kensington.

Mother's Practical Guide, 2s. 6d.

Clarendon-road Villas are pleasantly situated on the western declivity of Campden-hill, in the most healthy localities in the neighbourhood of London, and affords every facility for combining the Comforts of a Home with the strictest study, and all the domestic arrangements are regulated with a special reference to health.

Prospectuses and Cards of Terms may be obtained on application to Mrs. Bakewell, or to Mr J snow, 25, Paternoster-row, London

COUNTY FIRE OFFICE, 50, Regent-street, Piccadilly, and 14, Waterloo-place, Pall-mall.—Notice is hereby specially notified to assurers holding Policies in this Office, that the terms of which fall due at Michaelmas, that the same should be paid on or before the 14th of October. A Bonus will be added at the time of settlement to all the policies of the several agents

The forms of the County Fire Office are highly advantageous to the Insured, and have secured to it a large share of public approbation as will appear on reference to the Annual Reports, which may also be immediately furnished to parties applying personally or by post, to the Secretary, at the Office, as above.

All the principal towns of the United Kingdom

By order of the Board, JOHN MONTGOMERY, Manager and Secretary.

CHARING-CROSS HOSPITAL MEDICAL SCHOOL, West Strand, London.—WINTER SESSION, 1848, to commence on the 1st of October and end on the 1st of April

Introductory Address, October 2, 3 P.M.—Dr. Willshire.

Chymistry—H. H. Lewis, A.M., from 9 to 10

Materia Medica and Botany—Dr. Wilshire, from 9 to 10.

Descriptive and Surgical Anatomy—Mr. Hird, from 10 to 11.

Demonstrations &c.—Mr. Hird at 11

Medical Practice, from 12 to 2

Surgery, &c., as shown, from 2 to 3

Midwifery and Diseases of Women, PRS., from 3 to 4.

Medical Jurisprudence—Dr. Lankester and Dr. Howland, from 4 to 5

Clinical Lectures, from 5 to 6

Medical Practice—Dr. Lankester and Dr. Howland, from 4 to 5

Chemistry—Dr. W. H. Bowman, F.L.S., from 5 to 6

Medical Jurisprudence—Dr. Chowne and Dr. Lewis from 5 to 6

General Practice—Dr. Lankester and Dr. Howland, at the College of Surgeons and Society of Apothecaries, 42 guineas, without Practical Chymistry, £42

Pupils are admitted to the Practice and Surgery of the Hospital and School at reduced fees, and have admission on the same to the Lectures on the Principles and Practice of Medicine and Surgery of the University of London, Royal College of Surgeons, and Society of Apothecaries.

For further particulars, apply to the Dean, Dr. Lankester, at the Hospital

SPARKLING CHAMPAGNE from M. PERNAY and RHEIMS. 42s. per dozen, pints, 24s. SPARKLING BURGUNDY, 42s. per dozen. SPARKLING SP PENAY, 48s. per dozen—REDDIE and BUTLER. Wine Merchants to her Majesty and Regent-street, from exporting for last their wines direct from the vineyards, can confidently recommend them as of the finest quality. On receipt of a post-office order, or reference, samples and a list of prices of every description of wine, will be forwarded by the Agents to the Regent-street, 98a and Gordon's Golden sherry, 36s and 38s. per dozen

FORD'S AMERICAN SHIRT is guaranteed to fit well and all smoothly in any position. The cloth from which they are made is of the finest quality, manufactured expressly for making the AMERICAN SHIRTS. At the price, six for forty shillings. Any size, colour, or length of sleeve. Whatever material is used, the very newest styles, many of them are registered under the Designs Act, price 6s 6d each. Patterns free of charge. Also orders, payable to RICHARD FORD, will receive immediate attention. Detailed Catalogue of Hosiery, Handkerchiefs, Hosiery, Gloves, Shirts, Cravats, &c., sent free by post

RICHARD FORD, 38, Ludgate-hill, London.

BERDOE'S NEW OVER-COAT for the Winter, the PALLIUM PENDUS.—This superior garment is made of a new material of beautiful texture and appearance, is richly lined and trimmed, handsomely braided over Hessian, and is considered to combine a truly respectable, gentlemanly, and first-rate garment, is confessed by those who have purchased it, and is guaranteed to resist any amount of rain. Price 55s., or without the extras, 10s less

Also, at the well-known WATERPROOF DEPOT, the most established reputation and extent of sale, may justly be termed the most popular garment ever invented Price 42s and 50s A large assortment of Boys' and ready Waterproof Over-coats, Cloaks, Capes, Cuffs, Shooting Jackets, &c., kept to select from.—96, New Bond-street and 1, Royal Exchange.

CHILDREN'S FROCKS, COATS, and PELISSES, in all the new materials and prevailing styles. A collection of which are constantly selected for SCHOOL WEAR, at MILLIANS, 5, PINSBURY PAVEMENT, LONDON.

SEVERAL Thousand Yards of Fine Cambric Frilling, useful for dress at 1s. 1½d., 2s 9d., 3s. 6d., Mode, 4s 6d., 7s. 6d., 10s 6d., 12s. 6d.; Handkerchiefs, 10s. 6d., 12s. 6d., 15s. 6d. per dozen; all goods made in Nos Velvets, Three, Four, and Five Guineas.

ROUND DRESSES of all kinds, Flounces, Trimmings, Collars, Ladies', Gentlemen's, and Children's Dress Caps, Jackets, CLOAKS, for all ages above two years, in great variety.

LADIES' READY-MADE HOODS HATS AND BONNETS, LONG AND SHORT ROBES, French Cambric Caps, Day and Night Gowns, Fine Blankets, Linen and Cambric Nightcaps, Open and Round waists, Trimmed Nursery Baskets and Bassinets, with or without hoods, Blankets &c., with every other article in BABY LINEN, together with what is more required for a YOUNG FAMILY, thus obviating the troubles and inconvenience in going to various shops when a JUVENILE CLOTHING is required. An assortment of Infants' Cloaks, Hoods, Robes, &c., sent to any part of the country to select from on the receipt of Five Pounds.

ORNAMENTS for the DRAWING-ROOM, LIBRARY, and DINING-ROOM.—Mr TENNANT, 149, Strand, near Somerset House, has just received a new and elegant assortment of Groups, Figures, Vases, Candlesticks, Inkstands, beautiful Inlaid Tables, Paper-weights, &c., in Italian Alabaster Marble, Bronze, &c.

NUMBER ONE, ST. PAUL'S CHURCH-YARD The Tea is good. The Tea is cheap. It cannot be cheap unless it is good. It pleases all who drink it. Its quality always remains satisfactory. It is only to a penny Its excellence is proved in the drinking —DAKIN and CO., Tea Merchants Number One, St. Paul's Churchyard

CHEAP MUSIC.—Eighty Shillings for Eight Music bound and classed in volumes, all new and [illegible] eighty shillings at full marked price, selling at eight. Quadrilles, Waltzes, Polkas, and Songs, by the first artistes, at half price and quarter price. Cheap music in immense variety of every description. The largest show in London, all sorts being kept without preference or prejudice —WALKER S, 97, Soho-square, established 60 years. Catalogues gratis, on receipt of two stamps

SUPERIOR FURNITURE.—A MAHOGANY BEDSTEAD, full-sized pillars, spiral turned, 6 0 cornice, rich and exciting bottom, double screwed and braced, for 2l 10s —The celebrated OMNIBUS BEDSTEAD, 6l and upwards, General Furnishing and Upholstery Warehouse, 74, PAVEMENT, FINSBURY

RICHARD A. C. LOADER, Proprietor

DEANE'S MONUMENT BAZORS were the popular when their shop was on the Old London-bridge, and they maintain their popularity until this day Gentlemen's wards precisely suited. If your beard is hard, ask for Razor Y; and if soft, for Razor Z. Deane's London-bridge Razor Strop is the acme of equal antiquity with the Razor, and has by its own merits secured universal approbation —Deane, Dray, and Co., London-bridge Moved A.D. 1700, opening to the Monument, 46, King William-street, London-bridge.

NICOLL'S PATENT POCKET PROTECTOR.—This invention is of importance to Merchants, Bankers, Lawyers, and others with whom it is necessary to carry upon the person a large amount of cash, documents, and other valuable accounts It is patented by Messrs. NICOLL, of 114, 118 120, Regent-street, 2, Cornhill, the inventors of Nicoll's Registered Paletot, Regent Paletot, &c., to all of which garments it is applicable at extra expense

ON MONDAY, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday next, MESSRS. WALLEY and HARDWICK offer a lot of 800 pieces of Rich Figured FRENCH MOHAIRS and Black Watered SILK MOREENS, at 1½d per yard fully worth 7s. 6d. An early application is necessary to secure many choice pieces WALLEY and HARDWICK, 5, Ludgate-hill.

WEDDING ORDERS & INDIA OUTFITS executed, in the first style of fashion, at the lowest prices for ready money, by MRS. NORTON (late of 66, New Bond-street), from an extensive assortment of Ladies linen and under clothing, trousseaux grown, and Infants' wardrobes, which, in elegance and refined flannel, with a beautiful variety of baby linen and children a dresses, is not to be made passable to DRESSER HOGERS, Whole Linen Warehousemen, 101, Borough, London.

LADIES' FASHIONABLE MORNING CAPS, in Muslin and Lace, at MRS. NORTON'S, 73, Strand, Adelphi.

Ditto, Head throughout ... 8 6	New Gain Plaid, "very warm," 4 6
Whole Sitting-up Dresses ... 7 6	Invalid's Flannel Gown and Cape, ... 21 0
Ditto, Sleeves 9 6	Neapolitan Cloth ditto ... 25 6
Muslin d'Ecosse, Real Silk ... 5 6	"Beads a Patent" Nagged, 3d 6

The above, in most fashionable Muslins & Laces, &c., &c., &c., can be obtained, to be sent to, for one stamp, may be obtained at MRS. NORTON'S, 73, Strand, Adelphi.

LADIES' FASHIONABLE MORNING CAPS, in Muslin and Lace, at MRS. NORTON'S, 73, Strand, Adelphi.

Ditto, Head throughout ... 8 6	New Gain Plaid, "very warm," 4 6
Whole Sitting-up Dresses ... 7 6	Invalid's Flannel Gown and Cape, ... 21 0
Ditto, Sleeves 9 6	Neapolitan Cloth ditto ... 25 6
Muslin d'Ecosse, Real Silk ... 5 6	"Beads a Patent" Nagged, 3d 6

The above, in most fashionable Muslins & Laces, &c., &c., &c., can be obtained, to be sent to, for one stamp, may be obtained at MRS. NORTON'S, 73, Strand, Adelphi.

THE FASHION.—"POLKAS," HANDKERCHIEFS with the Seat Fleecy, forwarded free upon receipt of P.O.O. to orders for the respective amounts. Colour, Cherry Body, Borders. Imitation Sable, or, to order, in any colour. No 1, size for Children, 3 years old, price 1s 6d. No 2, size for Children from 7 to 12 years, price 1s 9d: No 3, Ladies' size, price 2s 6d These comfortable articles of dress are now most fashionable. [illegible] are to be made payable to DRESSER HOGERS, Whole [illegible] Warehousemen, 101, Borough, London.

THE FASHION.—"POLKAS," HANDKERCHIEFS with the Seat Fleecy, forwarded free upon receipt of P.O.O. to orders for the respective amounts. Colour, Cherry Body, Borders. Imitation Sable, or, to order, in any colour. No 1, size for Children, 3 years old, price 1s 6d. No 2, size for Children from 7 to 12 years, price 1s 9d: No 3, Ladies' size, price 2s 6d These comfortable articles of dress are now most fashionable. [illegible] are to be made payable to DRESSER HOGERS, Whole [illegible] Warehousemen, 101, Borough, London.

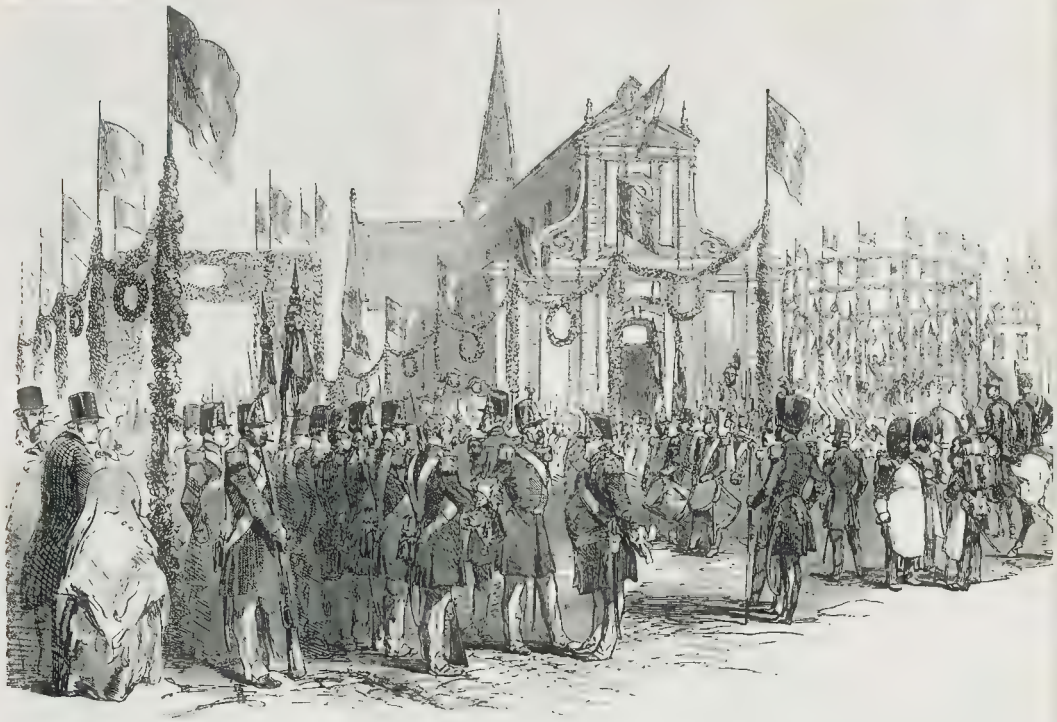
EXTENSIVE FAILURE.—INSOLVENTS' DRAPERY STOCK, amounting to between FOUR and FIVE THOUSAND POUNDS, to be SOLD at Half-Price. Origins, Cost. WHITE, GREENWELL, and CO., 53, 54, and 55, Blackfriars-road, Surrey, manufacturers, by Tender, the Stock of Messrs. Barry, Townsend, and Co., 211 and 212, Holborn, as a large portion of the original Stock will offer it for sale at a correspondent reduction of prices. The Stock includes Black and Coloured Silks, Satins, Paisley Shawls, Scotch and Scarfs, Wool Shawls and hoods, Mantles, Lace, Gloves, Hosiery, and Haberdashery. As the Affairs are rapidly progressing to some sort of the Greatest Bargains that have hitherto been offered, an early [illegible] is necessary, and selections of the Stock will be sold with a reduction to reserve, at nearly manual prices. The SALE will Commence MONDAY, OCTOBER 2, 1848, at the Extensive Ground Yards of Messrs and Kiddermaster Carpets will also be offered at much below the usual prices

TO LADIES.—PETTS POUDRE des DAMES, or Depilatory, justly esteemed as the only preparation effectually removing superfluous hairs in eight minutes Its great recommendation is the simplicity in applying it and the [illegible] of which it is composed being perfectly innocent, leaving a [illegible] softness to the skin —Petts de Sel Depilatory, 2s. 6d. [illegible] Royal Family, 342, Regent-street, and sold by [illegible] to perfumers.

TO LADIES.—On the drive, the ride, the [illegible] sitting, and [illegible] and healthy [illegible] use ROWLAND'S [illegible] OIL, for [illegible] their repellent action endangering health. The words "ROWLAND'S Kalydor" are [illegible] on the wrapper of each bottle, and "ROWLAND and SON, 20, Hatton-garden, London," on the [illegible] of each [illegible]

HAIR DYE.—A lady will forward to any one enclosing 3s. or 24 postage stamps, the recipe for a most [illegible] Hair Dye, with full directions for use It does not discolour the skin, is free from all nastiness, and does not cost sixpence a year.—Address, free, to MISS [illegible] ANNE, Post-office, Gerrard-street, Soho.

DOES YOUR HAIR FALL OFF OR GET GREY? Mr. CREED will forward by post to any Lady or Gentleman remitting 24 postage stamps the Recipe with which he has successfully checked the rapid progress of Greyness, Restored the own Hair, and that also of several friends of private acquaintance who were then on the point of being Bald. The Recipe with will be sent by return of post, cheap and pleasant in use,) a now offered for public benefit. Directions carefully observed.—Address, Mr. CREED, Chorley, Sur



THE FETE AT BOULOGNE.—CONCERT IN THE PLACE D'ALTON, AND ARCH IN THE GRAND PLACE.

(Continued from page 190.)

sand people all dancing at once was presented; the spirit being caught up in the country round the column amongst the visitors and country-people. The spectacle at this time was bewildering, and alone worth everything else that had been seen. It is impossible, also, to conceive the fine effect of the bands. The perfect forest of ophicleides, trombones, and cornets, rising on the steps, gave forth such mighty music that the clash could be distinctly heard at Boulogne; and seen from the rampart of the old upper town the reddened haze that surrounded the column, caused by the sunset falling on the clouds of dust created by the dancers, was equally striking. Jullien, with his Concerts Monstres, at the Surrey Zoological Gardens, is the only person who could give even the faintest idea of this extraordinary picture. They danced on the hot asphalte of the column, and turf without, with equal vigour, they danced in the fields, along the roads, and across the downs overlooking Wimille; they danced in the sun or in the shade, and, for aught we know, may be dancing now, for when we left, at half-past 6, there were no signs of concluding.

OBELISK IN THE RUE DES VIEILLARDS.

Amongst all this it was pleasant to see the marked respect and good [illegible] exhibited everywhere towards the English. The cry of "Vive l'Angleterre," was as popular everywhere as "Vive la République!" and they appeared unable to be too pressing towards our countrymen to have a glass of wine with them, or too gratified when the challenge was accepted. "You are all good fellows," said one of the Sixth Legion to us, as we discussed a bottle of champagne together, "and shelter all the unlucky ones that the other nations are afraid to receive. Vive l'Angleterre!" And then regretting they did not know "God save the Queen," they all chorussed "Mourir pour la Patrie" again, which they hoped would do as well, being "a grand patriotic song."

The illuminations commenced as soon as it was dark, and at 9 o'clock the appearance of the Grand Rue was like a scene of some enchanted city in a fairy tale, during one of those grand contemporaneous festivals that always welcomed the returns of the younger princes from their adventures. The lampions have a much prettier effect than our illumination lamps; but they diffuse no light, the two combined would be perfect. As it was, however, the long lines of coloured stars, spheres, and baskets were very beautiful; and several hints might have been taken for giving our general illumination a more picturesque appearance, and improving on the dull crowns, and V's and A's so long tolerated.

The streets were crowded; but the crowd was all flow and no ebb. From the Tintilleries [illegible] about the size of Vauxhall—where the ball (at ten sous entrance) took place. This sight was in itself as curious as all the rest. It might, however, have been considerably improved by a little more attention to the lighting. The gas had been contracted for, and the contractor appeared to have been as anxious as he could to make a good thing of it, for the lets were very few and far between. But this made no difference to the dancers. Everybody was in motion—even some whom one would have imagined the exertions at the column had already settled; and all classes joined in the ball. Two old English ladies caused much merriment by the energy with which they footed it, amongst the young grisettes and poissardes. There were two fine bands, which relieved one another, and every accommodation for refreshment, which was, however, principally confined to buvettes, coffee, and lemonade. This was the last event in the programme. Like a bang to a firework, it concluded the effect; and then, but not until an advanced hour, the lamps were extinguished, and Boulogne was once more as quiet as the still lively patriotism of its various companies allowed it to be.

(We have described the large Engraving. The accompanying Obelisk was of pure white, with the angles formed of small twigs of yew, and the names of the Generals who were killed during the late Revolution inscribed on it. This Obelisk was placed nearly at the top of the street, opposite the Post-Office, and had a most imposing effect, although at variance with the gaiety of the Grand Rue.)

THE GROTTO IN OATLANDS PARK.—(SEE PAGE 190.)

London: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by William Little, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—Saturday, September 23, 1848.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

No. 337.—Vol. XIII.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 30, 1848. [Sixpence.

AGRICULTURAL COLLEGES.

Whatever may be the opinions of politicians upon the abstract questions involved in that of Free-Trade, there can be no doubt in the minds of any that the Anti-Corn-Law agitation and the repeal of the Corn-Laws have had the effect of arousing attention to agriculture as a science. There can, we think, be as little doubt that the increase of agricultural knowledge has already been productive of national good; and none whatever, that, with a rapidly augmenting population upon a circumscribed soil, improvements in agriculture are not alone highly desirable, but of paramount necessity. Men of all political parties, although the remembrances of a bitter party, and almost personal, conflict have not yet passed away, are alive to the fact that, whether we live under a system of Free-Trade or under one of Protection, it is equally imperative to turn all the resources of our own soil to the best account. So far, a great social benefit has already resulted from the political strife of the Free-Traders and Protectionists; a benefit which time will but the more extend, and which is not diminished by the reflection that it was unexpected by either party. And not Great Britain alone, but all the old and thickly populated states of Europe are deeply interested in the question of agricultural improvement. None of them can extend its boundaries except at the expense of its neighbours; and in extending its frontiers no sensible difference would ensue in the existing proportions between the lands to be cultivated and the mouths to be fed. Great Britain by a natural more than by a political necessity, cannot extend her home dominions. She can acquire no land from her neighbours, and the sea is not to be won for the plough. She is shut up within a narrow compass; and if she would lengthen her sceptre and extend the circle of which it is the radius, she must send to the uttermost parts of the earth to subdue or colonise new countries. To her, above all the nations of Europe, the capabilities of her home soil are of the most urgent importance. Within her boundaries, population makes the most rapid increase. Within her teeming cities and daily growing manufacturing towns, fresh multitudes, demanding to be fed, arise from year to year in far greater numbers than in any other portion of civilized Europe. Upon her shores the great problem of adapting population to resources, or resources to population, clamours most earnestly for a satisfactory solution. At the present time, the pressure of the one upon the other is felt to be sufficiently severe. At periodically recurring intervals, it is even felt to be dangerous. Far-seeing men, who can calculate the march of the generations, ask, with sensations of painful solicitude if not of terror, what our position as a nation is likely to be when, by a natural and inevitable increase, we shall have added five, or even ten or fifteen millions to the swarms of these already overcrowded islands? They take courage, however, when they reflect that we have large resources, not merely unexhausted but undeveloped. Of the 32,340,000 acres that form the superficies of England, the 18,666,000 of Scotland, the 19,500,000 of Ireland, and the 5,200,000 of Wales, they ask how many lie uncultivated, although cultivable? They find that many millions of acres in each of these divisions of the empire have never yet grown food for man, and only await the application of science and labour to feed a large population. They find too that the cultivated land is capable of a much higher cultivation than has ever yet been bestowed upon it; that if the soil be narrow the resources of science are illimitable; and that if every day augments the numbers to be fed, every day also increases the power of science to provide for them. Not only are there wide wastes and extensive moorlands to be brought under the plough, and large areas upon the mountain sides to be made green with oats and turnips; not only is the productive superficies of the country to be almost doubled, but the produce of that which is already productive is to be trebled, quadrupled, and quintupled by the application of greater skill, energy, and science by the present and future generations.

The Royal Agricultural Society of England has, in this respect, done much good. So likewise have the kindred societies, the annual meetings of which are now taking place. Still greater good is yet to be anticipated from their operations and their example. But the institutions from which society may form the most hopeful aspirations for the future, are the Agricultural Schools and Colleges which are springing up in so many parts of the country, to train the rising generation into a due knowledge of Agriculture as a science. Some of the first minds of the age have been devoted to the subject; and the knowledge they have bequeathed to the world has produced, and is producing, the most valuable results. In all those countries where systems of national education have been established, instruction in the practice, as well as in the science of Agriculture, has been made a prominent feature. The youth who is to drive the plough in his own country, is taught something of the philosophy and science of his future pursuit; and if in manhood he becomes an emigrant from his native land, he is enabled to carry with him the knowledge that will enrich himself and the new country to which he bears it. Should a system of National Education ever be established in these kingdoms, as we fervently trust it will, Agricultural Schools will necessarily occupy an important part in the scheme adopted. In the meantime, the growing interest taken in the subject by the public, and by the great landed proprietors generally, is manifested in the number of Agricultural Schools and Colleges that have been instituted since the repeal of the Corn-Laws. Among the foremost of these valuable seminaries is the Royal Agricultural College of Cirencester, incorporated by Royal Charter in 1845, for the purpose of affording a practical and scientific agricultural education to students from all parts of the kingdom, on the nomination of shareholders and donors. This society is under the immediate patronage of Prince Albert, and numbers on the list of its governors some of the largest landowners and most distinguished agriculturists of the country.

The College adjoins the park and woods of Earl Bathurst, and is situated about a mile and a half from the town of Cirencester. The farm upon which the students are instructed is held on lease from Earl Bathurst, and contains 450 acres (420 of which are arable), of a very varied character and soil. The farm is separated into four divisions, each being farmed according to a different rotation, so that the students have an opportunity of seeing the most advanced systems both of British and Continental husbandry. The instruction given comprises lectures on the science and practice of agriculture; on chemistry and chemical manipulation; on natural history, including botany, geology, and zoology; on veterinary practice; on mathematics; and on natural philosophy. The practical instruction in agriculture is given on the farm, all the students spending one-half of each day in making themselves acquainted with, and taking part in, the manual operations of husbandry. They have thus the advantage of a practical acquaintance with the uses and applicability of the different implements; and are charged in succession with the various departments of the farm, such as stables, cattle sheds, sheep pens, machinery, implements, tillage, and drainage operations. A laboratory, conducted upon Liebig's system, is appropriated to chemical manipulation and analysis. Besides horticulture and horticulture, field botany and practical geology are taught by means of excursions on the farm and neighbouring districts. At the farm-buildings, a place is set apart for a dispensary and dissecting-room for the professor of veterinary medicine. In addition to these, levelling, surveying, and the measurement of land, form a portion of the out-door employment for a class of the students each day on the farm.

FRENCH NATIONAL GUARDS IN LONDON.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

Queenwood College, near Stockbridge, in Hampshire, is an establishment of the same kind; but on a scale even more extensive. It seeks no pecuniary support from shareholders or donors; but is supported entirely by the fees paid by the students, and the profits of the large farm to which it is attached. The building itself, the celebrated "Harmony," was originally erected by the adherents of Robert Owen; and the fine farm of upwards of 800 acres was taken by them, and by a large expenditure of money and skill was brought into a very admirable state of cultivation. Circumstances, not pertinent to the present subject, having led to the break-up of that establishment, and to the dispersion of the peculiar sectarians who founded it, the building and farm remained unoccupied for a considerable period. George Edmondson, a gentleman who combines agricultural experience and science with scholastic knowledge, was induced to take a lease of both. In his hands it has become one of the most admirable agricultural schools in Europe, and combines all the advantages of the best seminaries with the peculiar advantages of agricultural training to such as desire it, on a scale every way as complete as the Royal College of Cirencester. Besides these, the Agricultural Training school at Hodsedon, the Agricultural and Grammar School of Kimbolton, and those of Maidstone and Kennington, founded for the same purpose, deserve a word of notice. All these, however, are schools for the rich. They are all eminently useful; and we doubt not, they will all prosper, and that many others will be instituted upon their model. What we should like to see, and what we think the interests of the nation require, is the establishment of similar colleges or schools for the children of the poor. In the circumstances that menace society, it is not sufficient that such children should be drilled, as at present, in reading, writing, and arithmetic alone. They should be taught, in all our rural districts, to become good agriculturists—how to make the barren earth yield food, and how to make the fruitful earth still more fruitful than it is. Whether they remain at home, or whether they emigrate, such instruction is calculated to be of the highest value to them as individuals, to the community of which they more immediately form part, and to the whole nation. It may be said of this country, as M. De Brouckère, the Belgian Home Minister, said of Belgium at the great Agricultural Congress held last week at Brussels, that, although "renowned for our trade, agriculture has been the special leading point to our wealth and reputation; nations that have not yet had recourse to it have learnt from us useful lessons and have profited by them. Relying too much on our former superiority, have we paid sufficient attention to the progress which has taken place around us? Has the march of improvement been followed up by us? Are we even with it? We dare not say we are, but we can say that we are now shaking off that apathy and indifference." As of Belgium, so of Great Britain in a higher degree. Now is the time to begin, but ours are still more so. We have shaken off our apathy. We have fully awakened to the great importance of the subject, and there is little doubt that, either by voluntary individual exertion, or by Parliamentary authority, properly combined, the short-sighted policy will be made forthwith to assume an energetic character, commensurate with the advantages of a practical knowledge. It is a duty we owe to ourselves, as well as to them; and, for neither reason, can that duty be permanently neglected with safety.

THE FRENCH NATIONAL GUARD IN LONDON.

OUR Boulogne Correspondent of last week has sent us the following addenda to his lively experiences.

On our return to town on Thursday evening, with the account of the fête that appeared in our last, we travelled with seven gentlemen of the third legion of the Paris National Guard. Ils sont presentés as they have been called since their good service in the northern faubourgs on the 23rd and 24th of June, this during the terrible days of June. We met them again on Saturday, returning, at Folkestone, to Boulogne, and were most gratified by their impressions of their journey. They were unable, they said, to express the delight they had experienced at a sight of London, and the hospitality they had met with, every where entertained by the officers of the Scots Fusilier Guards, and admitted to the parade. They had found English living excellent, and the best about it, praise. The perpetual movement on the river, the swarming and coming and going of the steamers, and the Tooley Street bridge, had astonished them most. They also remarked that our cabs went three times as fast as the Paris ones, but charged accordingly; and that Regent street was an admirable place, after, but that the houses wanted height (as indeed they do), when compared with the beautiful structures on the Boulevards. They were amazed at the crowds in the streets, and the clever manner in which the police kept them in order, without the ostensible parliament and accompanying squabbling volubility constantly observed in the busy streets of Paris; and admired our pavements and gutters greatly. The security in which they had walked through small streets late at night was another subject of praise; and London bridge was a marvellous structure, not to be imagined without being seen. They had not found us living in the dense cloud of fog and blacks which they had been taught to regard as the constant atmosphere of London; and remarked, as a great piece of fortune, that they had been so fine all day long, when, they had heard, was a rare bit of luck.

But their great delight of all was the absence of passports and espion examination as they entered London. The notion of going where they pleased, and being able to carry a carpet-bag with them, without having it searched, was most incomprehensible; equally so, being allowed to do so without a [illegible] from Government, or a long attendance at a police-office. And, finally, they stated that they should always love England and the English for the frank and fellow-ship exhibited towards them, and that the Queen was indeed kind, in an interview of festival enabled between Dover and Boulogne, every one would desire to establish a firm entente cordiale than all the despot [illegible] had yet ever been enabled to effect.

(OUR Artist will exhibit the best of a party of the Parisian excursionists at the Horse Guards, which he has portrayed in the characteristic scene upon the preceding page.)

PHENOMENON.—A remarkable phenomenon is to be observed in Church Lane, on the entrance of the Cove branch of the North Staffordshire Railway, about 100 yards on the east of the crossing of the Newcastle roads near the locks. A small run of water from the springs banks passes down the side of the lane, and the surface is thickly coloured for some distance over. A strong escape of gas from the excavations beneath. No doubt there are numberless other escapes of the gas in other parts of the dry ground also; but the shallow stream of water causes the bubbles to rise in numerous whereabouts of the path that it runs. Some gaping one the wet sands, the vents of the gas have just the appearance of little springs, only they are accompanied by the gurgling noises of the bubbles, which are heard from some distance. On the application of a light, the whole surface will burst into a blaze, casting up a strong flame to one or two feet in height, which will continue to burn unless a very strong puff of wind [illegible] extinguish it. It is remarkable that at the slightest shock caused by [illegible] the bubbles [illegible]. Had they issued from any railway [illegible] of the line, the North Staffordshire, the "bubbles" might have created a far more than ordinary sensation.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

The election of the President of the Republic forms the all-engrossing topic in [illegible]. Louis Napoleon's election to the National Assembly being regarded as [illegible] of the question in no slight degree.

[illegible] consisting of 677 Insurgents, was sent off on Saturday night to [illegible].

The military commission charged with the examination and classification of the insurgents of June have concluded their labours. They were under the direction of General Bertrand, and have been employed nearly two months, for eight hours every day, without excepting Sundays and holidays. They had to examine 12,000 files of accusations, which have given to about as many accused the Juges d'Instruction having ordered a number of persons to be released on account of sufficient evidence, the total number of accused on whose cases the commission had to decide was 10,838. Of these 10,838, 6976 have been set at liberty, 4446 condemned to transportation, and 256 sent before courts martial. Of those ordered for transportation 3700 have already been sent away; the others are still in the forts, but will soon be sent off to detachments.

With respect to the elections in the departments, the Moniteur has published the following official returns:—Gironde.—MM. Mole, 33,424 votes; Compans, 18,471; Louis Bonaparte, 3426. Haute-Marne: MM. Chambolle, 24,239; De la Brosse, 24,200; Louis Bonaparte, 3661: number of electors inscribed, 95,-95 voted, 51,363. Meurthe: MM. Louis Bonaparte, 17,313; Ledoucette, 9304; Bouchotte, 7291. Nord: MM. Colonel Charras, 96,123; Louis Bonaparte, 10,035; De Genoude, 14,875.—Orne: MM. Vaudel, 10,629; Louis Bonaparte, 9134; Hippolyte Passy, 7833; Berrier Fontaine, 5242; Mercier, 4143: number of electors inscribed, 123,000; voted, 59,351. Rhone: MM. Rivet, 41,850; Cuspail, 34,105.—Yonne: MM. Louis Bonaparte, 42,086: Randot, 5059; Fenet, 4083: number of electors inscribed, [illegible]; voted, [illegible].

M. Louis Bonaparte has also been elected in the Charente Inférieure.

The Paris Journals of Sunday contain a speech delivered by M. Ledru-Rollin at a dinner held in a public garden in the Champs Elysées on Friday the 22d instant, the anniversary of the proclamation of the first Revolution, in the course of which he declares the republic to be ailing and sick, and he proposes Socialism as the best medicine. He complains that nothing has been done for the people since February. He states the excuse to be, want of money; and he asks, how did the old Republicans find money? It was no doubt by taxing the emigrant aristocracy, and other means of assessing the rich to recommend something similar. He wound up by complaining of the abandonment of Italy, of which he threw the blame upon "perfidious Albion."

In the early part of the week the subject of lively comment in all circles and in the press. Its bold and unscrupulous announcement of a programme of the future, in which it is laid down as a principle that the revolution requires revolutionary measures, that there must be a flood of paper money, a system, in fact, of assignats, that the republic must mould the country into its own image, that the universal right to employment, a forced loan, and a universal war, with its consequences, constitute the means by which the happiness of France and the establishment of the true republic are to be evolved, excited general condemnation and created some uneasiness

The stone camps in the Champ de Mars are called, are proceeding at a wonderful rate: the workmen never cease at them. Those by which the Esplanade of the Invalides is covered are nearly roofed in, and the Louvre is covered with similar buildings in an equally forward state.

Prince Louis Napoleon arrived in the French capital on Monday. General Changarnier had taken all the measures which "the situation" required. No impediment was offered to the entry of "Citizen Louis Napoleon Bonaparte, representative of the people," into the Assembly; but the most concise and precise orders had been resolved upon and given for the preservation of tranquility and of the Republic. These are said to contemplate his arrest, and it was believed, the arrest of his uncle and of his cousins, Napoleon and Pierre Bonaparte and Achille Murat, on the first demonstration in favour of the Prince, or the first indecent act or expression on the part of a person having published a fabricated account of the landing of the Prince at Boulogne, together with an alleged proclamation issued by him, was arrested last week and discharged. He has since been taken into custody once more, and committed to solitary confinement in St. Pelagie.

The generals commanding in Paris and its vicinity, and the colonels of regiments in garrison in the capital and the surrounding districts, were said to have been convoked by General Lamoignon on Friday se'nnight, and to have been informed by him that there was reason to believe that 20,000 armed Communists and Socialists were ready to turn out in support of any movement in favour of the Prince, or to take advantage of such movement to forward their own views. He ordered, therefore, that without waiting to summon any assemblage that might present itself to their notice, the troops in the different barracks should instantly fire upon them. The generals and officers were said to have pledged themselves for the loyalty and devotion of their soldiers, and for the promptitude with which they would act.

The family of Prince Louis had become, in consequence, so convinced of the danger they would incur should any Bonapartian demonstration take place, that they had impressed upon the necessity for the utmost reserve. On Tuesday he accordingly proceeded to the Chamber without ostentation, and took his seat. His appearance in the Assembly produced, nevertheless, a considerable sensation.

M. Alphonse Karr, editor of the Journal, and the editors of the République, Messager, and Bien Public, were respectively sentenced on Saturday to one month's imprisonment and a fine, for publishing those journals without having previously deposited the required security in money.

An address, signed Raspail, was placarded throughout Paris on Tuesday morning, and crowds collected round it at all the corners. In it he says:—"67,000 voices protested in June against my imprisonment. 67,000 voices declare my innocence in September, and invest me with the inviolability of your representation. I will be opening my doors to you as soon as I am set at liberty." He exhorts the citizens not to attempt a combat, since, as their numbers are 9 to 1, they have no need to fight if they are united. He tells them to multiply their fraternal meetings throughout all France, not by means of clubs, but by that of electoral meetings. "Soon," he says, "every thing will be done by election."

NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

MONDAY.—At one o'clock M. Marrast took the chair.

The Assembly resumed on the 11th article of the Constitution, which declares that every person shall be taxed in reference to his fortune. By this expression the radical party contended that progressive taxation was implied; but the moderate party, on the contrary, asserted that proportional taxation was meant. The committee, through M. Dufaure, declared that the term "in reference to" was only used in the project not to pledge the Chamber to any decision. This difference of opinion existing as to the meaning of the term, an amendment was proposed that every citizen should be taxed in proportion to his fortune which was supported by the Minister of Finance, not, as he stated, as Minister, but as representative. This declaration called forth several Canvasses to the tribune, who declared that the opinion of M. Goudchaux was the opinion of the Cabinet. The proportional tax, which only exists now in name, will produce, when seriously and honestly applied, an incontestable augmentation. To go further, would be to overshoot the mark—the principle would not be durable but as it coincided with the wants and sympathies of all. After this speech, in the amendment of M. Lacrosse in the Assembly carried, the amendment was voted by a majority of 644 to 96. This result was received with loud applause and great satisfaction.

Article 16. No tax can be collected except in virtue of the law. M. Pongeard proposed the no tax should be "established" nor collected except in virtue of the law. The amendment was approved, and the 16th Article, with that addition, was voted.

Article 17. The direct tax is voted only for one year. The indirect taxes may be voted for several years. M. Keraly proposed to exempt from taxation liquors and articles of consumption of inappreciable importance, to be specified by the law. The amendment was rejected, and the article voted.

Article 18. All public powers of every description emanate from the people. They cannot be delegated in an hereditary manner. Rejected.

Article 19. The division of the powers is the first condition of a free Government. The Article was adopted without any discussion.

Article 20. The Legislative power is confided to a representative power to a single Assembly. The President announced that 22 members were entered to speak for and against the article, and called M. Duvergier de Hauranne. M. Duvergier proposed the following amendment:—"The Legislative power delegates its legislative power to two Assemblies, one of which shall assume the name of Chamber of Representatives, and the other that of Council of the Ancients."

After some discussion the Assembly rose.

TUESDAY.—At one o'clock M. Marrast, President, took the chair.

GENERAL BEDEAU entered shortly afterwards, and was greeted by his numerous friends. It was the first time he had appeared in the Assembly since his severe recovery; he was still lame from the effect of his wound, but looked otherwise in excellent health.

The reports of the different committees to which the returns of the last elections had been referred for examination, successively proclaimed the validity of the election of General Lefio, General Negrier, and M. Chambolle, as representatives of the people.

The Assembly afterwards resumed the discussion on the 20th article of the Constitution, and which gave rise to a great agitation, suddenly pervaded the Assembly, Prince Louis Napoleon having just entered the hall by one of the side doors, and taken his seat at the upper part of the left. All eyes were immediately directed towards that point, and the hearts of the speaker in the tribune was silenced, and M. Marrast not being able to obtain a hearing for him, had descended from the tribune. Shortly afterwards the reporter of the committee to which the election of the Department of the Yonne had been referred, presented himself at the tribune. The committee, he said, has examined the documents placed under its eyes, and found the election perfectly regular. Citizen Louis Napoleon had obtained 42,000 votes, and the candidate highest in the list after him only 3000. The committee accordingly proposed the provisional admission of Louis Napoleon until he should produce the documents establishing the facts establishing his nationality. The President observed that no provisional admission could be proposed.—M. Vivien then rose, and said that the ninth bureau had been unanimously of opinion to propose the admission of Citizen Charles Louis Napoleon, and, as respected the documents required, pulse necessary might replace them. The President then rose, and asked if there was any opposition to the admission of Citizen Louis Napoleon Bonaparte.—No one, however, appearing on all sides, as proposed by Citizen Vivien, Citizen Louis Napoleon represented and took the oath of fidelity to the Republic. The President then declared that the election of the Department of the Yonne—Prince Louis Napoleon—had been duly accepted by the Assembly, and addressed the Assembly in these terms: "Citizen Representatives,—I cannot longer remain silent after the calumnies directed against me. I feel it incumbent on me to declare openly, on the first time I am allowed to sit in this hall, the real sentiments which animate and have always animated me. After being proscribed during thirty-three years, I have at last recovered a country and my rights of citizenship. The Republic conferred on me that happiness. I offer it now my oath of gratitude and devotion; and the generous fellow-countrymen who sent me to that hall may rest certain that they will find me devoted to that double task which is common to us all, namely, to assure order and tranquility, the first want of the country, and to develop the democratical institutions which the people has a right to claim. During a long period I could only devote to my country the meditation of exile and study; to-day a new career is open to me. Admit me in your ranks, dear colleagues, with the sentiment of affectionate sympathy which animates me. My conduct you may be certain shall not be guided by a respectful devotion to the law; it will prove, to the confusion of those who attempted to slander me, that no man is more devoted than I am, I repeat, to the defence of order and the consolidation of the Republic."

The question of the validity of the election of Raspail for Paris was then taken into consideration, and several members having spoken for and against the validity of the election, the President put it to the vote, and the Assembly proclaimed the admission of Raspail, not, however, without a most boisterous opposition. The President then rose and read a requisition which had just been sent on to him by the Attorney-General. It stated that M. Raspail was implicated in the attempts of the 15th May, which had for its object to destroy or change the form of Government, and excite civil war; and, finally, that he had been arrested en flagrant délit of rebellion on his way to the Hôtel de Ville. M. Marie, Minister of Justice, having detailed that the prosecution of M. Raspail he authorized d'urgence by the Assembly, M. Marrast observed, that the 53rd article of the rules of the House provided, that when a minister claimed the urgency of any measure, it should be put immediately to the vote. He accordingly consulted the Assembly, which admitted almost unanimously the urgency of deciding at once the question. M. Marrast afterwards asked the Assembly if it consented to authorize the prosecution of M. Raspail; and the same majority granted the authorization, not more than twenty members having risen against it. The excitement and agitation followed that vote; and when it had subsided the Assembly resumed the discussion on the Constitution, and shortly afterwards rose at half-past five o'clock.

WEDNESDAY.—The debate on the Constitution engaged the Assembly throughout the day.

SPAIN.

The Madrid papers announce that the Emperor of Russia would shortly recognise the Government of the Queen. The Bank continues its payments without interruption, and its situation was generally considered satisfactory.

On the 22nd inst. a conspiracy had been discovered at Corunna, and several persons had been arrested. Pardon, however, had not been disturbed. The main body of the Catalonian insurgents, commanded by Cabrera in person, was defeated on the 17th, at Labajol, by Colonel Rios, who pursued the fugitives to the frontiers of France, where the greater portion of them have taken refuge.

The Gazette publishes a bando of General Breton, Captain-General of New Castile, declaring the two provinces of Ciudad Real and Toledo in a state of siege, on account of what he says, of their state of revolt.

The French Government received on Wednesday a despatch from Bayonne, announcing that the Duchess de Montpensier had been safely delivered of a daughter.

BELGIUM.

The eighteenth anniversary of the memorable days of September, 1830, the days which gave the national independence to Belgium, commenced on Saturday the 23d. [illegible] was ushered in [illegible] by salvos of artillery. [illegible] the ministers of state, the members of legation, M. Quinette, the Minister of France, and all the superior functionaries, the Communal Council, &c., repaired to the Palace of Laeken, in front of which his Majesty was to present the colours to the deputations of the civic guards of the provinces. A splendid throne was erected in the square of the palace, and after the arrangements of the army and civic guard had been ranged in the order of battle, his Majesty, accompanied by the Queen, the Duke of Brabant, the Count de Flandres, and the Princess Charlotte, and attended by a brilliant suite, took his station at the throne. At the moment the flags were lowered, the bands of the different regiments struck up the national anthem, the cannons were fired, the bells rang a merry peal, and the air resounded with the acclamations of the people.

The Minister of the Interior then addressed the Civic Guards, and the colonels or lieut.-colonels of the legions, accompanied by the standard-bearers, having received the flags from the hands of his Majesty, the Minister of the Interior placed the colours in the hand of his Majesty, who presented them to the chief of the legion, who then consigned them to the care of the standard-bearers. At the giving of the first flag by the Minister of the Interior hands struck up and the guns fired. After the distribution his Majesty descended from the platform, and standing in the midst of the circle formed by the officers, addressed to them a short speech suitable to the occasion. His Majesty, attended by the Duke de Brabant and the Minister of War, and followed by a numerous staff, then traversed the troops and Civic Guards, and afterwards took his station in front of the palace, to receive the Civic Guards who had been under arms before him. His Majesty subsequently joined the Queen in the balcony, and was again received, as he had been throughout the whole day, with the most enthusiastic acclamations. The ceremony was concluded at five o'clock.

ITALIAN STATES.

NAPLES AND SICILY.—The general Parliament of Sicily has issued the following decree:—

"1. All the civil and military authorities of Messina shall go into such communes as the Executive Committee of Public Safety shall appoint at the seat of the Government, and the persons of every class ordered to

"2. Any one who shall hold correspondence with the enemy, by speaking or writing, a declared a traitor, and liable to the punishment of death.

"3. All other persons guilty of crimes shall be tried by court-martial."

The Sicilian Government, on the 13th, published its acknowledgment of the armistice imposed by England and France on the King of Naples. In the meantime the Government will not suspend its armaments, or any other measures for the defence of any circumstances, and will maintain the rights of Sicily. According to advices dated the 13th, Lipari has submitted to the Neapolitans; communication has been re-established between Messina and Mesaina; and the towns of Scilo and Gigenti have sent in their deputations to Messina to make their submission. M. de Cassibile, who has been elected Syndic at Messina, has, in the name of the Commander-in-Chief, published a bando, according to which complete amnesty is granted of the revolt having now ceased. The town is declared a free port. It appears that at Mess na the King's troops lost 430 artillerymen, 600 horse, and 1200 Neapolitans; 1900 wounded were taken to Reggio, and 700 to Naples. The loss of the Sicilians there are about 100 killed, and a number of women and children. The total loss on both sides is said to be 7000 persons.

PIEDMONT.—The prolongation of the armistice for 42 days between Marshal Radetzky and Charles Albert has been officially notified.

COUNT ROSSI, late Ambassador from the French Court to the See of Rome, has succeeded in forming a Ministry which is composed:—Cardinal Soglia, Secretary of State, Minister for Foreign Affairs, and President of the Council; Count Antonelli, Minister of the Interior and ad interim of Finance; Cardinal Vizzardelli, Minister of Public Instruction; Count Giacomo Colegrani, Minister of Grace and Justice; Professor Montanari, Minister of Commerce; the Duke de Rignano, Minister of Public Works, and ad interim of War; Count Guarini, Minister without office; M. Righetti, Minister of the Interior.

GERMAN STATES.

BADEN.—Accounts of a Republican outbreak on the frontiers of Baden have reached us. They add that a sufficient number of troops of the Grand Duchy have been concentrated around Carlsruhe, and two regiments of troops of the Empire, with artillery, left Frankfort on the 23rd, for the Grand Duchy of Baden. The Republican movement is headed by Heinzen and Struve, who entered Baden at Lorrach, on the 21st. General Hecker, a colonel in the army, was, of 5000 men, composed of Germans, French, Italians, and other nationalities, who had reached St. Jeugen, having published the public moneys at Leopoldshafen, and stopped the Basle Railway. Struve, who had been arrested for a political prosecution was pending, had gone into the Grand Duchy, and was received with enthusiasm by the people, who accompanied him to Lörrach, and conducted him to the Hôtel de Ville. He then harangued the people. The list of revolt, emplois were put in prison. Struve has published an address to the German people, calling them to arms to resist the reaction at Frankfort. The burgomasters are required by the Government to keep the peace, and to watch such movements, and lights fires on the heights during the night, so long as the Republican army shall be in their respective districts. 2. To arrest and sequester the goods of all persons belonging to the Republican party. 3. To call out in arms all the young men, and provide for the accommodation of the Republican troops. Troops were to have left Carlsruhe, under the command of General Hofman, to disperse the insurrectionists.

FRANKFORT.—The Vicar of the Empire has put forth a proclamation to the German people, in which he says that the criminal attempts of which frankfort has been the theatre, prove the intention of the party whose aim is to precipitate the country into the horrors of civil war. The liberty of the press is sacred; but it might be torn away from them if anarchy were allowed to prevail. The Assembly of the people could not be the authority whom has been vested in him; and proclaims his determination to perform firmly and completely the duties imposed on him.

On the 20th, Herr Mohl, Minister of Justice, presented to the Assembly a project for the protection of the members of that body, making a crime of any aggression against it punishable as high treason; providing penalties for attempts to surround the hall of the Assembly, or to hinder the assembly or of any body of people within five leagues of the Paulus kirche. The project was referred to the Committee on the Constitution.

Neue Zeitung, a democratic journal of the 21st, contains an article in which it is stated that the central power is likely soon to set on foot a force out calling of the 5th of the empire, for the protection of the Assembly and the central power, to be at their disposal, as a quarters in the towns and localities surrounding Frankfort, which were furnished contingents to the late riots.

The funeral of Prince Lichnowsky, General Von Auerswald, and the officers who died in the late affair will, it is arranged, take place with [illegible] on the 23rd. The [illegible] at 2 o'clock, and the [illegible] at 4.

The draft of an address to the German people was discussed and adopted on the 23d in the National Assembly, by 197 votes against 178 votes. The draft set forth that the German people had in perfect freedom of election chosen the men who were to found the unity of Fatherland, and to establish liberty for all; that an unheard of attempt had been made to put down the National Assembly, which entertains the hope that the German people will never suffer its independence to be threatened, and that, come enemies from whatever side they may, the Assembly will ever uphold its rights, and never abandon its post until Germany has become united in a free constitution. This was an attempt, on the part of the Conservatives to throw the entire blame of the late emeute on the whole body of the Radicals, though only a few had been compromised.

Herr Stedmann, a member of the National Assembly, has left Frankfort for Berlin and Schleswig-Holstein, in order to act as the Commissioner of the Central Executive during the execution of the decree of the 27th June.

On the 24th, a proclamation prohibiting assemblages of the people had been issued. The military were all day long encamped in the squares, ready to march on the shortest notice. The troops came out to bring to effect the mandates of Frankfort had returned. The disarmament had been enforced. In some places the houses had to be searched; and in the village of Bockenheim some of the houses had to be stormed.

PRUSSIA.

In the sitting of the 21st, of the Constituent Assembly, the President read a letter from General Von Pfuel, announcing that he had been entrusted by the King with the task of forming a new Ministry, and requesting that the members of the Cabinet would attend in their places on the following day. According to the official list, published on the 21st, the new Ministry was to be composed as follows:—General Von Pfuel, Minister-President and Minister of War; Baumstark, Interior; Von Bonin, Minister of Finance; Von Strotha, Minister of Agriculture; Von Ladenberg, Minister of Worship, Education, and Medicine; Von Kamptz, Minister of Justice; Von Rabe, Minister of Commerce, Industry, and Public Works to the Minister of Finance. The Ministry of Justice is entrusted to Under Sute Secretary Müller.

It was hoped that the result of the fall of the Auerswald-Minister would have been the nomination of a more liberal one. From the tone of the journals, it is evident that General Pfuel's Ministry is considered as one not likely to last.

On the 22nd, the new Ministry communicated its programme (couched in very vague terms) to the constituent Assembly. It is stated in it that the Ministers will oppose all revolutionary and anarchical tendencies; will uphold the rights of the people and the Throne; and will expedite, as far as can, the drawing up of the Constitution. Every question put to Ministers. Herr Kirchmann, General Von Pfuel, the Premier, and Herr Baumstark, stated that the appointment of General Wrangel as Commander-in-Chief was made by a Cabinet order, signed by the then Minister of War, that the abovenamed General had received special instructions from the King, and that most of the General was a mere matter of discipline, as it was always customary to submit a complaint against whatever officer an army's name to the Minister of War, that the Ministry had taken no part in the matter, and that the Ministry had taken place because they could not agree to the capitulation of the railways, and the present state of affairs in and out of Germany rendered military precautions necessary, and finally, that he (the Minister) approved of the said order issued by General Wrangel on the 17th instant. Herr Kirchmann expressed his dissatisfaction at the Minister's explanations.

Gen. Von Wrangel passed a review of the Prussian troops on the 20th at Berlin. The quarrels between the troops and the people are on the increase, and arrests on both sides have been made.

All the troops in the capital have received orders not to leave their barracks at all after nightfall. The non-commissioned officers had been instructed to examine the cartridge-pouches of their men.

According to the latest accounts in the Cologne papers, great excitement still prevailed at Berlin, and the popular ferment had been increased by a rumour of the King's intended flight from Berlin to Königsberg. Large meetings were holding at Breslau, the head-quarters of the Silesian Radicals, and violent addresses to the National Assembly were being got up. In fact, it appeared as if the Radicals of Germany were collecting all their forces to strike a grand blow for the purpose of effecting their sinister designs. At a meeting of 10,000 persons, which was held at Breslau on the 21st inst., one of the speakers inflamed his audience by informing them of the Frankfort riots, in which he said the "people" gained the day, and routed the "brutified hirelings" (the soldiers). The city of Cologne, too, had some riots on the 20th inst., in consequence of the police arresting some persons who were accused of conspiracy. A mob assembled and liberated the prisoners, after a smart scuffle with the police. Some school-boys made an attempt to construct a barricade with the loose stones of a pavement that was being newly laid, but this disturbance was effectually repressed by the intervention of the Civic Guard.

AUSTRIA.

On the 18th inst., a deputation from the Hungarian Diet arrived at Vienna. It was charged with a mission, not for the Emperor, but for the people—that is, the National Assembly. On the 19th, the President of the Assembly read a letter from the President of the Hungarian Diet, according the deputation to the Austrian Assembly. Several deputies proposed that the deputation should be received; but M. Reger contended that the measure was contrary to the rules of the House. The Tschech deputies also opposed the motion in terms extremely offensive to the Hungarians. The President attempted several times to put the question to the vote, but so violent a tumult arose that he was obliged to suspend the sitting during half an hour. Ultimately, when it resumed, it was decided that the deputation should not be received, but that its demands should be taken into consideration.

Accounts, dated the 19th, state that Baron de Wessenberg, the Austrian Minister for Foreign Affairs, cannot agree with the British or French Ministers on a single point with regard to the affairs of Italy.

HUNGARY.

From Hungary there is no news of a certain character, except that the war with the Croatians, under their energetic and victorious chief, Jellalich, is as far from a pacific settlement as ever. It was rumoured that the two cavalry regiments of the Kress and Hardegg cuirassiers, which were in Hungary, had gone over to Jellalich. The latest accounts from Pesth mention the formation of the Hungarian Cabinet, which had not as yet received the Royal sanction. Count Batthyany, President of the Council; Alexander Erdody, Foreign Affairs; (for Vienna, Ghyczy Calomon, Finance, St Kiraly, Public Works; Cattos, Ecclesiastical Affairs; Baron Dyoins Kemeny (of Transylvania), Interior; Baron Bay, Commerce; and Messarns, War.

SCHLESWIG-HOLSTEIN.

On the 22d instant the conditions of the Malmo armistice, as to the withdrawal of the German troops, had been nearly fulfilled. The Frankfort battalion, the only one which had not returned, was expected in Hamburgh on the 23d. The Hessian, Baden, and Würtemburg troops were quartered in and about the city, and in the course of a day or two were to commence their route homewards. The Würtemburgers and Hessians had already crossed the Elbe, and General Nuller and his staff were to leave immediately; these troops return through Hanover and Brunswick by easy marches.

At Hamburgh the cholera was on the decrease—908 cases had occurred, of which 396 proved fatal, and 182 had recovered.

Great excitement prevailed in Flensburg, and throughout the whole of Schleswig and Holstein, caused by letters of Count C. Moltke and of three men "of the same stamp" (Messrs Johannsen, Paulsen, and Hansen) to the magistrates of Flensburg, by which the latter are informed of Count Moltke and his companions having been instructed to enter upon the functions of a Provisional Government. The old Provisional Government immediately published a proclamation, in which they protest against the assumption of Count Moltke's mandate, and express their determination "to arrest the said persons (viz. Moltke, Johannsen, and Hansen) wherever they may be found, and to deal with them according to law."

UNITED STATES.

The British and North American Royal mail steam-ship Niagara arrived in the Mersey on the 19th instant, and proceeded up the river to Liverpool. She left New York on the 13th instant, and from Halifax to the Mersey has been 11 days and a half.

The Niagara has thus accomplished the quickest passage from New York on record, but subsequent experience has proved that, on the average, steaming of the usual velocity of several hours at Halifax, in 11 days and a half.

The steam-ship Europa, Captain Lott, however, has accomplished a run not less extraordinary, but somewhat different, from Halifax, having been made in the least space of 11 days and a few hours.

The packet accounts received by the Niagara contain few if any additional facts, and no important change in the political aspect of affairs. Later accounts from Europe of probable deficient harvests had roused considerable attention on the part of the holders of grain, and occupied, next to the Presidential question, the attention of commercial men in general. Under the Presidency, there would seem to be scarcely any doubt as to the election of General Taylor.

For the present, the evaporation of the Irish rebellion had stilled the voice of sympathy.

MEXICO.

Mexico, according to the latest accounts, continued tranquil; and if but the seeds of a new revolution had been sown by Santa Anna and the party that has succeeded him, no symptoms of their existence had as yet developed themselves. Vera Cruz and the other departments had been entirely subdued by the white population.

INDIA.

Intelligence in anticipation of the Overland Mail, dated Calcutta, August 7 Bombay, Aug. 5; and Madras, August 12, has been received this week.

From Moolten, the seat of the insurgent hostilities, the news is encouraging. Like tenant Edwardes and his gallant companions in arms, Lieut. Lake and Gen. Cortlandt, to either with the Sikh forces under the Sheikh Emamooden, [illegible] on the 1st of July, at the village of Khyra, [illegible] a [illegible] Wazir's troops so [illegible] result, like that of the 18th of June, in the total discomfiture [illegible] Moolrajees. Moolraj commanded in person, and sustained the action with considerable bravery, until a cannon-ball struck the howdan of his elephant, and proved to him in the dust, after which mishap he escaped on a horse into the city of Mooltan, under the walls of which the village of Sadoosan is situated. His followers imitated the example of their chief, and were nobly pursued by the British forces, who only relinquished their attack on reaching the gates of Moolran. Four guns were captured on this occasion, with a loss to the British of one: 18 killed and 70 wounded. This second great success, at a season of the year when Indian troops are supposed to be incapable of moving, had at last opened the eyes of those in authority at Lahore; and they had actually made up their minds to send a strong force to support Lieutenant Edwardes.

The united forces of Edwardes, Cortlandt, and our ally the Nawaub, were, by the last advices, encamped not far from Moolran, but were unable to commence operations against the fort, owing to a want of artillery. A requisition for a siege train was forwarded to the Resident at Lahore, and by him transmitted to Calcutta. In the meantime, a considerable force had commenced its march to the assistance of Edwardes.

Lahore itself was perfectly tranquil. Two native soldiers implicated in the late conspiracy had been hanged; and considerable progress had been made in tracing out the ramifications of the plot, to which it was ascertained that the Dewan Moolraj had been privy for a great length of time.

No symptom of a disposition to sympathise with the revolters had been manifested in any of the neighbouring countries. In Scinde all was tranquil. In Afghanistan, Dost Mahomed was reported to be planning an expedition against Balkh. From neither Scinde nor Peshawur have we any news of interest.

From Bombay there was no news of importance. Sir R. Oliver, Commander-in-Chief and Superintendent of the Indian Navy, and Commodore John Pepper, acting naval storekeeper and senior officer of the Indian navy, had both died [illegible] last month.

In Calcutta, the affairs of the Union Bank still seem the exclusive object of public attention.

CHINA.

We have intelligence from Hong-Kong to July 25. Her Majesty's steamer, [illegible] had arrived there from [illegible] with [illegible] on board. [illegible] Her Majesty's ship [illegible] had left Hong-Kong for Singapore, and the [illegible] had left for Manilla. The [illegible] had left for Amoy. Business was then generally dull, and [illegible] business was being done. The [illegible] was generally healthy.

CEYLON.

The India mail brings dates from this island to the 16th of August.

Some obnoxious tax regulations have brought the native inhabitants to a state bordering on one of general revolt. In consequence of a meeting which took place near Colombo, on the 26th of July, the military were called out, but, though serious disturbances were at one time anticipated, the people were induced quietly to disperse. On the 29th a partial rising took place near the town of Caudy, which was checked by the arrival of troops from Kandy. Another meeting was held on the 30th, at which the Governor addressed the people, and succeeded in restoring tranquillity. At the time of the last advices, however, the people were still assembling in great numbers, and it was expected that a serious disturbance would take place. Several arrests had been made, and the leaders of the disturbances had declared their intention to [illegible] the Governor. The Governor had issued a proclamation, declaring the [illegible] to be illegal, and calling upon the Queen's subjects to assist in putting down the disturbances, but the great mass of the people remained [illegible] quiet. The Governor had left for Kandy, with a force consisting of Her Majesty's 78th Regiment, and some Sepoy corps from Madras.

The Chamber of Commerce at Colombo have memorialised Lord Grey, ascribing the disturbances which have taken place in Ceylon to the new taxes which have been imposed.

SOUTH AUSTRALIA.

Advices to June 16th represent the colony as progressing at giant strides, and the mineral stores of the place become daily more and more developed. Railways are once more agitated, a more rapid and regular communication between Adelaide and the port is found to be indispensably necessary. Offers of land for the terminus and part of the line are made free, but money is wanting; until the mutual and lasting interests of Adelaide are on better terms, there is little prospect of the introduction of railways.

PORT PHILIP.

The intelligence from Port Philip is to June 21. The state of the colony was most satisfactory; fresh applications were formed as to the benefits to it derived from separation. An encouraging prospect is enjoyed by the inland districts, which are once more agitated, a more rapid and regular communication between Adelaide and the port is found to be indispensably necessary. Offers of land for the terminus and part of the line are made free, but money is wanting; until the mutual and lasting interests of Adelaide are on better terms, there is little prospect of the introduction of railways.

PORT PHILIP.

The intelligence from Port Philip is to June 21. The state of the colony was most satisfactory; fresh applications were formed as to the benefits to it derived from separation. An encouraging prospect is enjoyed by the inland districts, that Earl Grey, as the solicitation of Mr. A. Boyd, has been induced to send out was returned at Paris and in the department of the Lot, and chose to sit for the latter.

GENERAL CAVAIGNAC, FROM A NEW PORTRAIT BY MARTINET.

Without much pretension to parliamentary oratory, his speeches are effective from their straightforward simplicity and eminently practical character. They are, in fact, the speeches of a frank, cockled soldier, whose profession is to act, not to talk. His manners are very striking, and would render him a marked man anywhere; he speaks with emphasis and accent, and his voice is clear and distinct. Cavaignac, in person, is tall, well-proportioned—slim rather than stout.

Although his features are stern in cast, his countenance is, however, highly expressive of frankness and candour. There is one trait in his character which is exceedingly interesting: iron soldier as he is, he entertains for his mother, who is still alive, in her seventy-third year, an almost infantine affection, and obeys her as implicitly as though he were still a child.

The accompanying Portrait is copied, by permission, from a portrait by Martinet—just published by Rulia Freres, et Jouy, in Paris; and by Gambart, in London.

ST. KITTS.

ADVICES have been received by the Royal mail packet, Teviot, of a most disastrous hurricane in the middle of August, by which Antigua, St. Kitts, and Nevis were devastated, St. Thomas also feeling its effects. At Antigua and St. Kitts, there has been no such loss of life and property for nearly twenty years; neither the hurricane of 1835 nor the earthquake of 1843 being attended with such deplorable results.

During the latter part of the 21st of August clouds were seen at Antigua gathering from all directions, and hanging motionless: the heat was terribly oppressive, but, as the barometer did not indicate anything particular, a little rain and thunder only were expected. The redness of the sky and eddies of wind at sunset occasioned anxiety. In the night the wind increased, and a storm was then anticipated. Every preparation was rapidly made to mitigate its dire effects. At eleven P.M. the darkness was impenetrable, and the tempest was approaching; up to this period the mercury had only fallen, however, one-tenth of an inch. At midnight the wind raged furiously; lightning and thunder were incessant, accompanied by floods of rain. At this time a severe shock of earthquake was felt, attended by very heavy gusts. The gale continued to increase until its force was perfectly terrific. By half-past one the mercury had fallen four-tenths of an inch, and the storm at this time was dreadful. By two A.M. it had abated, and towards morning the day dawned as calmly as if the elements had been at peace, and the spirit of destruction had not been disturbed; but on looking abroad on the 22d, the island which had been studded with neat structures and populous villages appeared as a waste of rubbish and ruin. It is believed that the south and west part of the island experienced the wind much more than the north side. In the old road division the devastation was immense. The villages of Dalzell's and Johnson's Point were destroyed. The churches of St. Mary, St. Luke, and St. Philip were more or less injured: some of the rectory-houses were destroyed. The Moravian Mission establishment at St. John's, Grace Bay, and Cedar Hall, more or less suffered. Some of the villages were completely destroyed. At this part of the island they had early notice of the hurricane by an extraordinary swell of the sea. The injury to plantation property has been extremely serious.

In English Harbour the injury to public and private property is very serious. The governor has suffered a great loss of property. In the dockyard all the buildings were destroyed: soldiers' barracks were ruined, the Middle Ground Buildings thrown into the sea. Government loss in English Harbour alone is £25,000. Wesleyan Chapel and Lady Grey's School were levelled, and Monk's-hill Barracks destroyed. Throughout the island 2000 buildings are unroofed, and 700 totally destroyed. By far the greater portion of these are the cottages of the labouring classes. In the harbour several vessels were either damaged severely or totally destroyed.

A small sloop, blown from Montserrat, arrived at Antigua in safety. The hurricane did not extend to Barbuda. The number of lives lost is said to be 30. Authentic accounts of eighteen had been received. Immense numbers of cattle and stock of all kinds have been destroyed. The largest trees were torn up by the roots, and houses were lifted 25 yards from their foundation.

At St. Kitts, the hurricane commenced at the same time as at Antigua. The moon changed strangely, the barometer fell, and the skies were unusually brilliant. At about four o'clock on the morning of the 22nd, the hurricane was at its height. During the night shocks of an earthquake were felt. In Pall-mall square, Irish Town, and New Town, the spectacle after the storm was awful. As for the country, it presented, after the hurricane, a most desolate appearance, as if the simoom of the desert had swept over it. The canes which were stript of their leaves seemed scorched by a hot wind. Every plant was withered. St George's and St. Thomas's churches, Moravian churches, Wesleyan chapels, have been injured, also the garrison, and a large number of plantations. Several vessels in harbour were destroyed, and the crews, in many instances, perished. A coroner's inquest had been held on ten persons when the mail left.

ST. KITTS.

The hurricane was felt at Nevis down to St. Thomas. At St. Thomas, the West India Company's steamers Medway and Eagle rode out the hurricane, with the assistance of the moorings, and by dropping two anchors. A French ship of 250 tons was wrecked, crew saved.

In Jamaica matters remained in about the same state as by last accounts. The House of Assembly had passed the Address in answer to Governor Grey's speech with one amendment, in which regret is expressed at the calling together of the Assembly, because it was feared the opportunity so anxiously sought by the inhabitants at their many public meetings for devising measures to avert the abandonment of properties, too far gone for beneficial support, had passed by; and because the propriety could not be seen of issuing Treasury Certificates to meet the deficiency in the Ways and Means of the year.

At a meeting of the Commissioners of Public Accounts a special meeting was ordered to be called on the 6th of September, to take into consideration the propriety of issuing island notes, agreeably to the 5 Vict., c. 55.

An insurrection had broken out at St. Domingo, between the blacks and mulattoes. Mr. Thompson, the British Consul at Cape François, Hayti, is said to be killed.

FOREIGN ANIMALS.

On the 10th instant, the ship African, from the Gambia, arrived in St. Katherine's Docks, with an interesting freight of very rare living animals, collected in various parts of Western Africa, by Mr. T. Whitfield, for the Earl of Derby to add to his Lordship's unequalled collection at Knowsley, in Lancashire. Among them is a species of large Antelope, entirely new to naturalists, called by the natives Dacon: the ears are a foot long, as shown in the centre of the Engraving. Here, also, is seen an unique specimen of the remarkable Leucoryx, with its long slender horns, which when seen at a distance appear as one, issuing from the forehead of the animal, and with much probability is supposed to be the prototype of the fabulous unicorn.

On the other side of the Dacon is shown the Addax, or Broad-Foot, with its heavy double curved or spiral horns. In front is the Bubalis of Gray: this is one of the most elegant of the gazelle tribe. Two species of Cephalophus, or Crested Heads, coronata and Grim, the latter with very short horns; the former with great calfs; together with a pair of humped cattle, with peculiar formation of the head and horns; a Kastel, or Bee-eater; and a new species of Pelican, form the rest of the group illustrated.

FOREIGN ANIMALS IMPORTED FOR THE EARL OF DERBY.

NEWSPAPER

CORRIMULZIE, FROM THE NORTH SIDE OF THE DEE.

HER MAJESTY AT BALMORAL.

TUESDAY, the 19th. Mr. Charles Lyell and Dr. Robertson joined the Royal dinner party. The Queen took her usual morning walk to the top of Craig-an-Gowan. During her sojourn, her Majesty has visited the houses of several of the humblest cottars. One old woman, whose kitchen ingle her Majesty honoured by sitting down by, says she would not give the chair in which her beloved Sovereign sat for "a guede lan's lair."

THE LINN OF DEE.

WEDNESDAY.—Her Majesty and his Royal Highness Prince Albert, accompanied by the Royal children, went over the hill this morning in the neighbourhood of Balmoral. Yesterday evening her Majesty conferred the honour of Knighthood on Mr. Charles Lyell, late President of the Geological Society. The Balmoral Correspondent states:—"It is seldom in her excursions that the Queen does not gratify some mother's heart by condescendingly taking notice of her pretty chubby-cheeked darling, as it sports by the way-side. Her Majesty has taken drawings of all the finest scenes in the neighbourhood. She was occupied for sometime yesterday, near the bridge, in taking a distant sketch of Abergeldie Castle, with the surrounding landscape and their fine wooded hills, Craig Ens and Craig-an-Ban, in the background."

THURSDAY.—Her Majesty and Prince Albert, attended by the Countess of Gainsborough, Viscountess Canning, and Captain the Hon. A. Gordon, drove this afternoon to Braemar and the Linn of Dee. Lord John Russell left this morning for Taymouth. The Duchess of Gordon arrived on a visit to the Queen.

FRIDAY.—The Queen and Prince Albert, accompanied by the Princess Royal, Prince of Wales, and Prince Alfred, walked out this morning. The Duchess of Gordon took her departure.

SATURDAY.—Her Majesty, attended by Viscountess Canning, rode out this morning to Invercauld Waterfall, sketching. Prince Albert went out shooting in the forenoon; and in the afternoon walked with her Majesty. "The presence of the Royal Family (says the Balmoral Correspondent) has been felt in our neighbourhood by the poor in many acts of kindness, and a number of poor old women have been presented with warm gowns, and other winter clothing, the Princess Royal being named as the donor. A messenger arrived at Castletown to-day, direct by Perth, through the Spittal of Glenshee, with the melancholy intelligence of the sudden death of Lord George Bentinck. Lord Henry Bentinck, who was shooting near Strathdon, passed, in the afternoon, on his way to England."

SUNDAY. This day was very rainy—the first really bad day since her Majesty's stay. Notwithstanding the unpleasant weather, her Majesty and the Prince attended divine service at the parish church. The church was well attended, but few strangers were present. Mr. Anderson, the parish Minister, preached an excellent sermon from Paul's 1st Epistle to Timothy, 5th chapter and 8th verse: "Bodily exercise profiteth little; but godliness is profitable unto all things, having promise of the life that now is and of that which is to come." Her Majesty was attended by the Countess of Gainsborough, Viscountess Canning, the Right Hon. Sir G. Grey, Sir J. Clark, Mr. Anson, and Captain the Hon. A. Gordon.

MONDAY.—The weather improved to-day. Her Majesty rode out in the forenoon with the ladies of her suite. In the evening a ball was given at the Castle to the persons in her Majesty's employment. The entertainment took place in a kind of temporary hall, which was decorated and illuminated for the occasion. The Queen having, on her permission being requested, intimated that she would witness the dancing, a raised seat, covered with crimson, was erected for the Royal party, and they were lighted into the ball-room by pine torches, borne by Highlanders in their national costume. A great number of those present were dressed in the same fashion, chiefly in the Stuart tartan, which her Majesty has made the holiday uniform of the Highlanders in her service at Balmoral; their ordinary one being, in accordance with her wishes, a dress of the Border tartan, commonly called Shepherd tartan. Her Majesty stayed a short time. The ball, however, was kept up with much spirit till far into morning. The Royal party were to leave Balmoral on Thursday, after luncheon, in order to be in Aberdeen in time for the tide, and in London on Saturday. Great preparations were making in Aberdeen for a grand illumination in honour of her Majesty returning through the city on her way to London.

THE ENGRAVINGS.

We this week conclude our Deeside Sketches with a beautiful view of Corrimulzie, Sir Alexander Duff's shooting lodge, taken from the north side of the Dee. We spoke, last week, of the quiet loveliness of this retreat. The glen is luxuriantly wooded, and the riverside path covered with wild flowers.

In the column beneath, we have engraved the Linn of Dee, which was visited by the Queen on Thursday week. Here is the seventh and last bridge over the Dee. Close by is the Porter's Lodge to Invercauld House, a picturesque building, and beautifully situated among fine trees. Hitherto, we have gone along the north side of the noble river Dee; but at the Bridge of Invercauld we cross over to the south side, along which the road goes from all this way to the Linn of Dee. The water comes foaming and tumbling over through the rocky chasm in a truly romantic manner.

THE BALLOON ACCIDENT AT THE BOULOGNE FETE.

IN our account last week of the ascent of M. Godard, we just alluded to the rapid termination of his aërial voyage in the sea off Boulogne, on the Wednesday of the Fête. We now furnish an illustration of the event.

M. Godard ascended from the gas-works at Capécure, a village divided from Boulogne by the harbour and Lianne. It was announced in the programme of the fête that his lady would accompany him; but the balloon filled so slowly, and at the time appointed for the start had so little ascensive power, that M. Godard was compelled to go alone—as it turned out, a fortunate chance. The wind was blowing from the S W., so that he was certain to be carried to sea, and nothing could have been so favourable for his crossing the Channel had his machine held out. But his journey did not occupy a quarter of an hour from his rise to his fall.

BALLOON DESCENT AT THE BOULOGNE FETE.

We were on the cliffs above the sea-fort between Wimereux and Boulogne when he fell. We had met two douaniers who inhabit a cottage on a slip of land at this spot; and in the spirit of "fraternising" that characterised all the proceedings, had accepted their invitation to tremper with them to the health of the Queen of England; when the cries of the children of "Un ballon! Un ballon!" [illegible] is out upon the heights to see it, followed by all the inhabitants of the a[illegible]ventive station. For a balloon in France is a wonder full twing; and [illegible] Had two many competitors to seen up at once in London, is regarded with [illegible] especial incredulity. At this period the balloon was over the pier, and the minute it got further out it began to drop. Some little sailing-boats [illegible] her out from the port after it; the balloon still fell, [illegible] and at last came slump into the sea, about a mile from land, with a splash that sent the water flying up in all directions round it

We may mention that we were standing near the spot on which the unfortunate aeronauts, Pilatre de Rosiere and St. Romain, fell, and were dashed to pieces, when their Montgolfier caught fire. An amazing chase between the boats now began, far more so than the regatta in the morning had proved, for they were sure of a handsome recompense. One little insect of a craft, however, got ahead of the others, and in a few minutes succeeded in picking up the adventurous gentleman and his hazardous vehicle, with no other injury than a good wetting, as he had prudently furnished himself with a swimming-belt. He was brought back to Boulogne, none the worse, and landed on the Porte, where his wife and one or two friends were anxiously awaiting him. It is curious that the French of the present day are not better aëronauts, when we remember that they, in a degree, invented balloons, and were the first to do anything extraordinary with them. The danger of the Montgolfier, and the expense of filling a gas balloon, have, we expect, retarded the advance of aërostation amongst them.

A. S.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, Oct. 1 Fifteenth Sunday after Trinity
MONDAY, 2.—The Sun rises at 6h. 4m., and sets at 5h. 34m.
TUESDAY, 3. Old St. Matthew.
WEDNESDAY, 4. Day breaks at 4h. 13m., and twilight ends at 7h. 21m.
THURSDAY, 5.—New Moon at 2h. 18m. P.M.
FRIDAY, 6. Fith
SATURDAY, 7. Saturn southsat 10h. 21m.

TIMES OF HIGH WATER AT LONDON BRIDGE,
FOR THE WEEK ENDING OCTOBER 7.

Sunday	Monday	Tuesday	Wednesday	Thursday	Friday	Saturday
M A M A M A M A M A M A M A	M A M A M A M A M A M A M A	M A M A M A M A M A M A M A	M A M A M A M A M A M A M A	M A M A M A M A M A M A M A	M A M A M A M A M A M A M A	M A M A M A M A M A M A M A
h m h m h m h m h m h m h m	h m h m h m h m h m h m h m	h m h m h m h m h m h m h m	h m h m h m h m h m h m h m	h m h m h m h m h m h m h m	h m h m h m h m h m h m h m	h m h m h m h m h m h m h m
4 0 4 24 4 35 5 16 5 32 6 10 6 50 7 30 7 50 8 30 9 10

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"J. Bull," Coleshill.—The sun has frequently spots upon it of various magnitudes, which are usually situated within 40° of his equator. The spot at present crossing the sun's disc is the largest the writer has ever seen. The time of these spots crossing the solar disc is about 13 days 16 hours; and, taking into account the advance of the earth in its orbit from W. to E., the approximate time of the period of the sun's rotation on his axis has been inferred to be about 25 days 9 hours. When two or more spots are on the sun at the same time, they preserve the same relative position towards each other. From this circumstance, as well as from the fact of the equal duration of their visibility, it is presumed that they are parts of the sun's own body, seen through accidental openings in the substance by which he is surrounded.

"A Subscriber," North Wales. We have not room.

"Venator," "A. E. L." The property has not been announced for sale.

"A Constant Reader," Worcester. See Knight's "Guide to Trade," Career and Glidder. We cannot inform you as to the coloured ink.

"A Subscriber," Hire-Top, should consult a solicitor.

"Amy Robsart."—See Beckstein's "Chamber Birds," published by Orr and Co

"P. B. L.," "Goodfellow," "Mary Ann," "An Old and Constant Subscriber." The 1st of the month Indian Mail, by way of Southampton, has lately been discontinued.

"Cornelia."—See the account of the Great Clock at Strasburg, in No. 39 of our Journal.

"A Constant Reader," Hull. By interest at the Admiralty.

"E. G."—Taylor's "Short-hand," improved by Harding.

"X. X." The French Epigramy of the Conception, by Murillo, may be had of Gambart, in Barnard-street.

"M. C.," Newry.—The distribution of the Peninsular Medals is expected to be shortly announced.

"Fin," Bombay, is thanked for the Sketch, though we have not room to insert it at present.

"A Y[illegible] thetics is the science which derives the first principles in all the arts from the effects which certain combinations have on the mind, as connected with nature and right reason.

"R. W.," Retheal.—Emigrant ships leave New York for South Australia.

"E. B. J." The New Royal Exchange was opened by her Majesty in state. (See the account of the pageant and ceremony in No. 151 of our Journal.)

"INFELICITE."—"A Trip in my Yacht." "H. C.," "G. Grove," "R. D. M.," Cheltenham;" "Peter," Sidmouth;" "B. Norton;" "S. B.," Ipswich.

"H. B. A." Montreal (postage unpaid).—Declined.

"S. C."—"Izoteric" is exterior, as opposed to "esoteric," internal. A scean, as used in the "Stowe Catalogue," is a porcelain vessel in form resembling a wine-cooler. We cannot explain the Scotch origin.

"A Subscriber," Carrick-on-Suir.—We have not room.

"Witney."—The "Nook" shall be engraved.

"ΔΙΔΑΣΚΑΛΟΣ."—See the Government "Colonization Circular," sold at 90, Fleet-street.

"An Old Subscriber." See Burns's "Commercial Glance" for 1848.

"A Four Years' Subscriber," Greenwich.—Born in 1796.

"A Lover of Good Music." We cannot, at present, reply.

"G. H.," Holloway. The plan suggested has long been tried, and discontinued.

"A Constant Subscriber," Bermingham. Two Views of Messina will appear in our next week's Journal.

"G. C.," Brussels. We do not know of any such work

"J. T. P." Dublin.—Butler's "Hudibras."

"E. F. F."—The Lannean Society is located in Soho-square; and the Ornithological in the Lodge, St. James's-park

"An Inquirer," Morcott. Middle Land has sung portions of "God save the Queen."

"K. M." Reston.—The Service of the Established Church of Scotland.

"B. B." The phenomenon of blushing, according to M. E. A. Lauth (Mém. de la Société, &c., Strasbourg), depends in part upon vascular and nervous physiology, however, assert that it depends upon the capillaries. (See "Arcana of Science," 1832, p. 145.)

"J. V.," Dublin. We have not room

"C. W. B.," Newport. A glass tumbler is not a bad hygrometer, to test a damp bed, by putting it between the sheets

"Ignoramus," Oxford.—Your question is unmeasurably, of no value

"A. Z." Aberdare.—1. Nuremberg Counter. 2. Imaginary Coin of the last century. 3 and 6. Low countries. 4 and 5. Roman.

"A Correspondent." We cannot find room for the Cork Railway Views.

"W. T.," Pimlico.—We cannot take up the recommendation.

"A Constant Subscriber," Chelsea.—By a Lord Chamberlain's Order. The palaces is, however, now closed.

"T. G." -Marie can reach C, but B flat is generally his highest note.

"Alexandra." The music of the Courts is, in some portions, transposed for Gardoni. We have not the edition of the work in question by us, but it may be concluded that the music would be published in the original key

"W. S."—The announcement in the Liverpool paper, by Mr. Taylor, respecting the expected Comet, was erroneous. It has not yet been seen anywhere.

"A Constant Reader," Chester. The appointment of the Governor-General of India is not usually understood to be made for a certain term.

"Bernard" should apply to a magistrate

"D. Cresswell." White precipitate ointment.

"D. A. W." The coin specified is a sovereign of Queen Elizabeth, struck between 1594 and 1596, and worth about 30s

"An Old Subscriber," York The Marquis of Anglesey is Master-General of the Ordnance.

"Beta," Manchester, may purchase a Planisphere at Watkins and Hill's, Charing Cross. The Almanacks may be had, by order, of any bookseller.

"Charles D." -Apply to the Secretary of the Royal Veterinary College, Camden-town

"R S.," Aberdeen, and "F. J. C.," Belfour.—We regret that we have not room.

BOOKS, &c. RECEIVED DURING THE WEEK

Mitchell's Ruins of Many Lands.——Every Child's History of England.——Milton's Prose works.——Early Travels in Palestine.

MUSIC.—"Sol, tu sol."——"Placido sefficri!"——"No non verdrete mai"——"La Passione."

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 30, 1848.

THE drama or melodrama of European Revolution continues to be played before the attentive audience of the civilised world. The tragic man the scems for the present to have been transferred from Paris to Frankfort; and the phantom of German nationality to be playing the same fantastic tricks, as were played by that other grisly phantom the Red Republic. The Frankfort Assembly having failed to give satisfaction to the fierce democracy by whom it was primarily convoked, a minority in and out of the Assembly, has waged war against it, employing the very same means as were employed by the Socialists and Communists of the French capital against the French National Assembly in the fearful days of June. The Frankfort insurrection was, however, more easily suppressed. The troops of Austria and Prussia were called to the defence of that singular legislative body which was instituted for the purpose of putting an end to the individuality of each of them; and by their ready co-operation, the insurrection of the German "Mountain" was suppressed after a two hours' conflict in the streets. The loss of life was not great in mere numbers; but the assassination by the insurgents of Prince Lychnowski and Major Auerswald, two of the most distinguished members of the Assembly, has given a character of atrocity to the struggle which has rendered it quite as deplorable as the more protracted conflict of the Parisians. In Germany, too, as in France, the excesses of the extreme party have caused a strong reaction; and the day-dream of some of the foremost men of Germany—the unity of their Fatherland—has fallen almost into as much disrepute among moderate men, who desire order and law, as the best and indeed only foundations of real liberty, as the "Democratic" and Social Republic has fallen into in France.

The whole interest of the French crisis of the past week has been centered in the doings of M. Louis Napoleon Bonaparte. Happily, the crisis, unlike some of its predecessors, in this age, when crises are as plentiful as blackberries, has been, though an anxious, a peaceable one. Louis Napoleon has been quietly allowed to take his seat in the National Assembly, has read from the tribune a short and well-judged, but by no means remarkable speech. This personage has an exceedingly difficult game to play. He has allowed his name to be used by parties who make a tool of him for their own purposes, not for his; and he has ambition enough of his own, as those flash-in-the-pan invasions of Strasburg and Boulogne testify, to shut his eyes against the unwelcome truth that his popularity, such as it is, is not personal and original, but tributionary and secondhand. If he plays no part at all in the Assembly or in the streets, such prestige as his name has given him will be lost. If, on the contrary, he attempt to turn that prestige to account, and intrigue either for the Emperorship or Presidentship, it is equally certain that the game will be a losing one for him, and an exasperating one for the great bulk of the French nation. His wisest course will be to give a cold and hearty support to General Cavaignac and the moderate Republic. If he have any of the stuff in him out of which great men are made, that alone will be the mode in which he can show it to advantage for himself or his country. The French know his ambition. They have yet to learn his ability, without which his ambition will be but an edged tool in unskilful hands to do himself an injury. General Cavaignac has, we think, acted with true prudence and correct judgment in allowing him to take his seat unchallenged. To have forbidden him, would have been to persecute him; and to have persecuted him would have been to aid him to climb into that pre-eminence of temporary triumph, which would have led to civil war and the long train of its consequent and inevitable evils. At the same time, every precaution has been taken, not against the individual merely, but against the parties that might make use of his name and position to create disturbance. There is reason to believe, that the next insurrection, when it does occur, will have some other name and pretext than Bonapartism.

THE melancholy death of Lord George Bentinck has filled the public with grief and regret. There was so much manly honesty in his character, such chivalrous gallantry in the battle he fought in defence of a falling cause; he was such a sturdy friend to, and such an admirable representative of, the national love of fair-play; and he combined in his own person so many of the virtues that the people of this country are most accustomed to honour, that his untimely death has excited an amount of sympathy and sorrow far beyond his real importance either as a public or a private individual. We have given elsewhere an account of his life and career, and of the circumstances attending his decease. There seems reason to think that the removal of his Lordship from the stage of politics, unhappy under every personal aspect as it must be considered, will nevertheless be the means of promoting a fusion of political parties. Under his bold and daring leadership, the party which he kept together was prevented from amalgamating with those under whose abler auspices it had so long acted. There is none to supply his place; and his followers will doubtless drop gradually into the ranks from which they seceded, when Sir Robert Peel announced his determination to repeal the Corn-Laws. To Mr. Disraeli and the few who think with him, that old traditionary influences form the only safe moorings for political men, and that parties are far more important than the people whom they strive to govern, the fusion of dissevered friends likely to result from this catastrophe will, probably, appear an evil. To us, while we deeply sympathise with the personal deprivation which the party and the country have suffered, the probable result up on the affairs of the nation appears in a different light. If there must be parties in the Legislature, we think two parties are better than three. The line of demarcation between them is more easily drawn. We know better what each means and what each can do. But a powerful third party, now swaying to the one, and now inclining to the other, has but too often the effect of maintaining a weak and disunited Government in office, while the country demands a strong one, and one united in action. Such a condition of parties is not desirable even for parties themselves, to say nothing of the national interests involved in their struggles. Without a leader, a party must fall; and we cannot see the materials out of which a new leader is to be formed for the party of Protection.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

HER Majesty and his Royal Highness Prince Albert have been graciously pleased to contribute £100, on the part of his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, to the Welsh Educational Institution at Llandovery, recent endowedly by that venerable and benevolent Cambrian, Thomas Phillips, who has given £5000 for the purpose of enabling the inhabitants of the Principality to obtain as good an education as is to be found in the best public schools of England or Scotland.

HER MAJESTY'S RETURN FROM SCOTLAND.—According to the arrangements at present known, her Majesty and the Prince Consort, the Prince of Wales, the Princess Royal, and Prince Alfred, with the Royal suite, it is expected, were to set out, on their return from Scotland, on Tuesday last, the 26th instant. They were to leave Balmoral Castle on the morning of that day for Haddo House, on a visit to the Earl of Aberdeen, where the Royal party intend to remain a day or two, and then proceed to Aberdeen, and embark on board the Victoria and Albert yacht; and should the weather be at all favourable they will land at East Cowes on Monday or Tuesday next, where every preparation has been made for the reception of the Court on the first day named. Should the weather be unfavourable, it is said to be her Majesty's intention to shorten the voyage by landing at Hull, and completing the journey by the North-Western Railway to London, en route for the Isle of Wight by the South-Western.

THE Marquis and March ness of Londonderry have, during the past week, received a succession of distinguished guests at their princely seat near Stockton-on-Tees. On Tuesday, the bazaar in aid of the funds for the erection of a new church at Thorpe, near Wynyard, under the auspices of the Marchioness, took place in the new station of the Stockton and Darlington Railway, and was opened the next day: the proceeds of both days' sale realised about £1,500

MR. BOTERIL, M.P. for Kildare, it is understood, is about to lead to the hymeneal altar Miss Blanche Wyndham, second daughter of Colonel and Mrs Wyndham, of Petworth House, Sussex. The ceremony is to be solemnised in the course of next month

THE GROTTO AT OATLANDS (which we engraved last week) was visited by the Duke and Duchess of Nemours, and the leading nobility and gentry of the neighbourhood, yesterday week. On Saturday the weather was unfavourable, and the visitors were few. The exhibition will be re-opened to-day (Saturday).

POSTCRIPT.

FUNERAL OF LORD GEORGE BENTINCK.—Yesterday (Friday) the funeral of Lord George Bentinck took place The body of the noble Lord was brought from Welbeck Abbey yesterday morning by railway, and then taken to Harcourt House, Cavendish-square. After lying for a short time, the funeral was proceeded with. In consequence of the age of the Duke of Portland, he did not accompany the procession, which was small, all the proceedings being quietly and privately conducted The Marquis of Titchfield acted as chief mourner There were also present Lord Henry Bentinck, who returned from Scotland for the purpose; J. E. Denison, Esq., and Colonel Bentinck, several of the personal friends of the deceased nobleman Several private carriages closed the procession, which proceeded slowly to Old Marylebone Church, where the coffin was deposited in the family vault, beside that of the Duchess of Portland (Lord G Bentinck's mother). The funeral service was performed by the Rev Mr. Charlton. The inscription on the coffin was as follows:—"The Right Hon. Lord George Frederick Cavendish Bentinck, second son of the fourth Duke of Portland; died Sept. 21, 1848, aged 46." The church is being hung with black

THE NEW LORD MAYOR.—Sir James Duke was yesterday (Friday) elected Lord Mayor for the next ensuing civic year.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

FRANCE

The National Assembly decided on Wednesday that there shall be only one Legislative Assembly in France under the new Constitution. It is asserted, however, that the vote will be recalled, and that a system similar to that in the United States of America will be ultimately adopted.

ITALIAN STATES.

NAPLES AND SICILY.—A letter from Paris states, on good authority, that the King of Naples has accepted the mediation of Great Britain and France, on the express condition that his right to re-establish his dominon in Sicily shall not be contested.

The Patria of Florence of the 21st inst. says that an engagement had taken place between the Neapolitan troops and the Sicilians at Aci-reale, ten miles from Catania, in which the Neapolitans were defeated.

GERMAN STATES.

BADEN.—The Journal des Débats announces that the insurrectionary movement in Baden, under the direction of M. Struve, had totally failed, even without the intervention of the Baden troops. M. Struve and his army have re-entered Switzerland.

HUNGARY.

According to the latest accounts, the main body of the Croats was defeated near Szala Czerszegh by the Hungarians. The Croats left 1500 dead upon the field, seventeen pieces of artillery, and three colours. The loss of the Hungarians was 123 killed, and 192 wounded.

CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT.

CHARTIST TRIALS.

These trials, which were noticed in our Postscript of last week as having commenced on Friday sen'night before Mr. Justice Erle and Mr. Justice Williams, were resumed on Monday.

The names of the prisoners are:—Joseph Richie, 42, bricklayer; Alfred Able, 3, porter; William Gurney, 42, shoemaker; John Shepherd, 34, tailor; James Scoverall, 33, joiner; James Richardson, 30, joiner; George Greenslade, 30, shoemaker; Henry Small, 31, joiner; Edward Stebbing, 28, brass turner; William Burn, 44, shoemaker; Philip Marten, 45, newsman; William Lacey, 38, bootmaker; Thomas Jones, 39, shoemaker; Charles Young, 38, shoemaker; William Dowling, 24, artist; and Henry Argus, 23, shoemaker. and they are charged in the indictment, being liege subjects of her Majesty, with having neglected their duty as such liege subjects, and forgetting their allegiance, with having, after the passing of an Act of Parliament called "An Act for the better Security of the Crown and Government of the United Kingdom," unlawfully, wickedly, and traitorously conspired together with divers other people, and wickedly compassed, imagined, and devised to levy war and insurrection against her Majesty, and depose her from the sovereign style and title of Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and that they expressed such intention by divers overt acts afterwards declared. The indictment also alleged that the prisoners wickedly and feloniously assembled together, and conspired and consulted together to stir up insurrection in that part of the United Kingdom called England, with the intent to overthrow the Government and constitution of the country as by law established; and alleged as overt acts that the prisoners purchased and provided a large quantity of arms, consisting of swords, daggers, pikes, and pistols, with which they intended to fight, resist, and kill the troops of her Majesty and the police. Another overt act was, that the prisoners had in their possession a number of proclamations conspired together and with other persons to set fire to the police-stations, railway-stations, and other buildings, and that they provided combustibles for that purpose. The indictment likewise charged that the prisoners, in order the better to carry out their felonious and wicked designs, conspired together, and by means of secret and illegal clubs and associations holding secret correspondence with each other, endeavoured to effect those illegal objects, and intended to levy war against the Queen. In other counts the same description of offence was charged, but in different terms

The whole of the defendants pleaded "Not Guilty."

The principal witness against them was a man named Thomas Powell, who had been long one of their confederates, while at the same time being a spy in communication with the police, whose evidence before the police-magistrate has been already published

The trial of Dowling lasted over Friday, Saturday, and part of Monday, on which latter day the jury retired at one o'clock, to consider their verdict, and at half-past nine o'clock returned into Court, with a verdict of "Guilty against the prisoner on the second count of the indictment.

In the interim the following prisoners were placed at the bar to plead:—William Lacey, 38, bootmaker; Thomas Fay, 20, closer; William Cuffey, 60, tailor; and George Bridge Mullins, 22, surgeon—on a similar charge to that against Dowling; and, after some evidence had been adduced, the Court rose.

Mullins' trial was postponed till next session.

On Tuesday, the trial of Cuffey, Lacey, and Fay was resumed with the evidence for the prosecution.—Thomas Powell, the approver, was the first witness called, and his evidence was almost precisely the same as that given by him on Friday, in the case of Dowling. The first part referred to the various Chartist meetings he attended, in company with the prisoners, from the 26th of July down to the 16th of August. He swore, as in his former evidence, that he attended these meetings merely for the purpose of exposing the proceedings to the authorities, and not with the view of taking part in the intended outbreak. He stated that he took no notes at the meetings, but committed his recollections to paper generally next day or the day after. This witness was under examination the whole day, and, after hearing the evidence, the Court adjourned.

On Wednesday the trial was resumed with the examination of witnesses for the prosecution, the evidence being chiefly that of the police, as to arrests, and seizure of pike-heads, pistols, powder, and ball; and the testimony of Barrett, Davis, and Baldwinson—Chartists who had given information to the police of the proceedings of their fellow-Chartists. Evidence was then given as to the proposed barricades, the recipes for combustible compounds, and the composition of the fire-balls found in the prisoners' possession. The evidence for the prosecution then closed, and the trial was again adjourned.

On Thursday, on the prisoners being placed at the bar, Mr Ballantine addressed the jury at great length, and took a review of the evidence which had been given against his clients, Cuffey and Lacey. He believed that the man Powell was the originator of the plot, and that it was that person who induced others to join different Chartist societies, and that he was—he would not say an accomplice for he was worse—he was a traitor and a spy. He laid a deep scheme to entrap and decoy the unfortunate men under trial into acts for which they were now placed as the bar. The learned counsel then contended that the other testimony could not be believed, and therefore the prisoners were entitled to a verdict of acquittal. Mr. Parry then addressed the jury to a similar effect on behalf of Fay. Several witnesses were then called, who stated Powell was not a man to be believed on his oath; and one of them swore that Powell had frequently recommended him and others not to associate the police, and fire the houses in London. The Court then adjourned.

On Friday the trial was again resumed with the examination of witnesses, who stated that the approver, Powell, had offered to furnish them with daggers and fire-arms, if they would join the Chartists; and that they would not believe him on his oath. The case for the defence closed at a quarter before four o'clock. The Attorney-General then took a review of the evidence which had been adduced for the prosecution and defence, and concluded that the jury would feel it their duty, in justice to the public, to return a verdict of guilty. If, however, the men at the bar were acquitted on the charge of felony, they would be liable to be indicted for high treason. There was no tyranny so great as the tyranny of a mob. The Attorney-General concluded his address at six o'clock, after which the Court adjourned until ten o'clock this (Saturday) morning.

DEATH OF BRIGADIER STACEY.—The last Indian mail brings us the melancholy news of the death of this distinguished officer. The brave veteran died at Neemuch, on the 18th of July.

LONG SAPPER.—Died, on Wednesday, the 20th inst., at Beddington, in the county of Surrey, in his 102nd year, George Hickson, huntsman to the Carews, of Beddington. He retained his faculties to the last, and died respected by all who knew him. His father and mother were servants in the family of Sir Nicholas Carew; he was born at Beddington, in the year 1746, and when a boy was taken into the service of the family, in which he remained until his death, leaving a grandson in the same service

On Tuesday morning about six o'clock, a fire broke out in the large saw mills attached to the premises of Messrs. Rigby and Wright, timber merchants and builders, Nelson-street, Liverpool; and so rapid was the progress of the conflagration, that in less than two hours the entire store, together with its contents, containing a quantity of valuable timber, was entirely destroyed. The store contained some of the finest descriptions of timber, in logs and planks, including mahogany, rosewood, oak, &c., the damage done is estimated at nearly £2000

GOVERNMENT EMIGRATION.—On Thursday her Majesty's Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners appointed six vessels to sail during the ensuing month of October from Deptford, calling at Plymouth for passengers; for South Australia, Port Phillip, and Sydney. Each of these vessels carries 150 passengers.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

PUBLIC MEETINGS.

TESTIMONIAL AND DINNER TO THE DEAN OF MANCHESTER.—On Monday evening, a dinner of the parishioners of St. Paul's, Covent-garden, took place at [illegible] in honour of the Rev. Dr. Dealtry, Dean of Manchester, late Rector of the parish. The Rev. the Dean of Manchester the plate subscribed for, in testimony of the services rendered by the Reverend gentleman whilst rector of the parish. The company was numerous; and in the course of the evening Mr. R. Few, the chairman, presented the plate, which bears the following inscription: "Presented to the Rev. G. H. Bowers, B.D., by the parishioners and pew-renters of St. Paul's, Covent-garden, on his retiring from the rectorship of that parish, occasioned by his appointment to the Deanery of Manchester." The testimonial consists of two elegant silver trifle stands, the columns representing the trunks of oak trees, tastefully adorned with acorns, and also a silver tea-kettle. The sum necessary for the purchase of the plate (£140) was all subscribed in the parish in a very short space of time. The Rev. gentleman had been rector of the parish for seventeen years.

CITY OF LONDON GENERAL PENSION SOCIETY.—On Monday the annual meeting of the supporters of this society was held, at the London Tavern, Bishopsgate-street, H. Fownall, Esq., in the chair. The report read by Mr. Menzies, the secretary, stated that, during the past year, [illegible] new pensioners had been elected on the funds, making the present number 53, viz. 31 men and 22 women, the [illegible] 27, [illegible] pended £8,411. In October next four more would be placed upon the funds. The finances were in a prosperous state, notwithstanding the absence of a festival during the past year. The Duke of Bedford had consented to become President for the ensuing year. [illegible] Richardson, the late Secretary. After the reading of the report some conversation took place amongst the members in reference to the late Secretary. £400, it was stated, was due from him which he refused, of which sum he had since paid £[illegible], and had agreed to pay the remainder in three years. The report was adopted.

THE BUILDERS' BENEVOLENT INSTITUTION.—On Monday, a meeting of the friends of this charity was held at the Freemasons' Tavern, Mr. [illegible] chair. The object was to [illegible] widows and orphans; also temporary relief to workmen in cases of accident; and likewise to form a separate fund for the erection of an asylum for decayed masters, their wives and widows. The report congratulated the members on the steady progress which was being made, the subscriptions and donations amounting to nearly £1000. The annual income was about £300, and it is proposed, as soon as it is increased to £500, to commence the relief fund.

SCHOOL OF ART.—This institution, founded by the Society of British Artists, held its fifty-first meeting for the ensuing season on Monday evening in the Gallery of Suffolk-street. A large assemblage of ladies and gentlemen was collected in order to hear the report, which, after some delay, was read by Mr. [illegible] The report stated that the number of pupils had increased had the existence of the school been more generally known. The life academy was open every evening, and was very fully attended. The antique school, both day and night, and the school of the model, classically draped, which was exclusively appropriated to female students, was open three mornings in each week. Lectures were delivered twice every week on human and comparative anatomy, on perspective, and on the phenomena of nature in relation [illegible] The chairman addressed a few words to the meeting, in which he [illegible] and without aid from the Government or the public. After a speech from Mr. Wise, the business of the evening terminated.

BIRKENHEAD DOCK COMPANY.—On Tuesday, a meeting of bondholders under the Birkenhead Dock Acts took place at the London Tavern, Bishopsgate-street, upon the acquisition of the rentcharges, and, if necessary, of the docks themselves, the raising of £30,000 on preferential mortgages, in accordance with the provisions of an Act passed in the last session of Parliament, entitled "An Act to alter and amend the Acts relating to the Birkenhead Commissioners, Docks, and to transfer the powers of the Commissioners to a corporate body, to be called the trustees of the Birkenhead Dock." Mr. William Ellice in the chair. The Chairman said that the immediate object of the meeting was to ascertain the opinions of the bondholders respecting the propriety of conferring on the trustees a power of raising the sum of £30,000, to be devoted to the completion of certain works, whose construction would enable them to derive a revenue from the undertaking. Until these works were formed there was no possibility of their obtaining any return upon the large sums already invested. Their plant of stock and materials, if brought into the market, would certainly produce a large sum, but it would be sold at a great sacrifice—probably at half what it was worth: and the trustees had, therefore, thought their most prudent course to be the one they had adopted, of asking from the bondholders the further sum, for which, in his opinion, very ample security was given.—Sir L. L. Goldsmid moved a resolution to the effect that power be given to the trustees to grant preferential mortgages on the rates and tolls of the docks for a sum not exceeding £30,000. Mr. J. Bailey, jun., M.P., seconded the motion. The resolution was unanimously. A motion was also carried, to the effect that the proceedings of the meeting be transmitted to each bondholder, who should be requested at the same time to intimate whether he was desirous of taking any portion of the preferential bonds, and to what amount. The meeting then separated.

HOSPITAL FOR CONSUMPTION, BROMPTON.—Since the concert accorded by Mr. [illegible] [illegible] for that purpose. The Rose Charity fund, for the relief of discharged patients who a necessities constitute a claim, is progressing with the greatest satisfaction [illegible] The Lieutenant-Governor [illegible]

EAST INDIA HOUSE. [illegible] Sir James Law Lushington at the chair, on the question of the recent gallant services of Lieutenant Edwardes, at Mooltan, having been brought forward, the Chairman read the following resolution of the Court of Directors, on the subject, and also the letter from the Commissioners for the affairs of India approving of such resolution.—"At a Court of Directors, held on Wednesday, the 13th September, 1848. The Chairman having called the [illegible] attention to the [illegible] Lieutenant Edwardes, [illegible] Resolved unanimously, that the Court of Directors entertain a high sense of the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

PORTRAIT OF LORD GEORGE BENTINCK, FROM A DAGUERREOTYPE BY CLAUDET.

Rotterdam, Havre, and other foreign ports, the colours on the British ships were also exhibited half-mast high, and much regret prevailed at the loss of the best friend of the shipping interest.

MEMOIR OF LORD GEORGE BENTINCK.

LORD GEORGE FREDERICK CAVENDISH BENTINCK was the second surviving son of William Henry Cavendish Scott Bentinck, the present Duke of Portland. His mother, Henrietta, eldest daughter of the well-known General Scott, of Balcomie, in Fifeshire, derived, in the female line, from the families of the famous Scottish worthies, Balfol and Wallace. General Scott was of very eccentric notions. By his will he prohibited any one of his daughters from marrying a nobleman; and provided that disobedience on this point should entail a forfeiture of the testamentary bequest. Despite, however, of this injunction, the three ladies all became in the sequel peeresses, and by an arrangement amongst themselves preserved their fortunes: the eldest, who succeeded to the chief portion of her father's great wealth, married the Duke of Portland; the second became the wife of Francis Lord Dunne; and the third, the widow of the Right Hon. George Canning, was elevated to the peerage in her own right, after the lamented decease of her distinguished husband.

Lord George Bentinck was born at Welbeck, near Worksop, on the 27th of February, 1802. Up to his seventeenth year his studies were pursued at home. His Lordship having adopted the army as a profession, was appointed, about the year 1819 to a cornetcy in the 10th Hussars and in the year 1822 he exchanged from that corps into the 41st Regiment of Foot, with the intention of accompanying his uncle, the celebrated statesman, Mr. Canning, just appointed Governor-General, to India, in the capacity of military secretary. The sudden death, however, of Lord Castlereagh, and the necessity there existed for retaining Mr. Canning as leader in the Lower House with the seals of the Foreign Office, interrupted this course at the last moment—so late, indeed, that the luggage of uncle and nephew had been sent on board the Jupiter frigate. Upon the change of events George continued to fulfil the duties attached to this honorary appointment at home until the year 1825, when he exchanged into the 2nd Life Guards, with which regiment he served about twelve months. The cause of his leaving it was rather characteristic. In riding one day off Newmarket Heath with the late Duke of York, perhaps even as great a lover of the turf as Lord George himself, the Commander-in-Chief made his friend an offer of an unattached majority, then vacant, which his Lordship at once accepted. In 1826 he became member for Parliament for the borough of Lynn, and in 1835, seeing that there was no prospect of either active service or promotion, he retired from the army altogether by the sale of his commission. His Lordship imbibed an early inclination for field and other national sports, and for a considerable period evinced all that active energy for the chase which he afterwards transferred to its more costly companion—the turf. The latter was a pursuit much eventually worked equally to his own fame, and the advantage of the sport he so warmly affected. The strength of his Lordship's stud was at one time enormous: in the year 1844 he had forty horses running in public, and somewhere near a hundred in all. Amongst the more celebrated of his horses may be named Grey Momus, Crucifix, Neworth, Pluto, Misdeal, Croton Oil, and Gaper. It is not, however, as a mere owner of race-horses that we would allude to Lord George's connexion with the turf. As a reformer of its abuses his name will live as long as Englishmen have a taste for the amusement, or an admiration for one who effected what a whole body found themselves unequal to attempt. His stringent and admirable drawn up rules for the exclusion of defaulters from the race-courses, and the spirit with which he supported the regulations he made, have left the racing world greatly his debtor, and those whom it more directly concerned expressed their gratitude for his services by the offer of a testimonial. This, however, his Lordship declined: and in its place was substituted the "Bentinck Benevolent and Provident Fund," with the money subscribed for the offering originally intended to be made to his Lordship. This fund is established for the benefit of trainers and jockeys, their widows and children, under the provisional management of the Dukes of Beaufort, Bedford, and Rutland, Earls of Chesterfield and Eglinton, and the Hon. G. L. Byng. This event, followed shortly by his retirement from the turf, has left to the public his favourite sport relieved from many of its evils, and restored to it a character it never should have lost.

Lord George Bentinck had sat about nineteen years for Lynn before he was at all known to the public as a political character. He was friendly to the general principles of the Reform Act, but opposed Ministers on several details in Committee. He was next a silent supporter of Sir Robert Peel's Administration, taking no active part in politics, but pursuing with characteristic energy his pursuits on the turf. On the introduction of Free-Trade measures by Sir R. Peel, Lord George, with that spirit and ability which invariably characterised all his actions, turned his attention exclusively to politics, and was one of the bitterest opponents the Free-Trade party ever had to contend with. It was the events of the year 1846 that first brought into play the latent energies of Lord George Bentinck's character. In common with the Conservative party in general, he had given an open and cordial support to those measures of financial and commercial reform which signalised the early years of Sir Robert Peel's administration. Other public men, of all parties, had long seen in those measures the recognition of principles which must, sooner or later, be carried much further in legislation; but Lord George Bentinck did not view this subject in the same light. He chose to regard the proceeding of Sir Robert Peel as a deliberate act of political treachery, compounding his political honour; and he attacked that statesman with a violence and sustained rancour which has no parallel in the Parliamentary history of this country for the last half-century.

THE GREENDALE OAK IN WELBECK PARK.

WELBECK ABBEY.

Lord George's famous speech of the 21st March, 1846, first drew upon him the attention of the House and the public. His plunge into the strife was indeed sudden and unexpected. From that night he rapidly rose to eminence, severing the Tory phalanx into two, and becoming himself the bold, unflinching, and ever-ready leader of one portion—the Protectionist party. This position he held until his recent melancholy death.

Lord George's ancestors had originally come over to this country (from Holland, in the reign of William III.) to maintain Protestantism and the principles of civil and religious liberty, so he always was an advocate for the removal of religious disabilities, and only in the last session he voted in favour of the Jewish Disabilities Bill. It may be gathered from his address to the electors of Lynn, in 1847, that he was not unfavourable to the endowment of the Roman Catholic priesthood in Ireland—not, as he expressed himself, "from English funds and English pockets," but from the revenues of the Irish soil. But it was in support of the doctrines of protection to native industry—agricultural as well as manufacturing—that his zeal kindled into congenial warmth; and his unexpected death will be a sad blow to the Protectionist party.

Although we cannot award to Lord George Bentinck the first place as a politician, it is impossible not to admire his sterling English manliness and spirit; and long may it be before these qualities are absent in men of any political party. Writing to an Irish gentleman so recently as the 8th of the present month, his Lordship said:—"I don't care twopence for ill-earned popularity. I am for those who obey, and not for those who break the laws. * * * I can say, with Burke—'I was not made for a minion or a tool; and as little can I follow the trade of winning hearts by imposing on the understandings of people.'" These are sentiments which do honour to his memory. He has gone to a premature grave in the prime of life and zenith of his talents, and it is impossible not to regret the sudden extinction of a spirit so full of activity and energy. Lord George Bentinck's death—of which full particulars will be found in the report of the Inquest—occurred suddenly, while he was walking in a field near Welbeck Abbey, on the afternoon of Thursday the 21st instant. He was, at the time, in his 47th year.

The ducal house of which his Lordship was a scion, was founded by William Bentinck, a Dutch noble, who enjoyed in an eminent degree the favour of King William III., and was created by his Majesty Earl of Portland, in 1689. His Lordship had the command of the Dutch regiment of Horse Guards, and took a distinguished part, as Lieutenant-General, at the battle of Boyne. He was subsequently invested with the Order of the Garter, and at length died in 1709, leaving a large family. The eldest son, Henry, second Earl, obtained in 1716 the highest grade in the peerage, being elevated to the Dukedom of Portland and Marquesate of Titchfield. His Grace died in Jamaica, of which he was Captain-General and Governor, 4th July, 1726, leaving, with other issue, a son and successor, William, second Duke, K.G., who added considerably to his fortune and influence, by marrying the Lady Margaret Cavendish Harley, only daughter and heir of Edward, second Earl of Oxford, by Lady Henrietta Cavendish Holles, his wife, only daughter and heir of John, first Duke of Newcastle. The paternal grandfather of this richly-portioned heiress, Robert Harley, was the illustrious minister of the reign of Queen Anne, and her maternal grandfather, the Duke of Newcastle, had the reputation of being one of the richest subjects in the kingdom. From him has descended to the present Duke of Portland, Welbeck Abbey, Notts, together with the valuable property of Cavendish-square, Holles-street, and its neighbourhood, so productive at the present day.

The son and heir of the marriage of the second Duke of Portland, with the heiress of the Harleys, the Holles, and the Cavendishes, was William Henry, third Duke, K.G., who filled the dignified office of Viceroy of Ireland in 1782, and was twice Prime Minister. He wedded Dorothy, only daughter of William, fourth Duke of Devonshire; and, dying in 1809, was succeeded by his eldest son, William Henry Cavendish, the present chief of the ducal house of Portland, the father of Lord George. Beside Lord George, the present Duke has had issue William Henry, Marquis of Titchfield, who died, aged 27, in 1824; William John, present Marquis of Titchfield, born Sept. 18, 1803; Lord Henry William, born in 1804; Lady Henrietta; Lady Caroline, deceased in 1828; Lady Charlotte, married, July 14, 1827, to John Evelyn Denison, Esq., of Ossington, Notts; Lady Lucy, married Nov. 8, 1828, to Lord Howard de Walden; and Lady Mary.

LORD GEORGE BENTINCK.—(FROM A RECENT SKETCH.)

THE ILLUSTRATIONS.

The Portrait prefixed to the Memoir of Lord George Bentinck is from a very successful Daguerréotype by M. Claudet: and the portrait upon the opposite page is from a characteristic sketch still more recently taken.

The accompanying views are from Sketches by an Artist whom we dispatched to Welbeck, to ensure accuracy. First is Welbeck Abbey, the birthplace of Lord George Bentinck, and the property of his Grace the Duke of Portland. The seat is extra-parochial, and lies towards the western border of Nottinghamshire a short distance south of Worksop. The original Welbeck Abbey was constituted the superior of all the houses of the Premonstratensian order in England and Wales, in 1512. At the Dissolution, it was granted to Richard Whalley, from whom it descended to Sir Charles Cavendish, brother of William, Earl of Devonshire, who converted the monastic building into a residence in 1604. Sir Charles Cavendish dying in 1617, Welbeck Abbey became the residence of his son, the celebrated and loyal Duke of Newcastle, distinguished by his taste for horsemanship; he built here a magnificent riding-house and stables, under the direction of John Smithson, in 1623—still the finest in the kingdom. Margaret, his granddaughter and heiress, married John Holles, Earl of Clare, who was created Duke of Newcastle in 1694; and his daughter and heiress, Henrietta, married Edward Harley, Earl of Oxford, whose only daughter and heiress, Lady Margaret Cavendish Harley, married, in 1734, William, second Duke of Portland, from whom this ancient seat, together with large estates in this county and Derbyshire, descended to the present noble possessor.

Of the ancient Abbey, the only remains are some of the arches of the vaults, and some walls of the superstructure, built into the present mansion. The interior displays a great degree of elegance and convenience, the apartments having been re-arranged by the late Duke of Portland. The library, 44 feet by 30 feet, is in the Tudor style of architecture. Besides a collection of portraits of the Cavendish and Bentinck families, here are others of interest.

The park is about 8 miles in circuit, and is adorned with woods of venerable oaks. Near the house the plantations are upon a large scale, and are diversified with a fine piece of water, occupying a winding valley, which, sweeping round the several headlands, produces a most picturesque effect at every turn. We have engraved one of the most celebrated monarchs of the forest, the Greendale Oak, which is, probably, but little altered during the last century. In 1794 a roadway was cut through its venerable trunk, higher than the entrance to Westminster Abbey, and sufficiently capacious to permit a carriage and four horses to pass through it. (Strutt's "Sylva.") According to Hunter's edition of Evelyn's "Sylva," about 1645, this oak was 88 feet high, with a trunk girthing 33 feet 1inch: the diameter of the head, 81 feet. In 1778, Mr. Rooke gave the dimensions thus:—"Circumference of the trunk above the arch 35 feet 3 inches; height of the arch, 10 feet 3 inches; width of the arch, about the middle, 6 feet 3 inches; height to the top branch, 54 feet." The Major considered it to be above 700 years old.

Viewing this venerable relic, we are reminded of the following noble lines:

Thus a tree a grander child hath born not.
What are the boasted palaces of man,
Imperial city or triumphal arch,
To forests of luminous shade extent
Which time confirms, which centuries waste not?
Oaks gather strength for ages; and when at last
They wane, as beauteous in decrepitude
So grand in weakness—even in their decay
So venerable—they're sacrilege to cope
The consecrating touch of time. Time watch'd
The blossom on the parent bough. Time saw
The acorn loosen from the spray. Time pass'd,
While, sprouging from its swaddling shell, yon oak,
The cloud-crown'd monarch of our woods, by thorns
Environ'd, 'scaped the raven's bill, the tooth
Of goat and deer, the schoolboy's knife, and sprang
A royal hero from his nurse's arms
Time gave dominion, and Time gave it years.

Ages bestow'd, and centuries grudged not
Thus knew the sighing when gay summer's breath
Shook to the roots the infant oak, which after Tempests moved not. Time hollow'd in its trunk
A tomb for centuries, and buried there
The epochs of the rise and fall of states
The failing generations of the world,
The memory of man.

The Sketch on the Welbeck Estate is of melancholy interest: it shows the gate in the Flood Meadow, immediately upon the verge of the park—where the lamented nobleman was found cold and lifeless,—"in a first boyish haunt of his father's domain."

SKETCH ON THE WELBECK ESTATE.

IRELAND.

THE STATE TRIALS—SPECIAL COMMISSION IN CLONMEL.

On Thursday, the 21st inst., the Special Commission for the trial of Mr. Smith O'Brien, and Mr. T. F. Meagher, and several other persons charged with high treason, was opened by the Right Hon. F. Blackburne, Lord Chief Justice of the Queen's Bench; the Right Hon. John Doherty, Chief Justice of the Common Pleas; [illegible] Baron Moore.

town on the preceding evening, attended by an escort of dragoons) entered the court at half-past eleven o'clock. They were accompanied by the High Sheriff, Richard Pennefather, Esq., and an escort of police. Before their arrival, the Attorney General and Solicitor-General took the places allotted for them.

The Clerk of the Crown having read the Commission, the names of the Grand Jurors were called over, and the following Grand Jury was sworn:—Richard [illegible]

[illegible] Thomas [illegible] Esq., Foreman.

The Chief Justice: Gentlemen of the Grand Jury, you will proceed to the discharge of your duty in finding the bill of indictment unless two witnesses prove some act of treason—two witnesses to one overt act, or two witnesses to several overt acts. You will, therefore, carefully attend to this consideration when the witnesses in support of the indictment are under examination. Now, in respect to that which is the subject of the charge—the intention to be inferred, and expressed if it can be expressed, otherwise to be inferred—my instruction to you is this. It is to be inferred, as I have said, from acts, writings, and speeches, or generally from declarations. But, as far as regards mere oral declarations, not testified in writing, you ought to pay no regard to the acts of treason they seem to evidence, unless the words are connected with some design, or some conspiracy, or some direction or excitement. Words do not constitute an act of high treason, it is only when they are found in connexion with acts that they become evidence. And the [illegible] consider [illegible] will [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"Equitas."—Your three "amended" problem can be solved in three moves, thus: 1. Q to K sq; 2. R to K 5th; 3. Q to K's third—mate; and, as last recast, cannot be done at all, in which state we sincerely hope you will leave it.

"D. R. T." We know of no perfectly satisfactory defence to Captain Evans's celebrated gambit. The two which many consider so have been analysed with remarkable care and skill by Mr Walker, of Dublin, in the current number of the Chess Players' Chronicle, and in all his variations the result is in favour of the attack, which, from this circumstance, we shall not be surprised to see again as much in vogue as in the memorable days of Le Bourdonnais and M'Donnell. Your second question should be submitted to the publisher of our paper.

"P. W. M." Nova Scotia.—You must have made some mistake in setting up the position. According to your description, the B pwd King's in check at starting by the White Rook. It will be best to send a diagram of the position.

"Medicus," Dunmanus, West Indies.—In the end-game submitted, Black ought unquestionably to have won the game; if, instead of the fatal capture of the Rook, he had simply checked with his Q at her 8th, and afterwards taken the Q's Rook.

"Sloango.—In Mr. Staunton's "Illustrated Games," the move should be a Black Pawn at Black Q's 4th. To the second enquiry, we believe, some time this year

"F. M. E."—The definitions you ask for would take up more space than we can spare You will find them in any rudimentary work on the game.

"Sopravalta."—Quite right. See notice to "Sloango"

"C. W. R."—"F. G. R."—Enigma No. 399 is not practicable without a Black Pawn at Black's Q's 4th sq

"A. L."—"Holkham" Very acceptable at all times, especially if they have been subjected to rapid examination before they reach us

"J. C. B.", Louth.—Neither of them is preferable to the stated number of moves; for, in the first, Black may interpose his Kt, and delay the mate; and in the second, by playing his Q to K R 6th, he can do the same

"Ben Rhee."—We have tried in vain to make out your object in the diagram marked "61," for the position and solution are all at cross purposes. The stipulation that White is to mate with his K B in five moves, should be "in one more," since the B may waste at once. You evidently have no conception of the extreme acuteness in description which Chess Problems demand.

"A. A." Clifton.—Thanks. It shall be examined, and reported on immediately

"A. Z. B. T." It strikes us as ingenious and correct, but we should recommend you to examine it once more before publication.

"F. W. C."—There is no difference whatever. It shall be examined.

"J. H. N."—Such merely elementary knowledge should be sought for in a work on the game. We have not space every week to explain what "check" means, what "checkmate" means, or to describe how and why a Pawn takes another Pawn "en passant."

"H M", Salford.—Every player desirous of appreciating the fertility of attack, and almost exhaustless resources of the Evans' gambit, should study the latest discoveries on the subject, by Mr. Walker (See our notice above to "D. R. T.") The variations on this opening you have sent us are all well known, and may be found in every popular Chess Treatise for the last fifteen years

"E. J. C.", Isbourne, is thanked for his entertaining bit of stratagem, which we purpose finding a place for very shortly

"C. E. R."—They shall receive immediate attension. 2. See the notice above to "C. W. R."

"W. L."—The budget of Problems you allude to must have miscarried Those now received are under consideration, and shall be reported on next week

"G. S. J."—It shall be looked to. No. 363 is quite right. Try it again.

"D. W. R."—It cannot. See any answer to Correspondent.

"Chess-Player."—Omit the word "check" at the tenth move

Solutions by "F. G. R." "P. T. M." "H. W." "Sopravalta." "The Bath Tyro," "Few-nos," "Spero," "Laura C. S. and K." "W. L." "Gilbertson," "Petitado," "G. A. B." "Sisera Exor," "[illegible]" are received

Those by "C. F. C." "M. P." "Jynx." "[illegible] G. D.," "Philo-Chess," are wrong.

The Reading Chess Club is desirous of engaging in a match by correspondence with any other Club Address to the Secretary, New Public Rooms, Reading, Berks.

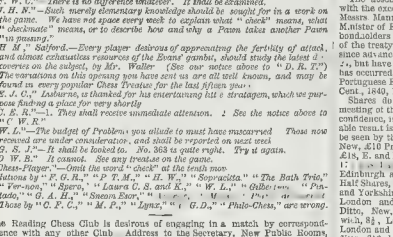
SOLUTION OF PROBLEM No. 244.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE	BLACK.
1. Kt to Q 6th	K to K sq	4. R to Q B 6th	P to B 4th
2. R to Q B 8th	K to Q 2nd	5. P mates.
3. Kt to Kt 6th (ch)	K to K 3rd

PROBLEM No. 245.

By Messrs. HORWITZ and KLING.

BLACK.



WHITE.

White playing first can mate in three moves.

CHESS IN THE METROPOLIS

CLEVER LITTLE GAME JUST PLAYED BETWEEN MR. HARRWITZ AND THE REV. MR. F., OF DUBLIN. THE FORMER GIVING THE PAWN AND TWO MOVES.

(Remove White's K B P from the board.)

BLACK (Mr. F.)	WHITE (Mr. H.)	BLACK (Mr.)	WHITE (Mr. H.)
1 P to K 4th		13. Q to Q R 6th	Q R to Q Kt 3rd
2 P to Q 4th	P to K 3rd	14. Q to Q R 4th	Kt to K 4th
3 K B to Q B 4th	P to Q B 4th	15. Q takes Q R P	Kt to Q 6th (ch)
4 P to Q 5th	P takes P	16. K to B sq	R takes Q Kt P
5 B takes P	P Kt to B 3d	17. Q to R 8th (ch)	Q to Kt sq
6. Q B to K Kt 5th	K B to K 2d	18. Q takes Q (ch)	B takes Q
7. B takes Kt	B takes B	19. Q Kt to B 3d	R to B 8 s.
8. P to Q B 3rd	P to K 5th	20. P to K B 3d	R to Kt 4th (c)
9. Q to her Kt 3rd (a)	Q to K 2d	21. Q Kt to B 4th	R to K 2d
10. K Kt to K 2d	Q Kt to B 3d	22. Kt takes R (d)	R takes P (ch)
11. Q to Kt sq (b)	Q B to Q 2d	23. P takes R	Q B checks
12. Q takes Kt P	Q R to Q Kt sq	24. K to K sq	K B mates

(a) Black has now an excellent game, but can be mated in 8? That is the difficulty.

(b) Premature. It would have been much better to bring more pieces into action, and secure the safety of his King, before attempting any positive demonstration of attack.

(c) The beginning of the end; and a very beautiful termination it is.

(d) Black a point to the fore on account of the opportunity of winning the unlucky R—that he thought it needless to anglice the curiously one White's moves for each p— have to double the next three moves came upon him like electric shocks

MATCH BY CORRESPONDENCE,

BETWEEN THE CHESS CLUBS OF LONDON AND AMSTERDAM.

WHITE (Amsterdam).	BLACK (London).
15 Q R to Q B sq

London to pl...

CHESS ENIGMAS.

No. 365.—By HERMN MÜLLERSTRÖM, of Copenhagen.

This elegant and ingenious little problem we have extracted from the previous number of the Berlin Schachzeitung.

White: K at K Kt 6th, R at K R 3d, Kt at K Kt sq; P s at K Kt 2d, K B 5th, and K 3d.

Black: K at K Kt 8th; P s at K Kt 4th and 6th, K B 3d, and K 4th.

White to play, and mate in three moves.

No. 366.—By Mr. C. E. RANKEN.

White: K at Q Kt 6th, R at K 3d, R at K 4th, Kt at Q 4th; P s at K R 4th, K B 3d, K 2d, Q 3d, and Q Kt 2nd.

Black: K at Q 4th; P s at K R 4th, K 4th, and Q 3d.

White to play, and mate in four moves.

No. 367.—By the same.

White: K at K B 2d, R at K 5th, B at K Kt 3d, Kt at K B 4th; P s at K 4th, Q 4th, and Q Kt 5th.

Black: K at Q 3d, B at Q B sq, Kt at Q Kt 2d; P s at Q 2d and Q B 3d.

White to play, and mate in three moves.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

A majority of 15 votes in favour of a dividend of Three and-a-Half per Cent, as proposed by the Directors, instead of a dividend One per Cent., which had been moved as an amendment, was the result of the Bank ballot on Wednesday. In the financial article of last week the arguments of both parties were briefly noticed. The interval between the meeting and the ballot has not, however, pass without eliciting several new views of the question. Its party the constant addition to the Bank capital is strongly objected to, as being an opposition to the intentions, if not the letter of the charter; as an indirect, and in compelling the present holders to forego a portion of their dividends in favour of future proprietors; as well as impolitic, from continued accumulations tending to render it so powerful as to exercise an overwhelming influence over the Money Market. On the other hand, it is urged that a reserve of one year should always be provided, to meet the possible losses of another, and that a bank cannot be too much strengthened for the public security. To this it may be replied, that no bank at its commencement can have reserve; and so, after its accumulation, it can be only capital with another name. Its probable effect may be to afford an undue confidence at the employment of the resources of the bank, by assisting in the promotion of extensive speculative transactions. The decision arrived at by the ballot is in favour of increasing the rest between this period and the next: all yearly meeting, there is little doubt that the subject will not only undergo much discussion, but the formation of some new principle for guarding the "recommendation" of a dividend will, with many other changes, be suggested to the proprietors by the Court of Directors themselves.

The Consol Market was very quiet during the early part of the week; Consols, on Monday, were quoting at 86¾ to ¾ and 87 for account; opening at the same price on Tuesday, and closing at 86½ to ¾ for Money and Time. Towards the close of Wednesday's market, a decline of about ¼ occurred; and on Thursday, the private correspondence from France and Germany was generally represented to be so full of doubt with regard to the future course of political events, that a similar decline on Consols was the consequence; the quotation being, 86½ to 86 for Money, and 86 to ¾ for the Account. Exchequer Bills have not undergone any variations worthy of notice; India Bonds also maintain about the price of the previous week, and the effect of improving Mexican to 17, and it has since advanced to 17¾. Portuguese Four per Cents have been done as high as, but have since declined. In the other securities no change of any moment has occurred, the registered quotations being, for Mexican Five per Cents, 17¾; Portuguese Five per Cents, 70; Ditto, Four per Cent, 23; Spanish Five per Cent., 18½; Ditto, Passive, 2¾; Ditto, Three per Cent, 23¾;

Shares do not exhibit symptoms of improvement in prices, although a meeting of the leading directors of the established lines, with a view to restore confidence, is spoken of. What means the directors have to produce this desirable result is not very readily to be seen. The present state of the Market will be seen by the following list of the registered bargains: Caledonian, 20; Ditto, New, £10 Preference, 2; East Anglia, £25, L. and E and L. and D., 4½; Ditto, £18, E. and E., 3; Eastern Counties, 12; Eastern Union, Class B (L. and B.), ⅛; Ditto, 15; Ditto, New Quarters, 3¼; East Lincolnshire, ¼; Edinburgh and Glasgow, 39; Great Northern, 4¾; Great Western, 77; Ditto, Half Shares, 45; Ditto, Quarter Shares, 16; Ditto, New, £17, 10; Lancashire and Yorkshire, New, Guaranteed Six per Cent., 5; Leeds and Bradford, 90; London and Blackwall, 4; London, Brighton, and South Coast, 26½; Ditto, New, Guaranteed Six per Cent., 4; London and Greenwich, 8½; London and North-Western, 110; Ditto, New, 6; Ditto, Fifths, 4¾; London and South-Western, 38½; Ditto, New £50, 27; Midland, 69¼; Ditto, ditto, £50 shares, 29; North British, 17¾; Ditto, Halves, 7½; Ditto, Quarters, 3¾; Ditto, Thirds, 3¾ dis.; North Staffordshire, 9½; Shrewsbury and Birmingham, 14; South Eastern, No. 4, Thirds, 6½; South Wales, 16; York, Newcastle, and Berwick, 19; Ditto, Original New and Berwick, 9½; Ditto, Extension, No. 1, 13¾; Ditto, No. 2, 13¾, Ditto, G N E. Preference, 6¾; York and North Midland, 54; Ditto, East and West Riding Extension, 26½; Orleans and Bordeaux, 2½; Paris and Strasbourg, 1¾

NATIONAL MONEY. A great amount of business has been transacted, Consols were flat yesterday. The closing prices were—86¾ to ¾ for money, and 86 to 86⅛ for Account. Shares and Foreign Stocks did not materially vary.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE (Friday).—The arrivals of English wheat for our market since Monday have been but moderate, and of very middling quality. To-day the stands were rather scantily filled with samples of both red and white, the demand for which was far from extraordinary prices. Upwards of 23,000 quarters of foreign wheat have come in ruthless the country buyers—whose attendance was large purchased freely a full price—and distilling sorts were 1s per quarter cheaper. The demand for malt was wholly confined to small parcels, at late rates. Notwithstanding the large supplies of foreign oats the oat trade was tolerably steady, at previous quotations. In all other bar ex. 649

[illegible] s. red, 48s to 54s; ditto, white, 50s to 57s; rye, 32s to 33s; grinding barley, 28s to 30s; distilling ditto, 29s to 32s; malting ditto, 32s to 34s; Norfolk and Lincoln malt, 50s to 54s; brown ditto, 48s to 52s; Kingston and Ware, 56s to 58s; [illegible] Yorkshire, 52s to 54s; Lincolnshire feed oats 21s to 24s; potato ditto, 23s; ditto, white, 24s to 25s; Lincoln, Norfolk, and Suffolk, 24s to 25s; Scotch, 25s to 26s; Irish, 23s to 25s; potato ditto, 23s to 25s; beans, 40s to 42s; ditto, white, 40s to 43s; peas, 40s to 42s; flour, per quarter [illegible]

Foreign. Dennig red wheat, 44s to 46s; ditto, white, 45s to 47s; barley, 30s to 32s; oats, 20s to 22s; beans, 42s to 44s; peas, 42s to 44s; per quarter Flour, American, 26s to 31s per barrel, Baltic, 25s per barrel.

The Corn Markets exceedingly little business has been transacted in [illegible] prices.

Linseed, English, sowing, 56s to 60s; Baltic, crushing, 42s to 46s Mediterranean and Odessa, 42s to 46s; Hempseed, 40s to 42s per quarter; Coriander, 16s to 20s per cwt. Mustard-seed, 8s to 10s; white ditto, 6s to 8s 6d Tares, 3s 6d to 4s 6d per bushel Carraway seed, £22 to £26, per last or ten quarters. Linseed cakes, English, £11 10s to £12 10s per ton; ditto, foreign, £8 5s to £9 5s per 1000; Rapeseed cakes, £5 5s to £5 10s per ton [illegible] to 10s per quarter. English Clover-seed, red, —s to —s; extra, —s to —s; white, —s to —s; extra, —s to —s; extra, up to —s. Foreign, red, 4s to 5s; extra, —s; white, 4s to —s; extra, —s per cwt.

Bread—The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis are from 8d to 8½d; of household ditto, 6d to 7d, per 4lb loaf

Imperial Weekly Average.—Wheat 42s 6d; barley, 33s 7d; oats, 21s 11d; rye, 32s 9d; beans, 37s 11d., peas, 37s 11d

The 30s Model Average.—Wheat, 53s 7d; barley, 30s 6d, oats, 22s 2d; rye, 32s 4d; beans 36s 2d, peas, 36s 9d

Flax.—several public sales have been held this week, and at which a fair average quantity of tea has been disposed of, at full prices. In the private contract market, exceedingly little [illegible]

[illegible]—Rather large parcels of both raw and refined sugars, at very full prices The imports consist on a liberal scale

Coffee.—Our market is in a very sluggish state, but we have no material alteration to notice in value

Rice. This article commands very little attention; yet prices are mostly supported

Provisions. The sale for Irish butter is still to a good extent, at very full prices, although the stock is now nearly 50,000 firkins [illegible] ar. —7s to 84s [illegible] Waterford, —s to —s; Limerick, —s to —s; Sligo, —s to —s; Limerick, —s to —s; Cork, —s to —s; Kerry

EAST LANCASHIRE RAILWAY.

THE ALDERBOTTOM VIADUCT.

Preston, Ormskirk, and Liverpool; and on the other, to Burnley, Colne, Skipton, Bradford, and Leeds; and also forms a connexion by means of the line now opened with Bury and Manchester.

Looking back over the eight miles we have thus traversed, we may mention that the inclines from Accrington up to the summit are of three degrees, one of 1 in 40, another of 1 in 71 and a third of 1 in 110; and the powerful engines of the Company are able to surmount these once-supposed-to-be-fatal impediments to progress with facility.

The line into the station at Accrington joins the railway running from Blackburn to Burnley (and curving from a southern to a northern direction) with two forks; one of which runs into the Blackburn end of the station, and the other into the Burnley end, and to the front of the principal station.

THE OGDEN VIADUCT.

The whole of the extraordinary works on this line have been constructed under the superintendence of Mr. Ferring; and they are believed to be of substantial and enduring character

The portion of the line extending from Accrington to Burnley was opened few days since.

NOOKS AND CORNERS OF OLD ENGLAND.

THE CROWN INN, OXFORD, WHERE SHAKSPERE "PUT UP."

THIS memorial of our great Dramatic Poet is of interest akin to that of the copy of the Chandos Portrait, in the present page.

The Crown Inn, Oxford, is an old decayed house, but probably was once an inn of some importance. It stands directly in the road from London to Stratford; and Aubrey (who lived near enough Shakspere's time to be well enough informed in such matters) relates a pleasant piece of traditionary gossip, that Shakspere "was wont to go up and down Warwickshire often every year, and did commonly lodge at the Crowne Tavern, in Oxford, where he was exceedingly respected." The Crown, in Shakspere's time, was kept by Mr. and Mrs. D'Avenant, to whom, it is thought, and certainly the mother of Sir William D'Avenant, the poet. Shakspere, however, is said to have been entertained by the godfather of his father. "Now Sir William would sometimes when he was a servant over a glass of wine, with his most intimate friends, and it seemed to him that he wrote with the very spirit that Shakspere spoke with, and was contented enough to be thought his son." Mrs. D'Avenant was a landlady of very light report; but "a very beautiful woman, and of a very good wit, and of conversation extremely agreeable;" and her husband was "a very grave and discreet citizen, wit like Shakspere; and which Knel[illegible]92, copied and presented to glorious John Dryden—who repaid the painter with one of the best and most admirable epistles.

THE CROWN INN, OXFORD.

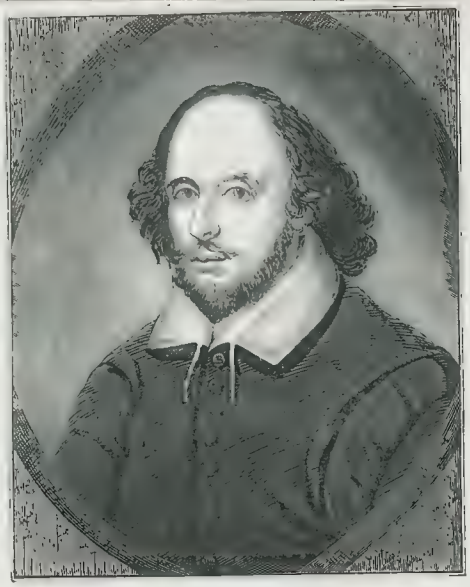
The Chandos Shakspere is a small portrait on canvass, 22 inches long by 18 broad. The face is thoughtful, the eyes are expressive, and the hair is of a brown black. The dress is black, with a white turn-over collar, the strings of which are loose. There is a small gold ring in the left ear. We have had an opportunity of inspecting it both before and after the sale, and in the very best light; and have no hesitation in saying that the copies we have seen of it are by no means like. It agrees in many points with the short nose especially—with the Stratford bust; and is not more unlike the engraving before the first folio—or the Gerard Johnson bust on the Stratford monument—than Richard Sir Walter Scott is unlike Sir Thomas Lawrence's—or West Lord Byron unlike the better known portrait by Phillips. It has evidently been touched upon—the yellow oval that surrounds it has a look of Kneller's age. Sir Joshua Reynolds owned a copy of it, not more than it is said, Ozias Humphrey, R.A., in August 1785, copied it in crayons for Malone; and from this crayon drawing, which we have not seen, prints of it have been made which are far from like. Henry Bone, R.A., made an enamel from it; and Mr. Charles Knight is in possession of the last copy which it is said to have been made of it. Now that we have seen, as we have said, are like; and, from what we have heard, from competent authorities, several other copies have also missed the expression, which is both peculiar and good."

The opinion of the writer in the Athenæum is, that the Chandos picture is not the original for which Shakspere sat; but a copy made for Sir William Davenant, from some known and acknowledged portrait of the poet.



THE CHANDOS PORTRAIT OF SHAKSPERE, DRAWN FROM THE PICTURE AT STOWE.

looked better after his guests than the [illegible]. The tradition which Aubrey preserved does not rest solely, however, on his authority. "That notion," said Pope to Spence, "of Sir William D'Avenant being really the natural child of Shakspere, was common in town; and Sir William himself seemed fond of having it taken for truth."

Dates, which upset so many traditions, are in favour of the Davenant story, for the post of "Gondibert," and the future poet laureate, was baptized in St. Martin's Church, Oxford, on the 3rd of March, 160[illegible], and Shakspere died on the 23rd of April, 1616. The poet's route from London to Oxford was by way of Uxbridge, Beaconsfield (the latter place antiquity-loving Wood) on to East Wycombe, Stokenchurch, Postcombe, Wheatley, and Oxford. At Oxford he passed a night, he would then go on to the west of Woodstock, Long Compton, and Shipston-on-the-Avon, by Clopton's bridge, to his native Stratford. On his right lay Charlecote, on his left the Collegiate church at Stratford, where lies him who Heber Street (according to Henley in Arden), the meadows about Ingon, his own property, the woods of Welcombe, and the little hamlet or village of Shottery.

It will be seen from our engraving that the Crown Inn retains many characteristics of the age of Elizabeth and James I. In the upper room, says Thomas Warton, does "now the Crown Inn, which seems to have been a set of hall or entertaining room, or the accommodating one was the custom of most public-houses, there was a bow window with three pieces of coloured stained glass. The curious visitor should make a point of seeing the Crown Inn.

THE CHANDOS PORTRAIT OF SHAKSPERE.

We have engraved the celebrated picture, from a drawing carefully made by one of our artists at Stowe, previous to the sale. The portrait has been very often engraved, but very rarely with success. It has been purchased by the Earl of Ellesmere, for 355 guineas; and it will rest, it is said, the gem of the Shakspere closet, in the new Bridgewater House, which Mr. Barry is building for Lord Ellesmere in the Green Park.

We find in the Athenæum some interesting particulars of this picture. Its history is shortly this —

"The Duke of Chandos obtained it by marriage with the daughter and heiress of a Mr. Nicholl, of Minchenden House, Southgate; Mr. Nicholl obtained it from a Mr. Robert Keck, of the Inner Temple, who owned (the first and best) Mrs. Barry, the actress, as Otway tells us, forty guineas for it. Mrs. Barry had it from Betterton, and Betterton had it from Sir William Davenant, who was a professed admirer of Shakspere, and was supposed to be thought his son. Davenant was born in 1605, and Betterton, (necessary reader of Pepys will recollect) was the great actor belonging to the Duke's Theatre, which Davenant was the patentee. He (under he Duke of Davenant (Parson Dart) had been heard to relate, as Aubrey informs us, that Shakspere had often stood Sir William when a boy.

"Davenant lived quite near enough to Shakspere's time to have obtained a genuine portrait of the poet when he himself was an age, too, when the Shakspere mania was not so strong as it is now. There is no doubt that this was the portrait which Davenant believed to be

THE PROGRESS OF A BILL

BY W. BLANCHARD JERROLD

ILLUSTRATED BY KENNY MEADOWS.

(Continued from page 190.)

CHAPTER IV. THE RENEWAL.

"So, Henry, I can now appreciate your motives for wishing me not to open your letters," said Mrs. Pursey, on her husband's return. "You see I have opened it," she added, as Henry took up Macfum's letter.

"And, pray, what discovery have you made, Madam?" asked the husband angrily.

"Read the letter—read it. I knew what Mr. Macfum was, long ago."

Pursey read the letter, folded it calmly, and seating himself with portentous [illegible] looked indignantly at his wife. She met his look of anger with that provoking indifference which woman can so well assume when bent upon having the best of an argument; and the pair sat for some minutes in silence presenting no very encouraging picture of that phantom so bruited about, and called "Wedded Bliss!" At length the husband's anger oozed out in speech, and a hurt, cannibal tiff ensued. Mr Pursey failed in his [illegible] to exonerate his friend from any dishonest intention in the [illegible] was, neither did he convince her that she had acted improperly [illegible] declaring his injunctions as to the opening of his letters. Mrs Pursey vouchsafed some truly feminine arguments in justification of her conduct. All she knew was that she had opened Mr. Macfum's letter, and that she should continue to open any letter that came to the house. As she had said before, she had her doubts, and he (Pursey) must not blame her if he was ruined by his fine friend.

PROGRESS OF A BILL.—THE RENEWAL.

Utterly forgetful of his wife's admonitions, and trusting implicitly in the sincerity of Macfum's friendship, Pursey betook himself to the place of appointment at the hour indicated in Macfum's letter. He found Macfum already there, and in a most despondingstate of mind; and beside the dolorous Macfum sat Mr. Moss. The appearance of this latter personage was certainly not prepossessing; and indistinct ideas of his resemblance to the Jew attempted, painted by Dickens and others, floated before the mental vision of the unsophisticated youth. But a glance at Macfum restored him. Pursey's heart swelled with pity, and with a hope that he had yet the power to relieve his friend. Yes, come what may, he would stand by Macfum, for he was a fine-hearted fellow.

"My dear boy, how are you?" said Macfum, in a tone of melancholy that would have thawed the coldest heart, as he grasped Pursey's hand. "I scarcely know how to meet you."

A minute observer might have detected a smile, or rather a savage grin, upon the ugly features of Mr. Moss, as Macfum addressed Pursey. Pursey assured Macfum that he was quite ready to do anything that could extricate him from his trouble.

"Extricate Mr. Macfum!" interrupted the Jew, with the demon-grin still upon his ugly features; "you mean payment of the bill, I believe, my friend."

"I am so," answered Pursey in an embarrassed tone, and naturally turning to Macfum for a solution of the attorney's mysterious words.

"Hang it, I shouldn't wonder," said the latter, consequentially on one. But it is you, my dear boy, not you being involved in the matter, that cuts me to the heart."—"I know it does, my dear friend."

The attorney grinned, and could scarcely refrain from clapping his hands in the eagerness of his approbation. Did he think he was at the theatre? Did he, for the moment, fancy himself in the pit, witnessing the performance of a clever actor?

"What's to be done," at length asked Pursey, anxious to be relieved from his alarm. "To what extent am I involved?

"Didn't you read the amount? There is the bill—for one hundred pounds, sir; only a hundred," said the Jew, chuckling. "I dare say you will be glad to take it up for your friend, as the amount is not heavy.

"That is no affair of yours, Mr. Moss. You will not take it up, I know. I asked you here to see if we could come to some arrangement for the renewal of the bill. Your Jew's heart has no sympathy with a man's misfortunes. You'd thrust a writ into the slender hand of a dying man so utterly are you without any feeling beyond your sordid, grasping usurer's love of sixty per cent. You may retire, Mr. Moss, to do your worst. And if there is one recollection that can sweeten a man's deathbed more than another, it is, that on all hands it is agreed that there are no attorneys beyond the grave."

Mr. Moss rose in obedience to the impressive exhortation of Mr. Macfum, and prepared to take his departure. The man's countenance was quivering with rage; but the spirit that repels an insult dwelt not in his breast. He contented himself with shaking his instrument of torture (the bill) before friends; and growling between his teeth, "You had better be punctual," shuffled out of the room.

"Isn't it melancholy to be in the hands of such a miscreant?" said Macfum, when the attorney had effected his disappearance from their presence. "Doesn't it put one out of humour with human nature to see such utter animals, such grovelling [illegible]

[illegible] me to meet Upon my word, Pursey, it does one's heart good to meet you after such a fellow.

"Come, how can I assist you in th's matter? I haven't a sixpence at my command just now, so I fear I must be utterly powerless. I'll do anything in my power, but pray screen me from that Jew.

"My dear boy, you probably know that if I dishonour my bill, you are answer able for it as well."

"Good God, Macfum!" For the first time Henry trembled as to the issue of the matter. So severe had he felt in Macfum's management of the business, that it had never struck him that he, more than his friend, was in danger.

"Pray, don't alarm yourself, dear Pursey," interrupted Macfum soothingly "No harm shall come to you, depend upon it. I would die my right hand rather than see you scathed in this matter. My honour is at stake—need I say more

"Pardon me, my dear Macfum. You can understand my alarm. A demand upon me for such a sum"—

"Recollect, Pursey, that there is no demand upon you for a farthing. I trust you do not intend to put forth a supposition prejudicial to my honour as a gentleman"

"I am the last man in the world to say aught to offend you, Macfum. On the contrary, I cannot express to you the earnestness of my desire to be of some service to you in this dilemma."—Pursey was now perfectly reassured; he had not mistaken Macfum. Macfum was a fine fellow

"I have no favour to ask of you, Pursey," said Macfum, somewhat coldly; "and, as it is getting late, and I have an appointment at seven, I must be going."

Pursey was touched at this cold assumption of the manner of his friend, and now thoroughly ashamed of his own past fears. He insisted, therefore, upon detaining Macfum that he might thoroughly restore himself in his good opinion Macfum reasonably yielded to the request.

"Macfum," said the latter, with emotion, "I have, however unwillingly, wounded your feelings. We are friends of but short acquaintance, yet I [illegible] sensible, nevertheless, to each other's merits, and not often was so [illegible] ply. I must confess to you that you have awakened in me a strong friendship for you, and great admiration for your talents; and all I have to beg of you is, that in your next work you will permit me the pleasure of serving you to the utmost of my power. I see you embarrassed. As your friend, I ask you earnestly, can I serve you?

"I must own, Pursey," said he felt hurt by some exclamations which escaped you a few minutes ago But now I understand you, and, believe me, any past feeling of pique shall be forgotten. I will be equally candid with you, seeing that you are so sincere my friend, and at once tell you that I am in want of cash, and effectively. I would rather not, however, put you to the test, since your refusal must at once put an end to our acquaintance; inasmuch as it would imply want of confidence on your part in my honour."

"My dear fellow, I promise beforehand."

"Well, then, unsolicited by me, you consent to accept another bill to the amount of that previously accepted by you for me. It is only a matter of form, to delay the payment of the other three months. You see your acceptance of this will enable me to pay that due in a few days, so that I shall gain the time that must expire before the arrival of my remittance."

Henry at once assented to this plausible proposition, signed the bill, and took it out of his friend, without any misgiving at his heart.

And Macfum, who always persuaded Moss to cash his bills, on the assurance that his aristocratic acquaintance would rather pay the amount ten times over than know of his (Macfum) locked up, wended his way to the Attorney's office, confident in the result of this visit

(To be continued.)

STOPPAGE OF THE BI-MONTHLY MAIL ad SOUTHAMPTON.—A memorial from the mercantile community of India, in on its way to it it has not reached, the President of the Board of Trade, on the subject of the stoppage of the bimonthly Southampton mail to India. The inconvenience complained of is the want of opportunity of sending duplicates of correspondence and the danger of sending valuable enclosures through France, owing to the unsettled state of the Continent. The chief ground is beginning to complain of the cessation of the mail. To the common soldier it has proved a cruel disappointment, for while he could send or receive a letter for a penny by way of Southampton, it costs eleven pence by way of France. Complaints have also been made from other quarters respecting the impediments thrown in the way of passengers who come from Suez to India in the East India Company's steamers. It appears that in order to discourage passengers from embarking at Suez, the above-mentioned steamers, if are subjected to every imaginable inconvenience on board. Some are obliged to sleep on deck. At Suez they are compelled to purchase everything they require during the voyage at the rates of the most exorbitant monopolists on board.

CARSHALTON ACADEMY The Board of Ordnance have recently entered into arrangements for the use of the mansion lately occupied by Mr. Simeon, one of the magistrates of the Croydon bench; and it has undergone extensive alterations to fit it for the reception of 90 young gentlemen, who will have to undergo a preparatory course of trial in that establishment previous to their being admitted as gentlemen cadets at the Royal Military Academy, at Woolwich. The Rev. Dr. Andrews has been appointed head-master, with four teachers of mathematics, German, and other languages. The Carshalton Academy will be opened on Monday, October 2. As the object of this establishment has been misunderstood, it may be necessary to mention that it is not intended to supersede any of the present preparatory schools of instruction, as these establishments will still be required for instructing candidates for entrance into the Royal Military Academy; but instead of being passed direct, as formerly, the candidates will have to pass through a probationary period at Carshalton, under the immediate superintendence of the Rev. Dr. Andrews, in order that some but well-conducted gentlemen will be allowed to enter as cadets at the Royal Military Academy. The Rev. Dr. Andrews will have to furnish his daily reports of the pupils under his charge to the Secretary at War, Lieutenant-Colonel Jones, the Royal Military Academy, who will, with Lieutenant-Colonel Jones, examine them, and select from those in the Carshalton Academy a sufficient number to be recommended to the Master-General for admission as gentlemen cadets. The authorities at the Royal Military Academy will exercise no other authority at the Carshalton Academy.

FEMALE SERVANTS IN SOUTH AUSTRALIA — A private letter, dated Flinders, near Adelaide, South Australia, 28th February, 1848, states that the season which was about closing had been a very good one, but the scarcity of farm servants of both sexes, especially the latter, had been a serious drawback in farm operations. The writer, Mr. M'Harg, had offered as much as 15s. per week, with rations, for female servants, without being able to engage any; the consequence was, that out 300 which rows, he had been obliged, for a period of 4 weeks, to turn out between 30 and 40 every morning without milking them. His servants, he adds, were quite knocked up with being overworked, and the whole neighbourhood was in the same state. Eventually he engaged an ordinary seaman, a handy Highlander, who had never milked a cow before. He, however, turned out remarkably well. Cheese was sold at 4d per lb, or for [illegible] per [illegible] Fruit horse were in demand, and [illegible] 100 per

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

[SEPT. 30, 1848.

MUSIC.

ENGLISH OPERA AT THE THEATRE ROYAL, COVENT-GARDEN

We have received the prospectus of the arrangements for the winter campaign of 1848-49, at Covent-Garden Theatre. Mr. Bunn is once more in the field as manager of an English Opera-House, and promises himself on this more advantageous position than on any former occasion he has, in the first place one of the finest theatres in Europe to accommodate the public; and, secondly, he will have scenic resources of an extent to enable him to produce an incomparable mise en scène. Mr. Bunn has done much for national music in this country, and his present scheme exhibits his spirit, tact, and enterprise in the most favourable light. Five great lyrical works are to be produced: a new serious opera, by Balfe; a grand opera, by Wallace; an opera, founded on Sir Walter Scott's "Kenilworth," by Schira (the musical director); an English adaptation, by Lavenu, of Auber's "Diamant de la Couronne;" an entirely new work, by Mendelssohn's "First Walpurgis Night;" and the distinguishing, by Planché, of a "celebrated masterpiece," the name of which is not given, but which we suspect to be by Beethoven. Each work is to be performed consecutively for a few months' season, and with the standard repertoire which Mr. Bunn possesses, there will be ample selection both for amateurs and artists. Three new ballets are promised: one, "Almaviva," under the title of "Seville," at opening Paris at the Théâtre de la Nation, formerly the Académie Royale; one for Mdlle. Plunkett, and one for Mdlle. Maywood.

Besides secure execution of the various entertainments, the company engaged is rich in celebrities and abilities. Mdlle. Nissen, who has sung in Italy, France, and Russia with distinguished success, has been engaged. She is a sweet lyric, and has sung in Balfe's "Siege of Rochelle" and "Puritani." Madame Steffanone, from the Grand Opera in Paris, is too well known to require an introduction; her ardent and the English stage will needs be great. Miss Romer, who has certainly succeeded a step under the title of "Maid

PUBLICATIONS, &c.

New Glee, just published, Price 3s.,
CAN A BOSOM SO GENTLE REMAIN ?
The Words by SHENSTONE. A Glee for Five Voices. Composed and dedicated to Vincent Novello, by [illegible]

Just published, in one volume 8vo, price 7s 6d.,
LECTURES ON PAINTING, delivered at the ROYAL ACADEMY. By the late HENRY HOWARD, R.A. With a Memoir of the Author by his son, FRANK HOWARD.
HENRY G. BOHN, Lark-street, Covent-garden.

THE BIJOU PORTRAITS VOL. 6
Now Ready, with Go Memoir and complete Price [illegible]
HENRY TAYLOR
PUBLISHED AND SOLD, Publishers to H. Paternoster-row

JANE'S NEW NOVEL,
Ready at all the Libraries in 3 vols. post 8vo,
SIR THEODORE BROUGHTON; OR, LAUREL WATER. By G. P. R. JAMES, Esq., Author of [illegible]
'Mantrapp,' Now ready,
ROSE BLANCHE ST. By G. P. R. JAMES, Esq.
Author of "Darnley," "Richelieu," "Historical History of Philosophy," &c.
London. SMITH, ELDER, and Co., 65, Cornhill.

ROWE ON INDIGESTION. TENTH EDITION.
Just published, price 2s. 6d.,
DR. G. ROBERT ROWE on NERVOUS DISEASES, Indigestion, Liver and Stomach Complaints, Gout, Asthma, and Diseases of Warm Climates.
"Dr. Rowe reasons while he prescribes, and convinces while he cures. It is impossible to imagine anything more natural, candid, and clear without I can his manner of reasoning and explanation."—Morning Post, March 30.
JOHN CHURCHILL, Princ[illegible]

FOR TOURISTS.
Now Ready, profusely Illustrated, from original sketches by T. and E. GILKS.
SYLVAN'S PICTORIAL HAND-BOOKS.—
1. ENGLISH LAKES; 3 Maps of Wyke, and 16 Illustrations.
2. [illegible] KING PLACES, 2 Maps and 30 Illustrations.
3. 4s. LAND O' BURNS, Portrait, and 40 Illustrations, 3s. 6d.
4. [illegible]NERY of CALEDONIAN CANAL, Map and 50 Illustrations 2s. 6d.
JOHN ROWNEY, London and Edinburgh.

NEW WORK BY
JONESS GUIDE TO NORWAY, AND [illegible]
TULPHEY, Esq., [illegible] piled from notes and memoranda of some of the most distinguished [illegible] sessions of the day, who have done great execution in the Norwegian [illegible] rivers. The instructions throughout the volume are of the [illegible] useful and valuable [illegible] self with Jones's Guide."—Sunday Times.
London, LONGMAN and Co., and J. JONES, 111, Jermyn-street.

"THERE'S A GOOD TIME COMING,"
Henry Russell's transcendantly pops ar national song, as [illegible]
every one of his Entertainments, and chorussed with the [illegible]
Chairs. The Song and Chorus complete for all [illegible]
the accompaniment, and [illegible]VERSON, Peter's-hill, Doctors-commons, between St. Paul's and [illegible]
Lanes-street, the only authorized publisher of the "Threepenny col-[illegible]

NEW WORK.
HER MAJESTY'S CIVIL LIST—EDITION IS SALABIES. The salaries of all persons so [illegible] appointments at Court, with the names and extent of the duties, [illegible] pensions privileges patronage, &c., and a list of SINECURE OFFICES.

NEW WORK.
HER MAJESTY'S HOUSEHOLD," Interspersed with Historical Memorials, and Critical Remarks, now publishing by W. STRANG.
Paternoster-row, and may be obtained of all booksellers.

NEW WORK BY THE AUTHOR OF "ROSE, BLANCHE, and VIOLET
Author of "Rauthorpe," "A Biographical History of Philosophy," &c.
In 1 vol.
JANE EYRE [illegible] CLERGYMAN. Second Edition, with Preface, [illegible] Three vols. post 8vo.

ADVENTURES of an AIDE DE CAMP or CAPTAIN [illegible]
By JAMES GRANT, Esq. Author of "The Romance of War."
London. SMITH, ELDER, and Co., 65

Bound in an Elegant Cover, price One Shilling each Volume,
THE FAVOURITE LIBRARY.—A New Series of Books for Children, each volume to contain either of a work which has already received the stamp of popularity, or an original one. Each to be a favorite author, and illustrated by a well-known Artis
1 THE FSKDALE HERD-BOY. A Scottish Tale. By LADY STOUDART. With an Illustration by William Harvey. Price 1s (On April 4.)
2 MRS. LEICESTER'S SCHOOL. By CHARLES and MARY LAMB. With an Illustration by J. Absolon. Price 1s.
London: DARTON and CLARK, 58, Holborn-hill; and J. CUNDALL, Old Bond-street.

NOTICE!
COMPLETION OF THE LIVES OF THE QUEENS OF ENGLAND.
Dedicated by Special Permission to Her Majesty.
Now READY, embellished with a Portrait of the Authoress, and other Illustrations.
Also, Now Ready, in 1 Vol.,
BURKE'S PEERAGE AND BARONETAGE FOR 1848.
New Edition, [illegible]
Just [illegible]

THE LONDON LITERARY and MUSICAL OBSERVER. Price 1½d. "Tells work this fair to be one of the best and cheapest periodicals of the day. The articles, some of which are original, are alternately written, full of raciness, humour, intelligence, and abounds with anecdote, light, interesting, instructive, and elegant reading calculated to please every one." The present number contains "Life Jagor Wagner," arranged in an easy and familiar style for the Pianoforte, by C. Delmard, and is alone worth four times the money. PEEKES, 60, Berners-street, CAMB.; York-street, Covent-garden, VICKERS, Holywell-street, and 2, Strand.

[illegible] and Editor, just published, Threepence,
THE RIGHT of the ARISTOCRACY to the SOIL, CONSIDERED. By JOHN NOAKES. Contents: Land [illegible] Landed property.—The public revenue [illegible]
[illegible] [illegible]
[illegible] [illegible]
[illegible]

LOWESTOFF HARBOUR, WITH THE IMPROVEMENTS.

LOWESTOFF HARBOUR.

THE extensive improvement of this Haven was commenced in the spring of 1846; the plan being to construct a new Harbour, on a grand scale, and in connexion with it a railway joining the Norfolk line at Reedham; thus forming railway communication between the Harbour and all parts of England—a communication which will soon be extended throughout Scotland.

The Act for improving the Harbour and forming the railway was passed in the early part of 1845. Messrs. Stephenson and Bidder were appointed the engineers in chief, Mr. Hodges the resident engineer, and Mr. S. M. Peto the general contractor. In the enterprise of Mr. Peto originated this great work: having purchased the harbour and navigation in 1844, he, with other gentlemen, chiefly in the neighbourhood, formed for the above purpose a company with a capital of £200,000.

The new Harbour of Refuge is formed by two immense piers, extending for 1300 feet into the sea, enclosing the old harbour, and an area of 20 acres. The width between the piers, and consequently of the Harbour, is 800 feet, and the average depth of water in it is 20 feet. The old entrance with in the piers will be cleared away up to the stone-work, so that there will be a spacious basin, large enough to accommodate 600 or 700 vessels. The piers consist of a stupendous timberframe-work, on each side of the Harbour, 14 feet high above the water, and 30 feet in width; filled up with immense blocks of stone, from one to six tons in weight, and the sides present a solid mass of masonry

As the thousands of tons of stones required have to be brought from a great distance, in vessels, the filling-in with stone goes on slowly. When this work is completed, a platform or flooring of four-inch planking will be made on the top of each pier.

The north pier, after extending straight out east for 700 feet, bends to the south-east for 300 feet, and then bends again to the south for 300 feet more; making in all 1300 feet. This pier is intended entirely for business, and a double tramway has been laid along it, with a large turning-table at each bend.

The south pier extends from the shore for 1200 feet, straight out into the sea, and is intended for a grand promenade. The head of each pier is circular, and 60 feet in diameter. Lighthouses have been erected in the centre of the circle at the head of each pier; and at night a brilliant red light is exhibited.

The entrance to the harbour between the two piers is towards the south-east it is 160 feet wide, with a depth of 21 feet at low water.

Beyond the south pier, in Kirkley, a sea wall and towers of flint and stone, and at the back of it a broad embankment, are in course of formation for an esplanade, which will be a quarter of a mile in length and 25 feet wide, and will afford a splendid view of the sea.

The inner harbour has been dredged to a depth of fourteen feet in the channel, at low water, and this dredging will be extended up to Mutford-bridge. The New Cut and a part of Lake Lothing have been dredged, and the navigation has been thereby considerably improved. There is from ten to twenty feet water through Lake Lothing, and the Waveney to the New Cut, in which the water is about eight feet deep, while over Burgh Flats and Breydon there is not half that depth. The new wharfing, the various buildings, the offices, engine-houses, workshops, coke-ovens, warehouses, stations, &c., and about half a dozen lines of railway branching from the piers, on the north side of the inner harbour, occupy a space of about sixty acres.

Altogether, this improvement will present one of the finest combinations o railway and sea communication in the country.

PARIS FASHIONS FOR OCTOBER.

PARIS FASHIONS FOR OCTOBER.

THE fêtes given in Paris by the members of the Executive Government have provided la mode with a new opportunity for displaying itself. The evening toilettes have not yet experienced any remarkable change, the season not being sufficiently advanced to cause light muslins and other transparent summer tissues to be abandoned, but October demands warmer toilettes for town, so that taffetas and gros de Naples are set aside, and gouût de soie, levantines, satins, and velvets begin to replace them; and dresses of Cachemere Beje are extreme y admired for négligé. This is a mixed stuff, rather darker than écru (unbleached Luan) souple, warm, and thick. Five yards suffice for a woman of middle height; for two breadths and a half give a proper fullness to the skirt, which must be lined, and the bodice be made tight. These dresses are trimmed with buttons, galoon, or sarsenet ribbon about three-quarters of an inch wide; this ribbon is edged on each side with chain ging or braid of the same colour: this trimming is quite novel; and the same ornament is added to the cuffs of the sleeves. For the autumn, plaid poplins, usually chesnut and white, are very distingués: capes turned back suit admirably for this stuff, which is stiff, and makes charming dresses.

Velvet cloaks re-appear; they are made with large revers from the shoulders to the waist. These capes are covered with embroidery, interlaced couleur sur couleur. There are also beautiful cloaks for the autumn, made of couleur bois, cut on the cross, like the ancient crispins, and two plaits are formed on the shoulders. The collar is surrounded with rather wide galoon of the same colour and the front is trimmed with eight rows, alike on each side. These galons are placed en pyramides, that is to say, gradually wider. The colour, the cut, and fashion of this garment are simple, and adapted to a young person.

The Engraving represents two ladies in full dress for the afternoon. The one has on a silk dress blue Marie Louise, with two deep furbelows of stuff like it: and plaited gimp ornaments the top of the flounces; the bodice, à la Raphaël having a canezou (a kind of cape) Smyrnoise, trimmed with full Valenciennes round the neck. A Parisian Rasoneck in chesnut-coloured levantine covers this toilette. The Parisian Rasoneck is a kind of vest or camisole, hanging below the waist; the back is straight, and the sleeves are open with facings. The front is made either full or tight; many will be worn in velvet and satin this winter. It is a fashion which has arrived from Russia, but in that country they are lined with fur. A cap d'Angleterre, with bunches of ribbon pinned on.

The second costume is a peach-coloured dress, with three narrow flounces festooned at the top of a deep flounce from the knees; a bodice à la vierge; a full tucker; and a scarf-shawl, peach-coloured, trimmed with two frills, embroidered bonnet capeld, is of peach-coloured crape, bordered with rolls of satin, and trimmed with pink marabouts in a bunch. Puffings of lace are gathered at th. wrist. The parasol is pink, covered with white lace. This toilette is of exqui site elegance for visits of ceremony.

The gentleman has on a coat vere compagnarde, and boots à revers, according to the Polish fashion; also a cap, jockey-form; and his montagnarde is hung from one of the buttons on the front of his waistcoat.

THE JEWISH YEAR.—Thursday last was the commemoration of the Jewish new year, a day of great solemnity amongst the Jewish persuasion; and Saturday next, October 6, is the day of atonement, or White Fast, on which business whatever is transacted by any professing the Jewish faith.

London: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by WILLIAM LITTLE, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 30, 1848.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

No. 338.—Vol. XIII.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, OCTOBER 7, 1848. [Sixpence.

PROGRESS OF THE GERMAN REVOLUTION.

In considering the progress of the various revolutions that are now operating throughout Germany, we should always bear in mind the fact that, although expedited by, they did not entirely derive their origin from the great Revolution of the French. The commotions of Prussia, Austria, Bohemia, Hungary, and of all the States of the old Germanic Confederation, as well as of the races of Czek and Magyar blood, would have taken place in due time, even if the French had not set the example of convulsion. The German Revolution is essentially political. The French Revolution is essentially social, and occurred at its own time, without reference to the wants or sympathies of other nations. But as political changes are far more easy to effect than social ones, we look with some hope to a termination of the troubles of Germany; while we can but feel something akin to despair when we reflect upon the troubles of France, and upon the prolific "dragons' teeth" which have been sown broadcast over the land by the ungovernable theorists of the "Red Republic."

The present complexity of German affairs, and perplexity of German Princes and Statesmen, great as they may be, are not so great on either side as to be incapable of disentanglement or removal. The French rushed headlong into a Social Revolution, without looking whither they were going, imagining all the while that the change they made was merely a political one. Their eyes are now opened; and the great mass of the people outside the walls of Paris, Lyons, Lille, Toulouse, and some other large towns, already hold back and gaze with dismay at the frightful precipice which yawns at their feet, and to the bottom of which imperial Paris threatens to hurl them. With the Germans the case is widely different. The task undertaken by the Frankfort Assembly in the name and on behalf of the German people is great; but it is not Quixotic. Unlike many a noble theory, it is humanly reducible into a fact. The unity of Germany, though some affect to sneer at it as a mere dream, is an object for which cool men of mature judgment may and do strive, if not with so much enthusiasm, at all events with as much courage and perseverance as the younger and more excitable portion of the people. It is an object, we should remember, which recommends itself to the calm common sense of the upper and middle classes, who have much to lose; as well as to the more inconsiderate and headlong partizanship of those who possess nothing of which political change can deprive them. Its good policy is unquestionable: and although the personal interest or the dynastic vanity of some great, and many small, Kings and potentates may stand in the way, it may confidently be predicted that sooner or later it will be successful.

In France we can discover no real good that has resulted from the Revolution, except the overthrow of a system of corruption. But as that has been bought at a large price, and as another system as bad, or worse, has arisen in its room, we can but consider that as yet, France has gained no liberty and made no progress by the events which have succeeded each other with such fearful rapidity since the 24th of February. Germany, on the contrary, has gained much already. Twenty years ago the censorship prohibited the translation of Burns's noble lyric, "A man's a man for a' that," as too democratic to be safely allowed to be sung, or even read, by the youth of Germany. One year ago, a translation of the more recent effusion now to be heard at every corner of the streets of London, "There's a good time coming, boys," was prohibited by the same authority, for the same reason. But now, the press of Germany is free. There is no censorship. The German mind, formerly driven into the thorny and cloudy wildernesses of speculative theology, or into the utter chaos of conflicting systems of metaphysics, all equally incomprehensible, can ponder upon and discuss politics as freely as it will. It can touch the affairs of this world. It can animadvert upon the doings of modern Germans, as freely as upon those of ancient Greeks and Romans. It can expand itself upon the life, business, wants, and hopes of the nineteenth century. It is emancipated from its trammels: and Germany, although it should long remain disunited nationally, has already become united socially by the free intercourse of living and practical opinion between man and man, and between state and state. No possible turn of the political wheel can ever restore the censorship, or cramp the free mind of any portion of Germany within the limits which confined it a year ago. No doubt, the Germans have employed this newly-acquired freedom of thought without the wisdom which might have been expected from more practised thinkers. No doubt, they have committed grave errors, and are not yet quite as conversant with the duties as they are with the privileges of free opinion. No doubt, her mobs are like all other mobs, violent and unjust. But we must give them time. The political education of a great nation is not the work of a few months, nor of a few years, nor even of a generation. The French have been sixty years at it, and have not advanced beyond the merest rudiments. If the Germans have their "Mountain," like the French—if they have extreme parties, who have acquired importance in street convulsions, and who would employ street convulsions to maintain their influence, or to regain it when it has passed away from them, we must make allowances for the state of political childhood in which they have been kept, and trust to the influence of time to complete their public training, convince them of their error, and impress them with the truth that no real liberty was ever born of, or can be maintained by physical force. Were the German Revolution a mere irritation, were it a pause amid an excitable people solely or mainly because revolution was the fashion; did it spring from mere recklessness or turbulence; or were it caused by any overpowering faith in visionary abstractions about human perfectibility, or the possibility of converting Europe into an agglomeration of Paradises, on the Phalansterian or any other model, we might look upon the progress of events with indignation or with terror. But nothing of this kind has occurred. The German Revolution is a natural consequence of long-passed events, and of the unsatisfactory and merely temporary adjustment of the relationships of the various European states towards their own people and towards each other, which was made at the close of the last war. For these, and various reasons equally cogent, we have no fears for the ultimate freedom of Germany, however evil we may deplore the present riots at which it is to be effected. In our complex civilisation, differing but little in Germany, France, and England, no great political changes can be made without a price. That price is the derangement of trade and commerce, the suspension of manufacturing industry, the paralysis of credit, the suffering and discontent of the masses. Happy is the country that has not the task before it. Germany is, in this respect, more fortunate than France. Her people are not so warlike when they are idle, nor employed so exclusively upon objects of elegance and luxury when they are industrious, as the French. They minister to the world's necessities, as the English do; and trade interrupted is more easily brought back into its usual channels, than ever can be the case in a country of which the industry is mainly employed upon gaudy bijouterie, luxurious porcelain, and objects of virtu for the rich. In this respect, Germany will achieve and affirm her constitutional freedom with far more ease than France. Already she has made a step in advance, 'and gained solid advantages of which she cannot be again deprived. Her mobs may be brutal and ignorant—her Kings may not awaken all at once to the true state of the circumstances under which they are called upon to make sacrifices for the general welfare of a mighty people; but the foundation of such solid sense in the German mind, such a respect for law, such a love of order, and such habits of peaceful industry diffused amongst them, that nations like Great Britain, which have preceded them in the path of constitutional liberty, may fairly anticipate from time and circumstance a happy issue to the struggle in which they are involved. At least, such is the conclusion we draw from the progress of events at Frankfort, Berlin, and Vienna. We may often fear for the Germans, but we never despair of them.

SITTING OF THE GERMAN NATIONAL ASSEMBLY.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

SITTING OF THE GERMAN NATIONAL ASSEMBLY.

In the Supplementary History of the Revolutions in Europe, in 1848, at the close of our last Volume, we engraved the exterior of the Church of St. Paul, in the ancient city of Frankfort, wherein the German Parliament, or, as it is now styled, the "German National Assembly," hold their deliberations. Upon the previous page we present the reader with a view of the interior of the building, or the Great Hall, during one of the sittings of the Assembly. The scene is very graphically described in a paper in Bentley's Miscellany for the present month, by "The Flaneur," to the merit of whose contributions we have frequently testified by quotation. This writer has undoubtedly great descriptive power and aptitude for seizing upon the characteristic features of scenes which fall under his observation; and his sketch of the German "House" is a good specimen of this order of merit—a very considerable recommendation for a magazine writer.

"The Flaneur," after lamenting the neglect and desertion of poor old father Rhine, in the summer of this same and gracious year of grace, 1848, informs the reader that he has "taken a peep at the great German National Assembly, which is to change the destinies of Germany, and, in its own conceit, of all Europe, nay, of the world—that Assembly which, in the midst of revolutionary liberty, desires to bring back Germany to the fiction of unity of old feudal times."

"The Flaneur" then conducts his reader through the streets of Frankfort, which he describes to have "an uneasy, fermenting, revolution look," and thus arrives at the House of Assembly.

"The large circular building at which we arrive is the church of St. Paul, in which the sittings of the Assembly, that pretends to remodel and ameliorate the condition of a great part of Europe, are held. Without, it has nothing to attract the attention; when we enter, and take our place in the diplomatic tribune, for which we have a ticket, we shall not find much to please the fancy or excite the imagination within. The circular, or rather slightly oval space of the interior is dry, hard, harsh, with the repetition, bewildering in its stamp of dryness, baldness, and barrenness which is peculiar to Lutheran churches. There are large, glaring, round-topped windows, and plain marble columns and balustraded galleries in all their dull monotony, affording a sound for any excitement, or even any form that might tend to an elevation of religious sentiment, there is not a trace. The building is more in its proper sphere as a [illegible] hall; and the German Parliament has done more than it ought to do, to give a faint colouring of sentiment to the building by painting, upon the space immediately above the President's tribune, which probably occupies the spot where once a altar may have stood, a great female figure in flowing robes, all covered with black eagles, intended, it would seem, to represent the new and German empire in its modern resurrection. Unfortunately for this figurative type of young re-constituted Germany, the riding of the eagles is anything which is beginning to send forth rays behind it, throws its face into the shade, and gives it a grim and dirty look, which is anything but alluring. Verses, also, framed in cartels, emblematical of unity, are traced on either side of the figure: they prophesy, it would seem, the glories of the future empire of Germany.

"The building contains nothing but the mere debating hall; committee rooms, and the many or no accessories of a gr[illegible] house of parliament, are all bestowed elsewhere. The galleries are given up to the public; the reserved tribunes, for which tickets are distributed, are ranged along the walls of the circular space in the body below. The whole arrangement is modelled after that of the French Chamber; the elevated tribune of the president and his acolytes, the tribune of the orator at a lower degree of elevation just before it, and the diverging seats of the members, in gradually rising amphitheatre in front of them, are entirely disposed after the French plans. In the fashion of the French Chamber, also, the German National Assembly has gradually resolved itself into those distinctions of parties for which the parties themselves have given names, that play important parts in their parliamentary history.

"The Right," "the Centre," "the Left," and "the Extreme Left," are designations as distinctive and as full of meaning as the French Gauche, &c.

"The Right' is peopled, according to traditionary custom, by the old Conservatives, who, in these revolutionary times, endeavour to form a political rock to stand to and repulse, as much as possible, the seawards of the swelling from 'washing over,' o'erleaping themselves [illegible] also, the German so-called to be the heavy old 'slow coaches,' true to the expression of old days upon the political track, who are nothing but vessels of [illegible] torial talent on their sides; but, if their heaviness ensures no more [illegible] requires 'make-weight' above alluded to, they may be proud of having one [illegible] to their country in the dangerous political balancing point:

"'The Right Centre,' 'Centre,' and 'Left Centre,' in their various shades [illegible] off, leaning on too one hand more to conservatism, on the other more to [illegible] ism, compose as in the present republican Assembly of France, the middle [illegible] of the body, and minister in their various shades to all the [illegible] ent tastes. As in France, also, most of the members of this [illegible] ng to the former liberals, or even radicals, strong in opposition [illegible] the events of a different German principalities under their [illegible] constitutional, who, in the present revolutionary assembly, have become conservatives [illegible] the best, liberal conservatives.

"These ex-liberals of the German 'Centre' are the men who have clamoured so long for liberal constitutions for the several German states, with two Chambers, moderate freedom and liberty of the press, hemmed by certain necessary restrict ve clogging wheels. In all this they have been, or rather supposed themselves the supporters of the sovereignty of the people; and now they tremble before the sovereignty whose head they have reared up, as a dangerous and terrible. They have been the enemies of princes, and declaimers against their rights; and now they would support them [illegible] tottering thrones. They have thought, more especially, [illegible] that the fall of Metternich would open a new era of political constitutional freedom for all Germany; and now they would plaster up, as best they can, with sticking hands, a state of things gone and all but ruined under [illegible]

"The Radicals have the habit of nicknaming the 'centre' the 'centre,' probably from the heaviness, obtuseness, and self-seekingness of which they so liberally accuse it.

"Turn we our eyes to the benches on the 'Left.' There sit the active stirring, uneasy, excitable, and exciting sports of the age: there are the fool-hardy and in political maxims, the restless true-mockers,' who have neither the leading-strings of political education to guide them on their headlong way, nor the brittle of political experience to curb their energies. * * * * * * *

"In the more 'Extreme Left' are the Republicans, who still, and perhaps also hopelessly than may at present seem from their small minority, dream the dream of 'Germany one and united Republic.' Here, in these 'Left' seats, are the men who are said to pack and even pay the 'public' in the open galleries, who have these noisy spectators at their beck, and who use them in order to intimidate and overawe the assembly by their vociferations. Certain it is that during [illegible] speeches these orators of the 'Left' will cast up glances at the well-packed [illegible] as if to direct their movements, and perform similar manœuvres [illegible] speeches of their adversaries.

"One of the great objects of the members of the 'Left' is to prevent the present legally-constituted assembly from deriving from it any ultra-revolutionary line of policy pursued by the first illegally self-constituted assembly, and more especially by the more radical Assemblee, or select meeting, which took into its hands the direction of the second paroxysm of the German Revolution. As yet, however, as in France, the 'out-and-outers' form but a small minority in the Assembly, although they doubtless make up for their comparative parliamentary insignificance within the walls of the church of St. Paul, by their intrigues, and manœuvres among the popular elements without them.

"Hence, from our position in the diplomatic tribune, we take a general survey of the greater part of the hall, and of the 'Left' more especially. Its members, namely, the number of grey and bald heads among the members of the 'Right,' and the untoned colour of the hair and beards among most of those who sit upon the 'Left.' How necessary figure in opposition are the experienced grey heads of political life, and the young, bearded, ardent, hot heads of modern impatient expectation! It is curious even to see how gradually the tints of grey and snowing off in typical harmony through the various gradations of the 'Centre.' And now, after this general survey of the interior of the church of St. Paul, let us turn to the individual component parts.

"That tall commanding figure in the President's tribune is the President himself, Von Gagern. He is the true type of the revolutionary Moderate of the day. Long one of the most firm, conscientious, and energetic deputies, upon the opposition side, in the Darmstadt Chamber, he rejected with disgust from public life, when he found that he could not carry out his theories of constitutional liberty, and His brother Cincinnatus, lived apart 'in the farm,' and 'at the plough,' until, when the stormy wind of revolution began to blow, and threatened to sweep down every bulwark of the Lilie state, he was suddenly called upon by his Prince to take the helm, and direct the vessel through the angry waves in that track which in fact was yet vainly attempted to follow. One of the chosen representatives in the National Assembly, he has since thrown up place and power, and recused a post of weight in the new cabinet of the new German Empire, in order to direct the movements of that new vessel in which the destinies of all Germany are embarked the General Assembly. He is, in truth, the 'man of the day,' and perhaps also, among all the numerous deputies, the only one capable of directing the tempest of Parliamentary violence and dominating the storm. He has energy, presence of mind, good sense, and the commanding manner that does so much towards imposing and directing. He is tall and stout; his face, intelligent and dignified, without any handsomeness; his brow, more especially, are strongly marked, and are full of the essence of calm, self-consciousness energy.

"One of the Vice-Presidents, by the side of Gagern, is Audrian, from Austria. With his dark beard and carefully-trimmed hair, he looks more like a 'don' than a parliamentary hero. He has been chosen, it is said, in compliment to Austria, which observers had found no weight whatever in the Assembly; the South German deputies -those of Austria and Bavaria—having, it seems, little distinguished themselves by their talent or energy, and, generally, only came forward with silent vote, and on the side of government. The other Vice-President, the powerful-looking Vice-President seems chosen to defend the Assembly, like another Samson, and pull down the temple upon the heads of those Philistines, the ultra-radicals, by possessing the mighty hall. His name is Simson.

"Look we along the benches of the 'Right.' That dark old man, with his yellow, deeply-marked face, his black moustaches, his grey hair and wrinkled brow, who looks like a Venetian picture of a warrior-senator, is Count Radowitz, an ancient ally of the Jesuits, an ancient friend of Metternich, whose name comes forward as a Constitutionalist. He is no great orator; but always, when he speaks, listened to with an impressive silence, and when he rises, he comes on, he commands his party to rise or resume themselves—"up" or "down"—with stentorian voice and military manner. See how stern and silent he sits, speaking never! Let us turn on the other side of the President's tribune. A powerful-looking Vice-President seems chosen to defend the Assembly, like another Samson, and pull down the temple upon the heads of those Philistines, the ultra-radicals, by possessing the mighty hall. His name is Simson.

"Look we along the benches of the 'Right.' That dark old man, with his yellow, deeply-marked face, his black moustaches, his grey hair and wrinkled brow, who looks like a Venetian picture of a warrior-senator, is Count Radowitz, an ancient ally of the Jesuits, an ancient friend of Metternich, whose name comes forward as a Constitutionalist. He is no great orator; but always, when he speaks, listened to with an impressive silence, and when he rises, he comes on, he commands his party to rise or resume themselves—"up" or "down"—with stentorian voice and military manner. See how stern and silent he sits, speaking never! Let us turn on the other side of the President's tribune. A tall, with long red beard and hair, and his eyes half closed with fat, and an [illegible] mounted spectacles, is Von Vincke, a junker, who tries to conceive between the sovereignty of the people and the sovereignty of Princes with a little of the latter, formerly of the Opposition, he has now retreated to the 'Right,' in a huff, before the democratic results of the Revolution. In this respect he may be taken as a type of the German National Assembly, as represented by its majority.

* * * * * * *

"Now let us move our eyes on to the 'Centre.' There we have the former Liberals and present Moderates, already described, the orators of Prussia, such as Scherwin, Beseschrik, and Mewissen; and Schmerling and Mering, of Austria, men of considerable talent, and, also, the old Jahnian, the historian, and Dahlmann, magisterial, pedantic manner, which would combine the university philosopher with the statesman. These ex-Liberals are the doctrinaires of the German Assembly now. Among them, also, are old Jahnian, the historian, and Dahlmann, his friend; and Lassaulx, the supporter of the Church that fanny looking man, with his long hair, sunken eyes, red face, and high colours; and Welcker, the good old man, the poet and composer, the author of the well-known German 'Vaterland song, the present 'Marshal-Nase' of Germany, and Reisler, and Bassermann, and Jahn, from Bonn, the Father of the Gymnastics, so he is called, is a tall person in wearing his long white beard over a braided tunic, and a broad, fallen wh to collar, and surmounts his white mane with a black velvet skull-cap. The stern, manner, and oratory of this old actor of young students are by no means in the highest degree.

"The personage who most strikes us on the 'Left' is a very ugly man, with a broad mouth and broad face, surrounded by a broad red beard and a little, long, turned nose gives him a resemblance to Socrates. At least the whole effect of the whole face is rather that of a satyr. To increase his ugliness, as if intentionally, he makes most hideous scowls—as all Germans seem to consider it their right and duty to do. This is Robert Blum, the leader of the ultra-Liberal and Republican party, the chief of the public in the galleries. He hesitates much as he speaks, uses very figurative language, and evidently at times is a good pedant: he thus really relapses into the very worst of the less educated haunts, and beats tawm away by those swelling phrases which, after all, only contain words, words, words. He is a man who will be heard of in the parliamentary annals of Austria and Venedey, from Cologne, moderate Republicans. Grundrau is of Darmstadt. The former is sickly and weak, yet passionate; the latter, [illegible] known as an able lawyer and writer. Both are fine men, but both are perfectly imperceptible in their views. He must see all of the German [illegible] ers collected in this hall, with the third class [illegible] however, he puts [illegible] ers, and says the most abrupt and violent things in the coolest, [illegible] manner. The dark eyed young man, with his black beard, is Simon of Trèves, the author of the striking address to the people of Germany, [illegible] ying, fiery, fierce letter, running many counter to everything that is, and the [illegible] mence as an old [illegible] And with the rest of the 'Left.' The bald-headed [illegible] Amerongen, the [illegible] ers, the sterling) be paid in full; that the sequestration be maintained on the estates, but that the claims of personal property of the Princes be restored to them, and that an annuity be allowed them pending the arrangement of their affairs. The value of the estates sequestered is estimated at upwards of £3,000,000 sterling; but if the sale of it were now forced, it would not produce a sum sufficient to discharge the engagements of the Royal Family.

NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

MONDAY.—After some preceedings without interest, M. Buvignier mounted the tribune, to address to the Government the interpellations of which he had given notice respecting the Italian question. He observed that public opinion was much preoccupied with the subject of these negotiations, which involved the honour and consideration of France. It was heard with regret that the idea of the Anglo-French mediation had been accepted by the cabinet of Vienna, and on the condition that France acknowledged the right of Austria over Italy. He would merely ask an answer yes or no, whether the proposed mediation rested upon the acknowledgment of the right of Austria over Italy antecedent to all negotiations

General Cavaignac said that when Government had announced to the Assembly the offer of mediation on the part of France and England, the Assembly did not think fit to require any explanations. At this epoch, when the negotiations are scarcely opened, the Assembly, he hoped, would not be more exacting. He acknowledged the right of the Assembly, but at the same time demanded that it should pass to the order of the day. (Marks of assent.) It was asked if the mediation was based upon the acknowledgment of the rights of Austria over Italy. He would answer that if it were so there would have been no need for mediation

M. Ledru Rollin next observed that, although the explanation required prudence, yet that the necessary reserve had its limits. He recalled the times in which France had promised her aid to nations which desired to emancipate themselves. The present Government had declared that the mediation must lead to emancipation; nevertheless, it was said on all sides that the question would be settled by an European Congress. I do not understand (said the orator) the silence of the Government in such a situation. I do not understand that it can say that the treaties of 1815 are not the basis of the negotiation.

General Cavaignac: I say it.

M. Ledru Rollin: Let it not be declared that we are going to constitute in Italy another kingdom of Poland, for we know what that means. The orator then spoke of Italy in Germany, and accused the Government of having deserted them; also the policy of February. There remains (he declared) no course open but war, which, however, he did not fear

M. Creton referred to the cause and the acts which had compromised the diplomacy of the country in the eyes of Europe.

General Cavaignac replied that the Government was not to trouble itself about the distrusts of monarchical Europe. It was only to pursue with honesty and firmness its policy. As to the treaties of 1815, if the question was simply to accept them, there would be no room for negotiations

Various "ordres du jour motivés" were then proposed by MM. Buvignier, Flocon, and other members. The house finally divided on the previous question, which was carried by a majority of 341 to 340

After this, M. St. Romme asked what sense the Government att ched to this motion?

M. Bastide replied that it left the Government in the same situation as before without liberating it from any previous obligation.

General Lamoricière presented two demands for credits, one consisting of 18,500,000f., for purchase of forage and provisions for 1849; and the other of 200,000f., for the defence of the coast of Africa: they were referred to the Finance Committee. He also presented a project for the naturalisation of Gen. Youssouf, an African in the service of France.

The assembly then proceeded to the discussion of agricultural instruction.

TUESDAY.—The consideration of the subject of agricultural instruction was resumed, and after a lengthened discussion the Assembly adopted the project of decree by a majority of 370 to 100.

WEDNESDAY.—At one o'clock M. Marrast, President, took the chair, and, shortly afterwards, the discussion on the Constitution was resumed, and occupied the entire sitting.

The President announced the result of the election for the six Vice-Presidents and the nine quæstors of the Assembly, which, as stated, took place in the Bureaux

The number of voters for the Vice-Presidents was 693.

M. Corbon obtained 343 votes; M. Bixio, 342; M. Lacrosse, 335; M. Bedeau, 331; M. Malleville, 315; M. Pagnerre, 286; M. Havin, 281; M. Martin, 203; M. Guinard, 204

The first six having obtained the greatest number of votes, were proclaimed Vice-Presidents for the ensuing month

Messrs. Pean and Degeorges were elected Secretaries; the first by 322 votes, and the second by 309.

SPAIN.

The Madrid journals of the 28th ult. mention that various encounters had of late taken place in Catalonia between the Royal troops and insurgents, and that several districts of Lower Aragon had been placed in a state of siege. It was reported that the children of the late Don Carlos, and husband the Duke of Bauzares, were to be elevated to the rank of Infantes of Spain

The daughter of the Duke and Duchess de Montpensier was baptized on the morning of the 22nd ult., at Seville.

The President of the Council gave, on the 25th, a grand dinner at Madrid, on the occasion of the delivery of the Duchess de Montpensier, at which all the Ministers and several members of the Corps Diplomatique were present. The Queen, it appears, anxiously desired to see her sister and niece, and it was accordingly believed that the Duke and Duchess de Montpensier would short proceed to Madrid

The Carlist bands in the Maestrazgo had been dispersed; and their chief, Forcadel, was dangerously ill.

ITALIAN STATES

LOMBARDY AND PIEDMONT. By a letter from Milan to the 27th ult we learn that the Lombard Consulta having demanded the basis of the Anglo-French mediation, King Charles Albert had declined communicating it. The French Consul was about to quit Milan.

TUSCANY. On the morning of the 22nd ult. the people of Leghorn, unarmed, but marching in platoons with drums and banners and in the most profound silence, presented themselves before the municipal palace. A deputation presented to the authorities the following demands, in order to have some security against the Piedmontese soldiers who have been called in by the Government

The people demand that the fortresses shall be delivered up to them; that the authorities shall institute a vigorous inquiry why the city was cannonaded, or they would not remain under Cisalpine and the Ministry. After an hour of patient and tranquil attendance, a reply of the authorities was read, when the people retired quietly. The municipality declared that the Gonfaloniere having gone to Florence to obtain the withdrawal of the troops, they could give no categorical answer until his return as to the troops, but they would immediately appoint a commission of inquiry

ROME. We learn from accounts dated the 24th ult., that the Pontifical Government intended opening a new loan of four millions of scudi (about £860,000) Count Rossi had left Rome for Spain

The Government, it would appear, had decided with difficulty on enlisting 12,000 foreign troops. The Minister of Interior left on the 23rd for Perugia. A new Ministry had published its programme in a semi-official form in the Giornale. It says: "To the Ministry belongs the obligation of protecting the Governmental institution as well against the plots of those who endeavour to make it retrograde towards those principles and usages which have ceased to exist, and should not be resisted, as against the attempts of those who would lead it beyond the limits which have been assigned by the wise and generous restorer of our liberties."

The Contemporaneo of Rome, of the 24th ult., states, that on the 19th the steamer Vesuvio sailed for Venice, and that, on the following day, the Pio Nono would leave for the same destination, with a number of Lombard and Polish volunteers. The Sardinian steamer was still at Ancona. The Roman Legion left Rome for Bologna on the 24th

NAPLES.—Advices from Naples have been received to the 24th ult., which state that the King, after first accepting the mediation proposed by England and France, and consenting to a suspension of hostilities, subsequently retracted, and that the resumption of hostilities was hourly apprehended. During ten days the formal acceptation of the intervention was regarded as a settled thing, and the retractation, therefore, produced the most painful apprehensions. Formal and explicit instructions to impose mediation had arrived with Admiral Baudin, who had received on his inspection, and made to flag on board the Friedland. Orders were, it was said, issued by the King of Naples for immediate recommencement of hostilities, but no direct act of hostility had yet taken place

By a decree of the Neapolitan Government, dated the 21st of September, the duty of one ducat on the importation of foreign corn was taken off.

GERMAN STATES

FRANKFORT. M. Raveaux has been charged by the Ministry of the German Empire to demand explanations from the Swiss Vorort respecting what has passed in the Grand Duchy of Baden, and to insist on measures being taken to prevent similar republican movements having their origin in Switzerland.

The Augsburg Gazette announces that, according to the orders of the Ministry of the Empire, a camp, to be composed of five regiments of infantry and two of cavalry, with three batteries of artillery, is to be immediately formed at Bavaria, on the frontier of Wurtemburg; and that another camp is being formed at Krenznach, near Coblentz, at which some of the troops have already arrived.

BAVARIA. The Munich papers of the 20th ult. announce the discovery of a republican plot in that city, and the arrest of a number of democrats, including the Baron Von Naundorf, Dr. Hermann, and the editors of two papers. Considerable excitement prevailed in the Bavarian capital.

BADEN. The Oberpostamts Zeitung of the 20th ult. announces positively that the republican leader, Struve, had been tried by court martial, and shot. Other accounts state that he has not been shot. The Baden troops have been dispersed in all directions. The Wurtemberg republicans are still in arms.

PRUSSIA

Intelligence from Berlin, dated the 20th ult., states that the serious misunderstanding between the Throne and the Constituent Assembly being now removed by the new Cabinet carrying out to a satisfactory extent the decision of the latter with reference to the circular to the army, the anti-Ministerialists—those who are more opposed to the men than to their measures—have lost ground for debate, or not for another Ministerial crisis. Unfortunately, too, the King's name will be again prominently mixed up with the discussion, and in a question, moreover, in which a great and humane principle, one of general interest and importance, is at stake. Several weeks ago, the National Assembly passed a bill for the abolition of the penalty of death—a resolution which was received with joy by numerous philanthropists in various parts of Europe. That bill, up to the present time, has not received the Royal sanction, and Ministers have declared that, before coming to a final decision respecting it, they will [illegible] impression

[illegible] on the 9th, in the Assembly, by the Minister of Justice (Governor) [illegible] a week, would make a official statement [illegible] bill for the abolition of capital punishment [illegible] logne in a state of siege was severely censured by several [illegible] on to the effect that the military authorities there should be held responsible for the violation of the fundamental rights of the Prussian nation was brought forward, and found numerous supporters

[illegible]" demonstration of the Poles, and lastly [illegible] the recent violent attempts to put down the Frankfort Constituent Assembly

The Poles in Posen, Sumter, and other places, are still quietly carrying on their plans for a restoration of their nationality. In the first-named town, Louis [illegible] Mieroslawski, has refused their sanction to the establishment of a "Polish League." At a species of Congress held in Sumter, the Poles resolved to discontinue, for the future, all intercourse with the Germans, whether Christians or Jews, and to deal only with their own countrymen. The President of the province of Posen, Herr Von Beurmann, has issued a circular to all the police and municipal authorities of the province, warning them against a "probable" insurrection of the Poles, and urging them to concert with the military respecting the measures to be taken in the event of disturbances arising. This is one of those mischievous documents which spread mutual distrust and hatred between nations, and which are among the irreconcilable enemies of each other, by inducing the belief that they are so already.

AUSTRIA

From Vienna, under date the 27th ult., we learn that a leading topic of conversation just then was a quarrel of the reporters and publishers with the officers of the Constituent Assembly. The former had resolved neither to report nor to publish the reports of the debates in that Assembly, because the committee on management had cut off all personal communication in the house between the reporters and the deputies, on the ground that the latter, particularly the peasants, were influenced by the remarks and suggestions of the former.

Up to the [illegible] issued, and only one journal published the reports of the debates. [illegible] of the Interior was the Lamperi. He had made General Jellachich governor of Hungary, Croatia, Slavonia, and the military boundaries. General Latour had been, up to the present time, commander of Presburg; and in his new capacity he has under his command all the forces at present in arms in the countries mentioned, National Guards, regulars, and free corps. The war accordingly ought, in conformity with this measure, to cease between Jellachich and Hungary, but it was questionable whether Jellachich would submit to General Lamberg and the Imperial order.

The Emperor had issued, on the 27th ult., two manifestoes—one to the people, and the other to the army of Hungary in which, after condemning the conduct and measures of the Hungarian Diet and Government in many respects, he says:—"The contest between Hungary and the conjoined kingdoms had now reached its culminating point; the attempted pacification had not succeeded. He deeply regretted, in particular, the war in the district of the Military Confines. He had expected that the Hungarian Ministry, without violating the territorial integrity of the kingdom, would accede to the just demands of the Servians (Croatians). His expectations were not realised, and it now only remained for him to put an end to the horrors of a fatal war. Attempts had been made to carry out projects of law which had not received his sanction, and to induce his troops to desert their banners. Whilst resolved to uphold in the legitimate rights of the kingdom, he should support those of his chronsby all the means in his power. He relied on the loyalty of the Hungarian people, and trusted that they would rather listen to him than to traitors to public duty."

In the manifesto addressed to the army, the Emperor states that some of the Hungarian Ministers have either supported or not opposed measures tending to disturb the peace of the Hungarian countries; and that a portion of the officers of the Hungarian army had not displayed at that loyalty for which their country was remarkable. He firmly trusted, however, that the common officers would, in all possible ways, counteract the attempt to seduce the soldiers, and that they would, moreover, endeavour to prevent the collision between [illegible] and the same army

On the 28th his Imperial Majesty issued two more manifestoes, one "to his people of Hungary," and the other "to his army in Hungary." He states in the first that matters are getting worse in that kingdom, that civil war threatened to spread all over it; that he has appointed Lieutenant-Field-Marshal count Von Lamberg Commander-in-Chief of all the troops and armed corps of Hungary; that the measures of the house in bringing about a dissolution of the union; that it is the duty of all persons in authority to obey the above-named nobleman, and that he has taken steps to put down the disturbances in North Hungary by military force from Moravia

He adds that measures have been adopted to put an end to the internal disputes, and to restore the necessary unity between the Hungarian and non-Hungarian states. In the circular to the army, the Emperor announces the conviction that the Commander-in-Chief of the Hungarian army on one side, and Ban Count of Croatia on the other, in obedience to the orders conveyed by Count Von Lamberg, will immediately cease the unnatural strife between the forces, both of which belong to his Imperial master. None of the manifestoes are countersigned, strange to say, by any Minister

Late on the night of the 27th there were serious disturbances in one of the faubourgs, on the occasion of a charivari. Twelve members of the National Guard and six of the rioters were dangerously wounded.

A Schabe Serpheo arrived at Vienna on the 26th, and resigned the post of Palatine of Hungary into the hands of the Emperor. The Archduke Stephen subsequently left the capital for Brunn, and Count Mailath was appointed Deputy Palatine of Hungary.

HUNGARY

Accounts from Pesth of the 23d ult announce the arrival of the Ban of Croatia at Stuhl Weissenburg, a large town within the Hungarian frontier, on the 19th. On the 20th he was still in Stuhl Weissenburg, but was daily expected in the Hungarian capital, where, however, an obstinate resistance awaited him—Kossuth having proclaimed a war of extermination against him, and the whole army against the Croatians No member of the Diet was allowed to leave the city. Sanguinary doings may be therefore expected, unless the newly appointed Royal Plenipotentiary and Hungarian Military Commissioner, Lieutenant Field-Marshal Count Von Lamberg, succeeded in accomplishing his mission to effect a truce between the [illegible]

SWITZERLAND

The Gazetta Ticinese of the 23rd ult. announces that the blockade of the canton by Radetzki, on account of the asylum afforded there to Lombard refugees, continues, and that, consequently, the treaty of 1846, concerning the postal communications between Lombardy and the cantons of Lucerne, Zurich, Berne, Uri, Basle, and Ticino, having been violently infringed, Switzerland is virtually in a state of war with Austria.

The Federal Diet have passed the following decree on the subject; and measures, in accordance with its provisions, have been taken:—

"After having received the note addressed on the 15th September, by Field-Marshal Radetzki, to the council of state of the canton of the Ticino, as well as the reply made on the 16th September by the said council of state of the Ticino, and the despatch of the authority, of the 16th September, it is decreed:

"Art. 1. The [illegible] addressed to [illegible] Austria Government, on the part of the Swiss Charge d'Affaires at Vienna, [illegible] are approved, and the [illegible] are declared to be entirely consonant to [illegible] and to the [illegible] Art. 2. The Federal Directory will communicate to the Imperial Envoy to the Swiss Confederation the note addressed by virtue of Art. 1.

"Art. 3. The [illegible] federal troops shall be put under their orders, composed of two battalions of infantry and a company of carabineers, who shall replace the troops now in the [illegible] the representatives shall have power to dismiss

"Art. 5. During the adjournment of the Diet, the Executory is authorised to take any further steps, conformably with the terms, for the maintenance of the [illegible] Art. 6. And the Federal Government shall not be justice to the duties addressed to it, the Executory shall use [illegible] who do not

SCHLESWIG HOLSTEIN

According to advices received at Berlin, dated the 20th ult., the Prussian Government had refused to recognise the Royal commission, instituted by the King of Denmark, for the government of the Duchies of Schleswig and Holstein, under the presidency of Count Charles Moltke, and of which the official particulars had been communicated to the Prussian Court. General Bonin, the Commander the Duchies, to whom the "Direct commission," nominated by the Danish Government, had applied for a report on their military situation, sent back the despatch to the Danish Governor of Alsen, declaring that he could not correspond with an authority the existence and powers of which had not been officially made known to him, and he directed at the same time all the civil and military functionaries not to obey any orders that were not regularly given to them. The Prussian Government considered this proceeding of the King of Denmark as contrary to the letter and spirit of the armistice, and was determined to protect formally against that attempt that might be made to render valid the decrees of a commission appointed by the King of Denmark alone. The Prussian Government accordingly trusted that the United Government would use its influence to regulate the matter and arrange the new difficulties that had arisen, without the participation of Prussia. On the other hand, the Schleswig-Holsteners maintain their legal Provisional Government in spite of that article of the truce which declares it was dissolved. The soldiers who have returned from Schleswig are unanimous in stating that they were looked upon by the inhabitants as foes, and not as friends and brothers come to defend a national cause.

RUSSIA.

Under date of the 21st ult. we have accounts from St. Petersburgh, which state that the cholera, which broke out towards the middle of June, had almost disappeared. The cordon was in consequence fast being taken up. In the first 17 days 7500 p[illegible] the panic caused by the epidemic, chiefly among the lower classes, [illegible] Not less than 400,000 had fled from the capital without resources, and even with their clothes, and threw themselves into the environs, where the village authorities expelled them. Without any asylum, without food, hundreds of them expired, and the streets were frequently so covered with their corpses, that it was scarcely possible to get along. It is not known how many perished in this manner, but assuredly the cholera, which daily carries off 1500 victims when it was at its height, was not more fatal. All the public works were suspended, but the Emperor, by daily visiting the capital, succeeded, both by his presence, his calmness, and his resolution, in obviating those troubles which are so frequent under similar circumstances. The cordon has now made great havoc at Astrakan.

PRINCIPALITIES OF THE DANUBE

A letter from the frontiers of Moldavia, of the 8th ult., says:—"Five thousand Russians have just passed the Pruth to reinforce the army of occupation. The Russian General, Dubamel, has ordered the Moldavian General to prepare winter quarters and provisions for 10,000 men. The inhabitants of the provinces are exposed to exactions and vexations of all kinds, both on the part of the Russians and their protégé, Prince Stourdza."

TURKEY AND GREECE

Accounts from Athens to the 10th September inform us that Greece was in the enjoyment of perfect tranquility. The prorogation of the Chambers, from what already set for thirteen months, was daily expected. The cholera was declining in Skiathos. The epidemic was equally declining in the Turkish capital, according to intelligence dated the 14th ult., but was still raging in the provinces

UNITED STATES.

By the mail steam-packet Hibernia, arrived on Monday, we have intelligence (which however is very scanty) from New York to the 19th ult. The accounts bearing upon political affairs are important merely in reference to the announcement they contain, that Mr. Clay had declared his intention not to accept of his nomination for the Presidency, if that honour were tendered.

INDIA.

Advices have been received this week, in anticipation of the Overland Mail, the dates being—Calcutta 20th, Madras 23rd, and Bombay 31st of August. Major (late Lieutenant) Edwardes was, with the troops under his command, still before Mooltan. The Sersezpore force, of about 7000 or 8000 men, which the last mail mentioned as having been despatched to their relief, was hourly expected to join them, comprising two brigades of infantry, some cavalry, sappers, and a siege train.

A Sikh auxiliary force was also on the march from Lahore

The Bombay Government had communicated the progress of the troops previously ordered to proceed up the Indus to Mooltan, on the ground that they would not be required or would arrive too late. Native intelligence from the seat of insurrection, early in August, stated that the inhabitants of Mooltan, having heard of the approach of the British troops, were quitting the place, and that the Dewan had in consequence built up the gates

The Serezpore force, consisting of the Mooltan land force crossed the river to Gunda-bungwala on the 23d August, and halted there on the two following days. This delay led to the report that probably the whole force would be recalled; but this rumour happily proved incorrect. The Lahore column (consisting of the 7th Irregular Cavalry, a troop of Horse Artillery, and the 32d and 8th Native Infantry) marched on the 21st, and proceeded onwards without any protracted halt, expecting to effect a junction with Lieutenant Edwardes on the 31st of August, and with the Serezpore column and siege train at a later date. The progress of both columns appears to have been favourable, and they encountered no opposition on the way. In the latter part of the second week in August, a deputation, under the belief that we were not in a position immediately to put down rebellion, had been instigated by the Sikh Governor, Sirdar Chuttur Singh, to proceed to Mooltan, and to induce the Sappers and Miners recalled Runjitpore in seven days and a half from Peroseppore

In the Cis-Sutlej districts of the Hazarah, a province of the Punjaub, an outbreak of Sikh troops had occurred, in imitation of the example set at Mooltan, as the first act was the murder of Colonel Canara, an European officer in the Native service. The impolitic delay which had occurred in marching troops to Mooltan, no doubt had led to a more general spread of the revolt; and whether the belief that we were not in a position immediately to put down rebellion. The insurrection, which was one of the Sikh troops, and not of the people, had been instigated by the Sikh Governor, Sirdar Chuttur Singh Attareewalah, father of Rajah Sheere Singh. An attempt to seize the fort of Attok was frustrated by the vigilance of Major Lawrence, who patrolled 430 men to the assistance of the garrison. Lieutenant Lockhart has been promoted to Hoosa Abdall.

Late outbreak at Kandy, in the island of Ceylon, had been completely suppressed by the local Government. Our advices from Western India affirm that the authorities there did not consider it probable any troops would be required in consequence of the rebellion in the Punjaub, or the disturbances in Nepaul.

It was understood that the Governor General no longer contemplated proceeding to the north-west provinces at the close of the year, and that any extraordinary measures necessary for the conduct of military operations would be assumed by the Resident of Lahore

Another remittance of 10 lakhs had been ordered for the account of the India Board (or such) up to the 28th of July, which would be conveyed from Madras and Bombay. The exchange on bills in Bengal is said to be at a lower rate than ever was known before; and the Company's terms of exchange being considered much higher than that of the banks, bills almost stopped altogether for remittance. A large amount of specie has been shipped off private parties at Bombay for England by the overland route.

Extra Mail Railway coaches have been taken up very warmly in the Western presidency, and three sealed mails down, from the demand for shares, that the project would ultimately be carried into operation. The applications for shares (each) up to the 28th of July amounted to 73rd, in addition to the 11 originally allotted in bonds.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE

Accounts have reached us to the 2nd July. The intelligence from the northeast frontier is rather unfavorable. Pretorius had issued placards to create dissatisfaction amongst his countrymen, and had resumed arms against the Government; in consequence of which he had partly raised and despatched troops to the Sand country, and was about proceeding there in person. He had issued a proclamation, offering a reward of £1500 for the capture of Pretorius, and a like sum for any information which would lead to his capture. The ports of Cape Town, Simon's Bay, Algoa Bay, and Natal, had been reported ice-bound, causing parts; and at Port Beaufort, Mossel Bay, Waterloo Bay, and East London, sub-collectors were stationed to enter or clear vessels for or to the United Kingdom, or any other British possessions abroad, was fixed at five per cent. ad valorem, and on foreign goods twelve per cent

WEST INDIES

The Royal Mail Steam-Packet Company's ship Medway arrived with the West India Mails, 900,000 dollars, and a general cargo, on Thursday last, at Southampton. She brings intelligence of a serious accident to Sir Charles Grey by a fall from a mule, and the latest accounts report him in immediate danger.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

LORD BERWICK

RICHARD NOEL HILL, fourth Lord Berwick, died on the 28th ult., at his seat, Attingham House, near Shrewsbury. He was third son of Noel first Lord Berwick, and succeeded to the title at the decease of his elder brother, William, in 1842. He received his education at Rugby; and, having entered into holy orders, became Rector of Tuxford, in Nottinghamshire, and of Herrington, in Shropshire. The former living his Lordship held for more than half a century. He married, in 1800, Frances, daughter of the late William Mostyn Owen, Esq., M.P. for Montgomeryshire, and by her, who died in 1840, had issue four sons and two daughters, the eldest of the former being Richard Noel Hill, present Lord Berwick.

The surname of Lord Berwick's ancestors in the male line was Harwood. The first Peer's father, Thomas Harwood, Esq., of Fern Hall, assumed that of Hill, on right of his mother, who was sister of Dr. Richard Hill, an eminent statesman in the reigns of William III. and Queen Anne.

The noble house of Berwick enjoys the distinguished honour of quartering the Royal Arms of Plantagenet on its escutcheon

LIEUTENANT-GENERAL THE HON. GEORGE MURRAY

THIS gallant officer, who died on the 30th ult. at his residence in Upper Seymour-street, aged 68, was second son of David, Earl of Mansfield, by Louisa, his second wife, daughter of Charles, ninth Lord Cathcart. He entered the army as Cornet in 1795, and having passed through the regular gradations (with the exception of that of Major), attained to the rank of Lieutenant-General in 1837. He was for several years in the 2nd Life Guards, and served with that distinguished regiment (of which he eventually became Lieut.-Colonel) during the Peninsular campaigns of 1813 and 1814.

MESSINA, FROM THE FARO.

MESSINA.

This ill-fated town has just been the scene of fire and pillage, siege and slaughter, partaking more of the atrocities of barbaric warfare than the struggles of civilised nations. Of the progress of the insurrection in Sicily against Neapolitan rule, our readers have from week to week been apprised; and our present object is to illustrate the scene presented at the taking of Messina, in the early part of last month, which has been recorded in our Journal of the 16th.

It appears that until the 6th nothing very decisive took place; the Neapolitan steamers cruising about, and the cannon roaring. About 500 Swiss landed on the beach, and gained possession of a small redoubt at the entrance of the town; but they were driven out of it with a loss of sixty of their men killed. The small column nevertheless retired in good order. At this moment, the enthusiasm of the Messinese became unrestrained, and their shouts of victory reached the ships in the roadstead. Several of their chiefs went on board the French ship Hercule, and their exultation was so great that nothing less than a terrible conflict could be expected.

During the 6th the cannonade became hotter and hotter. The citadel kept up an incessant shower of shells upon the city, making great ravages; the least exasperated among the Messinese began to be discouraged, and the same evening a great number took refuge on board the French and English ships of war. On the morning of the 7th all order and confidence were at an end; doubt and uncertainty prevailed, and the cause of independence sunk. A capitulation was proposed. Captain Nonay, of the Hercule, and Captain Robb, of the English steam-frigate Bulldog, hastened to offer their mediation, but were unable to bring General Filangieri, Commander-in-Chief of the Neapolitans, and the delegates from the Neapolitans, and the delegates from the Messinese, to an understanding. The cannonade, which had for the occasion been suspended for a short time, was resumed, and became more tremendous than on the preceding day. The army was landed, and the steamers ran into the port to support its operations. In a few minutes more the Neapolitans were in the town, and took possession of all the forts without having to fire a shot.

On the 8th the firing ceased, and all was calm. The country around presented the aspect of desolation, and several quarters of the town were on fire. A very large portion of the population—more than 10,000 persons of all ages and both sexes—sought refuge on board the Hercule, Panama, and Bulldog. On the 9th, the fire, which had broken out in different parts of the town, was extinguished, order had been restored, and property respected.

One of the accompanying Engravings illustrates the extraordinary scene of the population seeking refuge on board the vessels.

Other accounts detail the most revolting atrocities in the conflict. About 60 prisoners, Neapolitans and Swiss, are stated to have been cut to pieces, roasted and eaten (?). A letter from Toulon states that "the Neapolitans replied to these excesses by other enormities. The town, taken by assault, was given up to fire and pillage, to murder and violation. A population of 80,000 souls is in flight or despair. Five thousand were received by the French man-of-war the Hercule, 2000 by the Panama; it was impossible to receive more; and these unfortunates were packed pell-mell. Many women and children died of suffocation on board these ships. The Duchess de Noya, saved, amidst a thousand perils, in a wretched fishing-boat, was enabled to reach Naples. General Filangieri remains master of the city: the Neapolitan flag floats from all the forts."

A letter from Malta says:—"About 18,000 men were poured into the city from steamers and men-of-war. These men were landed at various points of the city, covered by the fire of the numerous gun-boats off the town, and the Citadel within. Among the multitudes landed were some 2500 of the King's famous guard, comprising Swiss soldiers. On landing, six hundred of them, declaring they abjured the authority of their Sovereign, laid down their arms; but the Messinese, having already deeply suffered from acts of treachery, fearful that more lurked under the uncalled-for and sudden affection they had now manifested for their enemy, cut them to pieces. Thus was punished an act of treachery to their King, or one contemplated to their enemy. The fight that ensued after this was of the most desperate character."

The upper Illustration shows Messina, from an original drawing, taken from the Faro, or Lighthouse, seen in the left-hand foreground. Commencing from this point, to the right, we have the Citadel, in the hands of the Neapolitans during the recent conflict, the portion jutting into the harbour being strongly fortified. Adjoining is the Old Arsenal; the walled Inclosure to the left is the Protestant Burial-Ground; and the long building in the central foreground is the Lazaretto, or Place of Quarantine.

Above the Citadel, in the left-hand bend of the harbour, is the Porto Franco or bonded warehouses; and facing the harbour is the long line of "the Marina," built in uniform and handsome Palladian style, and the fashionable promenade of the town. Highest on the hills, in the centre of the picture, is the Fort Gonzaga, which, with fort San Salvador, at the right-hand point, opposite the Citadel, was in possession of the Sicilians; as also the small fort adjoining, and the gate Porta Reale.

Messina lies on the north east coast of Sicily, opposite the Calabrian shore from which it is separated by the channel of the Faro, which is here about four miles wide, but becomes much narrower farther north. The town, as our Illustration shows, is built partly on the slope of a steep hill, and partly along the sea-shore at the foot of it. The port is formed by a strip of sandy beach, projecting into the sea at the south side of the city, and sweeping round in the form of a semicircle.

From the sickle-like form of this strip of land, the town received from its firs Greek inhabitants the name of "Zankle" ("curved," or "bent"), which was afterwards changed into that of Messene. On this narrow tract of land are, as we have explained, the citadel, the lazaretto, the lighthouse, and the fort of San Salvador, at the entrance of the harbour, which faces the north

The harbour, which is more than two miles in circumference, is one of the best in the Mediterranean. Messina is the most trading town in Sicily; and several thousand hands are employed here in silk manufacture. The town has many remarkable buildings; and just at its verge upon the hills to the right, is a place of peculiar historic interest to the English reader—this being the tower in which Richard Cœur de Lion was confined.

THE FARO OF MESSINA.

MAJOR EDWARDES.

Major Edwardes, whose skill and gallantry in routing the army of the Moolt an Rajah has been the subject of so much commendation, is a native of Frodesley, in Shropshire. He was baptized on the 17th of January, 1820; so that his laurels, of which the oldest General in the British service might be proud, have indeed been gathered early. On the death of his father, the Rev. Benjamin Edwardes, Rector of Frodesley (in the patronage of his brother, the Rev. Henry Edwardes, Bart.), his widow retired into Wales with her three children, the second of whom, the Major, then about four years old, went to live with John Thomas Hope, Esq., of Netley Dorrington, Salop, his grandfather, by his mother's side.

With this gentleman and his family, young Edwardes continued to reside (except when at school) until Michaelmas Day, 1830. After receiving the rudiments of his education in the country, young Edwardes was sent to King's College, London, and there completed his studies under the superintendence of the Rev. Dr. Lonsdale, now Bishop of Lichfield. He had not, consequently, the advantages of an education in the Hon. East India Company's establishment at Addiscombe, to fit him for the service in which he shortly entered. His scholastic attainments were very considerable; he was especially distinguished by his knowledge of the Persian language, and his talent for drawing.

To a fortunate accident, therefore, do the Company and the country owe the possession of the young hero's aid. Through the instrumentality of his uncle, the late Sir Henry Edwardes, the youth was nominated to a cadetship by Sir Richard Jenkins, G.C.B., late M.P. for Shrewsbury, and formerly Chairman of the Hon. East India Company; and highly gratified must Sir Richard feel with the share he has had in presenting such a man to the public service.

On September 29, 1840, young Edwardes left his grandfather for the ship Wellesley Castle, Captain Ginslet, at Portsmouth, on his way to Calcutta, as a Cadet in the Bengal army. He was subsequently singled out by Lord Gough, the Commander-in-Chief, as his aide-de-camp; and he was taken by his Lordship to the first battle after Viscount Hardinge's arrival in India as Governor-General. He was wounded in this engagement, and has had several other accidents and escapes.

Young Edwardes also became specially noticed by Lord Hardinge for his services as a successful negotiator with the native powers of North-Western India. From his Lordship he received the appointment he now holds; and to this circumstance Lord Hardinge referred with much satisfaction, in a speech delivered by him at a meeting of the Dorlington Horticultural Society, on the 23rd ult. After passing a high encomium on Lord Londonderry and the army in the Peninsula, Lord Hardinge spoke in praise of the Indian army under Lord Gough, who singled out Edwardes for his talents and activity as his aide-de-camp, and took him to the battles in the Punjab, where he was wounded; and, as an illustration of high deserts, he quoted the conduct of Lieut. Edwardes, whom her Majesty has graciously promoted to a Majority; adding that it was his (the Viscount's) pride and satisfaction to state that he had appointed that officer to the situation he now filled; and that it was impossible to speak too highly of his merits and eminent services.

The occurrence of a pleasing incident in connexion with the young officer's great services may be here mentioned. On Mr. Hume rising in the Lower House to enquire as to the nature of the reward intended to be conferred on Mr Edwardes, Lord John Russell somewhat quickly interposed, and addressing Sir John Cam Hobhouse and Mr. Hume, said that the nature of the reward would be made known to the officer by a communication direct from the Sovereign.

Although now styled Major, Mr. Edwardes merely holds that brevet rank in the Lahore district; the rules of the Company's service being particularly strict on points of promotion. Indeed, even his promotion to the rank of a local field-officer involved the making of a special case. On, however, attaining, by the ordinary gradations, from junior Lieutenant the position of Captain, there is no doubt he will at once be advanced to the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel.

MAJOR EDWARDES, FROM A MINIATURE IN THE POSSESSION OF THE FAMILY.

Major Edwardes has also received, by a resolution of the Court of Directors, a gold medal, to commemorate his services against the Moolt an Rajah.

The accompanying portrait is from a miniature in the possession of Lady Edwardes, to whose courtesy we are indebted for permission to transfer this presentment of the gallant hero to our pages.

Among the many testimonials paid to Major Edwardes' services, the Journal des Débats does England the honour to devote two columns of its space to a recapitulation of the details of the recent triumph at Mooltan. "The English newspapers," says the writer, "are filled with eulogies on the conduct of Lieutenant Edwardes. Those eulogies are well merited. That officer, by his audacity and firmness, has saved his country the expenses of a campaign, that is to say, several millions; and, without taking any account of the honour which he has conferred on himself, he has added a brilliant page to that history of the Indian army, whose annals, interspersed with romantic events discoverable in no other history, are as glorious as those of any army in the world."

MARLBOROUGH COLLEGE CHAPEL.

The establishment of the College at Marlborough, which, our readers will recollect, was formed some five years since, for the education of the sons of clergymen and others, has just been completed, by the erection of a Chapel, which was consecrated yesterday week.

The Marquis of Aillesbury, upon whose property the Chapel is built, was, we regret to say, prevented from attending the ceremony by alarming illness.

With his accustomed punctuality, the Lord Bishop of the diocese entered the new edifice at the appointed hour, attended by his Chancellor, Archdeacons, Rural Deans, the Head Master and College officials, besides a great body of Clergy, and very many members of the Council. We especially noticed the Very Rev. the Dean of Manchester, Dr. Phillimore, the Venerable Archdeacons Macdonald, Hony, and Berens, with Sir Stephen Glynn, and Messrs. Christopher Hodgson, Brett, Few, Prower, Plater, Shepherd, Glennie, Hunter, Gill, and many other zealous friends of this admirable design.

The Chapel was nearly filled with a distinguished assemblage of the clergy and gentry of this part of the county, besides the scholars.

The services of the day, including the morning worship, with a selection of appropriate psalms, lessons, &c., now proceeded, with the occasional introduction of prayers suited to the solemn and peculiar event of the dedication and consecration of the fabric to its great purposes.

The Lord Bishop preached an eloquent sermon, taking his text from Psalm 132, verses 7 and 8. The one thing wanting was truly said to be now supplied in the completion of this sacred edifice—that all useful learning might be sanctified, and all moral instruction ennobled, for the sake of so many successive hundreds of hopeful scholars.

In the course of the afternoon the Council entertained in the Great Hall of the College their visitors and the pupils; the Bishop presiding. After the excellent toast of "Church and Queen" had been warmly responded to, the Right Rev. Chairman proposed the health of the Head Master, the Rev. Mr. Wilkinson, who, in thanking the company, observed that "The dedication of this part of the great fabric of Marlborough College seemed, with God's blessing thereon, to secure the great object of rearing good Christians and faithful citizens. Of the College itself, in its economical character the reverend gentleman spoke as supplying a medium between meanness and luxury, as compared with the old schools of the land. For himself, he was satisfied with the state and progress of Marlborough College, although too much had been expected of it, viz. that it should achieve all the good and avoid all the evil of the old public school system. Indeed, although the College had had to contend against some prejudices, its great difficulty had arisen from the necessary disappointment of too high and unreasonable expectations, and even undue praise, at its origin. Intellectually and morally, the real aim and end had been gained—sound scholarship and manly character being the great objects in view."

The health of the Bishop was next proposed, and drunk with enthusiasm; and his Lordship in returning thanks bore testimony to the unremitting care and zeal of the Council of the College, individually and collectively; whilst the munificence of several of its members required due record, especially the extensive munificence of Mr. M'Geachy, the founder of the Library, and Mr. Few, the liberal donor of the service of Communion Plate. The College had already conciliated the aid and affections of many devoted and powerful friends.

The toast of "Success and prosperity to Marlborough College," connected with due compliments to the best and earliest friend of the College, the Very Rev Dr. Bowers, Dean of Manchester, was received with enthusiasm. The Dean returned thanks, and the party then broke up.

The Chapel, of which we annex an exterior view, is dedicated to St. Michael; it is a handsome and capacious structure, built in the English style, bordering upon the Decorated. It stands on high ground, forming a conspicuous object at the entrance to Marlborough from the Bath road, and gives an appropriate finish to the extensive range of buildings already erected for the use of the College. In plan, the Chapel is oblong, and it is surmounted at the four angles by pinnacles of freestone. At the south, west, and north, are three doors, by which the edifice is entered; but they are all situated at the west end, and separated from the nave, so as entirely to prevent all interference with the service performed in the body of the Chapel. On entering the interior of the building, the effect is altogether pleasing. The dimensions are 126 feet long, by 49 feet 6 in. wide; and the fine open roof, supported by seven wide spanned arches standing on stone brackets, gives it a lofty and commanding appearance. The floor is paved with encaustic tiles. In the centre of the aisle stands a brass eagle, supported by a bronze pedestal, from which the lessons will be read: it has been presented by the pupils of the College, and has cost upwards of £40. With the exception of the stalls at the west end, all the seats are placed sideways, which gives the interior of the building much the same effect as that of the choir of a Cathedral. The organ is placed in a small gallery at the west end. Altogether, the Chapel seems well suited to the object for which it is designed, and will hold about 600 people. It has been built from a design by Edward Blore, Esq., and we are informed that the cost of its erection has exceeded £6000

MARLBOROUGH COLLEGE CHAPEL.

An Engraving of the College, which was formerly the mansion of the Marquis of Hertford, and subsequently the Castle Hotel, will be found in the Illustrated London News for September 9, 1843.

PETERBOROUGH FAIR DURING THE FLOOD.

PETERBOROUGH BRIDGE FAIR.

The Illustration shows a place of usually festive meeting, changed into a scene of sad calamity.

Monday last was the day for the commencement of holding the annual Bridge Fair at Peterborough. Owing to the late heavy rain—which had been for some days incessant at Peterborough and its neighbourhood—that portion of the ground on which the Wood Fair is held became inundated in the course of the day to three feet, and subsequently rose much higher. The wood floated in every direction, and the confusion was very great. The loss by the catastrophe has been estimated at £3000! The property destroyed or lost consisted of hurdles, timber for gates, posts, rails, and, in fact, every kind of timber for farming purposes.

The railway from Northampton, which passes the site of the Fair, was so inundated that all traffic was stopped; and it is feared that the embankments of the line are seriously injured.

From the site of the Fair the inundation extended some distance up Broad Bridge-street; though from the nature of the ground the work of destruction was confined principally to the Wood Fair.

The Committee of Education and the National Society.—The long-pending discussion between the Committee of the Privy Council and the Archbishop of Canterbury, on the part of the National Society, on the question of education, has been brought to a close by a peremptory refusal on the part of the Committee of Privy Council to make any further concessions to the Church. This refusal on the part of the Committee will probably lead to a rupture between the two parties, and perhaps to a complete withdrawal of the National Society from a participation in the Government grants. The correspondence between his Grace and the Lords of the Committee of the Privy Council is of considerable length, and in it are set out the views and wishes of the respective parties. It appears by a paper, drawn up by the Committee of the National Society, and put into the hands of the Archbishop, with a request that he would submit it to the Lord President of the Council that since the adoption by the Committee of the Council on Education of the existing management causes, the Committee of the National Society have received strong remonstrances from the clergy and laity in various parts of the country, which convince them that much dissatisfaction has arisen among the promoters of schools in connexion with the Church. A general meeting of the Bishops and the other members of the National Society will be called in November, to decide what course shall, under all the circumstances of the case, be adopted.

THE ILLUSTRATED

LONDON ALMANACK,

FOR 1849,

WILL BE READY FOR PUBLICATION EARLY IN NOVEMBER;

Being the Fifth Annual Issue of this most beautifully embellished and useful Almanack. Illustrated by RICHARD DOYLE, B. FOSTER, &c.; and finely engraved by DALZIEL, VIZETELLY, &c. The Astronomical Department by JAMES GLAISHER, Esq., F.R.A.S., and of the Royal Observatory, Greenwich.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, Oct. 8.—Sixteenth Sunday after Trinity
MONDAY, 9.—St. Denys.
TUESDAY, 10.—Oxford and Cambridge Terms begin.
WEDNESDAY, 11.—Old Michaelmas Day
THURSDAY, 12.—Full Moon at 3h. 56m. P.M.
FRIDAY, 13.—Translation of King Edward the Confessor.
SATURDAY, 14. The Sun rises at 6h. 25m., and sets at 5h. 6m.

TIMES OF HIGH WATER AT LONDON BRIDGE,
FOR THE WEEK ENDING OCTOBER 14.

Sunday	Monday	Tuesday	Wednesday	Thursday	Friday	Saturday
M. h m 0 35	A. h m 10 55	M. h m 11 15	A. h m 11 42	M. h m *	A. h m 0 10	M. h m 0 35
A. h m 1 3	M. h m 11 23	A. h m *	M. h m 0 2	A. h m 0 28	M. h m 0 52	A. h m 1 15

* On Tuesday there will be one high tide only, occurring at 10 minutes after noon.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"A Protestant."—Our Correspondent misinterprets the whole meaning and tendency of the passage he criticises. There seems to us nothing in it which can offend any sincere Protestant, or Catholic either. At all events, our Correspondent is not justified in thus straining an interpretation.

"C. U."—Trotter's Medical Almanack has all peculiar, stating qualifications, to the Governor at the Pentonville Prison.

"R. B. M.," Birmingham.—Sir John Herschel's "Treatise on Astronomy," or Lardner's.

"A Traveller" may find a List of Provincial Newspapers, their publishers, &c., in "The London Post-Office Directory," or obtain a list of Messrs. Barker and Co., 44, Fleet street.

"J. W." Twatham, may find recipes for coloured flames in the "Boy's Treasury of Sports, or, Parlour Magic."

"Jack Sewtroller." Parental love must proceed from parents. Dover Castle is worthy to know.

"A Lover of Poetry." The poem of "Elijah."

"W. B. R."—The Arsenal Bayonetter is made by Clarke, Strand.

"J. K. L." Peckham. We have not room.

"Alpha," Beverley.—The step should be specified in the agreement

"G. H. H."—Apply to Messrs. Longman and Co.

"Winchester." Apply to Smith, Elder, and Co., Cornhill.

"N. B. R." could sue for a divorce in this country.

"Lucy." The report is groundless.

"Telegraph" is thanked.

"T. F.," Kennington; "Resplendens."—Declined.

"N. M." should order his newsman to send his copy of our Journal via the large envelope.

"A. B."—Our reply has been misconceived. In arguing that an heiress can confer the right to her surname name, we meant to imply that the son of an heiress derived from her a right to seek from the Queen Royal license to assume his mother's name. The deed referred to would be perfectly useless.

"Impersonal."—Prince Louis Napoleon's father was Louis Bonaparte, ex-King of Holland, brother of the Emperor Napoleon.

"Benita." London Hoo, Bedfordshire, was purchased from the Marquis of Bute, a few years since, by Charles Thomas Warth, Esq., of Clapton and Welcombe, in Warwickshire.

"R. A. K." See Burke's "Extinct Peerage."

"J. C. B." can, if his grandfather was entitled to the crest in question, resume its use without any trouble; but the usage will render him liable to the tax on armorial bearings.

"M. H." The Duke of Cambridge was married at Cassel, May 7; and in London, June 1, 1818

"W. N." may find the Comparative Weights in some of the Almanacks.

"Tim." Reply to Mr. Lansley, Aberdeen, Mr. Chancery-lane.

"C. C. B." Whitehaven.—We would engrave the View, had the place any immediate interest.

"Panorama."—See the "Illustrated London Almanack" for 1846 (September).

"Galeblma." See the Shelling "Manual of Oil-painting."

"J. U.," Bungay.—We do not recollect the Sketch

"A Correspondent" is thanked for a sketch of the Chaudière Falls, though we cannot engrave it.

"P. A. S." Taylor's "Short-hand," improved by Harding

"A Constant Reader," who is desirous of obtaining information on the Daguerreotype, its cost, &c., should buy Bingham's "Photogenic Manipulation," Part II. (Daguerreotype), third edition. Just published by Knights, Foster-lane

"A Reader."—Monsieur, is demanded for the Prince, &c., though we cannot avail ourselves of his kindness.

"Anne Maria," Bath.—Mills, in his "History of Chivalry," refers the term "Blue-stocking" to the Sonnets "de la Calza" (of the stocking), formed at Venice in 1590, the members wearing blue stockings. In 1590 the foppery of Italian literature took some other symbol; the rejected tale travelled to France, and then disrupted to England.

"Glover."—A Nuremberg Jetton. Of no value.

"A Gloucester Man" is thanked

"T. K. E." York.—We do not know the practical worth of the inventions.

"J. L. E." Stephens's "Book of the Farm," the new edition, now publishing.

"Pearish."—That title of Buckingham was conferred on the family that now holds it, in 1784, when George, second Earl Temple, was created Marquis of Buckingham. His son and successor, Richard, second Marquis, having married his only daughter and heiress of James Brydges, Duke of Chandos, was further advanced to the Dukedom of Buckingham and Chandos

"Rome."—Family arms, if originally correct and legal, can at any time be resumed by the proper inheritor. If our correspondent can prove his descent from the grantee of the arms, he is fully entitled to bear them, as well as all quarterings to which the said grantee had a right.

"W. H." Isleworth.—An Engraving of the remarkable spot which lately passed over the sun is inserted in this paper, with a scale showing its dimensions, by which means you can compare your measurement, viz. 70,000 miles diameter, &c. We do not know whether the spot was measured at Greenwich

"A. B."—Professional singers keep their voices in order by early training, and many of them live by system. The organ is in the best order some hours after digestion, but many artists resort to every variety of artificial excitement.

"Investigator." The overture and the piece, when the spirit appears to Monk Lewis's play of the "Castle Spectre," are taken from the sacred compositions of Handel, but we cannot point out the particular works, as Mozart fully arranged, conducted, and composed the music after his own fashion.

"B P." The 15th.

"A Constant Reader," Wexford. See Sidney's "Emigrant's Journal," No. 1, just published

"J. W." informs us that the old inn at Oxford, engraved last week, now bears the sign of the "Duke of Wellington."

"Arturo." No

"Cosmorama." We cannot inform you.

"J. D. P." will find a View of Old St. Pancras Church in Nos 25 and 320 of our Journal

"D. F." Wisbeach; and "Veritas" .—We do not find the address in the "London Directory."

"X Y Z" The addresses are Nos. 68 and 69, Great Tower-street, and No. 43, Mark-lane

"R. S. S.," Edinburgh. Beckman may, probably, give the date of the introduction of painting on ivory.

"A General Subscriber." The usual charge for binding our Journal is 2s. 6d. per Volume

BOOKS, &c., RECEIVED DURING THE WEEK.

The Pulpit Orators of France and Switzerland.—Mediæval Embroidery.—The Claret Cup.—Lays for Patriots.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 7, 1848.

FRENCH affairs are evidently drawing to a decisive point. The question of the Presidency of the Republic, which comes on immediately for discussion, will try the strength of parties, both in and out of the Assembly; and its decision will either let loose upon France the flood of civil contention, or confirm power for some time to come in the strong, unflinching hand of the only honest Republican in a condition to aspire to it. The Monarchists—who yield the allegiance of their hearts either to the Orleans or the Bourbon dynasty, and who on all previous occasions have shown themselves the strong opponents of Universal Suffrage—having discovered that Republicanism is in a minority throughout the whole of the provinces and rural districts of France, have become the staunch supporters of a direct appeal to the whole people. M. Thiers, M. Molé, and the other leaders of the old Conservative and Dynastic coteries, whether Orleanist or Legitimist, have united their suffrages and their influence in favour of the election of the President by universal suffrage, solely with a view, it is presumed, to show Republicanism, once for all, that it is not the form of Government which the French people desire. It seems to us, however, that this result is not so likely to be attained as they imagine, and that in seeking to damage the present Government, they may damage even more the interests of the Orleans and the Bourbon families, which they believe to be identical with the interests of France. In the first place, the election is for President, not for King. The Duke of Bordeaux cannot become a candidate; neither can the Prince de Joinville nor the Count de Paris. Neither of them is in the field, and neither of them can be brought forward; consequently, as far as their claims are concerned, the election will prove nothing. These persons will be, and must be entirely ignored. The only candidate whose name is universally popular amid the masses of the French population is Louis Napoleon. If there be a direct appeal to the people, his is the name that will come out triumphantly from the electoral urns of the whole realm. How this result would serve the interest of Orleanist or Bourbonist, we cannot imagine: and what gratification it could be to such statesmen as M. Thiers and M. Molé, we are equally slow to understand. We cannot suppose these eminent men to be so blinded by their disappointment at the overthrow of the Orleans dynasty, as to be reckless what they do, provided they can throw discredit or inflict damage upon the Republic. We are, therefore, quite at a loss to comprehend their policy. They cannot, surely, imagine that Louis Napoleon, as President of the Republic, might prepare the way for the restoration of any kind of Monarchy that would accord with their views? Of all men in the world, he is the least available for the part of a General Monk. Neither can they imagine, seeing his past career, that he is disinclined towards the Imperial purple, and that, once President, he would not seek to fasten himself upon the country as its permanent ruler. The chances are that he would do so. The traditions of his name, which have moulded his life and character, do not lead those who have any knowledge of human nature to suppose in him any great amount of Republican virtue, whatever for present purposes he may pronend.

The Government, after some hesitation, has finally decided to throw all its weight against the proposition to be submitted to the Assembly, that the President shall be elected by universal suffrage. At a Cabinet Council held on Tuesday, and at which General Cavaignac presided, it was resolved to support by all available means the amendment to the article of the Constitution of which notice has been given by M. Flocon, viz. "That the National Assembly delegates the executive power to a citizen, who shall receive the title of President of the Republic." Upon this amendment the struggle will take place. If it be defeated, Louis Napoleon will doubtless be elected by direct appeal to the people. If it be carried, General Cavaignac will in all probability (unless some new name should in the interval arise to overshadow his) be elected by the Assembly. There is, however, another chance, which is that M. Thiers or M. Molé might be the successful candidate. This would be a strange result indeed—all the more strange, from the position they have severally taken with reference to universal suffrage. Altogether, the "situation," as the French call it, is a very grave one, and all parties in the meantime are preparing to turn it to their own advantage. We fear the immediate results will prove the reverse of satisfactory to the whole of them.

THE Chartist trials in London have been brought to a close. The trials of the Irish rebels are yet proceeding. Some surprise has been expressed at the severity of the sentences passed upon the former, not so much, if at all, on account of the guilt of the parties, of which there can be no reasonable doubt, as on account of the ludicrous disproportion between the big words of these people and the means at their command for carrying their designs into execution. Never was treason or sedition so miserably paraded as in the case of these men: but no sooner was the hand of the Government could have interfered to prevent the law from taking its full course. If a plea of lunacy had been raised, the heroes of the coal-scuttle breast-plates might perhaps have derived some advantage from it; but such a plea not having been even so much as hinted at, there was clearly nothing to be done but to decide upon the evidence of guilt or innocence. The jury decided upon their guilt, and the sentence followed as a matter of course. Severe as it looks, the law has not been strained against them.

The Irish trials necessarily excite more attention. There was an element of a grander character in the Irish rebellion, and in that of the unfortunate Irish leader, than ever attached to the comic proceedings of the poor dupes of the informer Powell. The fate of Smith O'Brien and his colleagues, whatever it may be, will naturally excite more interest. The friends of Smith O'Brien seem to rely upon a Writ of Error to save him from the consequences of his acts; but while the trial is still pending, and his life may be said to hang in the balance, it is obviously the part of the Press to abstain from speculations either as to the probable result of the trial, or as to the probable sentence, should he be found guilty. Ireland remains perfectly tranquil, and not little concern for her welfare has been manifested so much concern—erroneous as it was—for the supposed welfare of his countrymen. Smith O'Brien was evidently as ignorant of the Irish as the English are said to be; and the secret of leading them seems to have died with O'Connell.

THE Overland Mail, with letters and papers from India to the 31st of August, brings details of the position of the gallant Major Edwardes before Mooltan, which will be read with much interest throughout the country. It appears that, in the first instance, the Bombay Government failed to send in time the reinforcements needed. It has since countermanded those that were on their way, either on the ground that they would not be required at all, or that they would arrive too late. Major Edwardes has been joined by a native ally, Shere Singh, at the head of a considerable force. This alliance, however, if the suspicions of the British have any foundation at all, is not likely to prove of much advantage to our arms, or to the character of our new friend, whose treachery is more than hinted at in the Indian journals. The delay in reinforcing Major Edwardes, which is chargeable either upon the Bombay Government or upon the Commander-in-Chief, perhaps upon both, has, it appears, impressed the insurgents of another portion of the Punjaub with an idea of British weakness, of which it behoved them to take advantage. The Sikh troops in the mountainous districts of the Hazerah, a province of the Punjaub, have revolted in consequence, and murdered Colonel Canara, a European officer in the Sikh service, whose fidelity they distrusted. The instigator of this revolt was the Sikh Governor, father of Shere Singh. The alliance of the latter with the British, under Major Edwardes, thus becomes additionally suspicious.

This mail also brings intelligence that the disturbances at Candy, in the island of Ceylon, have been suppressed without difficulty, and that there was considerable exaggeration in the first accounts that reached this country.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

INAUGURATION OF THE NEW SHERIFFS.

On Saturday last the annual ceremony of swearing in the Sheriffs for the ensuing year took place at the Court of Exchequer.

Shortly after 2 o'clock, the civic cortège, consisting of the Lord Mayor, the Recorder, the new and out-going Sheriffs, and other functionaries of the Corporation, arrived at the landing place at Westminster-bridge in the City barge, and walked in procession to the Court, where they were received by the Cursitor Baron, and the inauguration was proceeded with

The Recorder, in introducing the new Sheriffs, said he had to present to the Court Thomas Quested Finnis and Jacob Emanuel Goodhart, Esqrs., the two gentlemen who had been elected by the citizens of London to fill the office of Sheriffs of that city and Middlesex for the ensuing year. The united efforts of both gentlemen would be directed to the efficient discharge of their public duty, and if they wanted any incentive to such a course, it would be found in the example of their predecessors, who had conducted it in such a manner, during their year of office, as to obtain for themselves an unanimous vote of thanks from the Livery of London.

The Cursitor Baron, in expressing the concurrence of the Crown and the Court in the choice of the citizens of London, congratulated them on the tranquillity which their city had exhibited when the rest of Europe was convulsed, a fact which proved the excellence of their municipal and other national institutions. His Lordship concluded by complimenting the out-going Sheriffs on their conduct during their year of office.

The usual formalities having been gone through, the civic functionaries retired as they had entered, in procession.

In the evening the new Sheriffs entertained a distinguished party of upwards of 200 gentlemen at dinner, at the London Tavern; the Right Hon. the Lord Mayor presiding.

THE REGISTRATIONS

CITY OF LONDON.—On Saturday last the revision of the register of voters for the city of London was concluded by Mr. M'Christie, the lists that were disposed of on that day being those of Langbourne and Lime-street, Portsoken, and the Tower. The following is the final result of the revision, which, it will be seen, is greatly in favour of the Liberal party:—Liberal claims allowed, 65; disallowed, 88. Conservative claims allowed, 5; none disallowed. Liberal objections sustained, 486; failed, 103. Conservative objections sustained, 1; failed, 1436. Expunged by the barrister, 88.

MARYLEBONE.—F. Bayley, Esq., the barrister, completed the revision of the lists for this borough on Saturday last. The proceedings were confined to the correction of the register by the removal of the names of dead or disqualified persons, and the insertion of those of a few claimants. There was no opposition, and no question of the slightest interest arose. The total number of objections sustained during the whole revision was about 230. Several objections failed for want of sufficient proof of service of notice.

FINSBURY.—The revision of the list for this borough took place on Monday, at the sessions-house, Newington Causeway, before Serjeant Bodkin, Esq., the revising barrister for the district. There were no political agents present, nor did anything of the slightest interest occur. With the exception of the overseers and a few others whose official duties required their attendance, the court was empty Twenty one claims were made by the overseers, of which fifteen were allowed and six disallowed. Some names were then struck off, on account of death or change of residence, and the proceedings terminated.

TOWER HAMLETS.—Mr. F. Bayley, the revising barrister for this district, took his seat in the court-house, in Wellclose-square, on Monday, at 11 o'clock. Although the number of parishes in this district is very considerable, the time occupied in revising the lists is by no means so. Out of 20 or 22 parishes there were only 30 claims, of which 24 were allowed, and 6 disallowed, in consequence of the non-appearance of the claimants. The whole of the business was concluded by 4 o'clock.

PUBLIC MEETINGS

LONDON, BRIGHTON, AND SOUTH COAST RAILWAY.—A special meeting of this Company was held on Thursday, at the London-bridge Hotel, for the purpose of affixing the seal of the Company to the arrangements that had been entered into by the Directors with the South-Western Company. Mr. Lang, having taken the chair, proposed a resolution, to the effect that the arrangement should be carried out, which, after a short discussion, was unanimously accepted. It was also decided to reduce the number of Directors from fifteen to nine, to be chosen by ballot by the present Directors themselves.

ROYAL MASONIC INSTITUTION FOR BOYS.—On Monday evening a quarterly meeting of the governors of this charitable institution was held at the offices of the society, No. 7, Bloomsbury-place. Mr. A. U. Thiselton, the secretary, read a report, which stated that at the time of the foundation of the institution twenty-five children were elected. The present patronage, however, which it had received, had rendered it possible to extend that number to seventy; but notwithstanding that increase, the funded property of the society amounted at the present time to no less than £10,000. There were also means to provide for many more children than there were at this moment upon the funds, for the candidates for admission were so few, that the society was funding a considerable sum annually. The number of boys who had been admitted and educated up to this period amounted to about 700. Some business of a merely routine character followed, and the meeting separated.

EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE.—This religious association, which has been formed for the purpose of uniting all sects of Evangelical Protestants in one bond of union, held the first meeting of its October conference at the Freemasons' Hall, on Wednesday morning. The proceedings were of a preliminary character. Sir C. E. Smith having been called to the chair, alluded to the communions which had been recently and were still going on in various parts of the world, and the consequence of which was to bring them all for the presence of many of their Continental friends who had been present at previous conferences. The meeting then proceeded to the appointment of sections to consider and report on the subjects of infidelity, Popery, Puseyism, France, Italy, and Switzerland. After a long and desultory discussion the appointments on the three first were perfected, and the remainder were postponed. One or two business committees were then appointed, and the meeting adjourned.

ROMAN CATHOLIC ENDOWMENT.—On Wednesday night a numerous meeting of persons opposed to the endowment of the Roman Catholic religion and religious establishments generally was held at the Crown and Anchor Tavern, Strand, Mr. Wakeley acted as the chairman, and explained the objects of the meeting. Mr. Burnet then moved a resolution to oppose any grant or form of pension, but to grant equal protection of all religions. Such protection he contended was all that was necessary for the Roman Catholic religion, and all that justice demanded. The Rev. J. Gordon proposed the following resolution:—

"That this meeting, having the profoundest conviction of the evils resulting from legislation by the civil government in matters of religion, regards in the evident tendency of public events both in this country and the Continent to hasten the downfall of ecclesiastical establishments." Having first addressed himself to the religious aspect of the question, the speaker censured at some length the conduct of the Government in the matter, and stated his belief that the endowment of a second Church in Ireland would not add to the peace of that country.—The Rev. Dr. Massy seconded the resolution, which was unanimously carried.

The Rev. J. Burnet moved a resolution pledging the meeting to oppose the endowment of the Roman Catholic priesthood. That they regarded such a proposition as an attempt to perpetuate the existence of the system by the creation of a new ecclesiastical establishment in Ireland, and as most important step towards the adoption of the pernicious principle of paying the teachers of the various religious creeds. That such demanded by the people of Ireland, and that they looked upon it with well-merited suspicion; that, in place of doing justice to Ireland, it would throw a veil over all the wrongs, and prolong the ascendancy of a system under which those neglect of duty the present miseries of Ireland might be mainly traced. The Rev. A. Hall seconded the resolution, which was carried. A vote of thanks was passed to the Chairman, and the meeting separated.

METROPOLITAN EARLY CLOSING MOVEMENT.—On Tuesday evening a numerously attended meeting of the friends and supporters of the early closing movement, in connection with the wholesale trade, was held at the Hall of Commerce. The chairman (G. Moffatt, M.P.), in opening the business of the evening, said that the subject on which they had met together scarcely admitted of two opinions. What was sought for by those who promoted this movement was only asked under the belief that the concession of their demand would be attended with no disadvantage to those by whom they were employed, but rather with positive advantages. He was able to say from his own experience that the business of his own establishment was more satisfactorily performed since the system of early closing was adopted. When the hour of closing was fixed at 7 o'clock the business was better done than when the hour was 8 o'clock; and now that it was fixed at 6 o'clock it was still more satisfactorily executed. He knew of no class of persons that better deserved this concession than the persons whom he was addressing. The business hours had been abridged in the bankers' establishments with the best results; and he knew of no reason why there should not be similar results in the trade with which most of them were connected. It might be said that by closing their establishments an hour earlier, they would only give more time to the young men to spend idly, if not worse. The experience in those establishments which had adopted the principle showed the groundlessness of this objection. The secretary then read a memorial to the heads of the several establishments connected with the wholesale grocery, coffee, tea, and spice trades, respectfully requesting them to close their establishments at six o'clock. Mr. Wilson proposed, and Mr. Bishop seconded, a resolution approving of the memorial, which was unanimously adopted. It was announced amidst loud cheers that the houses of Messrs. Thomas Travers and Sons, Abraham Crocker, Cock, Scarth, and Co., and Conway and Co. had assented to the closing of their establishments at six o'clock. Thanks were voted to the chairman, and the meeting separated.

ADOPTION OF THE NUISANCES REMOVAL ACT IN THE ARMS OF ST. PANCRAS.—On Wednesday, at a meeting of the vestry of the above parish, held at the new Vestry-rooms, King's-road, Camden-town, for despatch of business, the following resolution was carried:—"That a committee be appointed forthwith to inquire into the powers given to parochial authorities under the Nuisances Removal Act, and to report the same to the vestry, that immediate steps may be taken for the removal of nuisances, and improving the sanitary condition of such parts of the parish which require attention."

BIRTHS, DEATHS, &c., FOR THE WEEK ENDING SEPTEMBER 30. During the above week the number of births registered in the metropolitan and suburban districts was 1227, of which 590 were males and 637 females. This number exceeds by 23 that of the births of the week immediately preceding. The number of deaths during the above week was 1257, of which 669 were males and 588 females, being 30 more than the births and 285 more than the average of deaths per week during the last five summers.

MARCH OF TROOPS IN INDIA.

MARCH OF TROOPS IN INDIA.

(To the Engraving.)

When we read in history of heroes and their myriads of troops, and

THE WEATHER.

MUSIC.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY

THE THEATRES

PRINCESS'

COVENT GARDEN THEATRE

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES.

CHESS IN INDIA.

POSTSCRIPT.

THE IRISH STATE TRIALS

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS

MARCH BY CORRESPONDENCE.

CHESS IN INDIA.

EPITOME OF NEWS, FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT.

THE CHARTIST TRIALS.

On Saturday last, the proceedings in the prosecution and defence in these protracted trials having been brought to a close on the previous evening, Mr. Baron Platt de yered his charge to the Jury, in the course of which his lordship having read to the jury the third section of the Crown and Government Security Bill, had the prisoners were charged in the indictment, which covered several counts, with conspired to levy war against the Sovereign of these realms. The first of these counts charged them with intending, designing, and combining to levy war against the Queen; and if from the evidence it appeared that the designs of the prisoners were directed more against the Government than the Queen, that made no difference at all, for the intention of levying war against the Government, to compel them to depart from the course they were taking and change their measures, was, in fact, a levying war against the whole State. The second count charged the prisoners with conspiring to resist the police, the soldiers, and the power of the authorities. The third count charged them with intending to burn and destroy police stations, railway stations, and other public buildings; and the fourth count, that they had enrolled themselves as members of certain illegal and secret societies, corresponding with each other, contrary to the law. Such was the charge upon which the three persons were placed at the bar—such was the intention imputed to them; and, as regarded the evidence, if the Jury considered even one overt act fairly and fully proved, that was sufficient to show that If the evidence satisfied the Jury that such was their intention in becoming members of those societies and that, in providing themselves with arms, the object of these men was to assist in the dismemberment of the empire, to destroy the constitutional institutions of the country, or to sever the union existing between this country and Ireland, that amounted to an intention, in the words of the Act, to depose the Queen from the style, title, and Royal dignity of the Imperial Crown, and the first count was made out. It had been said that this was high treason, but with that the Jury had nothing whatever to do. It was an offence against a modern Act of Parliament, and would be dealt with as such, though it would be much better if in modern Acts of Parliament modern language was used instead of the antique language of older statutes The learned Judge went on to say that there was a wide difference between a body of men collecting and proceeding to burn down a manufactory to gratify private revenge for some supposed offence, and attempting to bring force in opposition to the Government. The one fell far short of the other, which was, in fact, an attempt to excite a hostile insurrection against the authorities, and that amounted to a levying of war against the Queen. In reference to the evidence of Powell, the learned Judge said that it would be the duty of the Jury to watch with great suspicion the testimony of an accomplice given under circumstances such as that, and he could easily have been produced to contradict on his oath the statement of Powell It was for them to say whether there were not very material facts in support of the charge, and to consider whether they satisfied them, in connexion with the direct testimony of the accomplice, of the guilt of either or all the prisoners. No man ought to be convicted unless the Jury were perfectly satisfied of his guilt; but, on the other hand, if the evidence did satisfy them of that fact, they ought not to pause in performing their duty to their country, by declaring so by their verdict

The Jury retired at five minutes to four o'clock, and at five minutes to five they again came into court, and the prisoners Fay and Ferrand were placed at the bar. The foreman then gave a verdict of "Guilty" against all the prisoners upon the whole charge.—The prisoners did not appear at all surprised at the verdict, and did not manifest the least emotion.

Baron Platt then ordered Dowling, who was convicted on Monday, to be sent for, and he was placed by the side of the other prisoners.

Each of the prisoners having made some observations relative to their intention[illegible] William Dowling, William Lacey, Thomas Fay, and William Cuffey, you have been tried by two juries of your country—you, William Dowling, by one, and the other prisoners by another; and they have arrived at the only condition that could be come to by twelve upright and reasonable gentlemen upon the evidence that had been adduced before them that you were guilty of the offences with which you were charged. There can be no doubt—it is quite clear —that you intended to levy war against the Queen, to compel her, by force and threats, to alter her counsels, and, with regard to you, William Dowling, it is evident that your object in joining with the others was to dismember the empire and separate Ireland by force and arms from this country. What right had you to call upon your understanding against the experience of mankind as the result of ancient wisdom? You have chosen to call that which the Constitution of this country has branded as felony, patriotism. Was it patriotism for a number of people to conspire in secret and endeavour to accomplish the misery, wretchedness, and spoil, projected by them, at their meeting on the 22nd of August? Could it be said that divesting a peaceful city to flames, destroying innocent citizens, taking possession of the Government, and shedding bloodshed, was patriotism? That the law said that such acts were acts of felony: the ordinary mind had no more than that they were so. It is lamentable to think that persons of education, apparently possessing feelings of manliness and independence, should have lent themselves to such proceedings with such a fatal result. The Jury have found that you were guilty of the crime laid to your charge, and no one who has heard the evidence can doubt, after the proceedings at the meeting on the 15th of August, that you intended, on the following day, when the shades of night descended upon this unfortunate metropolis, to set a scene of murder, firing, and robbery and bloodshed afloat in unhappy city, and that you intended to have assumed the government of the country, and have exercised it as you pleased. You have been convicted of this most daring defiance of the law, and the Court would not be doing its duty either to its law or to the country, if, when such an offence was clearly established, it did not make a most severe example of all those who were brought within the pale of the law. I therefore feel it my duty to order that you be severally transported beyond the seas, to such place as her Majesty by the advice of her Privy Council shall direct and appoint, for the term of your natural lives.

The Court then adjourned until Monday morning at ten o'clock.

On Monday, John Shaw, the person who was convicted in the early part of the session of sedition, was sentenced to be imprisoned for two years, to pay a fine of £50, and to enter into recognisances, himself in £100, with two sureties in £50 each, to keep the peace for five years, and, as in the other cases, to be further imprisoned until the fine was paid and the sureties entered into.

J. Ritchie, J. Sheppard, W. Garney, J. Richardson, Alfred Abel, G. Greenslade, W. Horn. Henry Small, Henry Argue, Charles Young, T. Jones, P. Marten, E. Scadding, and J. Sworbuk, indicted for being in a conspiracy to levy war against the Queen, were then brought to the bar.

Mr Ballantine had a consultation with Ritchie, whom he appeared to defend, in which he urgently recommended him to plead guilty; and although Argue pleaded guilty, and Sheppard, Richardson, Greenslade, Burn, and Small, not guilty.

The Attorney-General said that, with regard to the five prisoners who had pleaded not guilty, he should not press the case against them, further than requiring them to be bound in their own recognisances to appear and stand their trial if they were called upon to do so. With regard to Greenslade and Burn, he might say that, immediately they were taken, they gave full information of everything they had to do in the matter to Government. The prisoner Small, it appeared, had also gone to the house where he was apprehended, under the impression that he was to hear a lecture, and, he believed, was not aware of what was going on.

Mr. Parry begged to be allowed to explain, on behalf of Burn and Greenslade, that the information alluded to by the Attorney-General was only in relation to their own movements. With regard to the alleged conspiracy, they had always denied all knowledge of it.

The Attorney-General said that was the case, and was what he intended to state.

Mr. Parry: They have always strongly denied having anything to do with the proceedings of the conspiracy.

The prisoners were then taken from the bar: and Charles Taylor, W. Poole, George Cox, T. Herbert, W. Winspere, Charles Gibbs, Thomas Irons, James Provan, Alexander Hardy, Samuel Morgan, Alexander Hardy, and R. Hardy, were placed at the bar, on a like indictment. Of these prisoners, Poole, Herbert, Winspere, Irons, Provan, Conway, Morgan, Young, Jones, Argue, Poole, Herbert, and Irons, who had pleaded guilty to the indictment for misdemeanour, were, with the exception of the three last-named, condemned to be imprisoned and kept to hard labour for two years, and in addition to pay a fine of £10 to the Queen, and to enter into their own recognisance in the sum of £40, with two sureties in £20 each, to keep the peace for five years, and to be further imprisoned until the fines were paid and the sureties entered into. The prisoners Poole, Herbert, and Irons were sentenced to 18 months' imprisonment, with the same fines and sureties.

Sheppard, Richardson, Greenslade, Burn, Taylor, Cox, Gibbs, Alexander and Samuel Harby, Wilson, and Small, were then brought up, and having entered into their own recognisance in the sum of £50, to appear and take their trials if called upon to do so, they were discharged from custody.

The whole of the business being thus concluded, the Court adjourned to Monday, October 23.

IRELAND.

MORE ARRESTS.—Mr. Robin Lambkin, a town-councillor of the borough, was arrested in Cork on Friday week, under the act for the suspension of the Habeas Corpus Act. This gentleman fled from Cork a few months since, and proceeded to Boulogne, where he remained for some time; but supposing that all danger was over, he recently returned home. He was walking with his wife and child on Patrick's Bridge, when the arrest took place; he was president of one of the Confederate Clubs in Cork. He is now in the same prison (in Cork) with M. Denny Lane and the Messrs. Varian. Mr. Barry, editor of the Cork Reporter, is confined in the county gaol. Three sympathisers from America (natives of Ireland) have been, with some other parties, been arrested.

THE ESCAPE OF MR. DOHENY.—The correspondent of the Freeman at Clonmel gives the following particulars of the escape of Mr Doheny, notwithstanding which many persons say he is yet in Ireland:—"Letters have been received from this gentl man, announcing his safe arrival in France, and giving some of the particulars of the latter part of his sojourn in this country, which, were it not that our informant does not feel himself at liberty to communicate them at length, would possess much interest. We have, however, learned that the last fortnight which Mr. Doheny spent in Ireland was passed in the West Riding of the county of Cork, in the district extending between Macroom, Gougane, Barra, and Dunmanway, and occasionally further westward. The disguise he wore was the ordinary dress of a peasant of the humblest class, with his whiskers shaved off, and his hair cut close. On one occasion, when the police were fairly on his track, and had made a very close search for him, he was enjoying a good supper in the house of a poor man not twenty yards from where the pursuers were consulting as to what direction they should try next. Having finished his meal, he got a glass of punch, and retired to rest. Next day he removed to another part of the country, distant about 24 miles. Here he made himself known to a person, who supplied him with a change of linen, and offered him money, which, however, he declined, stating he did not require it, and in a day or two after he proceeded to the city of Cork as a common carman, passing along the high road seated on the shafts of his car, with the rein cords and whip in his hand, no one in his company, and only a piece of old sailcloth or canvas on the cart, as it to cover the goods he was going to fetch. In this manner he passed numerous police stations along the road, without attracting the least notice from the green coated gentry who occupied them, and arrived in Cork late in the evening, and put up his horse and cart at a stage where some other person took charge of them. Next day he asked as an ordinary deck passenger in the steamer for London, from whence, after remaining to some Irish people who formerly lived in Cashel, for shelter, receiving it for one night, he started on his way to Boulogne. Here he was recognised by Mr. O'Dwyer, barrister, but his recognition was not such as to [illegible] him. A few days afterwards he proceeded to Paris, from which place his last letters to Ireland were dated."

THE STATE TRIALS.

On Thursday se'nnight the trial of Mr. Smith O'Brien, M.P., for High Treason, was opened at Clonmel, before Lord Chief Justice Blackburne and Chief Justice Moore.

The Judges took their seats at eleven o'clock; and within a few minutes every part of the court was filled. The Countess of Donoughmore sat in the Sheriffs' box, near the Judges; Lady Osborne and several other ladies were in the Sheriffs' gallery; but neither Lady O'Brien nor Mrs O'Brien was present.

Sir Lucius O'Brien and the Rev. Edward O'Brien (brothers of the prisoner), Lord Hawarden, and Lord Dudley Stuart, and also Mr. Sergeant Sinnot, the Englishman, were in the body of the court. General M'Donald was in the Sheriffs' gallery.

The Attorney-General, the Solicitor General, Mr Scott, Q.C., Mr. Sausse, and Mr. Lynch, were the counsel for the Crown; Mr. Whiteside, Q.C., and Mr. Macnaghten, Q.C., appeared for the prisoner.

Before Mr. O'Brien was called upon to plead, the prisoners Tyne, Orchard, and O'Donnell, were brought up, and Mr. O'Callaghan was assigned as counsel for each of them. Upon their retiring, Mr. O'Brien came to the front of the dock, and stood for some minutes leaning against the rail. He was then accommodated with a seat. He was perfectly composed, and nodded familiarly to Dr. Gray, who was near the dock.

The entire day, up to seven o'clock in the evening, when the Court rose, was consumed in disposing of technical objections raised by the prisoner's counsel relative to mere matters as the prisoner's right to a copy of the Jury panel and a list of the witnesses against him, and the postponement of the trial until the 10th had obtained both. Those objections were overruled. Then, on the reception of a plea put in by the prisoner, three persons were appointed to inquire whether the Jurors' book, if book there were, and not been framed in compliance with the statutable enactments; and, in the next place, whether the panel was fairly and impartially arrayed between the Crown and the prisoner. On the first point, they found a verdict in the affirmative; and on the second, respecting which it was alleged on the part of the prisoner that in all former panels, for the last three years, two-thirds had been invariably Protestants, and one third Roman Catholics, and that that was considered a satisfactory proportion; but, in the present panel, out of 288 names, 1 18th only consisted of Roman Catholics, and 170 of Protestants. [illegible] were objected to at the last commission, by the Lord Chief Justice, for the just performance of their duty, were purposely struck off to save the Attorney-General the pain of telling them to stand by, as they came to the top of the case to be sworn. The jurors declared their verdict in favour of the Sheriffs' panel, as being an impartial one.

On Friday, after some challenges on the part of the prisoner were allowed, the [illegible] Hodges then withdrew, it being arranged that his son and a gentleman named M'Dermot (both of whom are also witnesses for the Crown) should remain for the purpose of reporting the proceedings in this trial.

The Jury, the junior counsel for the Crown, opened the pleadings. The prisoner, he said, was charged with high treason. The indictment contained six counts: the first five charged the prisoner with raising and levying war against the Queen; the sixth charged him with a conspiracy to bring and put to death the Queen. The first count found that the prisoner and others met on the [illegible] day of July of this year, and on divers other days between the 15th and the 30th, at Ballingarry, traitorously levy and make war against the Queen; and, further, that on that occasion they marched through divers towns, villages, and lands, and erected certain obstructions to prevent the march of her Majesty's forces; that they assaulted a number of constables, made a warlike attack at Ballingarry, and fired on a large body of constables there assembled. The second count charged a similar offence at Mullinahone on the 26th of July; the third a similar offence at Killenaule on the 28th of July; the fourth a similar offence at Farrihory on the 29th of July; and the fifth was a general count of assembling in arms; the sixth count charged the prisoner with compassing the death of the Queen, and laid down seven overt acts unnecessary to be stated as evidence of that conspiracy.

The Attorney-General then addressed the Jury, detailing the proceedings of the Irish Confederation previous to the late outbreak, and narrating all the leading features of that unfortunate affair, long since familiar to the public.

Mr. Hodges, the Government reporter, was then examined to prove the delivery of certain speeches on various occasions by Mr. O'Brien.

General M'Donald examined.—Was in command in a part of Tipperary at the time of the insurrection, and at the beginning of last August saw Mr. O'Brien after his arrest at Thurles. It was about nine o'clock. [Identified him.] Saw Mr. O'Brien give up a number of papers, keys, and a quantity of other articles; took a handkerchief in which Mr. O'Brien had deposited those articles, and put them in a despatch-box, which he delivered to Captain Inman, 51st Regiment, acting for Government. They were put under cover and were sent with the keys. Had never seen them since. [Identified the documents produced as those found on Mr. O'Brien.]

Cross-examined.—There were a great number of soldiers present in Thurles. Mr. O'Brien had just £10 16s. 2d. on his person when he was captured.

The General then withdrew, and the Court adjourned at [illegible] quarter past six on Saturday morning, at ten o'clock, the trial was resumed. The following witnesses were examined for the prosecution Captain Inman, 51st Regiment, who was entrusted, by General M'Donald, with the packet of letters found on Mr. Smith O'Brien after his arrest at Thurles; Mr. Gore Jones, the subsidiary magistrate; Sub-Inspector Cox; Constable Mulroone; Mr. T. Burke, an extra clerk in Mr. Redington's office, who deposed to having received the letters found in Mr. O'Brien's portmanteau; Mr. Allison, Deputy-Governor of Kilmainham Gaol: Mr. W. O'Hara who identified a letter as being in the handwriting of Mr. O'Brien; Mr. Franklin, moneyer of the Provincial Bank of Limerick, Mary Anne Kenny, sister-in-law of Mr. Halpin, late Secretary to the Irish Confederation; James Stephenson Dobbin, an ill-favoured fellow, formerly a member of the Richmond O'Neil Club, who underwent a long and searching cross-examination by the counsel for the prisoner; Mr. Blake, county inspector of constabulary, and several other witnesses whose testimony was comparatively unimportant. The Jury were then locked up for the night, and the Court adjourned till Monday morning.

On Monday several witnesses were, in the first instance, examined with respect to the proceedings at Killenaule, Mullinahone, and Ballingarry, on the days preceding the transactions at the Widow Cormack's house. Some of the persons examined were inhabitants of those places; and with a few exceptions this class of witnesses indicated by their manner that the business in which they were engaged on the present occasion was not exactly suited to their inclinations. Some of them declared their inability to identify Mr. O'Brien, and two men purposely declined to be sworn in order to give evidence. They were committed for their contumacy. Some persons connected with the constables were next examined; and at six o'clock, on the application of Mr. O'Brien, the Court adjourned to the following morning.

TUESDAY.—The remaining evidence on the part of the Crown was adduced today, and the case for the prosecution was brought to a close. The greatest interest was excited in the proceedings; and from the commencement to the end the Court was densely crowded.

Mr. O'Brien's appearance was in general composed, but towards the latter part of the day he was more anxious than he had previously appeared during the trial.

Among the evidence adduced was that of Inspector Trant. He made his appearance on the table in his uniform. He is a gray-haired, elderly man, with a bold, determined look and bearing, which was also given with rapidity and clearness, was listened to with the most marked attention by the bar and audience. Having been sworn, he made the following statement, in reply to the questions of Mr. Jonathan Sullivan, sub-inspector of police for the county of Kilkenny. Last July I was stationed at the town of Callan. I remember proceeding on the 29th of July to Ballingarry, having got orders from the constabulary authorities to that effect. I was told to be cautious to give you. Mr Trant be good enough not to say one word of the orders given to you by other people. This will save trouble.

The witness continued:—I left Callan on Saturday, July 29th, between 9 and 10 o'clock, and arrived near to Ballingarry some time close to 1 o'clock. The party under my command consisted of 46 men. After I had passed through the village of Ballingarry I observed a great crowd of people following me along the road and going along the fields on the left of my party. When I had advanced about two miles beyond Ballingarry, towards the Commons, I observed a crowd coming to my front coming down a hill. [illegible] heard shrill whistling among them. There was a road to my right then, which, to my inquiry, I found led to Kilkenny. When I saw the crowds I immediately wheeled my party up in the direction towards my right. We marched [illegible] a mile. The people behind us, from Ballingarry, took the county on the right; those who had been going in the fields parallel to us took to our rear; and those on the Common came down on our left, so that we were surrounded. I perceived that several of the people had pikes and guns, but I could not form an idea of their numbers. It would be impossible to count those who had guns and pikes on the road. I halted my party, dismounted, and I perceived people with them. About this time I observed a select house in advance; and on seeing it I ordered my men, who had been marching in columns of four, to break and take possession of it, and, if refused admission, to march into it. My men ran for the house, and I followed them. As my men were getting to it, I had an opportunity of observing the people; they were surrounding us. Just as I gave the order to break, a shot was fired on my left from the crowd. I looked round and saw the man who fired (the smoke lying about him at the time), about eighty or a hundred yards on my left. The crowd were then behind, at each side of us, and following in our rear. Most of them were running as my men advanced, and in two or three minutes more they would have come out in front of the house. The people made all the haste they could to do so, but my men got into the house. When I arrived there, I was last, the men having got in before me, and I immediately turned my horse round by the middle of the house. I then directed the men to turn all the things they could get against the window and door to secure the doors. While in the act of securing the house, it was surrounded by the people. I was proceeding upstairs in order to see what arrangements they were making, to strengthen the upper rooms, when I heard a noise from the rear call for the officer. I went to the lobby window to the man who wanted me. He was unarmed. He put up his hands and said to me, "For God's sake, let there be no firing. We want to make peace." I replied, "If the people do not fire, we shall not fire; but, if a shot is fired from the outside, we shall fire as long as a cartridge or a man remains." Nothing further was said by the man outside. The voice to which I allude said, "Tell Mr. Trant, Mr. O'Brien is here." It was called to me by one of my own party. I came down and went to the window, when I was informed Mr. O'Brien had been, but he had disappeared. I went back up-stairs again, and was again called to that Mr. O'Brien was there and wished to see me; I replied, "If so, let him come round to the window." He would not do so. Immediately after that I heard a crash of stones and shots from without. The window was smashed. I instantly gave the order to fire, and the firing commenced. It continued about an hour from the time the first shot was fired. The firing was going on for a considerable time.

Lord Chief Justice Doherty: Were there many persons about the house?—I should say that upon nearing the house they were about 65 to 1; or about 3000.

Mr. M Moore: Were you able to form any opinion as to the quantity of arms?

Witness: My eye rested I saw armed men approaching the house, but I could not form any opinion as to the quantity.

Examination continued: They had possession of the out-offices, and I heard a double-barrelled gun fired. I could hear the double barrels go; the shots passed through the lobby window, raking the stairs and passing through the front window. I heard throughout shots from the outside as well as from within, the whole time the firing was going on, except towards the latter part. I did not hear any outside for five minutes before our last shots were fired. After the stones were thrown I heard shots.

Lord Chief Justice Doherty: Can you form any estimate of the number of shots fired outside?—I could not. I heard shots outside at, though, as well as from within.

Lord Chief Justice Blackburne: Was the firing continuous and uninterrupted? It was continuous for about a quarter of an hour. For a third of the time it was very brisk.

Lord Chief Justice Doherty: Do you say there were 5 shots or 50 outside?—I should suppose more than 200 from without. I should suppose so, but I cannot speak with any certainty.

Mr Justice Moore: Could you state the number of reports outside?—It is perfectly impossible.

Mr. Hodges: Should estimate to say it did not exceed 30?—It exceeded 100, and I should say 200; but I cannot say with certainty, for I was in front of the house, and the shots were going on in the flank as well as in front.

Examination continued.—After I saw Carroll I directed the house to be fortified. Carroll had been despatched with a letter from Ballingry, and arrived after the firing had ceased

A Juryman: How many shots were fired by in part, and how many rounds to replace those that were fired.

Examination continued.—After fortifying the house I remained in the house two hours. About two hours and a quarter after the firing had ceased, Sub-Inspector Cox and his party arrived from Cashel. It was then about a quarter past 3 o'clock. I saw three or four men approaching as I looked through the loophole at the back, and I fired a single shot.

LARGE SPOT ON THE SUN.

THE accompanying figure represents a very large spot recently upon the sun. The drawing was made on the 30th September, when the spot was nearly in the centre of the sun's disc. Each division of the lower accompanying scale corresponds to 1000 miles; and the sun's radius drawn to the same scale would be 104 inches. The breadth of the spot is about 60,000 miles, and its whole surface about sixteen times the size of the earth.

The spot has been distinctly visible to the eye, defended by a smoked or coloured glass, without the assistance of a telescope. It is the largest spot which has been observed for some years.

[This spot was watched whilst it passed across the sun's disc, it disappeared at the western edge of the sun some days since.—EDITOR.]

SIR JAMES ROSS'S EXPEDITION.—The latest dates from the expedition of Captain Sir J. Ross, in the Enterprise, with the Investigator, Capt. Bird, were from Whale Island, and came down to the 29th June. We have new landmarks from this expedition to the 12th of July, at which time the ships were at Uppermavick, Davis's Straits, up to which time nothing had been heard of Sir John Franklin and his gallant companions. They had not seen any pieces of wreck, nor, with the most diligent and indefatigable researches, had they been able to discover the slightest clue to the fate of those whom they are especially seeking after.

THE IRISH STATE TRIALS.

OPENING OF THE SPECIAL COMMISSION, AT CLONMEL.

ROOM TO WHICH THE JURY RETIRE.

A lengthened cross-examination by Mr. Whiteside elicited nothing of interest.

Thomas Moran, examined by the Attorney-General: Knew Smith O'Brien. Saw him in the enclosure at the Widow Cormick's. He was leaning with his back to the wall between the gable and the window at which the police were stationed. After that he came to the window, and said, "We are all Irishmen, boys. I am Smith O'Brien, and as good a soldier as any of you. He then demanded our arms. Witness was one of the men who said they would part with their lives before they gave up their arms. He seemed disappointed. He got off the window-sill, and witness heard him say, "Slash away, boys, and slaughter the whole of them."

Mr. O'Brien here exclaimed with abrupt vehemence—Don't you know you are swearing falsely when you swear that, sir?

Witness (turning round). No, I do not, sir.

Examination continued: How far was the prisoner from you when he said hat.

Mr O'Brien. Turn round and let me see your face when you are swearing hat—

The Attorney-General (to the witness, who was about obeying the request). Do not stir—sit down in your place.

This brief incident created some sensation in the Court.

The witness, in continuation, stated, that immediately after these words were used he heard shouts from without. He could not tell how many. There were several attempts made to throw stones. The firing continued three-quarters of an hour. Saw a great number of people armed with guns. Did not see anyone in the act of firing at or towards the house. There were about 500 men, armed with pikes, guns, and pitchforks. About thirty or forty had guns. A shot was fired about ten minutes before the police entered the house. Saw O'Donohue there.

Cross-examined by Mr. Whiteside: The fact O'Donohue was there was as true as anything else he had stated; any one who swore the reverse swore falsely. Would not swear anything untrue. The words he attributed to Mr. O'Brien were used in his information sworn on the 6th of September. When the police left Callan they expected to meet more men at Ballingarry. The shot of which he spoke was fired when the police turned to the right. There was another shot fired from the people when the police were crossing the ditch. There were two shots fired. Did not know at whom they were fired, they did not hit any one. Saw several women and children with the people; the women were not making peace. Saw them gathering stones. Would shoot a woman if the firing was going on at the time. Did not know whether he would shoot a child or not. Would have shot women one after another if the firing was going on at the time. During the firing, Mr. Trant was up-stairs, but after it was over he came into the room several times. When Mr. O'Brien came to the window he dashed in the shutter, so that he was fully exposed, and if either party had fired at the time he must have been shot dead. He spoke civilly to the men. When refused the arms he [illegible] and slaughter them all." At that time there was a crowd of people around him, inside the wall, armed with blunderbusses. No shots were fired by the police at the time. Did not fire at Mr. O'Brien; if he had come before witness at the time he would have shot him. Mr. O'Brien stood with one foot on the window-sill at the time. Witness's bayonet was within six inches of O'Brien's heart. At that time would have shot a man six inches from him even if unarmed.

Mr. Whiteside: Why did you not shoot him?

Witness: Because I could not: because I did not hear him making use—(here the witness stopped and hesitated.)

Mr. Whiteside, who had just sat down, started up and said, "Oh! you were about saying you did not hear the words Mr. O'Brien used?"

Witness became embarrassed, rubbed his head, and after a pause said, "No, I was not about saying so."

To the Jury: Fired several times; fired at a man. Saw a man in the act of pelting stones, and fired at him. Had not time to fire at Mr. O'Brien, not though my bayonet was within six inches of his breast. Mr. O'Brien said the words in a loud voice. The other men might have heard them. Witness was nearest to the window."

The case for the prisoner's defence was opened on Wednesday.

THE ILLUSTRATIONS.

Our Artist, whom we dispatched to Clonmel, has sent us the accompanying view of the Opening of the Special Commission. The Court House is large, and was not crowded, owing to the public having to obtain entrance by cards from the High Sheriff, which, however, were liberally given. Immediately in front of the Bench is the Dock, in which Mr Smith O'Brien was seated, as shown in the sketch writing, or taking notes from time to time, which he handed to his counsel, Mr Whiteside, seated close beside him. Smith O'Brien seemed in nowise dejected, but rather the reverse. When suggesting to the Judges that they should take notes of points favourable to him, as well as against him, he showed the same quiet demeanour as usual.

The second Illustration shows the ill furnished room in which the Jury are locked up. This apartment adjoins the Grand Jury Room. Although it is as well catered for as "the Great Globe Hotel" can do, the Jury did not seem at all to relish their cheerless sleeping apartment. On our Artist's arrival having been mentioned to them, one of the Jurors suggested to him to make the Sketch.

MR. SMITH O'BRIEN, SKETCHED FROM THE REPORTERS' GALLERY.

The third Engraving shows Smith O'Brien as he stood in the dock, sketched from the Reporters' side of the Court.

James Whiteside, Esq., Q.C., the present able and energetic defending counse at the trial, is one of the many instances of men advancing in the law by their own unaided talent and perseverance. Mr. Whiteside was called to the Irish bar in 1830. His great qualifications as an advocate and cross-examining counsel brought him soon into notice on circuit, and he has since gradually risen into very extensive practice. His memorable defence o O'Connell in the State prosecutions made him a public man, and he now bids fair to take the highest legal rank and honours in the Irish forum. Mr. Whiteside has recently published a tour in Italy, the result of a journey he lately undertook to recruit his health. The work is written with ability, and evinces acute observation and research into the present and past condition of the country

MR. WHITESIDE, COUNSEL FOR MR. S. O'BRIEN.

THE QUEEN'S ARRIVAL FROM SCOTLAND.

On the afternoon of the 28th ult., the Queen and Prince Albert left Balmora for Aberdeen. Her Majesty and his Royal Highness were accompanied by the Prince of Wales, Prince Alfred, and the Princess Royal.

From the time of quitting their Highland residence, throughout the whole extent of the road to Aberdeen, the reception of the Queen by the inhabitants was of the most gratifying description. The smallest villages on the route exhibited some token of loyalty and welcome. Triumphal arches were erected in many places through which the Royal cavalcade passed, and the public generally testified their joy at the presence of the Sovereign by every means in their power.

The Lord Provost of Aberdeen had received official intimation from Sir G. Grey that it was her Majesty's intention to leave Balmoral on Thursday afternoon, and embark at Aberdeen in the Victoria and Albert in the evening. The city was accordingly early abroad in its holiday dress; and long before the time fixed for her Majesty's arrival the streets were thronged with pedestrians from the country. In the afternoon the whole line of Union-street was decorated with flags and evergreens; the Royal standard was hoisted on the barrisan of the Town-house, and the ships in the harbour were decked in their gayest colours; the triumphal arch was freshened up, and the immense amphitheatre in front of the landing-place was re-decorated with garlands of flowers and evergreens, interspersed with variegated lamps. Around the arch, in elegant devices, nearly 1000 variegated lamps were hung; and there was a display of coloured lamps from the masts and yards of the ships in the dock.

At about seven o'clock the city bells were set to ring, which was the signal of her Majesty's approach. On entering the city boundary, her Majesty was received by the Lord Provost and Magistrates, who, after a loyal salutation and a gracious welcome, proceeded on the line immediately before the Royal carriage. The Queen and Prince Albert, with the Princess Royal, the Prince of Wales, and Prince Alfred, occupied a close carriage, and were followed by the carriages of Sir G. Grey, and the members of her Majesty's suite. On arriving at the platform in the rear of the triumphal arch, her Majesty and Prince Albert were received by the Lord Provost and Magistrates, the members of Parliament for the city and county, the Earl of Aberdeen, Lord Lieutenant of the county, the Sheriff and Convenor of the county, and other official personages. A detachment of the 93d Highlanders lined the north side of the enclosed area at this platform, and both sides were guarded by special constables. The Queen was received on board the yacht by Lord Adolphus Fitzclarence, and embarked on board the Victoria and Albert amid the most rapturous applause. The Royal party dined on board the yacht.

The arrangements were for the squadron to leave Aberdeen harbour at two o'clock on Friday morning, but the night was pitchy dark, and a strong wind blew from the north-west. A consultation was held early on Friday between Captain Lord Adolphus Fitzclarence, Captain Cargill, and the pilots on board the various vessels, the result of which was the expression of an opinion that if the wind did not moderate at noon, it would not be altogether safe for her Majesty to attempt to leave the harbour. Accordingly, as the wind freshened up towards noon, her Majesty, at a quarter-past two on Friday afternoon, landed at Aberdeen, and proceeded to Perth by land, having arranged to pass the night at the George Hotel.

Her Majesty left Perth on Saturday morning, at half-past nine o'clock, and travelled by special train on the Scottish Central and Edinburgh and Glasgow railways to Edinburgh, and thence by the Caledonian and Lancaster and by the Carlisle to Crewe. A telegraphic message had preceded the Royal train, announcing its approach, with orders to the station-master to prepare for her Majesty's reception, and to communicate to the proprietor of the Royal Hotel at Crewe the Queen's intention of making that establishment her resting-place for the night, and at seven o'clock on Saturday evening the Royal train arrived at the station at Crewe; and her Majesty, with the Prince and the youthful members of the Royal family, alighted, and were conducted to the hotel

On Sunday morning her Majesty and suite left Crewe as early as six o'clock, and arrived at the Euston station at ten minutes past ten. Her Majesty and Prince Albert were received by the principal authorities of the North-Western Railway, and appeared in no degree fatigued by their rapid journey of five hundred miles.

The Illustration shows the Hotel at Perth. The authorities, we learn, were only apprised of her Majesty being expected about an hour or two before the Queen's arrival, so that there was little time for official arrangements. On her Majesty reaching the railway station, she waited with the greatest good-humour for nearly half-an-hour, until preparation was made for her conveyance to the hotel.

DEPARTURE OF THE COURT FOR THE ISLE OF WIGHT.

On Monday morning the Queen and Prince Albert left town for Osborne, Isle of Wight. her Majesty and his Royal Highness, accompanied by the Prince of Wales, Prince Alfred, and the Princess Royal, took their departure from Buckingham Palace at 20 minutes before 10 o'clock, in a carriage and four. The august party travelled to Gosport by the London and South-Western Railway, and arrived at Clarence-yard soon after 12 o'clock, where they were received by the naval and military Commanders-in-Chief, with their respective staffs, and a guard of honour, furnished by the Royal Marine Artillery. The shipping were dressed in colours, fired a Royal salute, and manned yards as her Majesty proceeded down the harbour in the Fairy. The garrison saluted as the Royal yacht passed the Platform battery, and the Powerful as she passed Spithead.

On Tuesday morning the Queen and his Royal Highness Prince Albert walked in the grounds and park at Osborne; and the younger branches of the Royal family and of their illustrious relations rode and drove as usual.

PERTH, FROM A RECENT SKETCH.

THE PROGRESS OF A BILL.

BY W. BLANCHARD JERROLD

ILLUSTRATED BY KENNY MEADOWS.

(Continued from page 205.)

CHAPTER V.

THE ACCEPTOR GETS OUT OF THE WAY.

HENRY PURSEY returned home on the evening of his interview with Macfum and Mr. Moss, with the consoling intelligence that he and his friend had arranged matters to their mutual satisfaction. In spite of Mrs. Pursey's affectionate assurance, that she could not believe anything he said now, Henry contrived to sleep that and six consecutive nights: on the seventh evening, however, he returned home in no enviable state of mind; and Mrs. Pursey was not long in discovering his anxiety. Whereupon he underwent a tedious cross-questioning upon the subject, which did not contribute to lighten his care. That evening he felt himself certainly not the "superior animal," for it was his duty to be the bearer of tidings of his own stupidity. He had that morning received the following letter from Macfum:—

"MY DEAR PURSEY,—I have sad news to communicate. I cannot get the second bill cashed, and Moss refuses to accept it as payment for the first, of course. What the deuce is to be done? The bill is due to-morrow (Saturday). You had better get out of the way for a few days, till I can arrange the matter. My dear boy, I am exceedingly grieved that you should be put to this inconvenience on my account. The world is coming to a pretty state of things, is it not? when a gentleman can't get a bill for a paltry hundred cashed. Upon my word, I am so tired of the rascalities and pettinesses of London, that I begin to have serious thoughts of putting a ring through my nose, eschewing paletots and trousers, being tattooed after an artistic design (as a parting lift to native talent), and settling upon the Orenoko with a few squaws and a calumet Joking aside, I would earnestly advise you, my dear fellow, to take a run out of town for a day or two; and, depend upon it, no exertion shall be wanting on my part to effect an arrangement with that old sinner, Moss.—Yours, as ever,

"JULIUS MACFUM.

"Tell your wife and family to be careful how they open the street-door, as one of Moss' men will be lurking about; and if he gets in, it will play the deuce with you.—J. M."

Pursey had certainly an humiliating part to perform in communicating the purport of this letter to his wife. He stammered terribly as he began his recital; that is to say, he hinted a point, then blundered round about his meaning; for he dreaded the sarcasms which the discovery of the result of his acceptance to the bill would provoke from his shrewd spouse. He still had faith in his friend's integrity; but he could not now deny that he had acted foolishly in risking the happiness of himself and family to oblige a man who was a comparative stranger to him.

"Now, Henry, I must insist upon knowing the reason of this gloom. A woman has a right to her husband's confidence." Mrs. Pursey was an earnest advocate of the rights of woman, and was so fearful of being looked upon as the slave o her husband, that she opposed his opinions at every opportunity, and vindicated the independence of her sex, at the expense of her happiness as a wife, At every turn the rights of woman were flung in Pursey's teeth; and at length he declared that in his opinion the rights of married women appeared to be the privilege of tormenting, and abusing, and setting at defiance the life, the principles, and the commands of their lords and masters; and he, moreover, showed his sense of the fallacy of his wife's doctrines, by making an organ-boy a present of three volumes of Mrs Ellis, which Mrs. Pursey had contrived to buy out of the housekeeping money. Mrs. Pursey declared that if it should be their misfortune to have a girl born to them, she would try and prevail upon the authoress of "The Women of England" to educate the little thing; Parsey, however, contented himself with this significant re,inder to his wife's declared determination—

PROGRESS OF A BILL.—THE ACCEPTOR GETS OUT OF THE WAY.

"Will you?" Everybody complimented Parsey upon his marriage with a strong minded woman; but I am sure if that self-congratulation was not the only result of his union with his wife. A woman who is ever intent upon maintaining her intellect against her husband's, is a wife whom few can covet, or, possessing, can long love.

"I leave town for a few days on Sunday," declared Parsey, with affected [illegible]

"[illegible] won't be home before Monday night," suggested the wife.

"I see what that has to do with my intention."

"Then my word, Henry, things have come to a delig' ful pass! I never, in the whole course of my life, heard of such behaviour. And where are you going, may I ask?"

"I've not made up my mind yet. I'm going on business."

"With Mr. Macfum, I suppose," suggested Mrs. Parsey, pointedly.

"On Mr. Macfum's business, as you guess," continued the husband, with assumed composure. "In short, that little affair between myself and Macfum has [illegible] assumed a most unfortunate complexion, and it is necessary for me [illegible] see what that has to do with my intention."

"Then my word, Henry, things have come to a delig' ful pass! I never, in the whole course of my life, heard of such behaviour. And where are you going, may I ask?"

"I've not made up my mind yet. I'm going on business."

"With Mr. Macfum, I suppose," suggested Mrs. Parsey, pointedly.

"On Mr. Macfum's business, as you guess," continued the husband, with assumed composure. "In short, that little affair between myself and Macfum has [illegible] assumed a most unfortunate complexion, and it is necessary for me to depart for a few days for the purpose of settling it."

"Very, I told you how it would be! You stupid, good-natured simpleton, to [illegible] some of these days by your provoking easiness." Pitying her husband's distress, the petty triumph of her premonitions was forgotten, and Mrs. Parsey actually gave vent to tears of sympathy. Here the woman and nature had their natural position, and the artificial state to which certain readers would have her gave way, and she appeared in the true and beautiful sphere of a woman's influence. "Will they put you in prison?"

"No, no; nonsense." And Parsey affected to laugh at the bare idea of such a contingency; though, to say truth, visions of an unpleasantly protracted game at racquet had crossed his mind more than once in the course of the day. "Macfum's strict sense of honour wi l not allow him to see me brought to rum, depend upon it, Mary."

"I've no such high notion of Mr. Macfum's honour. If he means well, why does he put you to the necessity of hiding away from your home?"

"It's only a matter of prudence."

"Yes, to keep you from the clutches of a Sheriff's officer, I suppose.'

"Everything will be arranged in a day or two, I tell you."

"And you really leave town to-morrow night, do you?"

"Certainly."

"A pretty prospect for me! Here am I to be left, with only one bit of a servant in the house, to watch the movements of two dirty fellows, who'll be skulking about day and night, and perhaps bribe Ann to let them in; and all because you choose to act like Harry-the-Ninth to your wife, and, if it had been a month or two later, your child, to the mercy of that Mr. Macfum, whom you met in some tavern, when you had both had more than was good for you. Upon my word, Henry, I haven't patience with you."

"It's no use croaking over a folly past, made by your ungenerous view of it almost a crime. I tell you I must leave town to-morrow afternoon, that there's no help for it, and that you must not tell anybody that I am gone, I tell you."

"Pretty goings on in a decent house! What will the Medhurs say? and I asked them to take tea with us on Tuesday."

"Then you must put them off or entertain them in "

"They are friends of my family, not of yours; recollect that. And if I smuggle them in as spy, my family is compromised, yours is not so put to rii

"Don't be" to me, 'out your family and friends—a set of nobodies"

"At the s ! on did this young couple discuss the impending [illegible] Mr. Parsey thro ' out the morning preceding her husband's departure indulged in alternate fits of nurv and grief. Now she vowed that her misbehaviour ought to be ashamed of himself; and now she wondered w at would become of him amongst a set of foreigners at Boulogne for to this delightful region was Parsey bound; to Boulogne that convenient refuge from the a ms of bailiffs—that blessed retreat, where brandy is cheap, and where every day is a Sunday to the despairing debtor. Late in the afternoon Macfum arrived, to escort his friend to the vessel that was to bear him from England's shores. Mrs. Parsey gave her husband's friend a frosty welcome, for while Parsey afterwards apologised, alleging as an excuse, his wife's ignorance of legal matters, Macfum would have been waiting in person by that hour, had he refused Parsey's application. Indeed, who knew better than Macfum Parsey's pronenes to exaggerate it's most common legal term into the most appalling calamity. He was wont to relate an anecdote of a lady who sent him fits when she set a [illegible] knock at her door with a summons compelling the attendance of her husband to answer the charge of refusing to pay a cabman his just fare

Macfum's dejection on this painful occasion was truly touching. To see his most intimate friend thus torn, though but for a few days, from his dear home, was to him, he said a most harrowing scene. He would give worlds to prevent it. But he was, unhappily, far from romantic, and when with his back to the fire, his eyes steadfastly fixed upon a moss-rose in the carpet, and his whole bearing denoting profound regret for the trouble into which he had brought his friend, Macfum was thinking of Parsey's pretty housemaid, and gazed and smiled upon his wife as she poured all the little necessaries which a man alone would forget, but of which a wife invariably takes no

[illegible] and Parsey had better make a trip to Regent's Park and not be at home on indifferent subjects. Macfum's gravity was immovable. At last Parsey rose, took a tremulous leave of his wife (who by this time was in the most pathetic crying fit), and, accompanied by Macfum, sought a cab. Arrived at the City of Boulogne packet, fine seaworthy ship, a packet accounted safe, commanded by the courteous T

(To be continued.)

MINISTERIAL MOVEMENTS.—Lord and Lady John Russell have arrived at Minto House, near Hawick, on a visit to the Earl and Countess of Minto from visiting the Duke and Duchess of Argyll, at Inveraray Castle. The Marquis of Lansdowne may be expected in London by the 20th instant at latest. The Lord President of the Council and the Marchioness of Lansdowne are expected at Bowood Park, from visiting the family estates of the county of Kerry. The Marquis of Clanricarde has left town to visit the Marquis and Marchioness of Allesbury, at Tottenham Park. The Earl of Auckland and the Hon. Miss Eden contemplate leaving Eden Lodge, Bassinbridge, in a few days, to make a round of [illegible] Viscount and Viscountess Palmerston will entertain a succession of distinguished visitors, including the principal members of the foreign corps diplomatique during the next fortnight, immediately after which the Noble Viscount comes to town. Viscount Morpeth returns to town about the 20th inst [illegible] visiting the Earl and Countess of Carlisle, at Castle Howard. The Right Hon. Henry and Mrs. Labouchere have issued cards announcing their intended tour at their newly-purchased seat, Stoke Park, near Windsor. Sir John Cam Hobhouse is to arrive in the course of the week at Erlestoke Park, Wilts, from Scotland

MR. HUME'S REFORM. It is stated to be the intention of Messrs. Hume's supporters, and also many members of the late "Anti-Corn-Law League," to move a similar resolution to that proposed last session, namely, that the next Parliament [illegible] will be attended by Messrs. Hume and Cobden, also Sir Joshua Walmesley, George Thompson, Dr. Bowring, M.P., Lawrence Heyworth, M.P., and Hindley Smith

NORTH STAFFORDSHIRE RAILWAY.—The portion of this line from Stoke to Colwich and Crewe will be opened, for the conveyance of goods and passengers, on Monday next; thus completing the shortest and most direct route between Manchester and Derby, old Crewe, Stoke, and Burton

MERCANTILE SEAMEN'S SOCIETY.—On Tuesday a quarterly general court of this corporation, for the relief and support of sick, maimed, and disabled seamen, and the widows of such as had been killed or drowned in the merchant service, was held at the office of the society, 25, Birchin-lane. From the finances statement, it appeared that during the past year 4,000 objects arisen from cities, decayed seamen's wages, contributions, and interest on capital, amounted to nearly £20,000; and the disbursements (including £19,000 in pensions, and £2300 granted in temporary relief) nearly £20,000, the operations of the society extending to 45 of principal ports of the United Kingdom, in addition to the port of London

Grants having been received, a committee was formed to consider and decide upon the various applications for pensions and relief. About fifty cases were brought before the court, and in the majority of them relief was granted. The meeting then broke up

POOR-LAW RELIEF. On Saturday two provisions in an Act of Parliament passed on the 4th ult. came into operation—namely, relief of poor by loans, [illegible] expense of the common funds of unions, and not on parishes. By the section of the 11th and 12th Victoria, cap. 110, it is provided that after the 1st day of October, to the 30th of September, both the cost of the relief to be given to any poor person chargeable to any union, being a destitute wayfarer, or wanderer, or dwelling, as well as the cost of the burial of the body of any such poor person within such union, shall be deemed common charges of such union. By virtue of the third section of the same statute, [illegible] is ordered [illegible] unions to meet made with regard to from the 30th of September, 1848, to the 30th of September, 1849, to the London Lord of [illegible]

LEVEE AT THE ROYAL MILITARY ACADEMY, WOOLWICH. Scarlet fever has broken out amongst the gentlemen cadets [illegible] the Royal Military Academy, and one of their number, Mr. William Hunter, died on the 24th inst. after a brief illness. In consequence of the eminently contagious character of the disease, the Master-General of the Ordnance, acting under the advice of the Director-General of the Ordnance Medical Department (Sir J. Webb), on the same day ordered all the cadets to quit the establishment for a period of six weeks, to [illegible] of cessation is removed. The gentlemen cadets accordingly left on Tuesday last for their respective homes. The disease has not shown itself in the [illegible] and it is hoped that it should not be the same course will be [illegible] adopted that has been pursued in the case of the academy itself. The causes which has now extended to the academy has been pronounced in the form of [illegible] for the last two months, and has cause great [illegible] sanitary, cleaning and ventilation. Although it originated in close and unclean [illegible], it has spread to some of the cleanest and healthy [illegible] the town.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

Remember'st thou my greeting—hails true?
From slip or bush there never flew—
O'er moor or fell there never sprung
More fleet of foot, more sure of fang.—SCOTT.

The month of October is fruitful in field sports. The manly exercises of cricket, rowing, and others of their class give place in the latter months of autumn to recreation of a more rural character. Summer is let in a limited degree the season of sporting. Shooting is now in the zenith. Moor, field, and forest are free for gun and rifle—and fish find downs invite the essay of the fleet of foot. We crave licence to treat, for the nonce, of coursing. The lovers of the leash are already beatring themselves; kennels are in strong [illegible] and meetings duly announced by secretaries honorary and professional. Like other of our popular pastimes, coursing has of latter years assumed more business details than appertained to its primitive arrangement. It is regulated upon a system at least, so much of it as relates to public meetings. It has its classification for animals of different ages. Its produce stakes, its cups, and last, not least, its speculators—the pomp and circumstance of the turf in miniature. Whether this be for better or worse, as it is, and for that reason all legitimate improvements are so much gained for the status in quo. Foremost of these would be the application of such means as are readily available at last minutes to the drawn of the claims of the animals matched against other. That this will ever be done with the accuracy of decisions in horse-racing, can hardly be expected: that it may be much nearly or at least approximated, I deem very apparent and apt, and there is no reason to doubt. What a world of latter feelings and bad blood would be vanquished by the discovery!

The duty of a referee under the circumstances is not a gracious one; but, next to Jack Ketch, your coursing judge is the official obnoxious to popular opprobium. And no doubt he gives cause for offence every time he exercises his calling—not the less, because it is the fault of his own. That is bad, and it is worse that, probably, not four races out of six between greyhounds are decided upon their merits. It is a reproach which no longer [illegible] to Stewards, Judges, and Tryers of coursing meetings; it admits of much palliation, if not of perfect cure. As matches are at present run, while the chase is under the Judge's eye, he is liable to read every turn of it amiss. Had he himself fed and trained the animals flying before him, or wheeling in circles on doubles, taking into account the common casualties of a course, would not the odds be against his identifying the best in all the points of the contest? How does it be, when he is required to distinguish, in such a passage of infinite variety, the positions of two of the swiftest animals in creation, neither of which he had ever previously seen, and of whose mark and colours he was wholly ignorant at the moment of starting? And this there is a plan as simple as it would be seemly. Let a coursing club adopt as its distinguishing symbol some two of the brightest colours, as white and scarlet, white and yellow, and the like. This will suggest, so to speak, those particular colours to the Judge's sight. The members and all persons sending dogs to the matches should be required to provide themselves with slight collars of the colours of the club. When placed in the slips, each greyhound, under penalty of disqualification, should wear one of these collars; and the Judge would then as the practice is now upon the turf merely have to watch the colours, and to declare at the finish "scarlet wins," or "white wins," as the case might be This would give a more [illegible] to these rural revels: it would put them on the same [illegible] a more gala character—a Derby field would sacrifice its éclat considerably were it shorn of its caps and jackets. And who may say, moreover, to what this step might lead? It would certainly bring a coursing meeting to a more [illegible] than it is at present, make [illegible] it into existence, before the Ides of March, Coursing Sweeps [illegible] We need not despair: it is very early in the season.

TATTERSALL'S.

THURSDAY.—Surpilice, so long in the stable for the Cesarewitch, came this afternoon with a rush, and finish of first, currently in the early part of the day, sprung to 6 to 1; if we do not mistake the "signs of the times" he will be quoted at shorter odds before the day. Lanesborough and Daca were the only [illegible] to any extent from the first; the latter are very dear, as we see the former, and at present more disposed to lay than take the odds.

8 to 1	agst Surpilice (t)	16 to 1 agst Isaac	20 to 1 agst Hornpipe
6 to 1	— Lanesborough	25 to 1 — Palma (t)	33 to 1 — Llyanco (t)
7 to 1	— Lanesborough	25 to 1 — Pilot	40 to 1 — Lord of the Bog
12 to 1	— Daca	25 to 1 — Hippomanes	40 to 1 — Kentish
15 to 1	— Bezabiber	30 to 1 — Ion	40 to 1 — Filbagg (t)

50 to 1 a [illegible] Wrangler

2 to 1 agst Lanesborough | 33 to 1 agst Loadstone | 50 to 1 agst Chanticleer (t)

[illegible]

10 to 1 [illegible] of Tadmor (t) | 18 to 1 agst Ca

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

A slightly increased demand for money, to meet the home-trade engagements due the 4th of the month, has been the only change in the currents of monetary affairs during the week. The numerous small bills on drapers, &c. were well met, proving incontestably an improving condition on the part of the public. In the English Stock Market there has been scarcely any movement, Consols opening on Monday at 86 to ⅞, receding to 86, and closing at 86 to ⅛ for Money, and 86⅛ to ¼ for the Account. Prices on Tuesday were the exact reptition of the previous day; but on Wednesday the closing price was 86⅛ to ¼ for Money. A slight increase in business on Thursday gave firmness to prices, without, however, effecting any change in the quotations. To-day there was exact repetition of have scarcely varied. India Bonds are 20 to 31. At the close of the week the following were the prices:—Aged, 1794; Consols, 86; India Bonds, £1000, 33 pm; Ditto, ditto, £1000, 33 pm; Ditto, ditto, £1000, 33 pm; Exchequer Bills, £1000, March, 33 pm; Ditto, £1000, June, 30 pm Ditto, £500, March, 34 pm; Ditto, £500, June, 30 pm, Ditto, Small, March, 35 pm; Ditto, Small, June, 30 pm.

Some activity in Mexican and Portuguese Stock has afforded a trifling increase to the business of the Foreign Market during the week. The hopes of a portion of the last over-due dividend being paid, has caused increases of the former Stock into the market, improving quotations to 19¾. This advance from 17 materially [illegible] and stands on Tuesday this quotation. Portuguese has improved more gradually, some of the former Stock [illegible] Coupons have displayed some weakness, quoting a decline of about 1 per cent on the week's prices. In the other securities little has been done, and the [illegible] have been proportionably insignificant. At the end of the week prices stood for Brazil an Bonds, 78 ex. div.; Ditto, Small, 78¾ ex. div.; Chilian Bonds, 85 per Cent., 83; Ditto, Three per Cent., 64; Mexican Five per Cent., 1840, 19; Ditto, Account, 19; Portuguese Four per Cent., 24; Russian Bonds, 109; Spanish Five per Cent., 1840, 11¾; Ditto, Three per Cent., 23¼; Belgian Four-and-a-half per Cent., 1847, 103; Dutch Four per Cent. Certificates, 98¾ ex. div.

A slight change that has taken place in the Railway Market during the week has tended to improvement. Prices, however, have varied but little, and sales cannot be effected but at a decline upon the quotations marked. The actual bargains at the end of the week were—in Aberdeen, at 16¾; Birmingham and Oxford Junction, 22¾; Caledonian, 19¾; Ditto, New £10 Pref., 8¾; Chester and Holyhead, 9¾; Eastern Counties, 3¾; Ditto, New Guaranteed, 5 per Cent., 8¾; Ditto, Extension, Five per Cent., No 1, ¼ dis. Great Northern, 44¾; Great Southern and Western (Ireland), 21¾; Great North of England, New, 68¾; Great Western, 78¾; Ditto, Shares, 18¾; Lancashire and Yorkshire, New, Guaranteed Six per Cent., 4¾; Leeds and Bradford, 80; London, Brighton, and South Coast, 29¾; Ditto, Guaranteed 5 per cent., 88¾; London and North-Western, 104¾; London and South-Western, 38¾; Ditto, New £50, 27¾; Ditto, Tenths (Consol.), 8¾; Ditto, Thirds, 5 dis.; Ditto, New Scrip, 1848, Prof. 7 per cent. on deposit, and 3 per cent. on calls, 5 dis.; Midland, 32¾; Ditto, Bristol and Birmingham, 74¾; Ditto, Birmingham and Gloucester, 9 per cent., 18¾; North Britis., 4¾; Ditto, Thirds, 4¾; North Staffordshire, 8¾; Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton, 25¾; South-Eastern, 23¾; Ditto, New, 1¾; Ditto, No. 3, 10; Ditto, No. 5, 14; Ditto, No. 6, Thirds, 4¾; South Wales, 8¾; York, Newcastle, and Berwick, 26¾; Ditto, Original New and Berwick, 24¾; Ditto, Extension, No 1, 13; Ditto, G. N. E. Preference, 6¾; York and North Midland, 22¾; Ditto, Preference, 6¾; Ditto, Preference, 6¾; Paris and Lyons, 42; Paris and Rouen, 18¾; Paris and Strasbourg, 13; Tours and Nantes, 4¾.

SATURDAY MORNING.—The Consol Market, yesterday, opened at 86⅛ to ¼ for Money, and 86⅛ to ⅜ for Account, closing at the same prices without having varied. Shares were heavier. The Foreign Market did not materially vary.

CHOLERA.—As the progress of the cholera westward becomes more marked, the newspaper press teems with allegel remedies, much as it did on the previous invasion of the disease. Generally, they consist of opium, in combination with various medicaments, and, certainly, when the opium is given in such combinations appear to be the most advantageous. There is one thing, however, in regard to all remedies, which must never be lost sight of for a moment, and that is, that they are to be used only in the early stage of the disease. Various forms of combination are very sanguinely recommended by different medical men, but they all agree as to the vital importance of their early use. The fatal and terrible progress of the Sunderland [illegible] seamen's cannot be too strongly impressed on the public mind. They say "We have received much information tending to establish the conclusion that cholera is not the violent disease which it has been supposed; that the combinations symptoms known form of the malady is, in reality, its second stage, and that its first stage is manifested by the premonitory symptom of diarrhœa, which in many other instances is followed by vomiting, cramps, coldness of the [illegible] regimen and by appropriate medicine, may be arrested before passing into the more violent and fatal stage of the disease." Everything possible must be done to promote clean habits and temperance amongst the people, and to cleanse and [illegible] the same time be adapted to spread it formidable, and to ensure that [illegible]

[illegible] to be synonymous terms". Journal of Public Health.

EMIGRATION. The Board of Trade, one of the [illegible] of which is actively engaged in carrying its objects into operation. At the [illegible] agents are to remain, making, with [illegible] 160 Indians, [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] bedding, and mess utensils.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE (Friday).—A very limited quantity of English wheat has been received up to our market, this week, consisting, as well as by land carriage. To-day the stands were nearly supplied with samples of both red and white. Still, however, the demand, owing to the large [illegible] from abroad, was in a very sluggish state. The finest parcels recently sold at Monday's quotations, and all other sales were somewhat easier to sell. Upwards of 20,000 quarters of foreign wheat have come in, the greatest quantities were held at full prices. The [illegible] and sale of condition parcels were, in some instances, a per quarter lower, with a very sluggish inquiry. Several cargoes were on passage in the market while the supply of foreign was by no means excessive. Picked samples were quite as dear, but the value of [illegible] was barely maintained. The demand for [illegible] was wholly restricted, barely late figures. The supply on offer was small. Oats were in moderate request, at [illegible] rates. In other articles of trade, we have no change.

ARRIVALS.—English: wheat, 2270 l; barley, 360; oats, 270. Irish: oats, 770. Foreign: wheat, 20,870 l; barley, 6820; oats, 6410 quarters. Flour, 886 sacks. Malt, 1230 quarters.

English. Wheat, Essex and Kent, fine, 48s to 52s; ditto, white, 48s to 52s; Norfolk and Suffolk, fine, 48s to 50s; ditto, white, 50s to 52s per qr. Barley, Lincoln, Essex, English, 21s 6d to 22s 6d; ditto, foreign, 19s to 20s; malting ditto, 23s to 24s; Norfolk and [illegible] ditto, 23s to 24s; [illegible] ditto, 23s to 24s; Lincolnshire, Yorkshire, and Scotch ditto, 23s to 24s per qr. Oats, Essex, English, 21s 6d to 22s 6d; Lincolnshire, [illegible] ditto, 20s to 21s; Yorkshire, Scotch, and Irish ditto, 19s to 20s per qr. Beans, Mazagan, 30s to 32s; Harrow, 30s to 32s; Pigeon, 32s to 34s; Egyptian, 30s to 32s; Ticks, 30s to 32s per qr. Peas, White, 32s to 34s; Maple, 32s to 34s; Grey, 32s to 34s per qr. Flour, Essex, English, 21s 6d to 22s per sack; Suffolk, 21s 6d to 22s per sack; Norfolk and Lincolnshire, 20s to 21s per sack.

Foreign. Wheat, Dantzic, 50s to 52s; Konigsberg, 50s to 52s; Pomeranian, Rostock, and Mecklenburgh, 50s to 52s per qr. Barley, Grinding, 20s to 21s; distilling, 22s to 23s per qr. Oats, Dutch, 20s to 21s; Harlingen, 20s to 21s; Danish, Swedish, and Russian, 20s to 21s per qr. Beans, Horse, 30s to 32s per qr. Peas, Maple, 32s to 34s per qr. Flour, French, 40s to 42s per sack; Hamburgh, 40s to 42s per sack.

Wheat. The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis are from 6d to 6½d, of household do. 6d to 6½d per 4lb. loaf.

Imperial Weekly Average.—Wheat, 48s 9d; barley, 23s 3d; oats, 21s 1d; rye, 3s 9d; beans, 30s 1d; peas, 32s 8d.

Average of England and Wales.—Wheat, 45s 10d; barley, 22s 10d; oats, 22s 1d; rye, 32s 4d; beans, 30s 1d; peas, 32s 4d.

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 4s; barley, 2s 6d; oats, 1s 6d; rye, 2s 6d; beans, 3s 6d; peas, 3s 6d.

Teas.—For all kinds of tea, the demand still rules tolerably steady; but we have no improvement to notice in value. The supply offering in the private contract market is by no means large.

Sugar. Raw as well as refined sugars are tolerably steady, but the late advance in the quotations is with difficulty supported. Grocery, fine, 44s to 45s per cwt.

Coffee.—On the whole, a very moderate business is doing in this article; yet the importers refuse to accept lower prices.

Rice.—The best qualities of Irish butter are in fair request, at fully last week's quotations. In the middling and inferior kinds very little is doing, on somewhat easier terms. The weight butter trade across are very dull, and to us by per cwt. lower. Fine Dorset, 94s to 96s, middling do. 88s to 90s; fine Devon, 92s to 98s per cwt.; middling do. 86s to 90s per cwt. The best parcels of bacon are to us by per cwt. dearer. Stale parcels are neglected. Prices range from 60s to 74s per cwt. In hams and lard every change. Late in demand. Cheese is in moderate demand, the prices of which are well supported. In sales we have to observe no decline Provisions.—Full kinds of tea, the demand still rules tolerably steady; but we have no improvement to notice in value. The supply offering in the private contract market is by no means large.

Sugar. Raw as well as refined sugars are tolerably steady, but the late advance in the quotations is with difficulty supported. Grocery, fine, 44s to 45s per cwt.; [illegible] 44s to 45s per cwt.; good ordinary, 43s to 44s; fine, 45s to 46s per cwt.

Coffee.—On the whole, a very moderate business is doing in this article; yet the importers refuse to accept lower prices.

Rice.—The best parcels of potatoes, which are scarce, are selling at 27 per ton.

Provisions.—Although a plentiful supply of foreign beef has taken place, the supply of new crops, the demand for them has become more active, and prices have an upward tendency. In [illegible] and old [illegible] supply is doing, at unaltered quotations. On duty is [illegible] 9,000 [illegible] pockets, 23 [illegible] Wools, of Kent ditto, 42 [illegible] 44 per cwt.; and [illegible] last week ditto, 40 to 42 [illegible]

Cattle. (Friday).—Whitwell, 14s 8d. Trinder, 12s. [illegible] [illegible] Wells and Mash, 14s 4d to 14s 8d. Sotherden, 14s 6d per 8lbs.

Sheep. (Friday).—Notwithstanding our last week's report that the supply of [illegible] was [illegible] to be [illegible] in the [illegible] of quality, the best trade was by no means [illegible] in most instances the quotations declined 2d per 8lb. The few prime Scots on offer sold at 4s 4d per 8lbs., and a total clearance was not effected. The show of foreign stock was small.

[illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [

ADVERTISEMENTS.

THE RE ROYAL, DRURY-LANE

"W" ITER'S SO...LS DANSANTS."

WALLHALLA SALLE DE VALENTINO,

ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION.

PIANO, ORTES,

PIAN FORTE SALE, 76,

PIANOFORTES.—The cheapest house in

SUPERIOR PIANOFORTES for HIRE

PIANOFORTES, by MOORE and Co.—

DANCING TAUGHT in the

THE SAFETY CHAIN GOVERNESS

PRESENTS for WEDDINGS,

S. MORDAN and CO.'S PAT. NT LEAD

JONES'S 4s. 6d. SILVER LEVER

WATCHES and CLOCKS. A Pamphlet,

ELECTRO and SHEFFIELD PLATE,

SILVER PLATE. A. B. SAVORY and

A HANDSOME PRESENT.—A GOLD

SARL'S ARGENTINE SILVER PLATE.—

CHILDREN'S CARRIAGE CLOAKS, HOODS, HATS AND BONNETS, AND SHORT ROBES.

PUBLICATIONS, &c.

A PANORAMIC PICTURE of the HOLY

PORTRAIT of ALBERT BARNES, F

ITALIAN OPERAS.—"Les Huguenots" (second edition), "Norma," "Somnambula," "Le Figaro," "Il barbiere," and all the operas in the Italian language.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LA PRESSE; Journal Politique et Littéraire.

WALLACE'S PHANTASMAGORIA, by Childs, is Established Every Evening at Eight o'Clock, with appropriate music, directed by Dr. Wallis. The Dissolving Views, with historical descriptions,

THE MAN IN THE MOON.

SOMETHING for the CHILDREN. A Gift

PIANOFORTES.—The cheapest house in

JANE EYRE; an Autobiography. By

POEMS by CURRER, ELLIS, and ACTON

HILL in RUSSIA, or the DISCIPLINE of

COMPLETION OF THE WORK

THE HISTORY and ART of WOOD EN-

With Facsimiles of

And exhibit, in various

THE LILY AND THE ROSE.

ONE HUNDRED WINTER FASHIONS in MILDRED VERNON.

THE YOUNG COUNTESS

THE CASTLE AGE MEMOIRS

NUMBER ONE, ST. PAUL'S CHURCH-YARD. The Ten is great. The Tea is genuine. It cannot be

DEANE'S MONUMENT RAZORS are

QUEEN'S BISCUITS.—The steam-made

D'OYLEY'S SCOTCH WAREHOUSE,

THE SALE CONTINUES, and will

WEDDING ORDERS & INDIA OUTFITS

IMPORTANT and EXTENSIVE CON-

WORTHY of NOTICE. Upwards of 2000

ENGLISH HALL TWO SEAS DEPOT.—

NICOLL'S PATENT DOUBLE PROTIC

BERIOE'S NEW OVER-COAT for the SHOOTING.—The attention of Sporting

FORD'S EUREKA SHIRT

ROYAL PAPIER MACHE WORKS—

MR BUSH ands YOUNG LADIES

PROFESSOR HAMON'S ORTHOPEDIC

"AS YOU LIKE IT." LUBECK'S Patent

FOUR FIRES for ONE PENNY, by

CHILDREN'S and INVALID'S CARRIAGES

OLD GILT FRAMES MADE NEW in one

ENCHANTED SPY-GLASS! with Fire-

MECHI'S PALL CUTLERY has long been

SELF-REGISTERING THERMOMETERS,

THE TOILET of BEAUTY furnishes innu-

DOES YOUR HAIR FALL OFF OR GET

CURE OF CORNS.—A Lady will remit to

TOOTHACHE INSTANTLY CURED. De-

DO YOU SUFFER TOOTH-ACHE? If so,

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.—Unprincipled

INFLUENZA, COUGHS, COLDS, ASTHMA,

CANDIDATES FOR THE AMERICAN PRESIDENCY.

GENERALS LEWIS CASS AND ZACHARY TAYLOR.

There are four candidates in the field, as a successor to Mr. Polk in the Presidency of the United States.

GENERAL CASS.

The Democratic National Convention have declared Lewis Cass, of Michigan, to be their choice; thus establishing the nomination of that General as the candidate of the Democrats for the Presidency.

The Whig National Convention of Philadelphia presents, as the nominee of the great Whig party, General Zachary Taylor. Born on the 24th November, 1784, in Orange County, Virginia, he passed his early days "'mid scenes of wild sublimity, daring adventure, and savage combat." Entering the army of the United States, as First Lieutenant of the 7th Infantry, on the 3rd May, 1808, he was ordered northward, and immediately thereafter entered the command of General W. H Harrison. The brevet rank of Major was, for the first time in the American army, conferred upon Zachary Taylor, for his boldness and energy in defending Fort Harrison, on an occasion involving great personal exposure and gallantry. In the battle of Okee-chobee, December 25, 1837, he won for himself the rank of Brigadier-General by brevet. From this action in Florida resulted the most beneficial arrangements. Transferred to the "Army of Occupation," he led on to the achievement of unparalleled victories. By resolutions of Congress, passed July 16, 1846, and 2nd March, 1847, two gold medals were struck at the United States Mint, commemorative of the actions of Palo-Alto, May 8, 1846; Resaca de la Palma, May 9, 1846; and of Monterey, September 20, 1846.

In the race for the Presidency, a General is opposed by a General, both enjoying good reputation, and men of talent. Lewis Cass was born in Exeter, New Hampshire, and is regarded favourably as the schoolmate of Daniel Webster. He early left his birthplace, and made Michigan the home of his choice. In the war of 1812, General Hull retreated from Malden, and on the 8th of August returned to Detroit. On the 16th of the same month, the latter place was surrendered to General Brock, of the English army; and, agreeably to the conditions of the capitulation, Lewis Cass, then a Colonel, became a prisoner of war. He must, however, be regarded as a scholar rather than as a soldier—as a politician rather than as a statesman. The war waged against the Seminole Indians is ascribed to his negligence or incapacity while acting as Secretary of War. As Minister to France, he became unpopular on account of his publication, entitled "France: its King, Court, and Government." Returning to America in 1841, he has since occupied a seat in the United States Senate, where, as a member, he has advocated the most ultra measures. His course on the Oregon question is still fresh in the memories of all who desired to avert a war with England.

The third candidate is Martin Van Buren, the "free-soiler" and "Barnburner."

Mr. Clay, a Whig, is the fourth; and has been put forward by his friends, against his own wish and in spite of his actual protest, merely to damage General Taylor and Martin Van Buren, without the least prospect of his own election.

"The present contest," says the New York Herald, "for the Presidency, continues to be one of the most perplexing and interesting that has ever taken place. It is a contest, apparently, of manœuvres, startling surprises, new ideas, disorganization of old parties, and organization of new ones; all taking place without any order, regularity, or direction." For General Taylor are claimed "general principles, honest avowals, and freedom from mere partisanship." At a "tremendous Old Hunker meeting," however, in Tammany-hall, the Hon. Mike Walsh says of Gen. Taylor's supporters, that "they opposed the late war, and stigmatised every man engaged in it as bloodthirsty and as a robber; asserted that it was commenced for selfish ends, and for the purpose of robbing an oppressed people, and yet they take up as their candidate one whose only claim to the office of President is derived from his actions in that war." The "Free Soil," or "Van Buren Movement," we are told, "is certainly a new thing in the history of politics in this country; already it is said that twenty-five liberty papers have gone over to the support of the Buffalo nominations. The national Reformers, who nominated Gerrit Smith, are looking in the same direction. All the ultras, and odd fends of all parties, the people of one idea, appear to be gathering together for the purpose of supporting Mr. Van Buren."

"The Clay Whigs" appear chiefly to rely upon the squabbles of their opponents producing division and weakness. They are also lively hands at a squib: here is one by them, sung "with unbounded applause" at New York:

The fall election is to tell
Who's, fill the White House chair,
Come, then, you Whigs, up to the work,
To put brave Harry there.

CHORUS.

Oh then look here, oh, then, look where?
Is Mr. Logan, right yander?
Do not you see old Lewis Cass?
He looks just like a gander.

Oh, Harry Clay, he is the man
Who's sure to be elected,
Poor Lewis Cass will be rejected,
He now looks quite dejected
Oh, then, look here, &c.

John Tyler, he has sold himself,
Boots, breeches nose and all;
And now he goes it strong for Cass—
But it won't do this fall
Oh, then, look here, &c.

Abaxerxes Bobby, too,
I think you all do know him,
Is engaged next March by Polk,
To write his dying poem
Oh, then, look here, &c.

The confusion in parties and prostration of principle in this grand squabble are deplorable. "Of the seven million American voters," says a contemporary, "scarcely one knows his own political creed, or has no other object than to be the vehement partisan of somebody or other, he knows not whom. It is faction without faith, and passion combined with indifference. The United States are the raw fuel of political strife, and only wait the spark that is to kindle them What security can there be in such a people?"

GENERAL Z. TAYLOR.

At a recent meeting of the Académie de Médecine at Paris, the President stated that, although the cholera was still far off, the council had considered it to be wise to take it into consideration, and collect all the documents that could be procured, to enable the medical profession to meet and contend with this disease, should it once more attack France. For this purpose, therefore, the council proposed that a special committee should be nominated, in which the Academy concurred, and named a committee of eleven of its members, which was to hold its first sitting on the 28th.

A new caricature has appeared in Paris, representing Armand Marrast in the year 1868. The venerable President, his eyes protected by a green shade, and holding a bell with a feeble hand, is addressing the following words to an assembly of old men fast asleep:—"The sitting of to-morrow will again be devoted to the discussion of the Constitution. Come, gentlemen, we must at length have done with it."

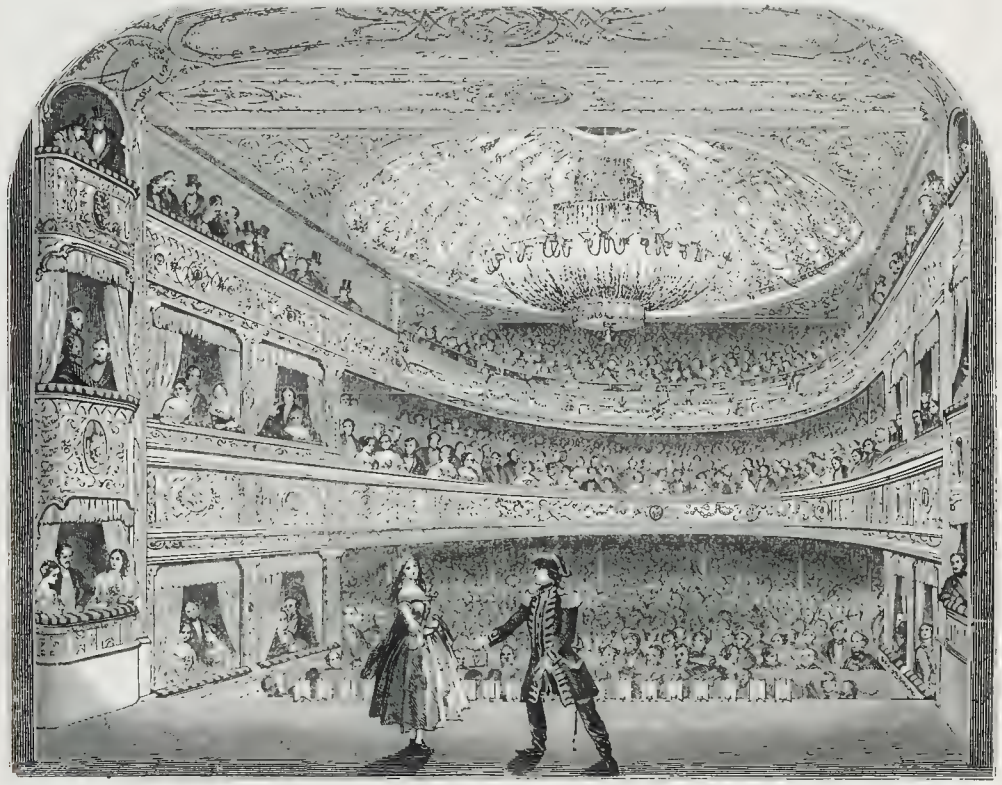
THE ADELPHI THEATRE.

Our earliest recollection of this popular place of amusement is as the Sans Pareil, in the rear of the colour-shop of its proprietor in the Strand, and whose clever daughter was the star of theatrical company. With materials so close at hand, the little theatre should have had some advantage of decoration; though, if we remember rightly, it was a sadly bedizened affair, lit by gloomy oil-lamps, and redolent of less agreeable odours than oil and orange-peel, the conventional fragrance of theatrical parterres. But the puny old proprietor has long passed away; gas has superseded oil illumination; and with a better class of performance has come an improved style of decoration. The last re-embellishment of the Adelphi was certainly an improvement upon its predecessor; the ornaments were less pronounced than heretofore; the flat ceiling was raised into a dome, "fretted with golden fires," and a curtain was added very like the covers of Mr. Newbury's children's books. Thus far the decoration was good; but the old tips-and-downs, the cabined lobbies, the primitive staircases, and similar discomforts, were still there. The organic change remained to be made, by which additional convenience might be gained with a higher style of decoration; and this, we are happy to say, has just been accomplished in the redecoration and partial reconstruction of the approaches. The staircases are now of slate; the seats in the dress circle are provided with backs; and several minor comforts have been added

In the auditory, a very graceful and elegant style of ornament has been adopted prominently in the fronts of the boxes and the ceiling; and there is much gaiety in the wreathing of the supports with flowers. The proscenium boxes are hung with muslin draperies, and surmounted with furnished medallions, which reflect with great brilliancy the light from the central chandelier. The dome in the roof is retained, but now resembles trellis-work, which is agreeably effective. Lest there should, however, be an unseasonable lightness in all this, the linings and furniture of the boxes are deep crimson. A new drop-scene has also been painted.

The general alterations have been designed and superintended by Mr. Charles Manby; and the decorations have been designed by Mr. Digby Wyatt, architect, and executed by Mr. Sang. They are very sparkling and tasteful throughout.

We have engraved the newly decorated auditory, in which the public already find themselves at home in as large numbers as of old. The enlargements and re-constructions behind the curtain are also extensive, and must largely contribute to the gratification of those before it.



THE ADELPHI THEATRE RE-DECORATED.

London: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by William Little, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—Saturday, October 7, 1848.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

No. 339.—Vol. XIII.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, OCTOBER 14, 1848. [Sixpence.

PAUPERISM AND VAGRANCY IN ENGLAND.

The relief of the deserving poor is considered a sacred duty in this country. Amid the multiplicity of taxes imposed upon the people of England, none is so willingly borne as the Poor-Rate. The amendment of the Poor-Law, commonly known as the New Poor-Law Act, of which the objects were to diminish pauperism, and to relieve the pressure upon property, which threatened, in some instances, to amount to a confiscation, was received by rate-payers generally without favour. Its severity did violence to the popular feeling. Its necessary stringency was looked upon as heartless cruelty and oppression, not so much by the poor themselves, as by those whose income was taxed for their support; and the whole machinery of the law incurred an amount of odium which has rarely been witnessed in the case of any other enactment. Gradually, the outcry has subsided; and it is now pretty generally acknowledged that the remedy, stringent as it may have been, was not a whit more stringent than the necessities of the case required; and that we have to thank the Poor-Law Amendment Act for checking a growth of pauperism which threatened to inflict the most serious evil and demoralisation upon the country.

Few persons reflect upon the immense mass of poverty that lies a permanent weight upon the resources of the industrious and wealthy classes. Each parish knows its own burden, and, generally speaking, bears it without complaint. It does not embarrass itself, however, with any reflection upon the pauperism of other parishes, or upon the aggregate pauperism of England; yet the total amount is such as to cause serious reflections in the minds of all who may be induced to study the subject. No less than 1,400,000 persons, or about one-thirteenth of the whole population, were dependent upon the Poor-Rate in the year 1846; and there is a positive certainty that since that period the numbers of the poor have not diminished amongst us. To state the cost of this immense standing army of poverty at seven or eight millions sterling per annum, would probably be to underrate it very considerably. Yet even this large sum, supposing it to be the full extent of the legal and compulsory levies made upon the parishes of England for the support of the poor, does not relieve society from the presence and importunity of vast shoals of the destitute. It does not put an end to street and highway mendicancy, or secure the rate-payer from frequent appeals to his pity, by vagrants of all kinds—from the orphan child, who is really starving, to the child sent out on system by vicious and criminal parents to prey upon society; and from the unfortunate man or woman overtaken by real calamity, to the professional beggar who prefers idle and vicious mendicancy to honest labour. Neither does it by any means realise to the mind the total amount that deserving and unfortunate poverty, and undeserving vagrancy, combine to draw from the productive resources of the nation.

As regards the deserving poor, there neither is nor ever was any disposition on the part of society to cast off, or even to murmur at the duty of maintaining them. The burden is cheerfully borne, and the whole mind of the nation is so deeply impressed with the absolute necessity, the paramount justice, and the Christian charity of a wisely, and indeed liberally, administered Poor-Law, that there is no fear that the English people will ever err on the side of too much economy in the relief and maintenance of the sick, the aged, and the impotent, and of the really suffering and meritorious poor. But the people of England, liberal as they have ever been in this respect, are beginning to draw a wider distinction than formerly between the deserving and the undeserving; between the pauper willing to work but unable to obtain employment, and the idle and worthless vagrant; between the man whose poverty is his misfortune, and him whose poverty is his trade; and between the swarms of involuntary paupers, and the still greater swarms of professional mendicants and depredators, which infest and pollute society. It is high time that it should be so. Within the last nine years an evil of enormous magnitude has sprung up in the country, which threatens, unless it be speedily checked and extirpated, to be productive of the most deplorable consequences. A Parliamentary Blue Book which has just been published on the subject of "Vagrancy," and which consists of Reports from the Poor-Law Inspectors, and communications on Vagrancy from Boards of Guardians and individuals interested in the subject, throws a fearful light upon this social disease, and the causes that have produced it.

The system established in the year 1839, of relieving vagrants or "tramps" at the Union Workhouses, by giving them a night's lodging, their supper and breakfast, either for nominal work, or without work at all, has, in the interval, raised a multitudinous host of travelling paupers, who traverse the country from end to end, and levy contributions upon the rate-payers. These armies of pauperism put up at the "Union" as richer men do at hotels—with this difference, that they pay nothing for their accommodation. They insist upon lodging and food as a matter of right, and not of favour; and carry with them, wherever they go, rascality and insolence, disease and filth, vice and crime, and all imaginable abominations. The steady increase of their numbers is the most alarming circumstance connected with them. Upon this point the reports of all the inspectors and the communications of all the Boards of Guardians agree. We select a few from amid the mass. The clerk of the Stockport Union, writing under date of the 5th of February, 1848, to the Poor-Law Board, says:—

> The majority of the trampers and vagrants are professional mendicants, wandering about the country, without any ordinary and daily trade in life to get their living by. This is openly avowed by most of them, who boldly say they have been in every workhouse in the kingdom, and will never work so long as they can get a bed, a pound of bread, and a pint of gruel a day; and they visit the different workhouses at periodical intervals of from two to six months. Infectious cutaneous disorders are common among them, and their conduct appears to be getting daily more insubordinate and lawless. The facilities afforded by the vagrant wards of the Union workhouse seem much to increase the numbers who follow this vagabondising life.

The clerk of the Loughborough Union writes:—

> It has been ascertained that, during the year ended 31st December last, 4022 vagrants were relieved in the workhouse of this Union, consisting of 2338 English, 1527 Irish, and 157 Scotch; and as the whole charge of their maintenance falls upon the parish of Loughborough, on account of the workhouse being situate there, it has produced great dissatisfaction amongst the rate-payers, and complaints have been frequently made to the Board of Guardians upon the subject. The Guardians also desire me to state that it is of very common occurrence, infectious disorders are introduced into the workhouse by the admission of vagrants. Great numbers of these relieved last year in this workhouse (particularly Irish) brought the fever into the workhouse with them, thereby entailing much expense, and even rendering it necessary to erect a fever ward for their reception. It should also be observed, in conclusion, that the conduct and behaviour of the vagrants while in the workhouse is, generally speaking, of the very worst kind. They set all order and regulation at defiance, and frequently commit offences for the avowed purpose of being committed to prison.

The petition of the Boston Board of Guardians to Parliament sets forth—

> That the number of wayfarers applying for relief at the workhouse of this Union continues alarmingly great. That a great portion of such wayfarers are professional mendicants, wandering about the country from union to union, in order to obtain food and lodging, without any ordinary trade or occupation in life, is but too evident from the frequency of the return of the same individuals to the workhouse of this Union. . . . . That there is no vagrant or other statute in existence sufficiently stringent to check the increasing impositions before complained of; and that, if such impositions are allowed to continue unchecked, they will speedily become a source of very serious evil to the United Kingdom

THE IRISH STATE TRIALS.—MR. S. O'BRIEN CONVEYED BACK TO PRISON, AFTER THE SENTENCE. (SEE PAGE 23.)

The Guardians of the City of London Union tell the same story. They represent to the Poor-Law Board, under date of the 11th of January—

That the rate-payers of the City of London are very much aggrieved by the enormous burthen cast upon them for the support of what is termed the "casual poor." That the term "casual poor" comprehends within its meaning all those persons who, from various causes, are wandering within the Union in a state of destitution, but are otherwise of regular and orderly habits. That in every large town, and especially in this metropolis, the "casual poor" consist of not only those who, from want of work, misfortune, or illness, are compelled to seek assistance from the poor's rates, but those also who may be classed as idle tramps and mendicants, who seek to live upon the bounty of the public, and to take advantage of the provisions made by law for the really necessitous. That, previous to the formation of the Poor-Law Unions throughout the country, this large class of persons was comparatively unknown, or but little heeded; but the greater facilities afforded for the relief of destitution, by the appointment of Union officers, has not only properly encouraged the application of those who need assistance, and thereby prevented much suffering and distress, but has induced the idle and profligate, under the plea of destitution, to throw themselves upon the public purse.

They further show, by a tabular statement, that the number of tramps relieved in 1839 was 356 only, at a cost of £324 ; that in 1840 it increased to 2403; in 1841, to 11,203; in 1842, to 26,713 ; in 1843, to 43,575; and that in 1847 it was 41,743, at a cost of £4416. The memorial of the Board of Guardians of the parish of St. Martin's-in-the-Fields is to the same effect. It states—

That, previously to the year 1839, the parish of St. Martin-in-the-Fields experienced but little inconvenience from applications for relief from what are called casual poor. That such applications were of rare occurrence until the year above mentioned; when persons, having no known place of abode, applied before this date, for the demands were generally met by the affording some relief in food, and occasionally a night's lodging. That the numbers of those vagrants applying for relief began gradually to increase during the year 1839, when 767 such persons received admission into the workhouse of St. Martin-in-the-Fields. That in 1840 the number of such admissions was nearly doubled, as in that year it amounted to 1376. The mischief rapidly extended, until, in 1846, as many as 15,000 vagrants were admitted ; and in the last year, 1847, no less than 11,574 admissions of tramps, including wives and children, took place

The Clerk of the Monmouth Union writes :—

I am directed by the Board of Guardians to state that the number of vagrants is fearfully on the increase : they seem to travel in troops, separating on leaving the workhouse in the morning, for the purpose of begging, and meeting at the next workhouse in the evening. That all the infectious diseases in the workhouse during the past year have been introduced by tramps; and that they have been put to much trouble by their leaving their own clothes, and breaking the windows in the workhouse. I am also to call your attention (with a view to its alteration) to the hardship imposed on the parish of Monmouth, bearing the whole amount of relief given to this class, charged to them.

The Master of the Cosford Union Workhouse, under date of the 24th of January, says :—

That mendicity is on the increase there can be no doubt; and I fear it will continue to increase so long as this class can, with impunity, claim supper and a lodging in a workhouse without being required to work for the same, for they take care to avoid coming in till a late hour in the evening

From all that I have witnessed in the general behaviour of vagrants, I take for granted that a vast amount of demoralization is carried into every part of the country by the streams of vagrants and mendicants constantly floating therein

A large number also of this class is to be found in the gaols of the rural districts, the other portion being chiefly agricultural labourers, who, whilst there, may be considered pupils in the school of crime, learning from these vagrants to carry back to their villages the amount of knowledge theoretically acquired in felonious practices, and which, I am sorry to add, is speedily brought to bear in reality to their depredation.

Mr. Grenville Pigott, a Poor-Law Inspector, whose district includes portions of Surrey, Sussex, Hampshire, and Berkshire, is still more emphatic. He says, in a letter dated the 18th of December last, that the number of tramps applying for and receiving board and lodging at the Union Houses, which for the six months ending 30th of September, 1846, had amounted to 18,533, had increased for the six months ending on the 30th of September in the following year to 44,937. He adds, that—

For the most part these vagrants are the refuse of society, spending the day in idleness, begging, plundering, or worse, and at night the gaol or the casual workhouse on their route, or where they expect the best treatment, instead of to the low lodging-houses to which they used to resort. They thus traverse the country in every direction, to the great prejudice of the honest poor; this system of relief affording great encouragement to sturdy beggars and vagabonds, who prefer a life of idleness and vice to honest industry. There can be little doubt, that, as the certainty of obtaining a lodging and food gratuitously has become more generally known amongst this class, coupled with the entire absence of any effectual inquiry into their habits or course of life, their resort to workhouses has greatly increased, and will no doubt continue to do so.

Sir John Walsham, another Inspector, reports of his district, that—

As regards the general state of vagrancy in the counties of Norfolk, Suffolk, Essex, Cambridge, Hunt.ngdon, and in that part of Hertfordshire which is under my superintendence, vagrants are to be found in great and, I fear, increasing numbers on the lines of road leading from Lincolnshire and North-amptonshire, through Cambridgeshire and Huntingdonshire, into Hertfordshire and towards London. Along the northern and eastern parts of Norfolk, vagrants are much more rare; neither are they very numerous in the other parts of Norfolk or in Suffolk, although I hear growing complaints from Boards of Guardians that vagrancy is increasing very inconveniently in and near Norwich, Lynn, Ipswich, Bury, Thetford, Sudbury, and other towns. In Essex, vagrants abound more than in Norfolk and Suffolk ; but, except at Colchester and Chelmsford, their numbers fall very short of those with whom the Cambridge-shire Unions have to deal. Everywhere, in these casual wayfarers exhibit the same idle, turbulent, and filthy habits which characterize the lowest dregs of society ; and everywhere, likewise, their especial aversion seems to be work. It is remarkable, however, with what telegraphic despatch the whole corps of tramps become acquainted with any altered circumstance bearing upon their relations with particular Unions. In the North Witchford Union, for example, it happened that two months ago the stock of junk for oakum picking was exhausted, and the Guardians, not then appreciating sufficiently the necessity of enforcing the provisions of 5 and 6 Vict., c. 57, s. 5, delayed to authorize the master of the Boddington workhouse to procure a fresh supply. In the very next week the number of vagrants, which had for some time previously averaged about twenty per week, increased to forty-five, in the second week to fifty-seven, in the third week to seventy-five, and then, oakum-picking having been resumed, the number as rapidly decreased till it reached the usual average. I remember also, that having to investigate, in 1846, a charge against the master of the Swaffham workhouse, of having unduly forwarded a vagrant and his wife from Swaffham to Lynn, it transpired that this couple were on their road from Kent to Coventry ; that at Swaffham they were told that through Downham, and not Lynn, lay their direct road to Coventry ; but that they declined to go to Downham, alleging that they well knew (they had never been in Norfolk before) that vagrants were set to work at Downham and not at Lynn (which is the fact), and that to Lynn, therefore, they must make out of their way, they would therefore go.

In the summer months vagrancy is a pleasanter occupation, and then they find the workhouses much convenient lodging-houses or hotels, that they behave better ; nevertheless, work is their especial aversion ; and in most of my workhouses now they are set to work, what in Ipswich and other gaols work has been abandoned. They are often there for short times of the year, destroying whatever they can in all Union houses where work is required. I feel almost convinced that this estimable fraternity have bound themselves by a vow always to resist even to being committed to prison, the prescribed task of work.

We have not space for further extracts. The volume is full of information of the same kind, and discloses a truly awful state of society. It seems to us that these tramps have no claim upon the Poor-Rate at all ; that the Union Workhouse is no place for them ; and that Poor-Law Guardians are not the officers that should be entrusted or burdened with their management. The Criminal Law, not the Poor-Law, is that which should be cognizant of their deeds, and which should undertake the task of dealing with them. Nevertheless, there is much in the recommendation of Mr. Hawley, another Inspector, in which we cordially concur. He says that—

Hard work and the abridgment of the time which is usually given to begging, appear to be the true principle upon which to found an amended code of repressive regulations against vagrancy. And if it shall be considered advisable to maintain and extend the plan of relieving vagrants in properly arranged receptacles attached to the workhouses, the condition of such relief should be an increased amount of labour, as compared with that now performed by them, and an extension of the time for its performance to at least six hours. Should any plan of out-door labour be suggested as preferable, then it may be proper to consider how the powers of punishment might be applied to carry out sanitary measures for the health of towns, and whether the cleansing of sewers, removal of night soil, scavenging the streets, &c., might not be imposed upon those whose character bears a strong resemblance to the "sturdy beggar" of former times. As regards the Irish mendicants, it may be a question whether more stringent laws for their removal ought not to be enacted, and whether they might not be subjected, after such removal, to labour on any public works which may be established in Ireland for that purpose, for certain periods commensurate with the nature of the offence of which they may have been guilty, under the provisions of any such vagrant act which may be introduced. In order, however, to render any such plans effectual, a more rigid system of prison discipline must be established, since it is obvious that any one of the systems at present in force will fail when it is known that resistance to it will secure to the refractory offender easier employment, a more liberal diet, and greater general comforts within the walls of a house of correction.

The subject is one of very serious importance, and we trust it will excite the attention which it merits.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

The leading topic of the week in Paris continued to be the election of the President of the Republic, and the various contingencies dependent thereon. The rejection, by the National Assembly, on Saturday last, by a majority of 602 to 211, of the amendment pressed by M. Piscon, that the President should be elected by the Assembly, gave rise, in the early part of the week, to various rumours and reports relative to a Ministerial crisis

The immediate resignation of General Cavaignac, through mortification at a decision which it is considered has virtually deprived him of the chance of election to the First Presidency of that Republic which, in the hour of its greatest peril, his military genius, energy, and true patriotism saved from the most appalling destruction—was very generally rumoured. On the other hand, it was stated that General Cavaignac would retain his post as Provisional head of the Executive, and endeavour to form a new Cabinet—the present Cabinet, which had in the first instance agreed to remain in office till after the passing of the Constitution, having resolved to retire immediately after the passing of Chapter V., which has reference to the Executive power, and that in that event General Cavaignac would endeavour to form a Provisional Cabinet, composed of MM. Lamoricière, Vivien, Bartholémy, St. Hilaire, General Changarnier, Léon de Malleville, Garnier Pagès, and Duclerc.

Amongst the causes which were said to have determined the vote of the Assembly, one was the alleged fear that, if General Cavaignac were elected President, he would ally himself with the ultra-democrats and Montagnards. Another, more probable, was the consideration of the effect which a vote delivered against the election of the President by universal suffrage would have upon their own return at the next election; indeed it was generally believed, that, with the exception of Paris and one or two of the great manufacturing towns, the members who voted in the minority would generally fail to obtain another return.

Again, it was said that the esteem and the respect of the public for Gen. Cavaignac had in no respect diminished; but that the general remark, "We do not get on —we are precisely where we were on the 1st of July," implied a desire to try somebody else

The candidates for the office of President of the Republic had begun to declare themselves with more boldness than formerly. Louis Napoleon was avowedly in the field. M. Thiers was to be brought forward by his friends. General Cavaignac would have the support of the Republicans de la veille. M de Lamartine was also spoken of; and Count Molé, though he professed to be anxious to continue out of office, was likely to be brought forward by an influential body of the Moderate and Rascionnary parties

The minority in the vote of Saturday evening was composed of the moderates of the Republicans of the "ne," combined with a certain portion of the ultra-democrats: the latter party were divided, one portion with MM. Flocon and Etienne Arago, and voting with the Ministers, all of whom as well as General Cavaignac and the President of the Assembly, voted against universal suffrage.

The Councils-General of the departments have been elected. The Presidents, Vice-Presidents, and other superior officers of those departmental bodies, have [illegible] departments, and in all of them, with but two or three exceptions, Conservatives or Anti-Republicans have been elected. Even in the department of the Eure, where it was considered the claims of M. Dupont de l'Eure, the Senior of the Assembly, and the object of universal respect, would be predominant, and that he would have been returned almost unanimously, Mr. Duke de Broglie, ex-Minister of Louis Philippe, has been returned. Though but half the list just assembled, the first question to which the Councils in their debates have addressed themselves, is a virtual protest against what they consider an arbitrary encroachment on their rights and privileges, and a revolution of their functions of discussion committed by the chief of the Executive They have been convoked, it appears, only to apportion the departmental contributions They declare that they are not those which they will exercise in spite of the restriction thus attempted to be imposed on them, to discuss questions of general policy, and some of them have commenced already by voting memorials to the Government in favour of the election of the President by universal suffrage.

The question of the issue of some sort of paper money continues to engage much attention

Though the Committee of Finance and Legislation have come to the decision to recommend the Assembly to reject the proposition of creating two millions of francs of paper money, bearing a forced currency, as proposed at first by the Government, they have, at the same time, expressed a wish that the Assembly should turn its attention to the establishment of a system of territorial credit. the paper of which should have a voluntary currency. As a step in furtherance of this object, the following project has been proposed by M. Wolowski are as follow.

Art. 1 Each proprietor of landed property may demand from the treasury the delivery of a certain amount of obligations foncières [illegible]

[illegible] shall have precedence of these obligations, which [illegible] recorded to the tax, and the interest of which, in addition to the [illegible] of the expenses, shall be placed on the footing of five per cent., and become payable by twelfths at the same time as the tax

Art. 2 These five per cents shall be divided as follows:—1, The obligations hypothécaires will enjoy for each fifty francs of rent one franc per day, or 3f. 65c. per annum, payab shalf yearly to bearer. 2 One per cent to be devoted to a sinking fund 3 Thirty-two centimes are to be paid to the treasury for administrative expenses, and to make the place of the duties levied on loans and on mortgage inscriptions

Art. 4. There shall be formed, with a view of the obligations issued, those designated by this drawing shall be immediately reimbursed at par as far as there are sums sufficient for that purpose. The sinking fund shall be augmented every six months by the interest on the liquidated obligations

Art. 5 The debtor may at any time pay off the whole or part of the debt not yet sunk. In paying into the treasury an equal sum in obligations, which shall be immediately cancelled. In all cases the sinking fund of one per cent. will completely liberate the debtor in thirty-two years

Art. 6 The obligations hypothécaires will be detached from the Grand Livre de la Dette Foncière opened at the treasury. They will be issued in 400f., 200f., 100f., 50f., and 10.00f

In the course of the day the usual gangs of dissolute and disorderly men who assemble outside the barriers on Sundays, were more numerous and more turbulent than usual, and so much so in some places as to require a military force to overawe them. They made no resistance, however, and scampered off at the approach of the Mobile and Municipal Guards and Gendarmes

The short extempore speech of Louis Napoleon, in the National Assembly on Monday, was on Tuesday the subject of comment by the ultra-Republican journals with much severity. "Asan orator," say all the Republican commentators, "he proves once more unhappy, never was failure more decisive" The National, whose democratic principles accord in no respect with those of the ultra-Republicans, observed, in terms in which the absence of civility and good nature are remarkable—"To render the miserable exhibition complete, it only required the presence of the electors who returned M. Louis Bonaparte." Even the foreign German accent of the Prince was ridiculed.

During the week, the most contradictory reports continued to prevail as to the determination of General Cavaignac with respect to the Ministry. According to some persons, the Ministerial crisis was for the present adjourned; others asserted that MM Dufaure and Vivien were forthwith to join the Cabinet; while others again said that General Cavaignac and the rest of the Republican party determined to retire. The entry of MM. Dufaure and Vivien into the Ministry would raise a tempest among the Republicans de la veille, with whom the former especially was so favourable. The latter would then be brought forward the motion for the dotation of the Duke of Nemours, which was the cause of the fall of the Ministry of which he was a member. M. Vivien was Prefect of Police under the Orleans dynasty when he was succeeded backwards and forwards by the office of Minister of Justice and Keeper of the Seals. One thing certain was, that the difference between Count Molé and M. Thiers on the subject of the amount of support that ought to be given to the present Government, was calculated greatly to strengthen the position of General Cavaignac. M. Thiers thought that, as the parties now in power had brought upon themselves their present difficulties, they ought to be left to extricate themselves from the mire; while Count Molé, with more patriotism, declared that, for the sake of the country, nothing should be done at the present momentous and critical period to weaken the Government, which was the only bulwark against anarchy and disorder. A split of this kind between the most important personages of the Opposition must necessarily strengthen the Government. The alleged declaration of General Cavaignac that he would not be a candidate for the election of President of the Republic, and the increasing probability that Prince Louis Napoleon will be nominated, were the chief subjects of conversation in political circles towards the close of the week

General Cavaignac's known loyauté was a pledge for the correctness of the report that he will remain in office until the choice of President. It was added, however, that he recommended that the election should take place as soon as possible (some already name the 15th of November). The Committee of the Constitution concur in General Cavaignac's view of the expediency of terminating with allspeed the provisional system that now obtains. At a recent meeting of that committee, they summoned before them the various representatives who had given notice of their intention to propose amendments to the draft of the Constitution, and representing to those members the great inconvenience that would arise from the discussion of the number of new points and questions involved in these amendments, prevailed on them to reserve them until the discussion of the organic laws. It was considered probable, therefore, that the Constitution would be voted and revised by the end of the present month.

On the subject of Prince Louis Napoleon's election for the Presidency of the Republic, it is understood that returns to Government from the departments, sent by letter to the representatives of all the constituencies of France, concur in showing that 60 of the 86 departments of which the Republic consists are in his favour.

NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

MONDAY. To-day's proceedings were of considerable interest, though no speeches of any particular superiority were delivered.

At the commencement of the sitting several amendments were proposed with the view of modifying in various ways the mode of electing the President defined in the project of the Constitution. These were severally rejected, after very little discussion, and then, finally, the 43d article, declaring that the President shall be elected by universal suffrage, by ballot, and by an absolute majority, was carried by a majority of 627 against 130

Art. 44 was then discussed, which is to the following effect :—That if no candidate shall obtain more than half the entire number of votes delivered, the National Assembly shall elect, by ballot, one of the five candidates who shall be highest on the poll This was finally rejected, but an amendment in the original article was also adopted, which substituted two millions of votes as the lowest number which can render the election valid, for three millions, as proposed in the project.

The article 42, which had been postponed, declaring that the President must be a native of France and a French citizen, was then debated. M. Anthony Thouret proposed an addition to this, excluding every member of the Royal and Imperial families. This was opposed by the members of the Committee, and supported by MM. de Ladre and Reynaud. In the midst of this part of the debate, Louis Napoleon Bonaparte entered the House, and, ascending the tribune, protested against the name of pretender, which was continually fixed upon him He declared that he assumed no character except the honourable one of the nominee of 200,000 French citizens, who had not also returned him. The speaker's manner and style of expression were peculiarly infelicitous, and the speech, short as it was, was considered a complete failure. M. Thouret's amendment was, with some others to the same effect, put to the vote and severally rejected, M. Louis Bonaparte abstaining from voting. Article 42 of the Committee was therefore adopted.

"Art. 43. The President of the Republic is elected for four years, and is not re-eligible until after an interval of four years," was next read, and, after the rejection of some amendments, adopted, and the Assembly rose.

TUESDAY.—M. Bixio, one of the Vice-Presidents, took the chair at a quarter to one.

The President: The tribune is to M. Pie Bonaparte, relative to the minutes of yesterday's sitting. (Marks of curiosity.)

M Pierre Bonaparte: I have demanded permission to speak, in order that it may be well known here and elsewhere, that in this Assembly there are not pretenders, but representatives of the people, who have given to the democratic Republic an oath of fidelity, while they will never violate. (Hear, hear.) They will not suffer that a qualification be given to them which is equivalent to that of hypocrite and traitor. (Movement.) I declare that I regard here as a pretender to a monopoly of insolence, and as a false brother, whatever man shall dare to think fit to brand me with his colleagues. (Agitation.)

The matter then dropped.

The order of the day was the discussion on the various propositions brought forward relative to crédit foncier (a system of paper-money founded on real property).

After a confused conversation on the mode of conducting the discussion, the priority was given to the proposition of MM. Turck and Prudhon.

The project was attacked with great force and ability by MM Thiers and Léon Faucher. The former declared that to compare this project with the assignats of the old Revolution would be a foul slander on the latter; to vote the measure then under discussion, would be equivalent to voting the immediate ruin of the country. M. Léon Faucher maintained that the project would be tantamount to inflation, and would lead to bankruptcy and ruin.

The Minister of Finance also opposed it, and took occasion to make a statement on the state of the French Treasury, which he represented to be satisfactory.

Ultimately the debate was adjourned, and the Assembly rose.

WEDNESDAY.—The debate on the crédit foncier was resumed, and, after several members had spoken, cries of "Encore !" arose from all sides, and the President having consulted the Assembly, the general discussion was closed.

The Minister of Finance then asked that it should not proceed with the discussion of the articles; and upwards of twenty members having demanded a division, the operation immediately commenced, and gave the following result :—

Number of Voters	...	...	788
Absolute Majority	...	...	395
For the Discussion	...	...	210
Against it	...	...	578

[illegible] was accordingly rejected

The Assembly after wards resumed, without any discussion, the law of the 16th July, 1832, which banished the family of Napoleon from the French territory

M. Schœrd rext rose, and laid on the table a project of decree destined to provide, during the six winter months, for the indigent population of Paris. The Minister proposed to the Assembly to authorise the city of Paris to contract a loan of 6,000,000f., and to vote a subvention of 3,0,000f. per month, or 3,000,000f., for the same object.

SPAIN

The Madrid journals of the 6th inst. state that four encounters had taken place in the Maestrazgo between the Royalist troops and the insurgents, in which the latter lost several killed, and amongst them some chiefs of note. According to the Clamor Publico, Cabrera was on the 29th ult. at Vidra, collecting his forces, with a view, no doubt, to some fresh coup-de-main.

Next month the Duchess of Montpensier will come to Madrid for a short time. The Palace of San Juan is to be made ready for her.

ITALIAN STATES.

PIEDMONT, LOMBARDY, &c.—Accounts from Turin, of the 6th, state that on the 26th ult. an attack had begun on the part of the Austrians upon the fort of Malghera, near Venice. Osopo not only resisted, but harassed the enemy by frequent sallies

The King of Sardinia had named Durando, lately in the service of his Holiness, his aide-de-camp, as also Major-General Bossi. By a decree of the 1st ult. Charles Albert has also instituted, in the town of Racconis, a General Intendance office. By another decree of the 30th ult. he convokes the electoral colleges of the Duchy of Piacenza for the 10th inst. The park of artillery that was at Sackbieu has arrived at Casale San Giovanni. A proclamation by General Wimpfen, published at Milan on the 4th, after reciting that a prisoner had been rescued from the hands of a patrol by a crowd of people, reminds the population that any act of the sort will be punished by immediate death.

Letters from Venice state that M. Rigaudi, who commands the French squadron in that port, composed of the Jupiter, of 86 guns, the Pyche frigate, and the steam-boat Fulton, had not yet received approval of the Commander of the Austrian fleet that he would not permit any attack to be made on Venice The Austrian squadron was composed of 3 frigates, 3 corvettes, 3 brigs, 6 large war steam-boats, and 12 smaller ones, belonging to the Austrian Lloyd's Company

TUSCANY.—On the 30th ult., at Leghorn, there was a meeting in the cathedral of a large number of the citizens, the clergy, and of the municipality and the Chamber of Commerce, when the following resolutions were passed :—

The inhabitants of Leghorn wish to remain, as they have always remained, united to the Tuscan nation, and faithful to constitutional principles.

They desire to obtain from the Executive Power an amnesty for all, whether military or civil.

The Ministry should resign and Guerrazzi and Montanelli should be called into office.

A deputation will be sent to Florence with these propositions, protesting that if they are not accepted, the inhabitants will act in conscience and right they are entitled to do, and should they deem it advisable, will send a manifesto, which will contain an account of all that has passed, to all the Courts of Europe.

A Committee of Public Safety shall be appointed.

In accordance with these resolutions, a deputation was despatched to Florence; which returned on the 4th Instant, and at half-past four o'clock appeared at the palace of the Commons, before an immense crowd of the inhabitants. The Gonfaloniere Bargagli, one of the members of the Consulta Ferri, addressed the multitude, and said : "We have presented to the Ministers the instructions which we received from the people of Leghorn. All our demands have been accorded by the Grand Duke. We have, in fact, been informed that our fellow-citizen Guerrazzi, as governor of our town; but having learnt that this nomination would meet with many obstacles, we thought of the Professor Montanelli, which has been graciously accepted by the Government. He has accepted the functions of Governor, on condition that he should be allowed to increase the Municipal Guard as he might require it, and to recognise the National Guard, and also to take the requisite measures."

A great number of the people still wished for Guerrazzi, but in the end the meeting agreed to accept of Montanelli, who is now at Leghorn.

NAPLES AND SICILY.—Accounts have been received from Naples to the 29th Palermo to the 23rd, and Messina to the 22nd. Naples was tranquil. The Government was indignant at the firmness with which the French and English Admirals prohibited any further bombardment of the Sicilian towns. At Messina, it was generally supposed that a proposition to re-establish the King's second son, with a liberal constitution, as King of Sicily, would be accepted by the Chamber at Palermo. It was said that the basis of the affair, Messina was hemmed in by a cordon of Sicilian troops; an engagement had taken place, in which after some fighting, the Neapolitans were driven back into the town. The Neapolitan Government were actively organising the defences of Pa[illegible]

GERMAN STATES.

FRANKFORT.—The Regent of Germany has addressed a decree to the German Governments, in which he informs them of his intention to appoint Commissioners of the Empire, who are to be his own special delegates in the various camps which have been formed for the effectual repression of anarchical movements in Germany. These Commissioners represent the Regent's Government, and are invested with extraordinary powers.

An animated debate took place, in the sitting of the German Parliament of the 5th inst., on a Ministerial motion respecting the prosecution and the arrest of some members of the House. The Parliament was asked to empower the Criminal Court to open proceedings against Messrs. Blum and Günther, the editors of the Rechtings Zeitung, and to decree the arrest of Messrs. Zitz, Simon (of the Trèves), and Schöffel, who stand accused of having fomented the late insurrection. The House proceeded, on the motion of Mr. Simson, to elect a committee, who are to examine the case, and to make their report accordingly.

Mr. Donelson, the United States Ambassador at Frankfort, had delivered his credentials to the Regent of Germany. Mr Donelson assured the Regent of the sincere sympathy and the interest which the United States felt for the reconstitution of Germany, and of the confidence with which the Regent's personal character inspired the Americans

HANOVER.—Strife, and the other members of the "Provisional Government of Germany," have been conveyed to the prison of Bruchsal. They will be shortly followed by the 76 other prisoners.

HANOVER.—The Minister of Justice in Hanover has imitated the example of the Prussian one, and has hastened to publish the circular of the Central Assembly, wherein the respective authorities to be zealous in repressing all abuses of the press, and of the liberty of speech at public meetings.

PRUSSIA.

Accounts from Berlin mention some new outrages of the Radical Berlin mob, which assembled on the 8th inst., tied the new statute for the Civic Guards, which had ordered the displacement to the rear of the ranks, and paraded in the poor animal through the streets. Men with Prussian flags went before the donkey, and followed after it, while the crowd accompanied the procession with deafening cheers. A halt was made on the Gendarmen-markt, opposite to the entrance to the Prussian House of Parliament, where they burned the document. Some insisted on the ass being stirred with the Prussian flags, but this last outrage was prevented by another party, who cried out that the regent of the Prussian States would take very much amiss the Lindau Club, though they were originally the promoters of this disgraceful exhibition. Some detachments of Civic Guards appeared while these nuisances were being perpetrated, but they did not interfere. The police did all they could to disperse the crowd, but they were quickly knocked down and disarmed.

The Club of the Civic Guards have published a document, which is addressed to the National Assembly. It is not a petition, nor is it a remonstrance—it is a motion from out of doors, to the effect that General Wrangel should be removed from his post as Commander-in-Chief. The Berlin democrats have changed their regard for the "brave Wrangel," now they see that he is a traitor, since their defeat at Frankfort, the German democrats look now to Berlin, where they flatter themselves with a hope of assistance from the people. A Congress of the German democrats to be held at Berlin on the 26th of the month, and the opening of another Congress, of all the opposition members of the various German Parliaments, will take place also at Berlin on the 27th. The sittings will last three days, and their decisions will rest on the steps to be taken for the formation of a new German Parliament. The opposition party in the German Parliament have sent letters of invitation to all members of other Houses who have declared for the last, to meet at Berlin on the above-named day.

The Vicar of the Empire had sent to require Prussia to withdraw her Ambassadors and Representatives to foreign countries. Prussia has refused to accede to this request.

The following is the motion of M. Rodbertus, passed by the Constituent Assembly on the 3rd:—"The National Assembly declares that it has unalterably resolved, that, in conformity with the law of the 28th of June (Frankfort), relative to the establishment of a Provisional Central Power, his Majesty's Government will strenuously, and, as in duty bound, co-operate with the Provisional Central Power and German National Assembly in all such resolutions as they may adopt in regard to the threatened complications of the Danish question."

A message from the Crown, proposing to convert into law the decree for an augmentation on certain articles of foreign manufacture, has been sent down to the Chamber. The articles named in the new tariff are:—1. Silk goods, hosiery, shawls, blonde, lace, gauze, pasmantery, buttons, and all similar articles composed of silk or cotton; spun or twisted goods, or cords of metal or silk thread; gold and silver stuffs, real or imitated; these articles, whether partly or entirely of silk; and, in general, all articles, of no matter what denomination, composed of silk; on them the duty is to be 110 rix dollars per cwt. (centner). 2. All articles of the above kind mixed with wool or hair, linen, thread, or cotton, 55 rix dollars per cwt. 3. Plaid camlets, and all other articles of yarn or wool and silk, 8 rix dollars per cwt. 4. Printed goods of all kinds, 90 rix dollars, &c. The increased duty to be taken at about 100 per cent upon every manufactured article containing any portion of silk, cotton, wool, &c. (not including linens.) It is proposed that the bill shall have effect until the 31st of December, and, should anything occur to war rant an alteration, that the Minister shall be empowered to prolong the action of the measure so long as the Government may think necessary. Belgium, it is said, has conceded on prolonging an exemption to her from the above. The Minister of Justice has declared in the Assembly that an amnesty was in contemplation for the political offenders in Posen and at Trèves.

AUSTRIA

The Vienna papers of the 1st inst. publish some detailed extracts from the correspondence between Jellalich, the Ban of Croatia, and Count Latour, the Austrian Secretary at War. It appears from these letters that large sums of money (the amount is not stated) were forwarded to Jellalich, in one of these letters, "I have received 21 letters from the Emperor's own hand, but to no great grief I could not obey his Majesty's commands. Now, if the Emperor were to send me another lot of 21 letters, persuading me by tears to do such a thing, I should turn a deaf ear to all of them. His Majesty has at last approved of my plans; but, even if this were not the case, I know that Austria must succeed. The scheme should fail, gentlemen (viz. the Austrian Ministers), may survive the catastrophe, but I will not."

And in another letter, it is said, "promises were made to me of regular pay for my troops, after I should have crossed the Hungarian frontier." In the sitting of the Austrian Diet of the 30th ult., Count Latour was asked what he knew of the letter. His reply was to the effect that he had received many letters from the Ban, and that the Ministry had determined not to send him any assistance as long as the Hungarian Cabinet were not in open rebellion; that no pay had been given to the Croatian troops, but that 200,000 florins had been sent to pay the Austrian regiments

Advices from Vienna to the 5th state that the Emperor had entrusted the Baron Adam Recsey (Lieutenant-Captain of the Hungarian Life Guards) with the task of forming a new Ministry in Pesth. The latter had accepted the mission a difficult and dangerous one His Imperial Majesty had also issued a rescript addressed to the Hungarian Diet.

The Emperor, after greeting the members of the Diet, expresses his displeasure at their illegal proceedings and illegal resolutions (under the influence of Kossuth and his adherents), and at their hostile decision respecting the mission of Count Lamberg—a decision which led to the assassination of that Royal commissioner. The Emperor then decrees the immediate dissolution of the Diet and the illegality of all its resolutions not sanctioned by him; appoints Jellalich Generalissimo—Chief of all the troops and armed corps of Hungary and the allied kingdoms; places Hungary under martial law, nominates the above nobleman as his Royal commissioner and plenipotentiary; declares that whatever that personage shall ordain, arrange, determine upon, and order, shall be considered as done by his Royal self; and commands all persons in authority to obey the Ban of Croatia as implicitly as they would the King of Hungary. The Emperor next instructs the Ban to take steps for speedily ending with the utmost severity of the laws the assailants and murderers of Count Lamberg; and holds out the prospect of a future Congress of the representatives of the various portions of the Monarchy, for the purpose of arranging their respective interests.

The funeral of the unfortunate Count Lamberg took place on the 5th, at Vienna. The Archduke Francis Charles and his family were among the mourners.

The capital is in a state of considerable excitement relative to the war between the Croatians and Hungarians, each of the two belligerent nations having many partisans here. The ultra-democratic portion of the population is in favour of the Hungarians, partly on account of their former revolutionary position in the Austrian Assembly. On the other hand, many take a dispassionate view of the question, and, whilst blaming the court party for the weakness and instability of their policy both towards Hungary and Croatia, contend that the latter has many real founded complaints against the former, and that it is now battling for rights and liberties which the Magyars, after having obtained them for themselves, refuse to share with the Croatians and the other races of Hungary. There are not wanting, however, parties of no small influence, who look both on the Magyar and the Croatian leaders, if not with equa. aversion, at least with equal suspicion, and who live as much in dread of a coup-de-main against Austria on the side of the calculating Jellalich, as on that of the fiery Kossuth. In fact, whilst considering the Magyar movement as the more imminent danger, they do not regard a pan-Schavonic insurrection as a remote one.

HUNGARY

The report that the two brothers, Counts Zichy, had been hanged as traitors in the Hungarian camp, is confirmed. Compromising letters from Jellalich and the Archduchess Sophia were found in their possession. The two brothers were allied by marriage with Prince Metternich.

Count Lamberg, whom the Emperor had appointed Military Governor of Hungary, arrived at Ofen the very day on which the Hungarian Diet refused to recognise the appointment. He assembled the officers of the National Guard, however, and read his commission, but they refused to obey him. Large crowds assembled, and men with muskets, scythes, and axes ran through the streets in search of the unhappy Count. Lamberg, in disguise, but in vain, tried to elude identified by the mob, they surrounded him, stabbed him, and mutilated the body with scythes and axes. When the news of his death became known, the Diet met and remembered its matter. The resolutions of the morning was again enacted, and a Provisional Government appointed, of which Batthyani and Kossuth are the leading members

Authentic accounts from Pesth represent the Magyar population as completely frantic under the inspiration of Kossuth, who is hurrying from one place to another in order to preach up a crusade not only against his immediate foes, but against Austria Proper. The spirit of animosity to Kossuth's adherents is nearly as intense amongst the troops of Jellalich. A faithful report of the "business transacted" would certainly be a curiosity of literature.

The Croatians have been defeated in one, if not two partial encounters, but by a masterly combination for the furtherance of which, probably, Jellalich had sought the short truce which followed the armistice of the 29th, Ban has reached Wisselburg (after occupying Raab), which is only some ten German miles from Vienna, and where he has a better chance of receiving reinforcements from that capital than if he were in the vicinity of the Platten Lake. This movement, however, on his part shows that he has not deemed it prudent or possible to advance on Ofen-Pesth, a movement which frequently appears in Austrian journals, which avoid giving the Hungarian name Raab. Should Prussburg not into the possession of the imperial troops (up to latest accounts it was still in the hands of the Magyars), the Danube will be turned to account by Jellalich in the obtaining of supplies. It appears that no has already seized upon a large quantity of provender in Wissel burg, in which there is an important entrepôt for Hungarian corn, &c. It continues to leave Vienna for the Croatian camp, large export of weapons or any kind is forbidden. According to the Pesth Gazette, the Magyars are daily reinforced by deserters from the Hungarian regiments in Gallicia, Styria, and even Austria Proper.

It is calculated that in a few days some 40,000 additional troops will be dispatched to the aid of Jellalich. Even with this reinforcement he will be numerically weaker than his antagonists, the Landsturm, or general levy of the Magyars, furnishing countless numbers to Kossuth The Wallachian inhabitants of the principality of Siebenbürgen are making diversions in favour of the former. Gallicia, on the northern frontier of Hungary, is quiet. Troops still remains in Pesth, all the others having taken up their quarters in various places, in order to keep alive the enthusiasm of their partisans.

On the 4000 Croatian troops left the camp at Brück, on the Leitha, for Wiesselburg, in order to join the Croatians. Lieutenant Field-Marshal Buritz has advanced at the head of 4000 men from Grätz, towards the Platten Lake, and has placed himself under the orders of the Ban; moreover, 5,000 Imperial troops have marched from Moravia into Upper Hungary. Austrian troops are also pouring in from Cracow, where only a small garrison remains, the Government meeting now more apprehensive of the insurgent Magyars than the discontented Poles.

SWITZERLAND.

Accounts from Berne state that the envoy of the Vicar of the German Empire had sent, on the evening of the 4th inst., a note to the Federal Government of Switzerland, charging it with having favored the intrigues of the German Republican refugees, and demanding that the Government of the Confederation would be the organisation of the corps franc, and from the territory of which their invasion has taken place, shall proceed, without delay, to a serious inquiry, and punishment of the Germans in the Canton of Schaffhausen, that all the refugees shall be immediately disarmed, and that if the sending them entirely out of the canton shall be unconstitutional, they shall be sent to a convenient distance from the German frontiers, and not allowed to return under the penalty of death; that it be declared in a positive manner what guarantees can be given that such events, calculated to destroy the germs of liberty in Germany, shall not again occur. If these demands be not attended to, with the shortest possible delay, the Government of the Vicar of the Empire, impressed with the conviction that it assures his fate and not against liberty, and that it will have to take energetic measures, not the Swiss people, but those who despise law and civil station, will take all the requisite means, justified by the above-mentioned violations of the rights of nations, and required by the honour of Germany.—(Signed) FRANC. RAVEAUX de Berne, Oct. 4, 1848.

The Federal Directory replied on the 6th instant to the note of M. Raveaux. In its reply it complains of the terms employed by the central power. "The note of M. Raveaux," it says, "has no parallel by the federal archives; it indicates in a fatal manner the connexion between Switzerland and reconstituted Germany." The directory then defends the central governments against the reproaches addressed to them by M. Raveaux. "It is not in Switzerland, nor in the Grand Duchy of Baden itself that the late insurrection was prepared; a very few insurgents took part in it. The directory will take no steps against the functionaries of whom M. Raveaux speaks until a special case shall have been made out authorising an inquiry. The few insurgents who took part in the insurrection have already been deprived of the right of asylum, and all the others have been placed under the surveillance of the police. But the directory must observe that the gravest reproaches should be addressed to the Government of the Grand Duchy of Baden, which has not yet replied with dignity to the last expressions of the note of M. Raveaux, by declaring that the Confederation would respect the right, but would, at the same time, repel all menacing language from whatever quarter it proceeded."

DENMARK AND THE DUCHIES.

The Provisional Government of Schleswig-Holstein (Hesler, Reventlow, Schmidt, and Bremer) have taken up their official abode in Schleswig, "important state reasons" having compelled them, reluctantly, to quit the territory of Rendsburg. Nothing certain is known as yet respecting the future members of the new Government, but it is understood that all but final arrangements with regard to the modifications of the conditions of the truce are completed between the Danish Commissioner (Von Reedtz) and the representatives of the central Executive in Frankfort, Herr Stedtmann and Herr Francke. The latter has left Kiel for the above free city.

According to the Kiel journals, the new Government ad interim (the one which will replace the Provisional Government of the Anti-Danish Schleswig Holstein one), and the "Target Commission" to ask for a Bund will be composed of the following individuals:—Preusser, Boysen, Von Helmz, and Reventlow, their fifth colleague and President to be selected by them from a list of names drawn up by the Kings of Denmark and Prussia. It is not unlikely that before long the negotiations for the final conclusion of peace will be commenced in London.

UNITED STATES

By the Royal mail steam-ship Europa we have advices this week from New York to the 27th ult.

Notwithstanding the published declaration of Mr. Clay that he declined being nominated for the Presidency, a section of the Whigs had held a meeting on the 20th, for the purpose of putting him in nomination. The meeting was disorderly and separated, in consequence, without coming to a decision.

A letter from General Taylor to the independent Taylor party in Baltimore, soon after the adjustment of the Philadelphia Convention, had appeared in the newspapers. It was worded in a very independent and candid style.

The "gold excitement" still continues, and California seems to realise the old dreams of El Dorado.

MEXICO.

By the accounts received this week there is very little intelligence from Mexico. The Government appears to sustain itself with efficiency. Herrera had issued orders providing for the transportation of Mexican citizens who may reside in the country ceded to the United States to any point of the Republic, free of expense

We learn from Yucatan, that, in consideration of supplies furnished to the army, the Government has granted to certain merchants of Merida and Campeachy the monopoly of the importation of flour into the ports of that state.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE

We have news from the Cape of Good Hope to the 5th August, from which we learn that Major Warden, who is stationed at Bloem Fontein, with 57 soldiers and 42 civilians, had found himself obliged to surrender his post to the insurgent leader Pretorius, and to withdraw beyond Orange River.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

CHARING-CROSS HOSPITAL.—On Tuesday afternoon a meeting of the Governors and Committee of Management of the above Hospital was held in the boardroom of the institution, — Taylor, Esq., in the chair. During the quarter ending Sept. 30 there had been admitted 338 in- and 3350 out-patients. The recorded cases there had been 547, of which 77 had been received into the wards, in all departments being a great increase over the preceding quarter The report proceeded to state that, during the past year, 12,262 indigent sick poor had been relieved, of whom 1155 had been in, and 11,037 had been out-patients; the whole cost of these had been only £2292 4s. 11d. Of the number of out-patients no fewer than 10,400 were freely admitted without any recommendation. Two large wards are unoccupied, the present resources of the Hospital being much too limited for the full exercise of its useful operations, and the increasing applications for relief. The total number of patients since 1818 had amounted to 140,000 persons

CHRIST CHURCH, HUDDERSFIELD. This beautiful new church was consecrated on Tuesday. A handsome service of Sacramental Plate has been presented by a munificent resident of the district: it consists of seven pieces; the flagon is of hexagonal form, enriched with Gothic ornaments, and the paten and collecting plates have quatrefoil embellishments, with suitable inscriptions. The whole is very creditable to the manufacturers, Messrs. Angell, of Clerkenwell

CITY COMMISSIONERS OF SEWERS. APPOINTMENT OF A MEDICAL OFFICER. On Tuesday the Commissioners assembled at Guildhall. Deputy Peacock in the chair. The report of a select committee, to which the resolution for appointing a medical officer for the City had been submitted, was read. It stated that the Gen mittee were of opinion that it was highly desirable no time should be lost in providing for the appointment. They therefore recommended that the Court of Sewers should meet specially on Monday, the 16th of October, for the purpose of selecting two gentlemen to be returned to the Court of Common Council, as provided by the resolution of that Court." The resolution was agreed to EAST SURREY REGISTRATION.—Mr. Fish, the revising barrister, sat on Tuesday, at the Surrey Hall, Camberwell, for the purpose of revising the list of voters in the parishes of Christchurch, Camberwell, and Newington, and the hamlet of Hatcham. Mr. Meymott attended as Conservative agent, and Messrs. Russell, Evans, and Corner appeared for the Liberals. The parish of Camberwell alone were eight objections by the Conservatives, but none of them could be entertained, on account of the notices of objection being informal, by reason of their not having been delivered in the manner prescribed with the recognisance in the City of London. The remainder of the list was then gone through, and the Court adjourned.

SAINT GEORGE'S IN THE EAST (CHRIST CHURCH DISTRICT.) A most interesting ceremony took place on Thursday last, upon the occasion of opening a new school for 700 children, situated in Johnson-street, Commercial-road. It is a beautiful structure, and built entirely through the indefatigable exertions of the Rev. William Quekett, the Incumbent of Christ Church, Watney street, who has laboured incessantly (for the last eighteen years) for the advancement of education and bettering the condition of the poorer classes in this parish. Previous to the opening of the school, the first stone of a new church (directly opposite) was laid in the presence of the committee, several noblemen, many Clergymen, and a large concourse of persons; after which upwards of one hundred of the company dined together in the new school-room, at which Lord Robert Grosvenor, M.P., presided, when a large sum was subscribed for the laudable purpose of benefitting the funds of the "Christ Church District Schools." We shall embrave the building next week.

INDUSTRIAL ESTABLISHMENT FOR YOUNG FEMALES. On Monday a report was made by the committee of management of this institution, situate in Henrietta, Brook-street, New-road, of its progress. The establishment was commenced in April last. Amongst those admitted, there are at present 12 young ladies in the school whose ages vary from twelve to nineteen years; among these are some whose characters were of the most depraved and abandoned description, several of the elder having been imprisoned for various periods, from ten to fourteen times. Since the reception of the asylum, not one has returned to their old haunts or associates, but compete the daily work assigned them with readiness and cheerfulness, and observe the religious services which are daily performed. The inmates are employed in sheemaking, hair-picking, &c. A girl's establishment, on similar principles, has been commenced, a member of the institution having granted temporary accommodation in his house for such cases as have come under the notice of a committee.

GREAT FIRE AT CHELSEA.—On Wednesday, a most destructive fire broke out shortly after four o'clock, in the steam-flour mills, belonging to Mr. Phillip Holland, situate at Stanley-bridge, King's-road, Chelsea, which was not extinguished until some thousand pounds' worth of property was completely destroyed. The premises were about 40 feet wide, five or six stories high, and between 20 and 30 feet deep. They were fitted up with costly machinery, and it is understood that there were no fewer than six pairs of mill-stones in the building, besides an immense quantity of flour, corn, &c. The policeman who was on duty in the neighborhood first noticed the fire, and gave the alarm; but before a sufficient force could be got on the spot, the flames shot through the windows, and ascended in vast bodies to the top of the building. With all possible expedition the engines of the parish and those of the Royal Hospital, and the neighbouring garrison, were brought from the New road, the Queen's-road, and the Kings-road, engines, started to the scene of conflagration, with their chief officers and a powerful body of firemen. Upon arriving, the entire building was in a blaze, and the most powerful and continuous streams of water that every possible exertion was made to master the conflagration, floor after floor, as they became weakened by the action of the fire, were forced down by the weight of the machinery piled upon them, so that, in less than two hours after the first discovery was made, the whole of the costly contents of the mill were nearly consumed. By eight o'clock the flames were extinguished, but not before the whole of the machinery, flour, corn, and everything else contained in the mills were reduced to ashes. The total loss is very considerable, probably £6000, and, it is said, unfortunately Mr. Holland was uninsured. How the fire originated could not be ascertained

BIRTHS, MARRIAGES, &c., FOR THE WEEK ENDING OCT. 7.—The number of births registered during the week ending last Saturday was 1273; of which 649 were males, and 631 females. This number exceeds that of the preceding week by 66. The number of deaths during the same period was 1065, of which 502 were males, and 563 females. This number is 49 less than the weekly average for the last five autumns, and 252 less than the number for the preceding week. It will also be seen that the births for the week exceed the deaths by 208. Under particular heads, there is still a considerable excess. The deaths from small-pox were 31 (average 19). Scarlatina, 160 (average 47). diarrhœa, 54 (average 31). Dysentery, 12 (average 6). Cholera, 14 (average 7). Typhus 65 (average 50). Erysipelas, 12 (average 9). On the other hand the deaths from measles have been only 17 (average 44) Consumption, 88 (average 134). Hydrocephalus, 17 (average 32). Cephalitis, 3 (average 12). Apoplexy, 26 (average 24). Paralysis, 15 (average 20). Convulsions, 25 (average 49). Disease of the heart, 29 (average 35). Bronchitis, 32 (average 61). Pneumonia, 58 (average 144). Asthma, 6 (average 20). Other diseases of the lungs, 9 (average 15) The following are the causes of cholera recorded. It will be seen that one only is mentioned as decidedly Asiatic cholera, the others being only resembling it:—In Old-street (sub-district), St. Luke, at 39, Rahere-street, wife of a gentleman, 39 years, "disease of the bowels, simulating Asiatic cholera (thirty-eight hours' duration)." In south sub-district, in West London, F., 37 years, "cholera (thirteen hours' duration)." In St. Bartholomew's Hospital, West London, M., about 40 years, "cholera." In town (sub-district), Bethnal-green, at No. 4, Cheshire-street, a weaver, F., 21 years, "enlargement of the heart (12 months' duration)," cholera, spasmodic (12 hours). In Spitalfields, Whitechapel, M., 25 years, "cholera (10 hours' duration)." In Whitechapel North, a girl, 4 years, "English sporadic cholera (7 days' duration)." In St. Pancras (sub-district), St. George-in-the-East, M. 33 years, "cholera (2 days' duration)." In Mile-end Old-town, Tower Hamlets, M. 47 years, "cholera (36 hours' duration)." Mr. Castleden the registrar's note:—"Mr. Todd, the surgeon in this case, certifies that the above was a case of Asiatic cholera; and the information I have obtained at times—drainage to houses very bad. Scarlatina has been very prevalent there." In Rotherhithe, a boy 11 years, "cholera 19 hours' duration." In same sub-district, F., 28 years "cholera 24 hours' duration." In same sub-district, a girl two years, "cholera—two days' duration." In Greenwich West (sub-district), F., 37 years, "cholera—4 days' duration."

THE AUCKLAND ISLANDS AND THE SOUTHERN WHALE FISHERIES.

THE Auckland Islands, familiarly designated "Lord Auckland's group," have lately acquired considerable importance, owing to a grant of them having been made by the Crown, in furtherance of a project for re-establishing the British Southern Whale Fisheries by prosecuting them on an extensive scale from thence, upon a plan adapted to the altered circumstances of the trade and calculated to ensure its success. The grantees are Messrs. Ende by, the well-known merchants; Mr. Charles Endesby, the head of that firm, being the originator of the project in question.

In the matter, independent of its undoubted mercantile advantages, is invested with special interest on public grounds. We think the present opportune to present to our readers the accompanying views, and a descriptive account of the seat of the future Whaling Colony.

The Auckland Group, situated in the latitude of 51° south, and longitude of 166° east, consists of an island of about the size of the Isle of Wight, and of several smaller islets by which the chief one is surrounded, and from which it is separated by narrow channels, navigable in some cases by boats only. The group is distant between 800 and 900 miles from Van Diemen's Land, and not more than 160 from the southernmost point of New Zealand; so that the proposed Whaling Colony will be in the vicinity of places from which it may obtain any necessary supplies of produce beyond that which its own soil may be made to yield; while, on the other hand, its demands must create a valuable neighbour to them, more especially as the settlement lately founded at Otago Bay. The Auckland Islands remained unknown to Cook, though he penetrated many degrees beyond their latitude; and the honour of their discovery, which took place in 1806, is reserved for Captain Bristow, in the whaling ship Ocean, belonging to the late Samuel Enderby, Esq.—sons—the present grantees—now design them to subserve the same purpose to which their father devoted the Falklands.

In the year after their discovery, Captain Bristow again visited the islands in the whaling ship Sarah, the property of the same owner, and then took possession of them in the name of the British Crown; leaving at the same time some domestic pigs, whose descendants now run wild there, and are said to be very numerous. Since Bristow's time, the islands, owing to their convenient situation and many natural advantages, have been much frequented by the whaling ships of various nations; for, though unestablished, they offer to the sailor commodious harbours—an abundance of good water and wood—a climate more than usually salubrious, though moist—and, what is of great importance, a sufficiency of fish.

The Aucklands were visited in succession, in the year 1840, by the ships of the French, Russian, French, and English South Polar Exploring Expeditions, under Wilkes, D'Urville, and Ross, who have each given some account of them in their respective narratives. These authorities, together with the scientific members of the three expeditions, agree in describing the islands as of volcanic formation, constituted chiefly of basalt and greenstone, and, although they slightly differ in some particulars, they nevertheless agree in the general statements made, which, on the whole, statements also more or less confirm a very favourable account of the islands which is contained in a work by an American adventurer named Morrell, who appears to have visited them in the year 1825, but whose veracity in regard to various other details of his alleged voyages is more than suspected. Of all these different accounts, however, that of our distinguished navigator, Captain Sir James Clarke Ross, must be considered the surest and most complete, because it is both the latest and the result of the longest observation of the islands, the vessels of the British expedition having remained there full three weeks; whereas the stay of the French and the American ships was not protracted beyond a few days. The French officers, with their usual activity and artistic skill, nevertheless found time to sketch six different views of the islands, and it is from these, which form part of the valuable collection of drawings published "After Extraordinary," appended to the late Admiral D'Urville's work, that the two now presented to our readers have been selected—the first being a view of part of the chief harbour (called indifferently "Rendezvous Harbour" and "the Bay of Sarah's Rescue") of Auckland (the largest) island; and the other of a natural grotto on Enderby Island, situated at the entrance of the harbour in question. Sir James Ross founded on the same islands, during the course of his visit, the northwest cape as "a very remarkable headland, with a rocky islet and a curious conical rock off it. He says "there is ample space for entering the harbour, and no concealed dangers, the belts of sea-weed, Macrocystis pyrifera and Laminaria, which line the shores and rocks, serving to point out the shallow and dangerous parts."

In a more particular description of the larger island, Sir James Ross states that it contains two principal harbours (that referred to and one to the south), whose entrances are both from the eastward, and whose heads or terminations retain within two or three miles of the western coast, and only five or six miles from each other. The upper part of the former, which is described as containing several secure anchorages, is called "Laurie Harbour;" and Captain Ross mentions that he was "so struck with the many advantages the place possesses for a penal settlement over every other he had heard named, to which to remove convicts from the surrounding colonies. One he addressed a letter on the subject to Sir John Franklin, on his return to Hobart Town, recommending its adoption."

THE AUCKLAND ISLANDS.

GROTTO ON ENDERBY ISLAND.

D'Urville, speaking of the harbour, says, "It is one of the finest that I know." Sir James Ross did not visit the southern harbour which he mentions, but states that masters of whalers have represented it to be capacious, and indented with coves affording good anchorage. Some officers of the French expedition made a boat excursion to it, but were prevented by unfavourable weather from examining it. They thus speak of that part of the east coast lying between the two harbours:—"These banks are very full of fish: the bottom is very regular, varying from 15 to 20 fathoms. The coast is indented with numerous creeks, surrounded by basaltic rocks, where boats can easily approach. Everywhere is found a mass of sea-weed extending to the shore."

A marked difference was perceived between the west and east coasts of the island; the former presenting towards the sea a line of bluff, perpendicular cliffs, with some high hills in the background; whereas, the latter, as described by D'Urville himself, exhibited "here and there a fine sandy beach, upon which the sea scarcely broke, and intersected by numerous streams and inlets." Mr. M'Cormick, the geologist who accompanied the British expedition, especially calls attention to "Dean Head," a promontory of Auckland Island, as being of great geological interest, exhibiting fine columns, three hundred feet high, which are highly magnetic. According to Sir James Ross, the loftiest hill, Mount Eden, in the S.W. of their anchorage, attains an elevation of 1300 feet, is rounded at the top, and clothed with grass to its summit; while another hill in the west rises nearly to 1000 feet.

"If ever," says M. Dubouzet, one of the French officers, in his journal, "the fine harbour (Laurie Harbour) of these islands and their temperate climate should attract colonists thither, this would be the most suitable point for the site of a town." Another, M. Jacquinot, says:—"The vast bay is encircled everywhere by elevated land, clothed with trees from the seaboard to the summit. The soil, of volcanic formation, is covered with a thick layer of vegetable débris, producing a vigorous growth of large ferns." And a third, M. Roquemarel, observes:—"The bay of Auckland Islands affords several safe and convenient anchorages; the various creeks which exist along its shores have each good fresh water and wood at hand; while line-fishing furnishes a valuable resource for the refreshment of the crews of vessels putting in."

Lieutenant Wilkes, the American commander, concludes a brief account of Laurie Harbour with the remark, that, "on the whole, it is a very desirable place at which to refit."

Mr. M'Cormick, Dr. Hooker (the botanist attached to the British Expedition), and Dr. Holmes (surgeon of one of the American vessels) all agree in their observations on the soil, which is described by the first as being "generally good, and composed of a rich black mould, in many places of considerable depth—the result of decomposition of the volcanic débris and a redundant vegetation so highly productive that it would render the islands well worth the attention of colonists." The same authority remarks, that "the climate, although somewhat humid and subject to heavy squalls, is, nevertheless, very healthy."

As regards the botany of the Auckland Islands, it is shown to be characteristic of New Zealand, though containing many new forms typical of the Antarctic regions. Dr. Hooker, who has published separately a very elaborate and interesting account of the botany of the voyage, under the title of "Flora Antarctica," remarks, in his notices of the Auckland Islands, embodied in Ross's narrative, that "the whole land seemed covered with vegetation, and a low forest skirts all the shores, succeeded by a broad belt of brushwood, above which, to the summits of the hills, extend grassy slopes."

Dr. Hooker mentions two highly-remarkable plants, very common near the sea, and constituting the favourite food of the wild hogs, viz. the Aretha polaris and the Pleurophyllum criniferum. In his "Flora Antarctica" he likewise speaks of two valuable kinds of grasses—one, the Festuca fulvosa, as "a grass of large growth, and very leafy, affording a rich and nutritious food for animals;" the other, the Poa ramosissima, as forming "a copious, soft, green herbage."

Respecting the zoology of these islands there is but little to observe. Until recently their only quadrupeds were mice and the wild pigs descended from the stock left by Bristow. Sir James Ross landed two rams and four ewes, some pigs, poultry, and rabbits; and the hens had already formed nests in well-concealed situations, and begun to lay before the expedition left. He also caused a variety of useful vegetable seeds to be sown in a spot cleared for the purpose, and a great many gooseberry and currant bushes, as well as raspberry and strawberry plants, to be distributed over the chief island.

As regards the ornithological branch, it appears to be limited to seven or eight species of land birds, all belonging to New Zealand (amongst which is the beautiful melodist the Tui), and to embrace a great variety of water birds. A large collection of insects of different kinds was made by the officers of the British expedition. There were no venomous reptiles; but the sand-flies were found troublesome, and their stings painful

With reference to the general fitness of the Auckland Islands for their destined purpose, Sir James Ross remarks, that "in the whole range of the vast Southern Ocean no spot could be found combining so completely the essential requisites for a fixed whaling station." And the Quarterly Review, for June, 1847, alludes to the subject in these terms:—"This little group is singularly adapted by position and other natural features to assist the revival of a most important, though at present to all appearance moribund department of British industry—the Southern Whale Fishery. We believe that few speculations will be found more sound, more profitable, and more congenial to our national habits, than that suggested by the present grantee of the Auckland Islands, which were discovered under his auspices."

Of the plan of operations itself, as developed in the very able pamphlet published by Mr. Enderby on the subject, it may be sufficient to state, that the fishery is to be carried on in ships of a much smaller, and, consequently, less expensive class than those at present equipped for it from Europe and America; whilst another distinguishing feature of the plan is, that these ships are not to be the carriers of their produce to England, but are merely to proceed with it to the station for the purpose of depositing it there in store for re-shipment in other vessels. For this latter object no particular class of ships is needed; ordinary freight-seeking ships will do, and of these there will always be a sufficient number available in the surrounding colonies. Besides the seamen constituting the whaling crews, the fishery would give employment to a considerable number of labourers and artisans on shore; who, with their families and the families of the sailors, would form a tolerably large community in themselves, and become the nucleus of an increasing population essentially maritime (like that of Newfoundland), yet at the same time not neglecting the cultivation of the soil.

Such, generally, appears to be the outline of the project. It is well observed in the prospectus, that "the results which it is capable of yielding may be estimated from the fact that the Americans find it worth their while to employ in the Southern Whale Fishery between 600 and 700 ships, manned by from 18,000 to 20,000 seamen." We are well pleased to find that her Majesty's Government has evinced every disposition to facilitate the projected enterprise; inasmuch as, independent of the concession already made of the islands, "the Board of Trade has expressed its willingness to recommend the grant of a Royal Charter of Incorporation to the proposed Company for carrying it into execution, limiting the liability of the shareholders to the amount of their several subscriptions;" and that, whilst Earl Grey has instructed the Governors of Australia, Van Diemen's Land, and New Zealand, to aid the success of the enterprise in any way they may be able, the Lords of the Admiralty have, on their part, transmitted a similar order to the commander of the squadron on the New Zealand station."

We, indeed, understood, at the time of the sailing of the Havanah ship-of-war, a few months since, to reinforce the squadron there, that the Lords of the Admiralty had, with much liberality, offered to give a few settlers a passage to the Auckland Islands in that vessel. We advert to the circumstance now, as furnishing additional evidence to that stated by Mr. Enderby himself, of the national importance which the Government seems disposed to attach to the success of the proposed undertaking.

HARBOUR OF AUCKLAND ISLAND.

BUST OF SIR CHARLES NAPIER.

This noble bust of the Hero of Scinde has just been executed in marble, by Mr. Patrick Park. Like all the productions of the chisel of this eminent sculptor, this new work is strongly characteristic of the distinguished original. His brilliant services were happily glanced at by the Earl of Ellenborough, who presided at a banquet given to Sir Charles Napier, at Cheltenham, on Thursday week, and ably reported in the Gloucestershire Chronicle. His Lordship, in proposing the health of the illustrious guest, said:—

"Sir Charles had come amongst us with no other recommendation than those which had been furnished to us by the knowledge which we possess of his great services at the head of his regiment in the Peninsula—of his long and most enlightened government in the Ionian Islands—of his most judicious administration of the very difficult duties entrusted in a time of much public commotion, to the general of the most disturbed district of the country—we should have been proud to have received him amongst us; we should have rejoiced to see him here. But, gentlemen, I pass by those matters, however justificatory they may be of our approbation and acknowledgment. We receive our illustrious guest here to-day as the conqueror and administrator of Scinde. (Loud cheers.) We receive our illustrious guest as a man who has carried the arms and the empire of his country into the valley of the Indus, and secured the establishment of its rule there by the hold he gave it on the affections of the inhabitants of the country. (Cheers.)

* * * * * * * *

Gentlemen, it is to Sir Charles Napier that the glory is to be ascribed—that, having made all the provision possible to be made by a General for securing the victory in battle, he himself thought of every man else, but least of himself. (Cheers.) He was the man of all others who exposed himself to danger; and he was a brilliant example to the whole army. (Cheers.) It is due also to him that he always improved a victory (cheers)—he never allowed a victory to be gained, and the advantages of that victory to be lost, by at once advancing on the retreating foe, and securing all those advantages. You will understand much better than I do, as military men, the qualifications of my gallant friend. But I venture to speak of his services, not in a military character, but in subjunction with his country's interests. There never has been, is, or ever will be, any name so great as his in Scinde, because no name but his is associated with justice—justice—justice—(loud cheers) to all men, in the execution of the most unlimited power and authority."

BUST OF SIR CHARLES NAPIER, BY PARK.

Sir Charles Napier, in proposing "the Health of the Army in India," gave a sort of autobographic outline of his eventful life. Sir Charles said: "An apprenticeship of seven years with the army and soldiers of the three Presidencies has made me master in the art. I have served an apprenticeship, and am eternally attached during the rest of my life to the Indian army. (Cheers.) I can speak of my services; I have served now fifty-four years in the Queen's service; and I love the Queen's service; but I love also the Indian army, and I feel, to all intents and purposes, a sepoy of the Indian army. (Loud cheers.) A great many were not aware of the position of the Indian army; I myself went out to India, having read, as most foolish people do, some few things for none of us study our profession as we ought to do. I went out to India an ignoramus in 1841, thinking that India might be invaded by the Russians, but my mind was changed in a very short time. I found 300,000 men in the Indian army equal to any contingency. (Cheers.) I found 300,000 men who had the same courage, the same discipline, and all appointments necessary to carry on war as the British army—the accoutrements the same, the drill the same as ourselves; their courage equal to our own: and, if they are inferior in strength, not inferior in their determination, and that is all in war, and in that equal to ourselves." (Cheers.)

In conclusion, Sir Charles said, "I believe that it is impossible to restrain the advance of civilisation: it is stronger than barbarism, and will force its way on in spite of politics in general. I think it will; I think the banner of the Cross will force its way in all parts of the globe, and I think we shall see it in the centre of Asia, and that it will exhibit there fights like those from Plassey to Sobraon—a mass of victories which have never been surpassed in the field—a mass of exploits of individuals, corps, and masses, which has never occurred in any other army which ever existed." (Cheers.)

THE WEATHER.

The weather during the past week has been fine, the temperature has at times greatly exceeded the average for the season, and the sky has been more than usually free from cloud. The following are some particulars of each day. Thursday, the sky was overcast till after noon, and mostly clear after this time: the direction of the wind was S., and the average temperature of the air was 59½. Friday, the sky was almost cloudless throughout the day; the direction of the wind was S., and the average temperature of the air was 68°. Saturday, the sky was chiefly covered by cloud during the middle of the day, and wholly covered at other times, the direction of the wind was S., and the average temperature of the air was 60½°. Sunday, the sky during the morning was overcast, broken clouds prevailed till the evening, and the night was cloudless; the direction of the wind was S.S.W., and the average temperature of the air was 61°. Monday, the sky was overcast, and rain was falling frequently during the afternoon, the night was principally cloudless; the direction of the wind was S.W., and the average temperature of the air was 55°. Tuesday, the sky was overcast, with slight exceptions, till the evening, and the night was cloudless; the direction of the wind was W.N.W., and the average temperature of the air was 52½°. Wednesday, the sky was chiefly covered by cloud, the direction of the wind was N., and the average temperature of the air was 50½°; and that for the week ending this day was 57½°.

The extreme thermometrical readings for each day were:

Thursday,	Oct. 5,	the highest during the day was 69 deg.,	and the lowest was 50 deg.
Friday,	Oct. 6,	.....	73	 55
Saturday,	Oct. 7,	.....	73	..... 47½
Sunday,	Oct. 8,	.....	68	 54
Monday,	Oct. 9,	.....	61	..... 50½
Tuesday,	Oct. 10,	.....	55	 47
Wednesday,	Oct. 11,	.....	57	..... 43½

Blackheath, Thursday, October 12, 1848. J. G.

From a series of experiments made with Mason's Hygrometer, I have adduced the following mean temperatures and mean dew points for the month of September last:—

At 9 A.M.	mean temperature 59 deg.		mean dew point 52 deg.
„ 12 „	„	„	62	„	„	51
„ 3 P.M.	„	„	61	„	„	51
„ 6 „	„	„	59	„	„	51
„ 9 „	„	„	56	„	„	51

Rain fell in slight quantities until the 26th, when it continued without cessation for three days, measuring 3.14

The mean height of bar. meter at nine A.M., 29.964, and at nine P.M., [illegible]

October, as yet, has been more overcast than fair. H. J. B.

Bristol, October, 1848.

LIMERICK CASTLE AND THOMOND-BRIDGE.

LIMERICK CASTLE AND THOMOND-BRIDGE.

These localities possess an interest from their genealogical association with the Marquis of Thomond, the present head of the House of O'Brien, or O'Bryen, who adopts the latter form of orthography, and deduces his descent from the Royal Line of Thomond, a race of princes which sprang from the celebrated Hibernian Monarch, Brian Borroume, or Boru, who commenced his reign in 1002, and terminated it with his life, near Clontarf, in 1014.

The effectual introduction of English Government did not take place till after the death of Donald O'Brien, who was their King at the time of the invasion by Henry II. of England. In 12.0, King John, coming to Ireland, visited Limerick among other places, and caused Thomond-bridge to be erected over the Shannon He also had built the castle of Limerick, thence called "King John's Castle," commanding the bridg. into Clare; which remains in the state shown in the Engraving.

Mr. Smith O'Brien is lineally descended from the first Earl of Clarendon, and is consequently related, remotely, to the present Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland both being sixth in descent from the celebrated historian of the Civil War. The unfortunate gentleman's elder brother, Sir Lucius O'Brien, Bart., of Dromoland, will inherit—should he outlive the Marquis of Thomond—the title of Baron Inchiquin, and then become head of the Royal house of O'Brien. Mr. Smith O'Brien has nearly completed his 45th year. He is married to Lucy, daughter of Joseph Gabbett, Esq., of Limerick, and has by her a large family.

IRELAND.

TRIAL OF MR. SMITH O'BRIEN.

The prisoner's defence, which was commenced by Mr Whiteside, on Wednesday se'night, in an able speech of which we gave an abstract in our Postscript of last week, was brought to a close during Friday.

Thursday.—Mr. Whiteside resumed his address to the jury on behalf of Mr. O'Brien, and was listened to most attentively by a crowded and deeply interested audience. In his speech of the day previous he had endeavoured to convey to the jury the principle upon which he rested the defence of his client. He had asserted that, supposing Mr. O'Brien to have been convicted, and that an attempt had been made to break into prison and rescue him, the persons concerned in that attempt would have been guilty of a high offence, but not of high treason. It followed from that much more strongly that an endeavour to escape or resistance would not be high treason. In Captain C.'s case (1st Vesty.), where an assault was made by a party of soldiers on the civil power by command of the officer, in order to rescue a comrade from arrest, Lord Hale decided that the crime was not high treason, because it wanted universality of design. If the jury believed that all the acts of Mr. O'Brien were done to escape arrest, and not in pursuance of a universal design, his acquittal from the charge of high treason would follow as a matter of course. The learned counsel then proceeded at much length to comment upon, and controvert the various points sought to be established in the evidence for the Crown, and thus concluded:—"Gentlemen, I have observed upon the evidence, and I simply submit to you in conclusion, that however you may condemn certain acts of Mr. O'Brien, however equivocal you may think some observations made by him in one letter are, yet, if you believe that his offence falls short of the tremendous crime of treason, you are bound by the solemn duty you have undertaken, irrespective of every consequence, to acquit the prisoner. Well I know the weighty difficulties I have to encounter, and how incompetent my feeble powers have been to grapple with and overcome them. Well do I know how prejudice has blocked up the avenues to the understanding of some—how calumny has done its work with others—and how it has been said that the impracticable politician must perish at last. If he had been a hypocrite, and had covered his selfishness with the mask of patriotism if he had said what he did not believe—if he had unsaid to-morrow what he had said to-day, he might have been a patriotic placeman, and enjoyed individual prosperity, having traded with tact for a time upon the miseries of his country. Wrong he may have been in the opinions he has imbibed, yet he has adhered to them steadily and consistently throughout his life, and he suffers now for having honestly maintained them, believing them to be true. He has been reviled, caricatured, and slandered in his native country from one extremity to the other; he has been hunted as a traitor and covered with abuse, and where is he to look for justice? Where can be his hope for a temperate consideration of his whole political life but where the law has placed his safety—in the honour, discernment, and humanity of a jury of his countrymen—a rampart of defence to stand between the Crown and the prisoner? If the crime consisting in the intention of the soul is not sufficiently established, Judges must be unbending, but jurors may yield to the frailties of human nature. Jurors may throw the broad shield of their protection around the accused, whose intention they can believe to have been innocent, censurable though his conduct may have been. Such is the high office assigned to you by the constitution, whose foundations were laid in the deepest wisdom which through a succession of ages has been cemented by the patriot's blood and consecrated in the martyr's fire. It is for you to say whether his guilt is established conclusively or not. The law of your country, wise, just, and merciful, has declared that if there be a doubt, that doubt must be given in favour of the prisoner—in favour of him whose life is sought to be affected; and, therefore, yielding to those benign principles and those generous impulses of your hearts, it is for you to stand between the prisoner and his grave. Review his life. A love of his country he imbibed from his mother's breast. It was strengthened by his father's example, perhaps, to a dangerous excess. His father recounted to him how, on the last memorable night of our national independence, he had heard the burning words of Grattan, of Flanket, and of Bushe; how he had been persuaded by the gravity of their arguments, transported by their eloquence, and inflamed by their patriotic ardour. Those lessons taught by his parent he has never forgotten; and he owing that the Union was carried by corruption, he struggled for its repeal and to restore to Ireland its parliamentary existence. In that has been the labour of his life—a delusion, I admit; but in not death upon the scaffold a terrible punishment for believing that Irishmen have the right to govern their native land? Are the ashes of Tone under the control of Would to God that Mr. Smith O Brien were my only client! The happiness of an honourable, ancient, and Royal family is at stake this day. The aged, the broken-hearted, the Catholic members nearly and dearly related to the prisoner. They may differ from him in politics, but they are here to give him consolation on this day. Should you send him to the scaffold, they must struggle on hereafter with broken hearts through a cheerless existence, labouring in sorrow for him they loved. A venerable lady, whose life has been spent amidst an affectionate tenantry, who has lavished her fortune and dispensed blessings around her, awaits around her, awaits with trembling heart your verdict. If your verdict consigns her beloved son to the grave, that heart will quickly beat no more. Six innocent children await to be informed whether they are to be stripped of the inheritance which has descended in their family for ages, and driven beggars and fatherless upon the world through the rigorous enactments of a cruel law whether they are to be restored to peace and joy, or plunged into the utterest depths of back despair. There is another to whom still clings to hope—that Lope may it be blessed in your Her heart's blood she would gladly give to save the object of her youthful affections. You will not send her, unless at the commandment of conscience, to an untimely grave. Yet even in this case of blood I do not ask for pity in a wailing spirit; I ask it in the spirit of a free constitution, in accordance with the recited principles of our common law. Those principles would, to stand out in glorious perfection in this great cause between the prisoner and the Crown; and a verdict in accordance with them is not a triumph over the law, but a triumph of the law. I, however, can only convict my client, neither will I nor will he censure that conviction. I trust he will meet his fate with the faith of a Christian and the firmness of a man. The last accents of his lips will breathe a prayer for Ireland's happiness and Ireland's constitutional freedom; and in that moment of his mortal agony he will be consoled if through his sufferings and his sacrifices some system of government shall arise under which I am assured every patriot—wise, impartial, comprehensive, and, above all, which may conduct to wealth, prosperity, and greatness the country he has loved, not wisely, perhaps, but too well. Our Sovereign, in that only which she can make her compact with a free people, promises to exercise in all her judgments justice in mercy. That justice you administer; no remorseless, cruel, sanguinary code, but justice in mercy. In nothing can frail mortals approach so nearly to the attributes of the Almighty as in the administration of justice here below. Divine justice will be tempered with mercy, or dismal will be our fate. The awful issues of life and death are now in your hands. Do justice in mercy. The last faint murmurs on your quivering lips will be for mercy ere the immortal spirit shall take its flight to, I trust, a better and a brighter world.

SCENE AT THE POST-OFFICE AT CLONMEL, AFTER THE SENTENCE OF MR. S. O'BRIEN.

The learned counsel appeared quite exhausted as he resumed his seat.

The prisoner shed tears towards the conclusion, and on the faces of many long accustomed to the most trying scenes that criminal courts present, the same evidences of deep amot on were visible.

This evidence for the defence was then entered upon.

Mr. W. Hammill examined by Mr. Fitzgerald: Had been secretary of the Irish Confederat on. Proved the rules of that body, and copies of a lecture by Mr. Duffy "on the use of Confederate Clubs," and of similar documents.

Cross-examined: The body was formed in January, 1847. The council consisted of Messrs. O Brien, D. Reilly, J. Martin, Cave, Vatson, Dillon, J. Mitchell, and others.

Re-examined: There were clergymen in the council.

Dr. Gray examined by Mr. C. O'Loghlen: Was one of the proprietors of the Freeman's Journal. Proved the rules of the Irish League and several reports of the Repeal Association, as well as a speech of Mr. O'Brien's, in 1843, on the grievances of Ireland. Had known Mr. O'Brien since 1844. Had never heard him advisoral language.

The Attorney General objected to such a line of examination.

Sir C. O'Loghlen said, he proposed to bring forward evidence that Mr. O Brien had always been in favour of constitutional agitation, and of the constitution of King, Lords, and Commons. In "The Queen v. O'Connel." similar evidence was admitted.

The Attorney-General: The reason for the admission of such evidence in O'Connel.'s case was, that the Crown denied that his speeches meant what the words showed them to signify, and that they bore a double meaning, and therefore it was quite right to receive evidence to the cont

The Lord Chief Justice Doherty: The evidence now before the Court is not more than general evidence as to character.

The Lord Chief Justice Blackburne: We think the counsel for the prisoner has a right to ask general questions founded on a knowledge of the prisoner's character, as to the attachment of the prisoner to the Queen and country.

Mr. Justice Moore: We give no opinion on the documents handed in, but we think the evidence admis

The examination of Dr. Gray continued: Had repeatedly heard Mr. O'Brien say that he would retire from public life rather than be a party to unconstitutional agitation. Recollected a dispute between Mr. Mitchel. and Mr. O'B on

Court decided, after argument, that the question with reference to Lo not be asked

examined by the Solicitor-General: Recollected a telegraphic despatch from Lord Lans and Lord Lieutenant, in which it was stated that Lord J Russell would apply to Parliament for the suspension of the Habeas Corpus Act. An announcement to that effect had been hung outside the office, with the addition that a warrant was out for the arrest of Mr. S O'Brien. That was received on Sunday. It could not have been true at the time that a warrant was issued for Mr O'Brien's arrest, as the Act had not been passed at that time.

Mr. Maher examined by Sergeant Murphy: Is one of the county of Wexford, and had been member for that county. Had been acquainted with Mr. W. S. ind of July Mr. O'Brien came to him at Kenis- at Kenilworth, to meet home in his carriage with Mr. O'Brien sent to him and said how to see him

The Attorney-General objected to the witness repeating anything that had passed between Mr. O'Brien and himself being given in evidence

Mr. Fitzgerald contended that it was admissible. The conversation would show the intent with which Mr. O'Brien had visited Edmondbury; and as the intent was the very thing charged against the prisoner by the Attorney-General, his counsel was entitled to show from his declarations to another person what that intent really was

Mr. S. O'Brien: I must really in common justice ask that if speeches delivered by me in Dublin, and reported in such a fashion as I believe was never before put out from the house of any newspaper, are to be produced against me, I shall be said to a private friend in the progress of a journey may be allowed to be heard. It seems the most monstrous de son I have ever heard.

Mr. O Brien said, I call upon you, Mr. Fitzgerald, to let the case go as it stands I hold that it is a substantial violation of all principles of justice, and therefore I call upon my counsel to desist from it.

Mr. Fitzgerald said, that to save time he would put some two or three other questions to the witness. He was proceeding to do so when

Mr O'Brien said, I must appeal to your Lordships to say whether the conversation I held with Mr. Maher on the morning of my departure from his house is to be given in evidence or not?

The Solicitor-General said he would make no objection to it, if Mr. O'Brien wished it.

The Lord Chief Justice said, our distinct impression is, that, with regard to all the transactions that have been brought forward by the Crown, Mr. O'Brien has right to address counter evidence; but in this matter, as to which the Crown has given no evidence, the prisoner is not entitled to give any. As the Crown, however, has waived the objection in the case of different declined much excitement in the Court

The examination was then continued: Had been acquainted with Mr. O'Brien since 1835. Had some conversation with him on Saturday morning, which, however, should say, as the rest of the world. He had spoken of politics to him. Believed him to be most decidedly attached to the Queen and the constitution. He told Mr. O'Brien that he intended to attend Archbishop Murray's funeral, which, however, he did not. Mr. O'Brien said he would send them to Enniscorthy in a carriage, and have a car there ready to forward them on their arrival. They breakfasted, and left in an hour. On the next day he had projected taking Mr. O'Brien to see Wexford Harbour and land about it that was being reclaimed, which he had expressed a desire to see Cross-examined by the Attorney-General: Mr. O'Brien had a large leathern portmanteau with him. Dillon and Meagher were not expected by witness when they came. Mr. O'Brien was staying at Killenny.

Among the evidences adduced of his character mentioned above by Sir C. O'Loghlen was that of Mr Barrett, proprietor of the Pilot newspaper; Sir David Roche, late M.P. for Limerick; Mr. J. Mas ey, Q and Juror of Limerick; Sir D. Norreys, M.P.; Mr. W. Carmichael, Grand Juror of Limerick; the Hon. Cornelius O'Cal n (one of the ura Jurors who found the bill of indictment ag ust the prisoner).

Major-General Sir W. Napier was then examined by Sir C. O'Loghlen: Is a Major-General in her Majesty's service, and is the historian of the Peninsular War. Recollects the years 1830 and 1832. Was in England at that time. Recollects the agitation for Roman Catholic Relief. Knew the Birmingham Political Union by name. Was not a member of that society. Was not a member of the London Political Union. Refused to be a member of it. Did not know of his own knowledge that it was divided into sections. Was not present at any of the meetings of the London or Birmingham Political Unions in 1831-1832. Recollected when the Reform agitation was going on, and when the Bill was thrown out in the House of Lords.

Sir C. O'Loghlen: Do you recollect having received a certain letter a short time after that period?—I received many letters at that time. I know Mr. Young—

Do you know what he was?—I do. He was Private Secretary to Lord Melbourne in the Home Office.

Do you know Mr. Parker?—I met him about the time you mention. He was introduced to me by Mr Young, and we conversed for about two minutes. Mr Parker to k part in the conversation; but I do not know what was said.

Do you recognise the handwriting of any member of the Union of my own knowledge?—I have heard he was by general report.

Did you receive any communication from Mr Young from the Home Office?—I do.

Is you any letter from that gentleman?—I have.

The Attorney General objected to any statement as to the contents of that letter. The Court was not at all about it.

Examination continued: I received a subpœna duces tecum to bring certain letters with me; among others, letters from Mr Young, and I have two with me: one, to which it is probable you refer, signed with his initials, the other I took upon as a private communication; but I brought it to prove his handwriting

What does "T. Y., H. O." mean?—Thomas Young, Home-Office." The letter bears a Home Office seal, I suppose. Lay Secretary of State. Lord Melbourne was then in the Home-Office. Lord J. Russel was a member of the Cabinet at the time. Lord Brougham was Chancellor. I received that letter [illegible] 1832. I had taken part in the Reform agitation at the time in [illegible] and Devizes.

Did you make any reply to the letter received from Mr Young?—I did.

What was the proposition made to you by Mr Young?

The Attorney-General thought that if there were to be any limit to the evidence at all, the Court would not allow the witness to answer the last question. There had been a statement as to the evidence that was expected to be brought forward in any part of the prisoner's case. The Court could have nothing whatever to do with what had passed between Mr. Young and Sir W. Napier in 1832, and he submitted that they could not allow it to be stated in evidence.

The Lord Chief Justice Blackburne: We don't admit the evidence at all.

Mr. Fitzgerald: My Lord, Mr. Whitside referred to it in his speech; the circumstance is part of history, and it is right we should prove it.

The Lord Chief Justice: It is perfectly plain we cannot receive it.

Mr. Fitzgerald: In Hardy's case the Duke of Richmond was called to give evidence of a letter addressed to Hardy, and advising the course which he afterwards adopted.

The Lord Chief Justice Doherty: But that was with respect to the very matter with which the prisoner was charged.

The Court ruled that the evidence could not be received.

The witness retired, and the evidence for the prisoner closed.

The Court then adjourned.

FRIDAY.—Mr. Fitzgerald, on behalf of the prisoner, spoke to evidence. At the close of the learned gentleman's address,

The Court consulted for a few moments; after which

The Chief Justice said: Mr. O'Brien, I have now to inform you that if you desire to address the Jury, you are now at liberty to do so; but you cannot be heard after the Solicitor-General has replied. If you wish to do so, the Court shall return for a few minutes, in order to give you time to consult with your friends.

Mr. O'Brien: I am quite content, my Lord, to leave my case, as it now stands, to the decision of the Jury, and am only anxious to add my thanks to them for the patient attention they have given the arguments and evidence given in the case.

The Solicitor-General replied on the whole case. At twenty minutes past five o'clock the Lord Chief Justice commenced his charge to the Jury. At half-past seven o'clock, his Lordship not having brought his address to a close, the Court rose.

SATURDAY.—The Lord Chief Justice resumed his charge to the Jury, the course of which was interrupted (the Attorney-General consenting) to re-examine Dobbyn, the informer, who gave the evidence for the Crown respecting the clubs, and to examine a witness named Henry Dalton, a classical tutor and a student of Trinity College, Dublin, with the object of shewing Dobbyn was not to be believed on his oath. All doing to an occasion when he was in company with Dobbyn in a tavern in Dublin in June last, he said: "Sir (to Dobbyn) admit and I joined

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

Sunday, Oct. 15.—Seventeenth Sunday after Trinity
Monday, 16.- The Sun rises at 6h. 32m., and sets at 6h. 2m.
Tuesday, 17 Etheldreda
Wednesday, 18.—St. Luke.
Thursday, 19. The Moon enters her last quarter at 6h 28m A M
Friday, 20.—The length of the day is 10h. 19m. The decrease since the longest day is 6h. 13m.
Saturday, 21 Day breaks at 4h 42m., and twilight ends at 6h. 46m.

TIMES OF HIGH WATER AT LONDON BRIDGE,
FOR THE WEEK ENDING OCTOBER 21

Sunday	Monday	Tuesday	Wednesday	Thursday	Friday	Saturday
M. h. m. 3 33	M. h. m. 3 59	M. h. m. 4 24	M. h. m. 4 51	M. h. m. 5 20	M. h. m. 5 51	M. h. m. 6 25
A. h. m. 0 5	A. h. m. 0 30	A. h. m. 0 53	A. h. m. 1 20	A. h. m. 1 49	A. h. m. 2 20	A. h. m. 2 55
M. h. m. 3 50	M. h. m. 4 13	M. h. m. 4 38	M. h. m. 5 5	M. h. m. 5 35	M. h. m. 6 7	M. h. m. 6 40
A. h. m. 0 19	A. h. m. 0 43	A. h. m. 1 6	A. h. m. 1 33	A. h. m. 2 3	A. h. m. 2 34	A. h. m. 3 9

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"T. T."—The coin, of which an impression has been received, is from a penny of Edward I., struck at London: of no value.

"A Military Subscriber"—The standard of height for the three Regiments of Horse Guards is six feet. For the three regiments of Foot Guards, five feet eight inches In other words, no person will be accepted on either division under those heights

"H. M."—&c. No person is eligible to hold a commission in the army under sixteen years of age. There is no limit of age, however, in regard to application, although persons in advanced life (say over 34) seldom have their applications complied with. The price of a Cornetcy in the Life Guards and the Blues is £1260; in the Dragoon Guards and other regiments of Cavalry, £840; in the Foot Guards an Ensigncy, with the rank of Lieutenant, would cost £1260; in the regular regiments of Infantry, £450. The daily pay of a Cornet in the Horse Guards is 8s.; in the ordinary regiments of Cavalry, 5s.; in the Foot Guards, 5s. 6d and in ordinary regiments of Infantry, 5s 8d

"An Old Subscriber" should apply at the office of the Company, in Lothbury, for the cost per rule of communications sent by electric telegraph. Our Correspondent will find the calculation for estimating the tonnage of ships in Gutch's "Literary and Scientific Register and Almanack" for 1843

"Hirundo M." is recommended to apply to a munc-seller

"Omega."—The copyright of the picture will be the property of the artist.

"A Subscriber"—Newport, will find the rates of passage-money to India given in "Real Life in India, by an Old Resident," lately published.

"H. F."—We cannot advise you.

"C. L. S."—Is timed

"Watt," Limerick.—Diagrams, &c., of the steam-engine may be had at Weale's, publisher, High Holborn.

"A Subscriber," Dumbartonshire, has correctly deciphered the signature.

"J. W." on remitting twelve postage stamps, may receive the Number in question. We cannot dispose of the block named.

"J. F." Aberdeen, is thanked; though his Sketch was too late.

"W. H. W." The President steam-ship left New York, for Liverpool, on March 11, 1841, encountered a terrific storm two days afterwards (March 13), and has never since been heard of "Hindoostana Alumnus."—See Beckstein on "Chamber Birds," &c.

"J. P.," Hull—Mackenzie's "Emigrant's Guide to Australia."

"G. P. G.," Friday.—The name of the performer at Yarmouth is Nelson.

"W. C. O."—A Peer in holy orders can sit in the House of Lords.

"Σγγραμ."—A person is allowed to take an additional Christian name at confirmation.

"Hon. F. P. C." will, perhaps, favour us with a specimen.

"Ponare."—Rococo, in bad taste, is especially applicable to French art, of the school of Louis XV.

"Aliquis." Knaresborough.—Knowles's "English Dictionary." Our correspondent should apply to the publisher of the "Pictorial History of England."

"Rowly."—See Walker's "Monks Risen."

"J. W. D." Bedford.—The Hospital for Consumption, at Brompton, is, as yet, but half built, its completion will be commenced next spring. Admission to the hospital is obtained by letters of recommendation from governors.

"C. R." had better apply to a surgeon.

"J. R.," Brighton, is thanked for the Sketches, though we could not avail ourselves of them. The acknowledgement has been accidentally delayed.

"David," Edinburgh.—The matter is under consideration. The large View of London was presented us January, 1845

"P. A. O.," Shepperton-street, is thanked. The opportunity has, however, been lost

"X. Y. Z." The late hurricane in the West Indies commenced on August 21st.

"C. M. S. Clonmel.—Thanks

"Portesham."—The whiteness of pearls may be restored by keeping them in magnesia

"Nat."—See Mawe's "Treatise upon Precious Stones"

"X. Y. Z.," Rochester, had better apply to a Solicitor. The case is clogged with so many circumstances, that it is impossible to advise you otherwise on it within a line or two

"S.," Bridge-street, Westminster, is thanked for the Sketches.

"Napoleon." Greenwich lies on the right bank of the Thames, five miles south-east from London

"A Constant Reader and Student of Heraldry."—Refer to Edmondson or Berry's "Heraldry" books easily met with in any public library.

"Argyll."—Strictly speaking, our Correspondent would not be entitled to the crest in question, unless he could prove his descent from the party to whom it is assigned in the College Book. But, if he did bear it, the only penalty to which he would subject himself would be, the bar on armorial ensigns. The mother's crest never descends to her children The price of Burke's "Armory" is £1 5s.; of the "Landed Gentry," two guineas and a half.

"A Constant Subscriber" The production of the certificate of the parents' marriage is not necessary.

"X. Z. Z." If the marriage be legally performed, the issue is legitimate, despite of the false names.

"E. J." The only mode of changing a crest is by an application to the Earl Marshal. A motto may be altered at pleasure. Refer to G. R. Harrison, Esq., Heralds' Office, Doctors' Commons.

"Maria M."—There are two good editions of Beethoven's pianoforte works and symphonies complete: the one edited by Moscheles, published by Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent-street: and the other edited by Czerny, published by Cocks and Co., Old Burlington-street

"M. L. O."—Mdlle Alboni is not married.

"A Subscriber" The hygrometer is quite as important in meteorological observations, as the barometer, &c. The only instrument whose indications are correct is the moistened bulb thermometer, used as directed in Glaisher's "Hygrometrical Tables," published by Taylor, Red Lion-court, price 2s. 6d. Write to Mr. Glaisher, at 13, Dartmouth-terrace, Blackheath, relative to your other questions.

"M. I."—The price of an Ensign's Commission is £450

"A Dentist."—The fourth quartering, depicted on the shield of the late Lord Berwick, exhibits the arms of Wentworth; viz. sable, a chevron between three lionpards' faces or. His Lordship bore that quartering in right of his descent through the Senhy, from Anne, Baroness Wentworth, daughter, and eventual heiress, of Thomas Wentworth, Earl of Cleveland.

"H. de P. L. F."—"In fess fusils in fesse, or," are the arms of Percy. The motto is "Esperance en Dieu."

"B. B. B."—The widow of an "Honourable" is not entitled to retain that designation after her second marriage.

"A Subscriber of the two Volumes"—The Marquis of Tichfield was born 17th September, 1800; Lord George Bentinck, 27th February, 1802.

"Scrutiny."—There is nothing alleged in the form of the letter sent

"Jacques." Somerset.—Mr. Erasmus Wilson has written a work upon "Diseases of the Skin"

"An Old Subscriber."—We do not recollect any work on the "Manufacture of Starch"

"Cardo." Richmond. King George IV. died on June 26, 1830. An Engraving of the Raising Bridge at Richmond will appear next week

"Vocal."—See "Taylor on Singing," published by Bogue, Fleet-street.

"H. O." North Bucks.—We cannot inform you

"W. R. Y."—Neither monthly nor quarterly publications are subject to stamp duty.

"W. R. F." Heaton Fields.—The production of the certificate of marriage will be unnecessary. Pleading in formâ pauperis is without paying any fee, counsel and attorney being assigned to the party

"W. L." Bath. Address your letter to the Secretary, at the College.

"Amicus" is mistaken as to the motive of substituting one Engraving for another, previously announced.

"R. P." Berkenhead, and "Junius," Thame.—We cannot inform you.

"A Subscriber." Wisbeach.—The Premier's private address is Chesham-place, Belgrave-square; Lord Ashley's, 49, Upper Brook-street.

"Stockportonian."—A stamped newspaper, of any age, can be sent post-free to any part of England

"An Irish Subscriber."—Mr. J. Tidd Pratt has published the "Laws relating to Friendly Societies."

"J." Edinburgh.—Apply to the Secretary of the Royal Academy of Music.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 14, 1848.

The awful sentence of death has been pronounced upon Mr. Smith O'Brien. The Jury strongly recommended the unfortunate man to the merciful consideration of the Crown, and there is some reason for the belief that the recommendation will be favourably listened to. The living Smith O'Brien will never more cause disquietude; his name will never more be used to stir the people to revolt; his history will never be dwelt upon in poor men's huts, to excite sympathy and imitation. But Smith O'Brien dead upon the scaffold will be exalted into a martyr; his name will stir the blood of an excitable people, and will be used as the war-cry of rebellion; the misfortunes and the gallantry of his forlorn enterprise will be the themes upon the tongue of millions; and the serenity and patience of his last hours will be fondly yet sorrowfully remembered in that large popular heart, which, although it neglects the living, is prone to render even more than justice to the dead. We do not share in any of the sentimental sympathy expressed for this misguided and guilty man; but we think, as a matter of simple policy and expediency, that the very worst thing the Government can do with him is to take his life. Living, he will be harmless; but dying the traitor's death, he will become dangerous. The letter from the Home Office, which was produced at the trial, renders it still more expedient on the part of the Government to beware of making a great martyr out of so insignificant a personage. The party that was privy to the organization of a Rebellion in 1831-32, and prepared to take advantage of it for their own purposes—even if it had gone the length of a Revolution—is not the party to deal strict justice upon Mr. O'Brien. They are damaged enough already by that disclosure; they cannot afford, either as men or Ministers, to incur the additional odium of neglecting the recommendation of the Jury to spare the life of one who was but the disciple of a policy which they taught. He failed; but they were successful—a mighty difference, which should incline them to exhibit prudence, even if they are not inclined to show mercy. It is an unlucky case for the Whig Government; but they brought it upon themselves. They deserved the lesson, and it is to be hoped they will profit by it.

The French National Assembly has decided by a large majority that the President of the Republic shall be elected by universal suffrage, and by a direct appeal to the people. The election will take place immediately after the organic laws shall have been passed—probably in the first or second week of November. In the interval the candidates will announce themselves. Louis Napoleon, though not yet formally in the field, is virtually in the position of a candidate; and if the intervening month should not exhibit him in any ludicrous or unpopular light, he will in all probability be chosen as first President. France will in that case enter upon a new series of troubles, of which one issue is not difficult to foresee, namely, the political extinction of the Bonaparte's before the expiry of his term of office. Ridicule used to be fatal in France, if we may believe the celebrated line of one of their greatest men—

Un ridicule est pire qu'un crime.

But it is not so now; or the remembrance of the Boulogne invasion, and of the Eagle of Victory let fly upon that occasion, and ingloriously captured in a sausage-shop a few hours afterwards, would be sufficient to keep this aspiring Emperor in the obscurity that befits him. But so great is the halo of the name of Bonaparte in the estimation of this "glory" worshipping nation, that no amount of incompetency seems sufficient to abate the worship they are content to offer to a scion of that House.

The only other candidates that are at present in a position to compete with citizen Bonaparte, are General Cavaignac and M. Thiers—the one personifying the Revolution, the other the Reaction. Under Cavaignac, the French might reasonably expect the tranquillity so necessary to their prosperity; under Thiers, we cannot see any reasonable prospect, except of intrigues and convulsions, and the efforts of one party to uphold and of another to destroy the Republic. In the meantime, a change in the present Cabinet is spoken of, which will probably be the means of maintaining something like order and confidence until the election of the President.

The quarterly returns of the Revenue do not present much reason for gratulation at the state of the National Finances. Although there is an increase in the quarter compared with the corresponding quarter of last year, amounting to £772,296, there is a decrease on the year of £308,183. It should be remembered that the last was a very unfavourable year, and that the present is therefore doubly significant of evil. The principal items of decrease are the Stamps and the Property Tax, amounting to £932,273 on the year, and to £246,003 for the Stamps; and to £59,955 on the year, and to £25,755 on the quarter for the Property Tax. There is an increase however, on the Customs and Excise, which is so far cheering, amounting on the year to £469,839 for the Customs, and to £362,208 for the Excise.

Altogether the state of the national finances is remarkable. The increase of the Customs and Excise shows that the disturbed condition of the Continent does not greatly affect us, while all is right between us and the New World. This is a fact that statesmen should bear in mind, and turn to our advantage. The increase in these items also gives some ground to hope, that, however bad our condition may yet be, we have passed the worst, and that a revival of prosperity has begun. At all events, it is clear that the efforts of statesmanship for many years to come must be directed towards Financial Reform, if we are to escape both difficulty and danger.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

RETURN OF THE COURT TO WINDSOR.

On Monday afternoon, at two o'clock, her Majesty and the Prince, accompanied by the Prince of Wales, the Princess Royal, Prince Alfred, and the Princesses Alice, Helena, and Louisa; the Princess Hohenlohe; the Princesses Eliza, Adelaide, and Feodora; the Prince Victor, and attended by the Countess of Gainsborough (Lady in Waiting), the Dowager Lady Lyttelton, and Colonel the Hon. C. Grey and Lieutenant-Colonel Seymour, Equerries in Waiting, and Major-General Bowles, left Osborne for Windsor Castle, crossing to Gosport in the Fairy yacht, under the command of Lord Adolphus Fitzclarence. Having landed at the Carsnore-yard, Portsmouth, her Majesty proceeded to Windsor Castle, which the Royal party reached about seven o'clock p. m. The Duchess of Kent received the Queen on her Majesty's arrival at the Castle, the Royal Duchess having arrived some time previous from her residence, Frogmore House. The Hon. Misses Murray and Macdonald, Maids of Honour in Waiting, Lord Elphinstone, Lord in Waiting, and Colonel the Honourable A. N. Hood, Groom in Waiting, were in attendance at the Royal entrance on the Queen's arrival. The august party was escorted from Chertsey to the Castle by the 2nd regiment of Life Guards, Lieutenant Lumley commanding the escort from Chertsey to Egham, and Lieutenant Oxley from Egham to Windsor Castle.

On Wednesday morn ng the Queen and Prince Albert took their accustomed early walk. The Royal Family took walking and pony exercise in the forenoon, on the Eastern Terrace and Slopes. His Royal Highness Prince Albert enjoyed the sport of shooting during the morning, attended by Lord Elphinstone, Lord in Waiting to the Queen, and Colonel F. H. Seymour, Equerry in Waiting to his Royal Highness. The Royal dinner party at the Castle in the evening included her Majesty the Queen of the Belgians, her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, her Serene Highness the Princess of Hohenlohe-Langenbourg, the Princess Eliza of Hohenlohe-Langenbourg, the Lady in Waiting to the Queen of the Belgians, Lady Anna Maria Dawson, his Excellency M. Van de Weyer, Baroness de Speth, General Wemyss, Mr. George Edward Anson, Sir George Couper, and Major de Moerkerke

Lord John Russell has left Minto House, Roxburghshire, for Carlisle.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has arrived in town from his seat, Garrowdy, Pocklington.

The New Vice-Chancellor of Oxford. In a Convocation holden on Saturday, a letter of nomination from his Grace the Duke of Wellington, Chancellor of the University, relative to the appointment of a new Vice-Chancellor, in the room of the Rev. Dr. Symons, Warden of Wadham College, whose term of office has expired, was read by the Senior Proctor, the Rev. Mr. Andrews, Fellow of Exeter College, and submitted to the approbation of the house. The Rev. Frederick Charles Plumptre, Doctor in Divinity, Master of University College, the new Vice-Chancellor, was then sworn, and unanimously admitted into office in the usual manner. The Warden of Wadham, the Rector of Exeter, the Rector of Lincoln, and the President of St. John's, were appointed Pro-Vice-Chancellors by the Vice-Chancellor, to exercise his power in case of illness.

POSTSCRIPT.

THE IRISH STATE TRIALS.

Wednesday.—The proceedings were occupied with Mr. M'Manus's defence; but the general languor which pervaded the Court ever since the sentence of Mr. Smith O'Brien was read to weigh heavily both upon the advocates and the witnesses for the prisoner. Mr. Butt hardly came up to his former reputation as an orator as an advocate, the defence was framed with considerable skill. It was not a mere repetition of the position assumed by Mr Whiteside, that the insurrectionary outbreak, such as it was, had for its object the merely personal one of protecting Mr. O'Brien from arrest—that had been struck down by the verdict in the previous case; and therefore Mr. Butt was compelled to advance a step further, and to draw a distinction still more nice between the law of riot and that of high treason. He did not altogether give up the personal object of the rising; but what he principally relied upon was, that there had been no actual levying of war at all that there had been, perhaps, a design, an intention, and conspiracy, a determination at some future time to levy war; but that the war never was actually levied. This was the gist of his address. Several witnesses were then called to character, and Sir Colman O'Loghlen and other gentlemen were called to prove that the uniform which M'Manus had brought over with him was that of the '98 Club, of which he was a member, and while the members were in the habit of wearing at dinner-parties and at public meetings. Mr. Callaghan, the junior counsel, then took a minute survey of the evidence, with a view to establishing the position which his superior counsel had laid down, after which the Court adjourned at half-past five o'clock.

NEWMARKET RACES.—FRIDAY

Sweepstakes of 100 sovs each. T.Y.C.

Adelgund filly	..	..	..	..	..	..	1
St. Rosalia	..	..	..	..	..	..	2

Match—Czarina beat Lady Mary.

Match—Bishop of Romford's Cob received from St. Rosalia.

Handicap of 20 sovs each. T.Y.C.

Philosopher	..	..	..	..	..	..	1
Cocoa Nut	..	..	..	..	..	..	2

Handicap for two-yr-olds and three-yr-olds.

Grief	..	..	..	..	..	..	1
Franciscan	..	..	..	..	..	..	2

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

INSURRECTION AT VIENNA.

The appointment of the Ban to the post of Royal Commissary of Hungary, and the proposed departure of troops from Vienna to join his army, has led to the most deplorable excesses. An insurrection has taken place at Vienna—the Emperor has fled—the Minister of War, Count Latour, has shared the fate of Count Lamberg and the two Zichys; and Vienna was in the possession of the insurgents on the 7th. The honours that have been conferred on the Ban have been revoked, and it is now to be seen whether he will act up to his asserted intentions—to replace the Emperor firmly on his throne. His army is nearer Vienna than Pesth

Between the hours of four and five in the afternoon of the 7th, the Ministry of War, which was only guarded by thirty men, was stormed and ransacked, and the Minister of War, Count Latour, murdered in the most barbarous manner by stabs in the body and blows of a sledge-hammer over and on the head, and then hanged on a lamp-post in the court-yard. The arsenal was defended during the night by the military and a body of the National Guard, but fell into the hands of the people towards morning, who immediately armed themselves

The murderers of Count Latour declared that they would serve all those who shared his views in the same manner. The Ministry is dissolved; the Minister of Justice is said to have been seized whilst endeavouring to leave the city, and is locked up in the Aula. The other Ministers, with the exception of Doblhoff and Hornbostly, have secreted themselves

LATEST.

At the close of Wednesday's sitting in the National Assembly, M. Durrieu's proposition to put an end to the suspension of certain journals, was rejected by a majority of 9; the numbers being 336 for, and 345 against

On Thursday, the articles of the draft of the Constitution, from 45 to 59 inclusive, relating to the office and the duties of the President, were passed. The President is to be elected for four years, and not eligible for re election till after an interval of four years has passed.

According to accounts received up to last evening, the ministerial crisis was not yet settled. The whole of Thursday had been passed in negotiating. M. Dufaure, General Bedeau, Havin, and Siourun had been with General Cavaignac. General Bedeau positively declined the Foreign Affairs, on the advice, it was said, of Thiers, and the post was then offered to Gustave de Beaumont. M. Dufaure had not yet consented; and it was said that General Cavaignac, if the negotiation with Dufaure and the other moderate members failed, would resign office into the hands of the Assembly

It was resolved to press Austria on the Italian question. General Roille had been sent on a mission to Piedmont, with power to order the army to enter, if necessary.

THE CHOLERA.

The Cholera.—Order in Council.—A communication has been received by the Commissioners of the Customs from Mr. Greville, one of the clerks of the Council, that her Majesty in Council has been pleased to direct the officers of customs at the various ports to detain steamers coming from places where cholera prevails under quarantine for full six days from the date of their sailing from the foreign port, when no such health may be permitted to land; but that in the event of there being any person on board suffering from cholera, they should not be permitted to land until six days after they have been pronounced convalescent. In the event of any death taking place on board, the body should be committed to the deep, properly loaded to prevent its rising; and that all the clothing of persons who have been ill should be immersed in water. The Commissioners of the Customs have caused copies of their Lordships' order to be forwarded to the principal officers at the several ports

Medical Instructions for Custom House Officers. The Surgeon to the Board of Customs has issued the following medical instructions to all the Customs officers:—"As a general rule, cholera, during its visits (however short), takes up its abode in filthy localities in preference to those that are clean: therefore all are enjoined:—1. To have their houses cleansed, white-washed, kept dry, and as well aired as circumstances will admit. 2 To prevent as much as possible accumulations of filth near their doors. Much may be done in this way by individual example, and encouraging the co-operation of neighbours. 3. To observe strict cleanliness of person. 4. To wear warm and comfortable clothing, with flannel next to the skin, all over the body. Tidewaiters especially will be benefited by wearing a thick flannel belt round the loins. 5. To take a wholesome, nourishing, and moderate diet, at as regular intervals as the nature of their duties will allow. 6. Brandy, and other spirits, having on former occasions been a good preventive, to allay pain and other symptoms of cholera, an opinion has gone abroad that the same may be advantageously taken to prevent the occurrence of this disease; it behoves me to state, once for all, that there cannot be a more erroneous opinion. The use of warmth and stimulating effect of a glass or two of spirits soon pass off, and leave the body much more predisposed to disease than it was before; and it is notorious that those who habitually indulge in intemperate drams are not only more liable to attacks of cholera than the careful liver, but have also far less chance of recovering in the event of being attacked. 7 The state of the bowels ought to be carefully looked after. In the great majority of cases, cholera is preceded by a looseness of the bowels, lasting sometimes for many days. Any officer complaining of this, or of any other affection of the bowels (however slight), is at once to report himself to the surgeon. If on board of ship, he will take the medicine furnished him, which is accompanied with ample and plain directions. Tidewaiters, when on board of ship, are to sleep in a dry covered part of the vessel; to keep their bedding free from wet or damp; to air their bed-clothes, by hanging them up on deck when the weather is fine; to be very careful not to go on deck at any time without proper clothing, and everywhere else, to be regarded as a traveller, which will soon pass on to another region; and which, the more cheerfully it is met, the less likely it is to prove mischievous during its transient visit." A package containing four small parcels of medicines will be given to each tidewaiter before going on board ship:—The 1st, preservative to be taken as a tonic in the event of cholera prevailing in this quarter. 2nd. For the cure of common bowel complaint. 3. Where an aperient is required; and, 4th, in the event of a person being attacked with cholera (known by the general coldness of the skin, especially of the extremities, spasms, great depression, with vomiting and purging, &c.), one may be given every half-hour, until relief be obtained. It will be necessary, at the same time, to apply bottles filled with hot water, or heat in any convenient form, to the stomach, and upper and lower extremities. Rubbing the extremities is also useful. Should the depression continue, a teaspoonful of brandy may be given occasionally

We learn from Edinburgh that twenty-three cases of cholera had occurred up to Tuesday, and seven at Newhaven. At Hull another fatal case had occurred on board a vessel from Hamburgh, in which he states that the notion of contagion had been universally abandoned in that city.

STATUE OF THE DUKE OF WELLINGTON, AT THE TOWER OF LONDON.

STATUE OF THE DUKE OF WELLINGTON.

A VERY appropriate tribute to the military renown of the Duke of Wellington is just about to be placed within the walls of the Tower of London, of which fortress his Grace is Chief Governor and Constable. This monument consists of a colossal statue of the Duke, 9 feet high; the material is white marble, and the sculptor is Mr. Milnes, of the New Road. The hero is represented at about the prime of life, as he appeared just after the battle of Waterloo.

The location of the statue is a pedestal of granite, 9 feet in height, placed upon the Tower Green, just opposite the flight of steps leading from the Bloody Tower; and facing the small space between the Chapel and the New Storehouse, the two extremities of which are shown by our Artist in his Picture.

DEPARTURE OF FRENCH COLONISTS FOR ALGERIA.

THE Parisians have just enacted a spectacle of a more pacific kind than that to which they have been accustomed of late. On Sunday morning the first convoi of Colonists, to the number of eight hundred, left the capital for Algeria. They embarked at the Quai Bercy, and were conveyed to Chalons in six large boats, each thirty feet long, and capable of giving accommodation to from 250 to 300 passengers. The Minister of War presented them, on their departure, with a flag, bearing an inscription on one side of "Liberty, Equality, Fraternity"—"Agricultural Colonists for Algeria"—"Departure from Paris, 8th October, 1848;" and on the other side, "French Republic"—"Province of Oran" "Commerce of St. Cloud." General Lamoricière next addressed the colonists in an animated speech, which was received with loud cries of "Vive la République!" "Vive l'Algérie!" "Vive la France!" and "Vive Lamoricière!" He was followed by M. Dufaure, the President of the Committee of Algeria, and by M Tréhat, the President of the Committee on Agricultural Colonies. The ceremony concluded by the benediction of their colours by the parish priest of Bercy, who exhorted them to Christian fraternity.

Our Artist has sketched the impressive ceremony. He went up the river in the steam-boat that towed the Colonists' boats; and he describes the scene to have been rife with hope and enthusiasm.

THE ARTS OF PEACE IN THE MIDST OF WAR.—It is not a little remarkable that the arts of peace should have attained their greatest perfection in the very midst of war. It is related of Michael Angelo, that while he was executing some of his noblest works, he was strangely interrupted by being employed by the republic of Florence, after the expulsion of the Medici, to fortify his native city against his former patrons, and that, great as an engineer as well as in every other department of art and science, he defended the city for nine months. It is related also of Parmegiano, that at the same time (which was on the occasion of Rome being taken and pillaged by the barbarous soldiery of the Constable Bourbon) he was engaged upon his picture of the "Vision of St. Jerome," now in our National Gallery, and that he was so absorbed in his work that he heard nothing of the tumult around him, till some soldiers, headed by an officer broke into his studio. As he turned round in quiet surprise from his easel they were so struck with the beauty of his work, as well as with his own calm dignity, that they retired and left him unmolested.—The Builder.

DEPARTURE OF COLONISTS FROM PARIS, FOR ALGERIA.

THE HOLLAND MONUMENT.

THIS memorial of the virtues and accomplishments of that distinguished statesman and scholar, the late Lord Holland, originated in a subscription among his friends and admirers, commenced soon after his Lordship's decease, in 1840. The fund thus raised amounted to £3000, clear of all expenses. A competition of designs for a monument was then proposed; and that chosen was by Mr. Baily, "the Academician Sculptor." The work is now finished; and preparations are making for its erection in Westminster Abbey, to the left of the west door.

In this design, Mr. Baily must be considered to have achieved a great work, in a class beset with artistic difficulties. Of the truth of this, the walls of Westminster Abbey bear many evidences; for here, assuredly, is an abundant crop of the commonplace of monumental sculpture. Yet, the avoidance of this error not unfrequently leads the sculptor into the opposite extreme of overstrained conceit. The combination of simplicity and grandeur is the highest excellence in this branch of the sculptor's art; and this Mr. Baily has attained in the composition before us.

Our Illustration shows nearly the whole of the monument, which has six feet of projection from the wall. The design consists of the closed entrance to a tomb—the prison-house of Death—with rusticated piers, and a keystone, upon which is sculptured the serpent, symbol of eternity. Above is a pediment and pedestal; the latter bearing a colossal bust of the deceased Lord. Upon the steps are three figures in lamentation. To the left of the spectator, Genius, with the inverted torch; to the right, Science, resting upon her wheel; and, below her, Literature, with her emblematic scroll. On either side are bas reliefs of Charity and Justice. The three principal figures are exceedingly picturesque, without over-study of antique gracefulness. Their expression breathes deep pathos and poetry.

This is, unquestionably, one of the finest works of its class that we remember to have illustrated: the blending of the sculptural with the architectural design is very harmonious. The dimensions of the Monument are 20 feet in height, and 11 feet 6 inches in width: it is of marble; the architectural portion, of the Sicilian quarry.

Mr. Baily, it is truly remarked by a contemporary (the Athenæum), "has breathed more poetry through this particular form of art than any other of our native school since the days of Flaxman. In no living school, indeed, that we know of, do the warmth of flesh and the sentiment of spirit proclaim themselves in marble as they do under the chisel of this eminent sculptor. The genius of his great master speaks by him in many a line and lineament, which will not let his name die from amongst us so long as a feeling for the spiritualities of his art survives in the land." The noble work before us specially justifies this high anticipation.

MONUMENT TO THE LATE LORD HOLLAND.—BY H. BAILY, R.A.

SIKH GUNS, AT WINDSOR CASTLE.

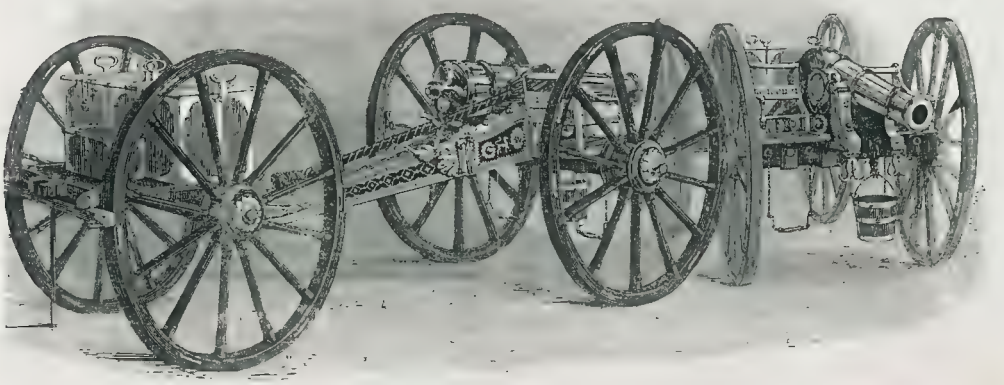
THE two beautiful brass guns, representations of which, by permission of her Majesty, we this week present to our readers, are striking and beautiful specimens of Oriental art. As will be seen by our Engravings, the carriages are elaborately inlaid with mother-of-pearl, brass, and steel, and as the guns have been thoroughly cleaned and put in order at Woolwich, their appearance is very splendid. It must be confessed, however, that many of the ornaments are singularly inappropriate to such murderous weapons of war; peacocks, for instance, being used for the handles of the pans, and as a slipper to the portfire; and, indeed, the general style of ornamentation is characterised by excessive prettiness. The detailed description given by our contemporaries is so correct, that we copy it.

We should premise that these battery guns were ordered to be transmitted to this country for presentation to her Majesty, by General Lord Viscount Hardinge, G.C.B. and G.C.H., previous to his leaving India: they are two of the Sikh field guns taken at Lahore.

"The guns are six-pounders, one of superior gun-metal, and the other with a large proportion of brass in it, and are evidently of those furnished to the Sikhs by this country, and afterwards turned against it. The carriages are of a superior description. The limbers, the ammunition-boxes, and the wheels are made of the finest teak, richly embossed with brass, and inlaid with steel throughout the whole length of the brass borders. The upper part of the teak is beautifully inlaid with mother-of-pearl ornaments regularly arranged, and the sides inlaid with brass, representing a tiger pouncing upon and seizing an antelope, an Indian carrying a flag, and an alligator catching a fish—the latter being formed of mother-of-pearl. The naves of the wheels are surmounted with solid brass ornaments, cast to represent the heads of tigers; and the limber is joined to the gun-carriage by an excellent representation of an elephant's head cast in brass; and a representation of an elevated trunk formed of iron, the hook to hold the limber to the gun-carriage. The poles of the gun-carriages are all bright iron, and the ornaments are profuse in every part of these splendidly mounted guns. The water-buckets are made of the best teak, strongly hooped with brass. The portfire emitter is formed entirely of brass, the fore part representing the head of a peacock, and the handle the body and tail of a fish, carved to represent scales. The hatchet on the other side of each gun-carriage is of polished steel, and the handle inlaid with brass.

"There are two seats for gunners on each of the gun-carriages, made of bright iron, with elbows similar to arm-chairs. The arms are necessary to confine the elbows, as the chairs, in place of being elevated, as the seats of the British artillery gunners are, have been fixed on the axle-tree of the gun-carriage, betwixt the gun and the wheel, and the gunners have to sit with their feet swinging in brass chains below the axle, with their backs to the horses, and so near the ground that they can easily step from their seats. The position appears to be a most dangerous one, as, by the least projection of the arms of the gunners over the arms of the chairs next the wheels, they would be liable to be broken by the revolving spokes in a line with them. The swinging stirrups for the legs appear also to be liable to danger if they move near the wheels."

Our representations show a side view of one cannon, and a front view, or nearly so, of the other; and thus we give in detail all the principal features of the pieces. These guns are placed on the southern side of the Guard Chamber, on either hand of the portion of the mast of the Victory on which the fine bust of Nelson is placed; and are objects of great attraction to the numerous sight-seers who visit the Castle.



SIKH GUNS AT WINDSOR CASTLE.—DRAWN BY PERMISSION OF HER MAJESTY

NEWS OF SIR JOHN FRANKLIN AND THE ARCTIC VOYAGERS.—A letter, just received by the Admiralty from Chief Factor Macpherson, dated March 1, 1848, says.—"There is a report from Peel's River that the Esquimaux saw two large boats (query ships?) to the east of the Mackenzie River, full of white men; and they (the Esquimaux) showed knives, files, &c., to the Peel's River Indians, which they had received from these white men. Could these have been Franklin or Rae?" Mr. Hargrave, of York Factory, to whom Mr. Macpherson's letter is addressed, says, in communicating this intelligence to the Admiralty, "I could not have been Rae in his last expedition, as his boats did not go beyond Committee Bay." Mr. Hargrave adds, that "but little credence can be given to Esquimaux reports."—From the Athenæum.

THE ORDER OF THE GARTER.—It is reported that the blue ribbon, vacant by the death of the Earl of Carlisle, will be conferred either on the Marquis of Westminster or the Earl of Clarendon.

THE Queen has been pleased to give and grant unto John Arthur Edward Jones of Llanarth, Treowen, and Penllwyn, in the county of Monmouth, Esq., and to the other members of that family, her Royal licence and authority, that they and their issue may take and use the name of Herbert, instead of that of Jones. The present Mr. Herbert, of Llanarth, is the lineal male descendant of Gaulin, of Shenkin Herbert, Lord of Gwarin D0, who himself was the lineal descendant of Herbert, Chamberlain to Henry I., being an extraordinary instance of an uninterrupted male descen of nearly 750 years.

MUSIC.

THE DISTIN FAMILY.—A farewell concert, prior to their departure for the United States, was given on Monday night at Drury-Lane Theatre, and was very well attended. The admirable playing of these four artists on the Saxe horns is well known; and the execution of the bravura, the "Soldier tired," by the elder [illegible] was the encore piece, was quite marvellous. Mr. Sydney Pratten [illegible]; Mr. F. Chatterton, a harp solo; Mr. Oscar Bary, a violin solo; Miss Kate Loder, Miss Day, Mr. W. Holmes, and Mr. Lindsay Sloper, a pianoforte quatuor; and Mr. A. Sedgwick, a concertina piece. The vocalists were Miss Birch, the Misses A. and M. Williams, Miss Romford, Mrs. M. O'Connor, Mrs. W. H. Seguin, Miss Duval, Mrs. Temple, Miss E. Lyon, Mrs. Weiss, Miss Lowe, Miss J. Smith, Messrs. Allen, W. H. Seguin, Weiss, F. Bodda, Sporle, Machin, Ransford, and Farren. There was an orchestra led by Mr. Loder, and the conductors were Benedict, Lindsay Sloper, W. H. Holmes, John Willy, and Mr. Brinley Richards. There were upwards of forty pieces in the programme, of every school of composition, the ballads being, however, in the ascendant; and, to judge by the encores, the selection was gratifying to the numerous audience.

THE ABERGAVENNY EISTEDDFODAU SOCIETY.—The fifteenth anniversary of this Society was celebrated in the Cymrigyddion Hall, Abergavenny, on Wednesday, Thursday, the 11th and 12th inst. Colonel Kemys Tynte, M.P., on the first day, addressed in Welsh and English upon the objects thereof, as also the cultivation of the English muse composed for the occasion. A portion of the prizes were awarded. The Harpers played airs, and the Datgeinidd sang Penillion with the Harp, after the manner of the Bards of Monmouthshire. On the second day the remaining prizes were awarded, and then came the contest of the Harpers, and also that of the Datgeinidd, or singers with the harp, an account of which will be read in our next week's Number. On the Wednesday morning there was the usual procession, at the junction of the Monmouth and Pontypool roads, to meet the President. There was a brass band; a decorated car [illegible] a car on which a Welsh bard was working [illegible] Thursday, the 11th and 12th inst. Colonel Kemys Tynte, M.P., was [illegible] as Abergavenny and Cardiff, and was at Monmouth last Monday. He was accompanied by Blewitt, who sang his comic songs with great effect.

CHORUS IN EDINBURGH.—This eminent public concert in the Hopetoun Rooms drew a large audience, despite of the late attractive performances of Grisi, Alboni, and Lind, at the Musaim and the Theatre. He performed some of his studies, the Andante and Lesghine, introducing Irish melodies, measures, &c. His finished execution and poetic touch quite enraptured the auditory.

MDLLE. LIND.—This famed vocalist quitted Glasgow on Saturday for Dublin, by sea, taking the Belfast steamer, and accompanied by Mr. Lumley. Balfe, Roger, Belletti, and F. Lablache, not liking the long sea voyage, took the Liverpool route. The operatic performances in Glasgow were well attended. Mdlle. Lind played in the "Somnambula" and "La Figlia del Reggimento." The prices were 30s and 20s., 15s and 10s., in the box circles, and 5s. and 3s. in the gallery. Roger's Elaine was much applauded, and he was recalled with Mdlle. Lind. Miss Pappo, a daughter of the celebrated pianoforte player of that name at Covent Garden Theatre, was the Lisa. She sings sensibly, but her organ is very feeble. Nadaud, Herman, Oury, Patti, Lavigne, Anglesi, Reinaut, Steglich, Zetes, Templini, Madrid, Brizi, Rosa, &c., &c., of Her Majesty's Theatre, are in this expedition, with Halfe as conductor. Mdlle. Lind's performances in Dublin have commenced this week. The tour terminated at Glasgow on the 6th, with a concert in the Town-Hall; at 10 tickets for guineas, half a guinea, and seven and five shillings. The tour, which was to terminate on the 30th of November, it is anticipated, will be prolonged some time later, if extended leave of absence can be obtained for Roger, who ought now to be in Paris for the rehearsals of Meyerbeer's "Prophète." As, in the present condition of affairs, the great composer can have little desire to see his work produced at the Théâtre de la Nation, it is probable that Mr. Knowles and Mr. Lumley, who are the speculators in Lind's tour, may obtain Roger's extended leave.

ALBONI is centralte is now in Brussels, and will soon depart for her native place, in the Papal States. She will not accept any engagement prior to her return, in the spring, for the London season.

GRISI and MARIO are about to undertake another tour in the provinces, with Benedict as conductor.—Mr. Beale being again the speculator. Mario has been offered carte blanche for the Théâtre de la Nation, in Paris, but has wisely declined the proffered engagement.

THE ITALIAN OPERA IN PARIS.—The season opened on Tuesday week under the direction of M. Bagier, the successor of Vatel. Verdi's "Nabocco" was the opera, superbly played by Ronconi, but who was very indifferently supported by a débutante, Madame Angelina Bosio, in Abigail, and Mdlle. Sara (Miss Hounsom, sister of the late Madame Albertazzi) in Fenena. The new basso, Arnoldi (Arnoux, a Frenchman), is bad. In the midst of all these novices Ronconi was undismayed, and had sublime moments, causing the auditory, such as it was (for the Republic has scared the fashionables), to rise en masse to cheer his exertions and recal him several times. On Thursday he repeated his fine performance. On Saturday night Madame Persiani appeared in "Lucia," and was well received: the new tenor, Bordas, formerly at the Académie, was the Edgardo; he has no refinement. Madame Castellan is to make her first appearance in the "Somnambula" shortly. Madame Ronconi will appear in "Maria di Rohan," in which Ronconi is so great as the jealous husband. Lablache is expected in December from Naples

HER "HUGUENOTS" IN VIENNA. Meyerbeer's masterpiece, freed from the obnoxious Austrian censorship, has at length been produced at the Kärnthner-Thor Theatre, in Vienna, according to the original text. This grand production was received with immense acclamations, and its popularity, despite of all political troubles, will be greater even than that of "Vielka" ("Camp of Silesia") and "Robert le Diable." The libretto of the "Guelphs and Ghibellines," substituted for the "Huguenots and Catholics," by the poet Sedlnitzky, on account of the censorship, did not respond to notions of the composer, and the Lutheran corale became an absurdity. Now all is restored. Mdme. Heinefe and Standigl sustained the principal parts with great éclat.

GRAND OPERA IN PARIS.—Carlo and S. Leon are now the stars at the Théâtre de la Nation until the production of Clapisson's new opera.

THE THEATRES.

COVENT-GARDEN

Regarding the practice of music as one of the most refined, social, and cheering of amusements, public or private, every undertaking having a tendency to spread a taste so salutary and civilising we hail with satisfaction: and we think [illegible] actors who venture, after so many failures, to establish an English opera-house are particularly entitled to support. It is to be lamented that, in the Government patronage of the fine arts, nothing has been done for music, a pure and innocent recreation, capable of being turned to invaluable account in counteracting the low and degrading habits of the working classes, by affording them, in their hours of relaxation from labour, a delightful source of gratification.

The lyric drama is peculiarly adapted by its scenic, histrionic, and musical attributes, not only to captivate the ear and fascinate the eye, but to excite the intellectual faculties to account for the noble images, the harmonious forms, the picturesque combinations, presented in one grand ensemble by the poet, the painter, and the musician. As our Government, standing in that respect almost in an exceptional position from other nations on the Continent, will absolutely leave our musical and operatic establishments solely in the hands of private persons, it is for the public to be on the alert, to recognise without prejudice any attempts to found an English opera, and to be on their guard not to commit the injustice of expecting from such fluctuating enterprises the perfection arising from organised schools and matured experience, such as the Italian, French, and German institutions possess.

These observations are submitted, because it has been urged that the present lessee of Covent-Garden ought to have opened with new works, and with singers, band, and chorus quite equal to the Italian opera-houses. Now, in the first place, the play-house prices will not admit of such an unreasonable expectation being realised; and, secondly, even if there were such a tariff as would enable the manager to secure the entire armament of such a host, other artists—with all due respect for many great and acknowledged celebrities—cannot compete with the Italian vocalists, who are to the matter and manner born. We have some excellent composers, and there are richer, certainly, than Italy in her present condition. Take, for instance, two such opuras as Wallace's "Maritana" and Balfe's "Bondman;" and we ask, if there be a single living writer in Italy who could produce such works—so full of melodious inspiration so happily conceived in harmonious spontaneity: It was with these two masterpieces of their respective composers that the season has been opened at Covent-Garden "Maritana," having been given on Monday, and the "Bondman" on Wednesday—the latter introducing two débutantes, and the latter two débutantes. On the first day proved somewhat unfortunate, the second turned out to be a veritable triumph.

On Monday, it was Miss Wallace who came for the first time on the English stage as Maritana; and Miss Dolores Nelson as Lazarillo, the part formerly sustained by Miss Poole. No vocalist ever presented herself with greater sympathy in her behalf than Miss Wallace. As the sister of the composer who has given to the world one of the most charming operas ever written, there was an evident anxiety that her success should be decided; but at the end of the opera, after making every allowance for the nervousness of a début, there could be but one opinion, namely, that the attempt was a mistake. Between recondite singing and stage singing there is a notable difference; but it is inconceivable to us, how, for one moment, it could have been imagined that she possessed qualifications to take the lead as a prima donna. Miss Dolores Nelson, a very young, pretty girl, looked very awkward, but she has a mezzo-soprano voice, the lower notes of which are full, and there is some promise about her. The remainder of the cast comprised Borrani, as Don Cæsar de Bazan; Mr. Herman as Don Cæsar, and Mr. H. Phillips as Don Jose, the original representatives of these parts, and Mr. Cowell, as the Marquis. The best bit of singing was from Phillips, in the ballad "I, happy moments," a finished specimen of concise style and music, and which merited the universal encore bestowed upon it. Prior to the opera the National Anthem was sung, Miss Romer and Mr. Travers singing the solo [illegible]

The performance of the "Bondman" on Wednesday, was not only highly creditable in the ensemble (for the choral and orchestral forces were in good trim, for which Mr. Land, the chorus-master, and Signor Schira, the conductor, deserve credit), but the cast as regards the principals has never before been so complete. Miss Romer retained her original character of Madame Cornaro, and sang with a freshness of voice and a spirit which proved how a fine organ, with dramatic energy, will shine even over superior science and cultivation. She was heartily greeted, and was encored in the ballad "It is not form, it is not face." Mr. Travers—whose début as "The Favourite," two seasons since, at Drury Lane Theatre, created some sensation, but whose career was stopped by a severe cold made his first appearance in the bonds of matrimony, and became as much distressed about vocal competency. Mr. Travers has amply confirmed every favourable anticipation of his early effort. He is now a consummate actor tempering the stage with ease and grace, and his pronunciation is unexceptionable. His voice, with pure chest-notes, reaching to A, and one of the most agreeable falsettos we have ever heard, is resonant and powerful. He sings with all the intensity of the Italian school. His principal defect will be one of easy remedy: in essaying to attain the upper notes of his register, he strains with labour, and it gives the appearance of it being a disciple of the French école school. He can easily amend the fault by resorting more frequently to his head notes, which are so fluty and sweet in their quality, as he proved in the unaccompanied quatuor in the last act, "Tis a destiny," which was fervently encored. He was similarly complimented in his solo, "Child of the sun," in the second act, given with the utmost feeling. He also distinguished himself in the duo with the Bondman's future, by his dramatic delivery of the denunciation of the Marquis's cruelty. Indeed, the declamatory powers of Mr. Travers are altogether of a very high order. Another valuable acquisition has been made Mr. H. Corri, who has been a popular ballad singer in Dublin. He is something like Lagrange in person, has a basso of agreeable quality, sings with excellent taste and discretion, and in all he achieves, shows the consummate artist. He performed the part of the Marquis de Vernon, formerly sustained by Weiss. The new tenor, Mr Herberts, who made his debut in the foppish Count, is quite a novice, but he has a pleasing organ. Mr Braham was Viscount Narbore, Mr. S. Jones, Antonio; Mr. Cowell, Mal-a-propos (Harley's part); Miss Messent, Orcelia—the secondary characters being thus adequately filled. Miss Romer, Travers, and Corri were called on after the second and third acts, and much applauded. The "Bondman," in consequence of this success, was repeated on Friday, and is likely to prove one of the most popular of the stock operas. The "Enchantress" is to be produced to-night (Saturday). Auber's "Il Ajide" is in preparation for the debuts of Miss Lucombe, Messrs. Sims Reeves and Whitworth. It will be the earliest novelty after which Mdlle Nissen will appear in "Norma."

MARYLEBONE.

A version of "The Bride of Lammermoor," in the shape of a melodrama, comparatively unknown on our stage, has been revived at the above house with great success—more, however, owing to the interesting acting of Mrs. Mowatt, as Lucy Ashton, than to the merits of the piece, which is constructed in the most feeble and inartistic manner. Apart from this, we were not quite certain as to how the public would relish a drama founded on Scott's beautiful story, without music, when Donizetti's charming melodies have thrown a fresh charm round the legend, and are so universally popular; and we think now the result would not have been very favourable, had not the heroine been so ably impersonated. Lucy Ashton is, beyond all doubt, the best character since Mrs. Mowatt has yet played; it is natural and impressive, and throughout betokens the nicest perception and intelligence. Mr. Davenport, also, was well suited in the part of the Master of Ravenswood. His pathos was effective, without any artificial or studied points; and in the general conception of the character he completely carried out the attributes of the original creation.

THE HAYMARKET was announced to open on Wednesday, but the commencement of the season is postponed until this evening, when Miss Laura Addison will appear as Julia for her début at this theatre. The interior of the house has been very beautifully re-decorated, and some capital alterations made.

As we expected, "The Critic" has proved a great hit for the Haymarket, and acted, as it is, by the "Court Beauties." The acting is in the highest school of burlesque, during to the last degree, but always stopping short at the proper point; nor must we omit to pay a well-merited compliment to Mr. Meadows, whom we neglected to speak of in our general notice of the characters last week, for his comical introductions and reading of the important part entrusted to him in Mr. Puff's tragedy

THE ONLY "BRITISH SAILOR" that we believe in—even in proximity to the real defenders of our country—is T. P. Cooke, who makes his appearance at the Marylebone Theatre on Monday. As we believe this gentleman has it in contemplation to retire from the stage, the opportunity should not be lost of seeing him once more in his most favourite characters.

MR. AND MRS. CHARLES KEAN, having won golden opinions in "The Wife's Secret," at Brighton, have been succeeded by Mrs. Nisbett and Miss Jane Mordaunt, who appeared at the Queen's on Monday evening, in "Much ado about Nothing, and "The Dream at Sea," playing to an elegant and appreciating audience.

MR. BUNN'S letter as to the salaries demanded by Miss Helen Faucit and Mr. Anderson has been replied to by them, and their terms thus placed in a somewhat different light from that represented by the manager. Miss Faucit was offered by him to have "demanded" £10 a night, whereas she only [illegible] half past o'clock), Capt. Bryan Milman, of the 5th Fusiliers, with Capt. Colquett, Mr. Bellew, Mr. Fitzgerald, and Mr. Home, of the same regiment, and Mr. Palmer, a commissariat officer, were proceeding from a boating expedition to Grove River. When about four miles from shore, a squall came down and overset the boat; torrents of rain fell at the same time, and they drifted along on the side of the boat, which fortunately did not sink, without a chance of assistance, for about two hours, and at last grounded in seven feet water. It was almost perfectly dark, and all they could see were the tops of the mountains in the horizon. There appeared no hope of being saved, except by holding on to the boat till daylight; and as it was fearfully cold, that seemed almost impossible. Captain Milman then determined to endeavour to swim ashore to procure assistance. The boatman, a Creole, also started to make the attempt. After swimming some time, Captain Milman missed the boatman, who was found dead the next morning on the shore, having, it was supposed, perished from cold. Captain Milman, however, succeeded in reaching the shore, where, having procured assistance, he proceeded to the relief of his companions, who were thus, after two hours' exposure, rescued from their perilous situation

A SANATORY CONSCIENCE'S SERMON OF PART OF THE ROYAL PARISH OF ST [illegible] "streets without drains or sewers; houses without water, in a state of [illegible] wholesome which defies description, without drainage or common receptacles for refuse, or the ordinary auxiliaries to cleanliness, abounding in filth, the walls dirty and damp, and in a state of gross dilapidation; rooms without proper ventilation, crowded with human beings, huddled together without the slightest regard to age or sex; in many cases two or three families, consisting of the married and the single, parents, grown-up sons and daughters, occupying the same miserable room; cellars and underground rooms, amounting to 699 in number, used as the sleeping apartments of human beings, although constructed contrary to the provisions of the Building Act, for which evasion of the law no efficient remedy is provided. These are a few among the many abominations which are found existing within a few yards of the mansions of the most affluent and the most refined, and which, unless speedily remedied, threaten to sap the very morality of the people to a level with the degradation of their homes." Such is the report drawn by the St. James's Committee of Health and Sanatory Improvement, of a state of things in a parish which, for splendour and wealth are unusually associated. To remedy it, the committee proposes to take upon lease several houses in the poorest localities of the parish, to provide them with abundance of water and all necessary conveniences, to fit them up as decent residences for the families of labouring men. Each residence will consist of not less than two rooms, and it is intended that the rent of these shall not materially exceed what is now exacted for one miserable room, which in general consists of everything approaching to either cleanliness or comfort. The committee do not wish to displace those whose subsistence is obtained by letting lodgings to the poor; it is rather their example, to show them how to extract the decencies and comforts of life may be secured, and yet yield a fair and just remuneration for the capital expended. In a parish which contains, perhaps, more wealthy unabsentee landowners in an equal space in any part in the world, we think the committee will find no difficulty, we apprehend, in raising sufficient funds to carry their excellent object into effect. Less wealthy parishes might also manage to follow the example, with a little well-directed exertion, and with the utmost benefit, not only to the poor themselves, but to the general health of the parishioners.

BATHS AND WASHHOUSES FOR THE LABOURING CLASSES.—On Wednesday a numerously-attended meeting of the supporters of the above institution, founded for the benefit of the labouring classes in the north-west districts of the metropolis, was held in the committee-room of the Institution, in George-street, Hanover-square. The report congratulated the subscribers on the favourable results which had attended the operations of the society since its formation in 1846, since which period, up to Sept. last, the number of baths let had been [illegible] 73,371, and 87,376 poor women had washed, dried, ironed, and mangled the clothes of themselves and families, averaging at least four in number for each person. The present building is totally inadequate to the numerous daily applications both for the purposes of bathing and washing; to meet which exigencies a subscription has been opened for its extension, and the works commenced. Amongst the donors are her Majesty and Prince Albert, the Queen Dowager, the Archbishop of Canterbury, and many of the nobility. The institution is self-supporting, so that all sums received for its extension will be applied exclusively for that purpose. The committee also, on the 1st January, 1846, established and commenced a branch for the purpose of affording the poor in the north-west districts the means of purifying and cleansing their dwellings; since which, in the most wretched, unhealthy, and overcrowded dwellings, they have cleansed and purified with chlorides, &c., 273 rooms, 140 staircases, 235 closets, 154 passages, and 62 areas. The labouring man is offered by the committee these means of purifying his dwelling at the cost of one penny, and, in cases of illness, &c., the work is done gratuitously. The expenditure of this branch (so valuable at the present time) has exceeded the sum originally contributed.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"Rev. H. B."—A private communication has been dispatched.

"Rev. H. H.," Newcastle, Staffordshire.—It shall have immediate attention.

"L. W. C."—We have no doubt it will prove acceptable

"H. K."—Either the German or English Handbook. See, also, Lewis' "Second Series of Chess Lessons."

"Triangle"—Your method of deciding chance games is to us incomprehensible.

[illegible] to avoid anarchy

[illegible] Holtham.—They seem to us very accurate, and some of them highly ingenious, but we have not yet had time to give them the attention they demand.

"H. J. C. A."—Many thanks for the Problems; but before using some of them it will be necessary for us to have "perfect" copies. In those sent many of the Pieces have got duplicated.

"J. H. N."—If the Problem is one which has appeared in our columns, we shall readily give you a solution; but we must be furnished with the date of the paper wherein it was published.

"H. B. B." "S. L." "A. Ambler," "Carlo Foliero."—Under consideration.

"S. W."—Not fair.—At the beginning of a game, the Queen must stand on a square of her own colour. If the work mentioned says otherwise, it is an error arising from a misprint

[illegible]

"W. L."—We shall have much pleasure in examining them.

"L. S."—Have the goodness to send us a diagram of the position.

"A. Z. B. Y."—It will have an early place, and we shall be glad to receive as many more, of equal ingenuity, as you can contrive.

"J. O."—A player making a false move can be subjected to one or other of the penalties you mention. Playing the Pawn as described is, undoubtedly, a false move.

"F. G."—The celebrated Pawn-play, by St. Amant, is at this time in London; but has not as one of business only, and will not extend beyond a few days.

"Alfred"—The best refutation is the undeniable fact that Captain Kennedy won the three last matches of Mr. Lowe almost off-hand, and that he has proffered to play him a fourth, for any amount of stake up to £100, that the latter or his backers may chose to venture on the contest

"N. B."—Some Games, Problems, &c., published in the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, can be obtained only by purchasing the Numbers in which they appeared.

"J. D. S."—The Problems you cite as faulty are all correct, as you may easily ascertain by reference to the solutions we have published.

"J. G. B.," Settle.—The games in question with Mr. Lowe, at the odds of "the Pawn and two moves," were not played recently, as you appear to suppose, but many months ago; and all of them which were worth publishing, appeared, exactly in the proportion in which they were won and lost, in the Chess-Player's Chronicle, of December 1847, and January 1848.

"J. M."—Your surmise as to the cause of the games alluded to above being dragged before the public at this moment is, undoubtedly, the true one. Persons at all conversant with the relative strength of our leading players of the present day are well aware that Mr. Staunton, when in play, would have very little difficulty in vanquishing a player of Mr. Lowe's force, when owning him the odds of the Pawn and two moves; but, to put the question at rest, Mr. S. has this week offered a formal challenge to Mr. Lowe, to play him a match at those odds, for a Hundred Guineas a side. It is almost needless to say the challenge has not been accepted, and that, to vindicate Mr. L. to submit his pretensions to the test of a serious encounter, it will be necessary for Mr. Staunton to offer the odds of a Knight each game.

Solutions by "the Bath Trio," "J. M.," "H. S. J.," "Juin," Lambeth; "J. H. B.," "F. G. R.," "Carlo Folero," "Sopranetta," "Lindsay," "J. J.," "W. B. C.," "Tyro," "Exor," "W. L." are correct. Those by "Orfeo," "M. N." "P. T.," "Phæ," "B. A." are wrong.

 Any young Chess-player desirous of a game by Correspondence, may hear of a competitor by addressing "W. L.," 90, Cheapside.

CHESS MATCH BY CORRESPONDENCE

BETWEEN THE LONDON AND AMSTERDAM CHESS CLUBS.

WHITE (Amsterdam).	BLACK (London).
17. B takes Kt	17. P takes B

Amsterdam to play.

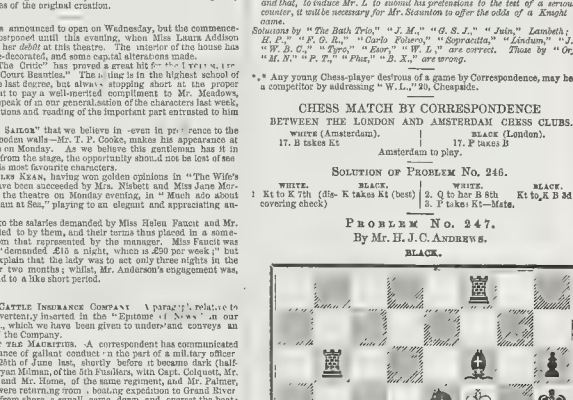
SOLUTION OF PROBLEM NO. 246.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
1. Kt to K 7th (dis- covering check)	K takes Kt (best)	2. Q to her B 8th	Kt to K B 3d
		3. P takes Kt—Mate.

PROBLEM NO. 247.

By Mr. H. J. C. ANDREWS.

BLACK.



WHITE.

White, moving first, to mate in five moves.

CHESS IN THE PROVINCES.

SPIRITED LITTLE AFFAIR BETWEEN MR. STAUNTON AND MR. HANNAH, OF BRIGHTON, MR. S. GIVING HIS K KT.

(Remove Black's K Kt from the board.)

BLACK (Mr. S—)	WHITE (Mr. ——).	BLACK (Mr. S——).	WHITE (Mr. H——).
1. P to K 4th	P to K 4th	11. P to Q 6th	Q to K B 4th
2. B to Q B 4th	B to Q B 4th	12. Q to K R 4th (ch)	K Kt to B 3d
3. P to Q Kt 4th	B takes K P	13. P takes P (ch)	K takes P (ch)
4. P Q B 3d	B to Q R 4th	14. Q to K Kt 3d (ch)	K to Q sq (ch)
5. Castles	P to Q 3d	15. B to K 7th (ch)	K to K sq
6. P to Q 4th	P takes P	16. B takes Kt (dis-	B to K M
7. Q to K R 5th	P to Q 4th	ch)
8. P takes P (a)	Q to Q 3d	17. Q takes K Kt P	Kt to Q 3d
9. B to Q R 3d	Q to K B 3d	18. B takes B (ch, and
10. R to K sq (ch)	K to Q sq	wins)

(a) Affording a more smarting attack than the obvious play of taking with the Bishop.

(b) If the bad taken with the Bishop, the following moves show the result would have been equa-y fatal:—

15. B takes K th	B takes P
16. K to K 7th (ch)	K to Q 3d

(If 17. K to K sq, the game is also lost in a few moves.)

17. Q takes Q P (ch) &c

(c) He might have prolonged, but could not possibly save the game, by playing K to Q B 3d.

CHESS ENIGMAS.

No. 371. By Mr. C. E. RANKEN.

White: K at his B 3d, Q at her 7th, Kts at Q 3d and 6th, B at K R 7th.
Black: K at Q 5th, Q at Q R 3d, B at Q R 5th, Kt at Q B 8d.

White to play, and mate in three moves.

No. 372.—By the Same.

White has at his 3d, Rt at K R 7th and Q 7th, B at K Kt 8th, Kt at K 4th.
Black has at his 4th, K at K 3rd, B at K Kt 5th, Kt at K 7th.

White, playing first, mates in three moves.

No. 373.—By the Same.

White. K at Q R 4th, Bs at K 4th and Q R 6th, Kts at K Kt 5th and 7th; Ps at K B 4th, K 2d, and Q B 2.
Black. K at Q 8th, Kts at Q 4th and Q Kt 4th, B at Q B 5th, Ps at K 6th and Q 3d.

White plays, and mates in four moves.

STEAM VESSELS. It is required by a recent statute that on or before the last day of the present month the owners of all steam-vessels, whether they proceed to sea or not, transmit to the Board of Trade two declarations of the sufficiency and good condition of the hull of every steamer, and of the good condition of the machinery. By the 11th and 12th Victoria, cap. 81, it is provided that if the owners shall neglect to send the declarations, they shall forfeit and pay the sum of 10s. for every day's delay, unless such delay shall be accounted for to the satisfaction of the Board of Trade.

LITERATURE.

Lord Brougham's Letter to the Marquis of Lansdowne, on the Late Revolution in France.

[illegible] on the French Republic, addressed to M. Cremieux, the Minister of Justice under the Provisional Government of the Republic, point blank refused him the privileges he sought, unless upon the entire renunciation of the principles of an Englishman, takes, nevertheless, so deep an interest in the affairs of that country, as to judge them worthy of a long and elaborate letter to his friend the Marquis of Lansdowne. We have perused [illegible] resting. His remarks are [illegible] ve. We think that in the present pamphlet they are both; and we can [illegible] the belief that if the reader be not improved by it, he will most certainly be amused.

Lord Brougham, of course, loudly condemns the French Revolution. It cannot be expected that he should praise it, although he might, at this time, have been a French citizen, a representative, and a candidate for the Presidency if his own wishes alone had been consulted in the matter. He manifests, however, [illegible] is not [illegible]

a regret. In one great [illegible] blessings, the country's peace."

It was the great grievance of the French the grievance not of the [illegible] Paris—not of the journeymen shoemakers and sub-editors, nor of the [illegible] 220,000 places in the gift of the Crown, and these places were [illegible] served for and created for the reward of the political subservitncy of this handful of the people. The legislature was only responsible to 240,000 placemen holding emoluments as bribes directly from the Government. That was the grievance. [illegible] at which made the shopkeepers of Paris and th[illegible] bulk of the middle classes refuse to lift a finger in defence of the dynasty when the evil day came. Not that alone, but the gross corruption pervading the whole administrative offices of France. The King's own intrigues in the Spanish marriages, the recent exposure of the shameful venality of M. Teste, a Judge and Minister of Justice—the middle of the [illegible] of Peasgood and the cases published to it, to say nothing of the previous ex- [illegible] as measure to please the [illegible] the Republican [illegible] of truth, before he ventured upon an exposition which aspires to be highly philosophical and strictly impartial.

In some respects [illegible] a most [illegible] and [illegible] tery and the eulogium of the British Constitution are both admirable; and his defence of a House of Peers, or Second Chamber, is able, well-considered, and convincing. One of his illustrations of the uses of a Second Chamber is highly [illegible]

"Our own House of Lords has again and again prevented remediless mischief from being worked by the hasty, ill-considered bills sent up from the Commons in seasons of calm, when no general excitement disturbed the lawgiver's course. [illegible] I was in office myself. I stopped three measures in as many [illegible] whose case by evidence, as I should have done sitting as Lord Peers, I was assisted by the Chief Justice; and the Peer was had charge of it admitted that no other course could be taken than to reject it."

In other words; I, Lord Brougham, a Peer, corrected errors that were allowed to pass unchallenged by the whole of the representatives of the people. Ergo, a House of Peers is necessary, but it must have a Brougham in it. Q. E. D.

The following is just, and well expressed:—

"The want of a privileged class from which a Senate deserving the name may be chosen, and the inconsistency of a Senate chosen for life with the spirit of Republican Government, must greatly lessen the benefit of the Second Chamber. But this only shows in another way the defects of a Republic; and illustrates the great lesson of all political experience, that none of the pure [illegible] no reason for despising them or rejecting such secrets, how limited soever, as they offer—there being nothing more certain than that they are better than no- [illegible] early at all, and that they render it possible to hope for some protraction of [illegible] impossible."

[illegible] "except in matters of [illegible] Mr. Disraeli, and certainly by no means so able a man, as M. de Lamartine, whom he does not even mention.

The Law Student's First Book. Hastings: Carey-street.

This is a comprehensive abridgement of "Blackstone's Commentaries," incorporating the alterations in the law down to the present time, drawn up by the editors of the Law Students' Magazine. To the young student the work will prove of great value, inasmuch as the chief principles are [illegible] those portions only of the Commentaries which may be profitable to the present day; all the disquisitions and discursiveness of the old commentator being omitted, for future consideration, when the first portions have been thoroughly [illegible]

The Status of the Jews in England. By Chas. Egan, Esq., of the Middle Temple. Hastings.

An impartial consideration of the progress and position of the Jewish people in England, from the earliest to the present time. The book has been published at the right time, and includes an excellent synopsis of the debates on the Jewish Disabilities Bill, with comments thereon.

LINES

Suggested by seeing a Sketch in Welbeck-park, representing the Scene of Lord George Bentinck's Death, in the Illustrated London News for Sept. 30.

It is a quiet scene—a quiet hour;
The meadows darken tow'rd the coming night,
And, paled as a late autumnal flower,
One lone, low, lovel gleam of yellow light
Is all that to the heavens is left of bright;
And all on earth is dim as mournful thought,
Save that yon pool where oxen drink white,
Which, like a sparkling eye, and yet with sadness fraught.

Yet grieves not for the sweet September day—
Its beauty is fulfil'd, and its work is done;
Nor y ans [illegible] dies to pass away—
Is beauty soon and rife to us seem sun:
But grieve for him, the still mourners one,
Whose sun of life in its fair noon has set
Its sunny fall (fulgurous scene begun),
No more to rise, here, merely nit;
Oh, well ye grieve for him with lasting, deep

Here in the [illegible] Nature's [illegible]
Not slowly wither'd by a sere decay,
But cut low by the Reaper's stern thunder-stroke
In the full glory of its green array
And many-branched strength. Here, where he fell, he lay.

And where he lay, he died. Sister nor friend
Were near, with gentle hand and steadying tread,
In weeping love the lifeless form to lend.
Only the ewe her tears upon him shed;
Only the silent stars kept vigil dread;
Only the night her dusky curtain drew,

And mists all very still about his bed;
Only the sobbing west-wind moaning through
Plain trees, were called leaves his pillow did bestrew.

O death-bed hour dread! there lay he in cold rest,
While his grey sire, in his ancestral home,
Sat, little thinking that life was had proved
"Unanswering before him to the tomb"
There for he while, in the warm [illegible]

Ugly!
And, though his absence cast a pall gloom,
Nonetheless'd the fearful truth their guest [illegible]
[illegible]
O death-bed hour and dread! O quiet, quiet ending!

Of one whose joy was all in speed and strife,
Or on [illegible] stormy sweeps of horse and hound,
On [illegible]

[illegible] strong.

Oh, well we grieve for thee, too soon departed!
Too soon! Oh, art on rather think that none
Doth live too soon; that thou, the stalwart-hearted,
Rode quickly level thy wo, and many done
Thy work, and now thy recompense last won!
Forbidden, hereafter many a wearied knee
Of pace and power, thy rival in days gone,
May carry thee the quiet of thy grave—
Alas! cold comfort this, and yet the best we have!

F. E.

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

On Monday evening the Police Commissioners issued an order directed [illegible] to make to them (the Commissioners) a daily return of all cases of cholera occurring within their respective divisions every 24 hours; the reports so furnished to be transmitted to the Government and the Board of Health. The Thames Police is to perform the same duties amongst the shipping in the river, and to make a return of all cases which occur that are not taken ashore

M. Lamartine is again rising to consideration and popularity in [illegible] ovations which he has of late delivered in the National Assembly, particularly that on Friday (se'nnight), in favour of the election of the President by universal [illegible] quarters.

The illustrious foreigners who enriched Paris by their expenditure of wealth are beginning to return. The Earl of Cadogan, Lord Ashburton, and Lord Canterbury are [illegible] planned among the late arrivals; they have taken up [illegible]

On the 26th ult., when the [illegible] mer Tiger, which recently arrived at Havre, left St. Petersburgh, Ge[illegible] was [illegible] cially received by the Emperor Nicholas.

It is said that M. Salamanca, ex-[illegible] Spain, has determined to establish himself in Paris, and to found there a bank and a commercial house of colossal proportions.

Three thousand persons have entered their names at the Prefecture of Lille, to demand a passage to Algeria.

The Court of the Emperor of Austria is composed of 3873 persons, receiving [illegible] per annum among them.

The Fine Repository was [illegible] at Lambeth, in the Parish of the [illegible]

[illegible] the National Guard of Paris, which was composed [illegible]

[illegible] composed, 14,400 have been disqualified

The American astronomers on the [illegible] the eighth satellite [illegible]

The first portion of the Vernon Collection has been removed from the residence of its munificent donor to the apartments in the basement story of the National Gallery, where it is to be temporarily lodged until other and final arrangements [illegible] purchased by Mr. Vernon at the late Exhibition of the Royal Academy, has been added by him to his public gift.

The National Gallery will be re-opened to the public in a week or ten days, when the two pictures by Taddeo Gaddi, lately given to the National [illegible]

[illegible] Parliament [illegible] Parliament [illegible]

By the last accounts from Senegal, up to the 23rd of August, which states that Emancipation had been proclaimed on that day. The financial state of the colony was very precarious, and the slave trade had made the situation yet worse.

A scheme is proposed to form an association of the whole railway interest, for the purpose of extending the application of assurance principles to railway casualties, in aid of railway servants, companies, and travellers. It is in contemplation to devote any surplus profit to the "Railway Officers' Mutual Benefit Fund"—thus giving to all railway servants a direct pecuniary interest in the prevention of accidents.

A collision [illegible] unattended with serious injury, occurred at the Tay terminus of the Edinburgh and Northern Railway on Saturday last, apparently by neglect on the part of the [illegible] and guard—the brakes were [illegible] way, and by the concussion several of the passengers received wounds in the head and face.

Bishop Skinner, the Primus of the Scotch Episcopal Church, has appealed to the inner House of the Court of Session, against the finding of the Lord Ordinary, that the court has jurisdiction [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] curity Savings Banks. In all quarters these institutions are suffering from the minimum rate of interest at present allowed.

[illegible] that, as an able bodied labourer unemployed is not entitled to relief. It is [illegible]

[illegible] years at half the charge for an adult.

The reports circulated as to th[illegible] official quarters to be entirely unfounded.

A grand fête took place at Lille on Monday, in commemoration of the celebrated siege of 1792. A deputation of the National Guard of Paris went to Lille to present the National Guard of that city with flags, and was received by the latter at the gates of the city, and the presentation of the flags took place in the [illegible] persons. The streets were magnificently decorated, and at night there was a splendid illumination.

The Northamptonshire Society for the Protection of British Agriculture [illegible]

On Wednesday, the first portion of a sale by auction of the scenery, machinery, properties, dresses, appointments, and the interior fittings-up of the Royal Surrey Theatre, took place on the stage of the theatre, Mr. Priest acting as the auctioneer. The lots put up were chiefly the scenery, properties, and fittings-up of the theatre, &c. The sale was continued on Thursday and Friday.

James Matheson, Esq., M.P., has been elected a Director of the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of the late Patrick Maxwell Stewart, M.P., formerly a Director and Chairman of that Company.

The corporation of Dublin Town Council have elected Mr. John Smith as sole law agent. Mr. R Morgan, now a political refugee in France, had been among the law agents of the Corporation jointly with Mr. Smith.

A new light, for the guidance of vessels into the harbour of Harwich, is now exhibited at Landguard Fort; the colours are white, red, and green, and instructions to mariners have been given accordingly by the Trinity Corporation.

The Directors of the Blackwall Railway met on altering the gauge, and using the locomotive instead of the stationary engine; and the workmen commenced taking up the north line on Wednesday, preparatory to the alteration of the gauge. The trains now leave either end every half-hour, instead of every quarter, as heretofore.

[illegible] in the [illegible] Lisbon, named Evans, was on Tuesday night, at Pont-y-beyn, near Neuwes, precipitated by a vicious pony over a precipice nearly sixty feet deep. Poor Jones afterwards he was picked up insensible by some miners, with but little hope of recovery

The Secretary of Stamps and Taxes begs to acknowledge the receipt of £50, from some person unknown, for previously unascertained income-tax, and £94 18s. 3d., a sum supposed to be due for unclaimed legacy duty

Colonel Chatterton, K.H., upon his resigning the command of the [illegible]

[illegible]

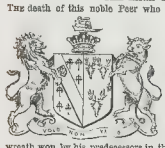
Colonel, seventeen of which as Commanding Officer. October 3, 1848."

Jerome, the seaman who distinguished himself at the burning of the Ocean Monarch, has arrived at New York. He was about to be presented with the freedom of the city of New York, in a gold box, for his bravery and humanity on the occasion of the burning of the Ocean Monarch.

A memorial from the noblemen, clergy, bankers, merchants, and inhabitants generally of Dublin and its vicinity, praying that mercy, in its most liberal sense, and as far as can with safety be done, should be extended to those men, of every rank and station, who have lent their names to the late excitement, is now receiving signatures in that city.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

THE EARL OF CARLISLE, K.G.



The death of this noble Peer who enjoyed the respect and esteem of his contemporaries in an especial degree, is much felt in the locality in which he resided. His Lordship was born 17th September, 1773, the eldest son of Frederick, fifth Earl of Carlisle, K.G., by Margaret Caroline, his wife, daughter of Granville-Leveson, first Marquis of Stafford, and derived in direct descent from Lord William Howard, so well known in border minstrelsy as "Belted Will," second son of Thomas, fourth Duke of Norfolk. His father, the fifth Earl, in honourable rivalry of his illustrious ancestor, "the gentle Surrey," added another poetic laurel to the bright wreath won by his predecessors in the council, the cabinet, and the field. He was guardian of his kinsman, Lord Byron, and appears to have enjoyed for a period the affection and esteem of his wayward ward, who inscribed to him the second edition of the "Hours of Idleness."

The nobleman just deceased received his education at Eton and Oxford, and was, early in life, destined for the diplomacy. He did not, however, adhere long to that branch of the public service, but, having obtained a seat in Parliament as Member for Morpeth, he soon turned his mind to politics, in which he subsequently rose to some distinction. On the formation of the Liberal Government of 1806, his Lordship was given a seat at the Board of Control, and sworn of the Privy Council; but from the dissolution of that Ministry, he remained unemployed, until appointed by Mr. Canning, in 1827, Chief Commissioner of Woods and Forests. In the brief and feeble Administration of Lord Goderich, Lord Carlisle held the office of Lord Privy Seal; and, on the accession of the Whigs to power in 1830, he had a seat in the Cabinet, although he would accept no place in the Ministry. In four years after he retired altogether from the public arena, and thenceforward resided principally in the country, as much beloved by his family and personal friends as he was respected by his political associates. His death creates a vacancy in the Order of the Garter, and causes a new election in the West Riding of Yorkshire, consequent on the elevation of Lord Morpeth to the Peerage. The late Earl married, on the 31st March, 1801, Georgiana, eldest daughter of Wilham, 5th Duke of Devonshire, and has left a large family. Of his daughters, the second, Georgiana, is Baroness Dover, and the third, Harriet Elizabeth, Duchess of Sutherland

FRANCIS GARDEN CAMPBELL, ESQ., OF TROUP AND GLENLYON.

The death of Mr. Garden Campbell, which occurred on Tuesday, the 3rd instant, was occasioned by concussion of the brain, in consequence of being thrown from his carriage on the previous Friday.

The family of Garden has for many centuries possessed lands in the counties of Aberdeen and Banff, and is mentioned at a very early period as Gardyne of that ilk and Banchory. Major Alexander Garden, son of the last Laird of Banchory, went with the troops sent by Charles I. to Gustavus of Sweden, and was present at the battle of Lutzen, in 1632. His great grandson, Peter Garden, Esq., of Delgaty, co. Aberdeen, heir to his brother, Francis, Lord Gardenstoun, of the Court of Session, marrying the heiress of Glenlyon, assumed the additional surname and arms of Campbell, and was great grandfather of Francis Garden Campbell, Esq., of Troup and Glenlyon, whose melancholy death is a our painful task to record.

The lamented gentleman was elder son and heir of the late Francis Garden Campbell, Esq., by Christian Forbes, his wife, daughter of Archibald Cumine, Esq., of Auchry; and grandson of Francis Garden Campbell, Esq., of Troup and Delgaty, by Penelope, his wife, daughter of Richard Smyth, Esq., of Ballynatray, county Waterford, and aunt of the Princess of Capua.

CASTLE HOWARD.

Castle Howard, the seat of the noble family of Carlisle, is situated about six miles from Malton, in the North Riding of Yorkshire. It was commenced by Sir John Vanbrugh, in 1702, for Charles, the third Earl of Carlisle, on the site of the ancient Castle of Hinderskelf. Castle Howard is an extensive and noble pile (500 feet in length), though, like all Vanbrugh's other works of that class, more satisfactory in its general character than when examined in detail. His patron, Carlisle, who was then Earl Marischal of England, signified his approbation of Vanbrugh's taste, by bestowing on him the honourable and not unprofitable appointment of Clarenceux King-at-Arms, in 1703. His work of Castle Howard also recommended him as architect to many noble or wealthy employers, for whom he erected stately mansions in various parts of the kingdom; and he was appointed as the fittest person to build the palace at Woodstock, as a monument of the gratitude of the nation to the first Duke of Marlborough, which was named after his victory of Blenheim.

Castle Howard is one of the finest "show-houses" in the kingdom; its walls are gorgeously painted, its saloons richly dight with marbles and state furniture. Here is, too, a fine collection of pictures and sculpture. The park, in which the mansion is situated, has several ornamental buildings, mostly in Vanbrugh's heavy style. The mausoleum is a circular building, surrounded with a Tuscan colonnade; and over the vault is a circular chapel, the dome supported by Corinthian columns, and the floor inlaid with various marbles.

THE LATE EARL OF CARLISLE, K.G.

COUNTRY NEWS.

The Manchester Exchange and the Electric Telegraph Company.—Much indignation was manifested on Monday among the members of the Electric Telegraph Subscription-room, by the information that Mr. Wrigley, Master of the Exchange, had pirated and carried to that place, for the information and use of its members, a copy of the information obtained from Clonmel, at a considerable expense, by telegraph. Intelligence of the circumstance was conveyed to the members of the Electric Telegraph Subscription-room, who immediately summoned a meeting of their body, which was very numerously attended. Mr. S. P. Robinson was called to the chair. He reminded the meeting that a subscriber had, on a former occasion, been expelled for copying information and publishing it in another public room, and the question was, whether they should act differently in this case. Mr. Wrigley, he understood, said he only acted as the servant of the Exchange Committee in this matter, and did it by their order. It was scarcely possible to suppose that the Exchange Committee would act so meanly, but at the same time they had no right to doubt his word. Be that as it might, however, he thought the course taken was palpably unfair.—Mr. T. O. Lingard: Has Mr. Wrigley had any notice of this meeting?—Mr. J. F. Cox: Yes, I sent information this morning. We posted the Irish news at nine o'clock. Soon afterwards a subscriber, who had been on the Exchange, told me that it was posted there, and that it was a course they regularly practised there of copying our notices and posting them for the benefit of their subscribers. This was mentioned to Mr. Wrigley, Master of the Exchange, who admitted that he had done it, and should continue to do it, having the direction of the Exchange Committee for his guidance. Now the question is, is it fair after the expense we have gone to of sending a reporter to Clonmel to obtain the intelligence, and in laying down wires to Holyhead, that the servant of a body like the Exchange Committee should be allowed to transfer the information for the price of a single subscription to their 3000 or 3600 subscribers? If this thing goes on, you know the result: we shall have no subscribers, and we shall be no longer in a position to incur the expense of obtaining the information for ourselves or any one else; and it is only due to him to say that, since the conversation I have detailed with him, he has laid the matter before the Exchange Committee, and that we have received the following communication. Mr. Cox then stated that he had received a letter from Mr. Wrigley, inquiring, in the name of the Exchange Committee, upon what terms information received per telegraph will in future be given to the Exchange. If (continued Mr. Cox) the Committee of the Exchange made an arrangement to pay for their news, well and good; but, pending that arrangement, I should say you should act as you would in other cases. (Hear, hear.)—Mr. T. O. Lingard then moved, "That the same course be adopted towards Mr. Wrigley on this occasion, as was adopted to a member under similar circumstances on a former occasion." The motion, which amounted to one for the expulsion of the Master of the Exchange, was carried unanimously.

Fatal Accident within sight of the Queen.—On Monday, about three o'clock, the Fairy, Royal yacht, had arrived near the Spit buoy, from Osborne, on her course to Portsmouth, having on board the Queen, Prince Albert, and Royal children, when her Majesty's trip was rendered peculiarly painful, from a deplorable accident which happened in sight of the Royal yacht. A shore boat, with seven persons on board, proceeding to the Grampus frigate, lying at Spithead, had, in a sudden squall, unfortunately upset, when five women and two men were engulphed in a rough sea, with every prospect of certain death. The Gypsey, Cowes-house cutter, however, while returning from the Grampus, observed the accident, and a boat, steered by Mr. Whitby, tide-surveyor, and two men, immediately put off to the spot, and after much beating about, on account of heavy sea and wind, picked up Locke, a waterman, and saved his life. The accident having been perceived on board the Royal yacht, she was, by her Majesty's command, instantly stopped, her barge lowered and promptly steered to the scene of the disaster. Two individuals were taken on board, and immediately conveyed to Portsmouth, where medical assistance was afforded, and one woman named Moore recovered, but the other could not be resuscitated. Out of the seven, therefore, only three were brought ashore. A steamer (Fire Queen) was instantly ordered to assist in recovering the remainder. A messenger from her Majesty called at the house where the parties lay, to ascertain if any of them had been restored to life, and soon afterwards the Lieutenant-Governor and his staff rode down to the same house, and made particular inquiries at the request of her Majesty. Her Majesty remained on the pier in the Clarence Victualling-yard until the return of Lord Adolphus Fitzclarence with the melancholy account, when her Majesty proceeded to Windsor Castle.

Explosion of a Steam Boiler, and Destruction of a Cotton Mill by Fire.—On Saturday morning a large cotton mill, the property of Mr Broadbent, 32, Fountain-street, was burnt down at Manchester under the following circumstances; the boilers are cylindrical, and of high pressure; and about 20 minutes to 11 o'clock, whilst the mill was in full operation, one of the plates of the boiler over the large central flue behind the fire-place gave way, and the water precipitated thus suddenly upon the hot surface underneath and at the sides, generated steam in so much greater volume than it could escape, that it blew the fire-place and fire from the front of the boiler across the quadrangle a length of 30 to 35 feet, perhaps—into the door of the north wing of the mill. Portions of the red-hot cinders and blazing coals were also driven through the windows. The materials with which the fire came in contact ignited almost immediately, and the entrances and staircases to the whole five stories being in this wing of the building there was unfortunately a thorough draught or current of air, which aided the spread of the destructive element. Notwithstanding the efforts made to arrest the progress of the fire, in less than three-quarters of an hour from the commencement the mill was completely gutted. The loss is estimated at £8000 to £10,000; but it is not known exactly what quantity of stock was in the mill, and this is only an approximation; the damage may be more considerable. All was insured.

Fall of St. Edmund's Oak.—The great oak in Hoxne Wood, which has by long tradition been marked out as the veritable tree at which the "Virgin King and Martyr" was shot with arrows, lately fell to the ground. The trunk of this tree was only twelve feet in height up to its separation into branches, but measured five feet in diameter, and contained six and a half loads of timber, and the arms yielded about nine loads more, besides 184 faggots. But the most marvellous part of the story is, that in the inside of the trunk an iron point, having the appearance of an arrow-head, was found by Mr. Smithies, the agent of Sir Edward Kerrison, the proprietor, at the depth of a foot within the bark, and about five feet from the ground, which it is conjectured may have been lodged there at the murder of King Edmund, and encased by the subsequent growth of the tree.—Ipswich Express.

Chertsey Agricultural Association.—The annual meeting of this association took place on Thursday, when a ploughing match came off at Ongar, near Chertsey; and a dinner, at the Crown Inn, in the town, afterwards re-united most of the principal residents of the neighbourhood, Mr. Drummond, the member for the western division of the county of Surrey, being in the chair. A very excellent dinner was provided by Mr. Lovell; and the conviviality of the evening was kept up in good old English style. Mr. Monckton Milnes, Mr. Briscoe, Col. Challoner, Mr. Locke King, and other gentlemen connected with the county, were amongst the guests.

CASTLE HOWARD, THE SEAT OF THE CARLISLE FAMILY

PAS DE DEUX BY MDLLE. PLUNKETT AND M. PETIPA.

SCENE FROM THE NEW BALLET OF "LES AMAZONS," AT COVENT-GARDEN THEATRE.

THE NEW BALLET AT COVENT-GARDEN THEATRE.

After the Opera on Monday night (for a notice of which see page 234), a new grand ballet, called "Les Amazons," was brought out at this Theatre, and with very considerable success—no more, however, than it deserved, from the gorgeous manner in which it was put upon the stage. Mr. Bunn is peculiarly fortunate in his reproductions of those elaborately splendid spectacles for which the Académie Royale and the Porte St. Martin are so famous. Looking back through a long list of pieces brought out under his management, there are few which have not equalled the Parisian originals in their mise en scene, and many have surpassed them.

In the history of Columbus and America we have some recollection of an account of his returning to Spain (after his first voyage) with some young Indians, who told him of an island inhabited by Amazons, to which he would have gone, had not the impatience of his crew to reach Spain again, and their gloomy looks at the proposed prolongation of his voyage, turned him from his purpose. The wonderful island was thus lost to the world until discovered by the ballet composer of the nineteenth century, who has given us a very vivid picture of the manners and customs of its inhabitants. It is fortunate, in these days of asserting the rights of women, that they are not nearer neighbours, or there is no telling what grand domestic revolutions they might not give rise to.

We cannot give the plot of the ballet in clear order, for it partakes slightly of the confusion incidental to all stories of this kind; but we find the Spanish gentleman—who are without doubt that portion of Columbus's escort who shirked their commander under the direction of Pizaro all right, and landed on the island, and getting into that frightful state of dilemmas naturally to be expected in a country wherein the ladies had everything their own way. At last, it is decided by the fair government to drive the intruders from the island; and then the Queen assembles all her guards in review; and all the evolutions are gone through with which we have become familiar in the "Revolt of the Harem," "Valska," "Valentine and Orson," "Lurline," and many other pieces; but which always delight us by their picturesque and glittering combinations.

Mdlle. Plunkett, whom we remember some years ago at Her Majesty's Theatre and who is, we believe, sister to the pretty Madame Docha, of the French plays, made her first appearance at Covent-Garden, as the principal character in this ballet. We congratulate Mr. Bunn upon the engagement, for the young lady is destined to become a great favourite. Attractive in face and figure, she is exceedingly graceful and sprightly in her dancing; and in her general style of pantomime and expression reminds us something of Carlotta Grisi. She was loudly applauded throughout the ballet, and encored in a pas de deux with Petipa in the second act. She also danced a pas seul, distinguished by great finish and precision.

The most unqualified commendation can be bestowed upon the other artistes engaged in the performance. Where all were so painstaking and excellent it is needless to particularise. The continuous rounds of general applause testified the complete success of the ballet, which is altogether one of the most attractive and splendid affairs that we have witnessed for some time.

The resources of Covent-Garden are, as is generally known, immense for the production of great effects, and all these have been brought into play to the full in "Les Amazons."

STATUETTE OF THE PRINCE OF WALES.

This beautiful Portrait of the young Sailor Prince has been modelled, by permission of his Royal Highness Prince Albert, from the picture painted by Winterhalter, of which a print has been published by Alderman Moon. The statuette is from the establishment of Messrs. Minton and Co., of Stoke-upon-Trent. The material is Parian. The likeness is very striking, and the characteristic accessories of the nautical costume very nicely executed.

STATUETTE OF H. R. H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, AFTER WINTERHALTER.

This is certainly one of the most interesting presentments of the youthful Royal Family yet published. It may be seen at Mr. Cundall's, 12, Old Bond-street.

The True Friends of Ireland.—The Agricultural College of the Society of Friends.—This Society are about to establish an agricultural seminary upon a large scale in, perhaps, the part of Ireland where instruction in the cultivation of the soil is most needed by the people. They have, it is said, a sum of £50,000 on hand, collected for this purpose, and with which they intend to purchase a farm of 400 acres in Roscommon, which will be cultivated according to the most improved system, and where the neighbouring peasantry and farmers will be practically taught those lessons indispensable in our present social condition to the maintenance of the population. This model farm, with which an agricultural seminary and museum will be joined, will be superintended by Dr. Bewley, of Moate, a gentleman who, to great practical skill as an agriculturist, joins intimate knowledge of the habits of the people. The Doctor is at present on a tour through the best cultivated districts of England and Scotland, in order to become acquainted with the methods of improvement. He will be stimulated to develope the full advantages of the new institution by a salary of £300 a year, besides one-half the profits of the farm.

THE PROGRESS OF A BILL.

BY W. BLANCHARD JERROLD

ILLUSTRATED BY KENNY MEADOWS

(Continued from page 232.)

CHAPTER VI.

THE MAN IN POSSESSION.

Mrs. Pursey had received the strictest injunctions from her husband to be careful—extremely careful that there was nobody lurking close by when Ann opened the door. Her fears prompted obedience, and the servant was duly cautioned. Some days elapsed, however, ere the nervous housemaid espied any suspicious-looking persons in the neighbourhood; and, on a nearer inspection, she one morning discovered that the man who had left the wine at her master's, was the person in earnest conversation with the individual on whom she had kept her eye during the last few days. This discovery disarmed suspicion, and when she presently saw the two men approaching with a truck loaded with hampers of wine she felt convinced that her fears were groundless.

"Well, Mary," said old Solomon, "this is all right, ain't it? This is Mr Pursey's"

"Yes," answered the girl.

"Here's some wine he ordered of Mr. Moss." And, without further ceremony, the old trickster, aided by his friend, invaded Mr. Pursey's home; and, in less than ten minutes afterwards, old Solomon was ensconced in Mrs. Pursey's little parlour as

PROGRESS OF A BILL.—THE MAN IN POSSESSION.

THE MAN IN POSSESSION

Mrs. Pursey was from home when this Night fell upon her household, and old Solomon, to beguile the hours until her return, sought to insinuate himself with the girl whom he had duped. But Ann was too frightened to listen to the "soft nothings" of this tooth-less Romeo

"Well, my dear, what's the use of taking the matter to heart, eh? There are plenty of places in the world. If that's all, I've given you a character," said old Solomon, by way of beginning.

"You?" answered the maid, scornfully; "I should think a character would be too precious a thing for you to give away. You look as though you were sadly in want of one yourself!

"I, my chicken!" retorted the old man, with repulsive playfulness: "oh no, it doesn't want a character for my profession."

"Then you must be just suited for your business, you ugly old wretch," said the girl, partly, adding, in a deeply sarcastic tone, "what is it, may I ask, you say?"

"Why, she'll be dev'lish pleased to see me, o' course," continued the old sinner, chuckling. "Everybody's glad to see me. I say, my little Venus—my rosy little angel—can't you give us summut to eat, eh? Just a bit-bit. You haven't such a thing as the back and wings of a cold fowl in the larder, have you?"

"No; and if I had, you shouldn't have it."

"Bless me, what a pity it is I ain't a policeman or a grenadier. If I was one or t'other, I might have had the run of the kitchen before this time. An' you're a cruel vixen, you are."

At this moment a double knock resounded through the house, and Ann, to her consternation, recognised it as that of her mistress

"Is that your missus?" asked old Solomon, with stolid calmness

"Yes; oh dear, dear me, won't she be in a way!" exclaimed the maid, in a terrible state of perplexity.

"Well, fetch down the smelling-bottle, and let her in. She can faint in the front-parlour; it won't disturb me. I'm used to them little surprises."

"You're an unfeelin' old wretch," said Ann, as she went, not without threatdom, to let her mistress in

"Please, mum," the girl commenced tremblingly, "there's the man in the house who brought master's wine last time. He says he's come on a very different errand now, and won't go—not for some time. He's in the back-parlour, mum"

"Tch! you good-for-nothing creature!" said Mrs. Pursey, addressing the wretched maid. "This comes of your carelessness: a pretty business you've made of it."

"Please, mum"——

"Oh! don't talk to me. Go down to your work. Where is this man?"

"In the back-parlour, mum."

However Mrs. Pursey went into her back-parlour, when she discovered old Solomon at full length on the sofa, reading her husband's pet edition of Byron.

"Well, sir," said Mrs. Pursey, advancing to the centre of the room, and assuming the most imposing attitude, "what is your business here?"

"Oh you're the missus of this place, are you?" said the old man, slowly re-assuming an erect position. "Well, now I look again, so you are. I thought I'd seen your face afore; you know, when I brought some wine from Moss'. I've come on a different errand now, ain't I?"

"No impertinence, sir; I ask you your business"

"At the suit of Mr. Moss, madam Mr. Macfum's affair. Do you understand?"

"That will do. Your place is the kitchen, sir."

"I beg your pardon, mum; this is my place, and here I shall stay."

So saying, the veteran resumed his recumbent position on the sofa, and went on reading. Against such determined conduct as this there was no appeal, and Mrs. Pursey left the man in undisturbed possession of her usual sitting-room. As all Mr. Pursey's little necessaries, which no housewife are without, and which they term their "things," were in the room which old Solomon had appropriated to himself, she had, occasion to enter the apartment very often; and each time she saw competent to take up the insulting air of the usurping boy. At length, he had some taunt, some wounding remark ready upon his tongue. One time he told her that he admired her chairs, that he thought her choice of legs admirable, so admirable, in fact, that he could not help but smile whenever he looked and chase them or not. Another time he volunteered his opinion of her husband's portrait, which hung above the mantel-piece, asserting her that it was wonderfully flattered. "Why, forgive me, mum, if my memory serves me right, your husband has a decided pug nose, hasn't he?"

If, of all the shades of character which the large family of man presents to the observer, that of the old, hackneyed, brazen man in the employ of the sheriffs be not the most degraded, humanity is indeed capable of a degradation too horrible to contemplate. Have you watched those vicious old men, or your kind recalling about the Sessions House, or round about Chancery Lane? Have you seen them, old, hale men with some sixty years upon their heads, shuffling about the byways of the Law Courts, scrabbling eagerly for a job. True, the law cannot be vindicated—the creditor must receive his due; but how is it, if law be the vindication of justice, that its humbler instruments are either picked from amongst a disreputable body, or debased in the pursuit of their calling? Old Solomon was, perhaps, the most hideous specimen of an old man who, in the natural course of things, would probably be church-yard; always within four seasons—it is possible to count—of his end, which he had spent his manhood and pastened his decay. A man was never more enamoured of his art than was old Solomon of his vocation. He recounted his exploits with the gusto and the gusto of a man who had gained extraordinary marvels for the good of his race: not that he was impressed with the majesty of the law; on the contrary, he was delighted with its intricacies, and the shelter it afforded to rogues of every description, by its ways. Under the legal guidance of such a man as Mr. Moss, it must be at once understood that it was no difficult matter to become a sharp sheriff's man. One day helping to draw a victim to the net, and on the morrow with the sheriff to take care of the victim's property—such was the active life of old Solomon

Mrs. Pursey lost no time in communicating to her husband the fact that an entrance had been effected in their house, and that the impudence of old Solomon was unbearable.

(To be continued.)

NATIONAL SPORTS.

The present policy of those having authority on the turf is all for the improvement of its machinery: witness the Newmarket Meeting of the current week, as daintily devised as a ball-room. There was no ruthless ramps, as of yore—routing the ring from its propriety but a circle, reserved exclusively for persons of respectability—that is to say, with money to pay for their admission. Now, this has good bigun—but much remains behind: "a consummation devoutly to be wished" is still an embryo wherest hope is the father. What threw a gloom over a treat otherwise so grateful?—the financial condition; the sophistry of its restoration. The crisis has arrived in which speculation on horse-racing must be put upon something like a rational footing. This may be taken for granted; so may the assertion that the "sporting" world may be a system confirmed by partial professional experience, and not by a scheme volunteered by amateur good-nature. Walter Scott, the kindest hearted man in the world, apologises to Lady Gardiner for the publication of "Lives of the Novelists" by saying, in words of truth, however unpalatable the deduction:—"I am daughted they afford you any entertainment, for they were flimsily written, because there was no attempt to charge a fraud." ...The assumption that ... is ... entered into upon the faith of capital in hand to cover them, was, most probably, a fable in the days of the Olympic Games; no one supposes it anything but a fiction now. The reasons for this place, and "you?" said the old man, slowly re-assuming an erect position. "Well, now I look again, so you are. I thought I'd seen your face afore; you know, when I brought some wine from Moss'. I've come on a different errand now, ain't I?"

"No impertinence, sir; I ask you your business"

"At the suit of Mr. Moss, madam Mr. Macfum's affair. Do you understand?"

"That will do. Your place is the kitchen, sir."

"I beg your pardon, mum; this is my place, and here I shall stay."

So saying, the veteran resumed his recumbent position on the sofa, and went on reading. Against such determined conduct as this there was no appeal, and Mrs. Pursey left the man in undisturbed possession of her usual sitting-room. As all Mr. Pursey's little necessaries, which no housewife are without, and which they term their "things," were in the room which old Solomon had appropriated to himself, she had, occasion to enter the apartment very often; and each time she saw competent to take up the insulting air of the usurping boy. At length, he had some taunt, some wounding remark ready upon his tongue. One time he told her that he admired her chairs, that he thought her choice of legs admirable, so admirable, in fact, that he could not help but smile whenever he looked and chase them or not. Another time he volunteered his opinion of her husband's portrait, which hung above the mantel-piece, asserting her that it was wonderfully flattered. "Why, forgive me, mum, if my memory serves me right, your husband has a decided pug nose, hasn't he?"

If, of all the shades of character which the large family of man presents to the observer, that of the old, hackneyed, brazen man in the employ of the sheriffs be not the most degraded, humanity is indeed capable of a degradation too horrible to contemplate. Have you watched those vicious old men, or your kind recalling about the Sessions House, or round about Chancery Lane? Have you seen them, old, hale men with some sixty years upon their heads, shuffling about the byways of the Law Courts, scrabbling eagerly for a job. True, the law cannot be vindicated—the creditor must receive his due; but how is it, if law be the vindication of justice, that its humbler instruments are either picked from amongst a disreputable body, or debased in the pursuit of their calling? Old Solomon was, perhaps, the most hideous specimen of an old man who, in the natural course of things, would probably be church-yard; always within four seasons—it is possible to count—of his end, which he had spent his manhood and pastened his decay. A man was never more enamoured of his art than was old Solomon of his vocation. He recounted his exploits with the gusto and the gusto of a man who had gained extraordinary marvels for the good of his race: not that he was impressed with the majesty of the law; on the contrary, he was delighted with its intricacies, and the shelter it afforded to rogues of every description, by its ways. Under the legal guidance of such a man as Mr. Moss, it must be at once understood that it was no difficult matter to become a sharp sheriff's man. One day helping to draw a victim to the net, and on the morrow with the sheriff to take care of the victim's property—such was the active life of old Solomon

Mrs. Pursey lost no time in communicating to her husband the fact that an entrance had been effected in their house, and that the impudence of old Solomon was unbearable.

(To be continued.)

NATIONAL SPORTS.

The present policy of those having authority on the turf is all for the improvement of its machinery: witness the Newmarket Meeting of the current week, as daintily devised as a ball-room. There was no ruthless ramps, as of yore—routing the ring from its propriety but a circle, reserved exclusively for persons of respectability—that is to say, with money to pay for their admission. Now, this has good beg

ADVERTISEMENTS.

"WEIPPERT'S SOIREES DANSANTES," PRINCESS'S CONCERT ROOMS, HAYMARKET.—Mr. [illegible] Director of Two Concerts is entitled to an additional Night, on Thursday, the 19th inst., when will be performed a Selection of Dances by the Band, Weippert's Polkas Band of Seventeen, conducted by the Inventor, M. C. Mr. Corrie. The Refreshments and Supper by Mr. Payne. Commence at Eleven, conclude at Three.—Tickets and programmes at 7s., boho-square, and of Mr Corrie 82, Great Marlborough-street.

MINERVA HALL, 7, HAYMARKET, next door to the Theatre Royal.—Mr. [illegible] Evening with a splendid selection of [illegible] novel character. The Proprietor has the pleasure of announcing a complete success of this truly classic and comic Exhibition, honoured to be the most unique ever offered to the public. A [illegible] Sadler's Wells, Sir Morning performances at 3; [illegible]

ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION.—Every day new PHANTASMAGORIA, by Dircks, is Exhibited; every Evening at Eight o Clock, with appropriate music, directed by Dr. Wallis. The Dissolving Views, with historical descriptions having been re-arranged and additions made, are shown at Half-past Four Daily and in the Evenings at a Quarter to Ten. The Diving-Bell Lecture, with new effects. The MICROSCOPE, at One o Clock Daily. Popular Lectures by Dr Ryan and Dr. Bachhoffner. Diver and Diving-Bell. Working Models explained. Admission, 1s.; Schools, Half-price. The New Catalogue, 1s

SPLENDID DOUBLE-ACTION HARP, by Schwiese, from Erard's, richly ornamented with gold and flowers, in perfect order, to be sold for 25 Guineas cost 50 Guineas at H. WILCOCKS & CO., 19, Newington Causeway, Elephant and Castle.

PIANOFORTES, the best of every description, New and Second-hand, Foreign and English, for SALE or HIRE, at CRAMER, BEALE, and WOOD'S, 201, Regent-street.

SUPERIOR PIANOFORTES, for HIRE or SALE, in Town or Country, warranted, and packed free of expense.—G. PEACHEY'S Manufactory and extensive Warerooms (by appointment to the Queen), 73, Bishopsgate-street. Visitors requisite the Marine Society. A selection of 100 Second-hand Pianofortes, all of superior quality, on terms moderate. N.B. Instruments taken in exchange.

DANCING TAUGHT in the most Fashionable [illegible] at WILLIS'S ROOMS, King-street, St. James's. Mr. [illegible] PATENT [illegible] Mr. [illegible] Evening Parties and Balls attended. [illegible] Assembly Rooms, Hanover-square. Tuesday Evening, Oct. 17th. Assembly Rooms for Dancing, Wednesday Evening, Oct. 18th. The Rooms to be [illegible] Private Parties.

THE SAFETY CHAIN BROOCH (patronised by the Queen) is manufactured into a variety of new and elegant designs in BRACELETS and BROOCHES, and may be sent by post to any part of the kingdom, and ordered DIRECT FROM THE INVENTOR, HENRY ALDRIDGE and SON, Devizes. Plans and [illegible]

PRESENTS for WEDDINGS, BIRTHDAYS, &c., may be selected from SUMMERLY'S ART-MANUFACTORIES, sold by all Fashionable Booksellers. The Illustrations are—the Camellia Teapot, Cloverleaf, Wooden Bread Platter and Knife, Glass Flower Vase, &c. A Catalogue, with 24 Designs sent, on receipt of Three Postage-stamps, from SUMMERLY'S, 12, Old Bond-street.

JONES'S £4 4s. SILVER LEVER WATCHES, at the Manufactory, 338, Strand, opposite Somerset House. They comprise every modern improvement, and are warranted good in every more than half a century per week. The great reduction of price at once sets aside all rivalry, either of the Swiss manufactories, or any other house. On receipt of a Post-office Order, payable to JOHN JONES, for £4 4s., one will be sent Free.—Send Jones's Illustrated Watch Circular for a Twopence Stamp.

ELECTRO SILVER PLATED SPOONS and FORKS, of the best quality.—Table spoons or forks, 6s per dozen, desert ditto, 4s; tea ditto, 2s; mustard spoons, 1s; egg spoons, 6d; sauce ditto, 4d; salt ladles, 1s each.—T. COX SAVORY and Co.'s Illustrations, &c., 17, Cornhill (seven doors from Gracechurch-street), London.

MUSICAL BOXES.—An extensive assortment of fine-toned BOXES, of superior quality and celebrated makers. Messrs. [illegible] Co. have just received a large assortment of 600 airs, overtures, &c., from the most [illegible] Weber Rossini, Beliole, Donizetti, &c., together with the most recent English Composers. A catalogue of the music, with dials of prices is now published, and may be had, gratis, on application at 295, OXFORD-STREET, opposite the Pantheon, where the Boxes may be heard, and [illegible] Messrs. Nicole, Nephews, and Co. Watchmakers, &c., 47, Cornhill, seven doors from Gracechurch-street.

THE NEW FISH CARVING KNIVES and FORKS.—A. B SAVORY and SONS respectfully inform their customers that their STOCK of these useful articles is ready for selection. It is unrivalled for elegance, and is made of the finest steel, in silver, from 30s the pair. 14, Cornhill, London, opposite the Bank.

THE BEST ENGLISH WATCHES.—A. B. SAVORY and SONS, 14, Cornhill, London, respectfully solicit the Bank, request the attention of purchasers to their Stock of London-made PATENT LEVER WATCHES, which are manufactured by themselves in their own Establishment, with the Patent Detached Escapement and Jewelled, the prices are Four Guineas and a Half, Six, and Eight Guineas each, in Gold Cases; Five, Six, and Seven Guineas each, the very large stock offered for selection affords them the opportunity of stating with confidence that which is more particularly adapted to his own use. Each watch is warranted

A HANDSOME PRESENT.—A GOLD WATCH and PINE GOLD CHAIN, fitted complete in a morocco case, for £8 10s, very strong and serviceable, and the watch is as follows:—Double-backed gold case, gone dial, horizontal movement, four hole jewelled, maintaining power to go whilst being wound, and a second fusee, with a written warranty as given, and a twelvemonth's trial allowed the chain is of the best quality.—HALL and SONS, Watch Manufacturers, 16, Cornhill, opposite the New Royal Exchange.—N.B. These elegant presents can be forwarded through the Post-office with perfect safety, upon the receipt of the order for the amount.

SARL'S ARGENTINE SILVER PLATE.—SARL and SONS, 3, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury Square, have 8 richly-chased and splendid STOCK of SPOONS and FORKS in every variety of pattern, to meet the extensive demand for that article, having rendered a constant supply impossible, S. and SONS take this opportunity of informing their friends and the public that orders to any extent can now be promptly executed. All the articles usually made in solid silver are now manufactured by Sarl and sons in their Argentine Plate. Pamphlets of prices and drawings forwarded on application.

DAKIN'S ROYAL PATENT COFFEE.—The following certificate of Mr Alfred S Taylor and Mr Arthur Aikin, the great authorities on chemistry, is a sufficient guarantee for the sanitary question, as to the beneficial effects and advantage of "Dakin's Royal Patent Coffee," will, no doubt, be deemed conclusive. The prospectus, fully detailing the process, and the particulars of the novelties, may be had on application.

We hereby certify that we have chemically examined [illegible] of coffee, namely, best Mocha, Jamaica, very fine and good Java, and Costa Rica, both in the raw state (1) as prepared and roasted by the patent process of Messrs. Dakin. We have likewise chemically examined samples of the same varieties of Coffee roasted at the same time in the usual way, and the result of this examination is that in delicacy of flavour, odour, and as an article of diet, the coffee prepared by Messrs. Dakin's process is, in our judgment, superior to that prepared in the ordinary way

"We have also examined the apparatus used by Messrs Dakin for roasting coffee, and we find that as it is constructed, the process of changing the berries to effect the roasting only, is prevented, the separation of acid or of products of empyreumatic oil, is prevented, the separation of acid vapour is more gradual and complete, and a larger portion of aroma is retained than occurs in the usual method of roasting coffee.

"The process of Messrs Dakin appears to us, therefore to a chemical view, better adapted than any yet suggested for procuring roasted coffee in a pure and wholesome form.

"ARTHUR AIKIN.
"ALFRED S TAYLOR F.R.S.
"Lecturer on Chemistry at Guy's Hospital.
"Chemical Laboratory, Guy's Hospital, Aug. 9, 1848.

PRICE CURRENT OF "DAKIN'S ROYAL PATENT COFFEE"

In addition to the following sorts, DAKIN and Co. have the best Coffees procurable from Liverpool, Jamaica, Demerara, Mocha, Java, Padang, St. Domingo, Batavia, Havannah, Brazil, Haha, Cuba, La Guayra, Porto Rico, &c.

	SELECTED SORTS.	WHOLE OR GROUND
Ceylon	0 9 to 1 2
Fine	1 4 to 1 6
Berbice	0 10 to 1 4	Common Coffee
Costa Rica	0 11 to 1 4	Very good ditto
Very fine in flavour	1 6 to 1 8	Very strong & fine-flavoured
Curaçoa	1 1
Mocha
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]

Two pounds of good sound coffee, in a neat packet
Two pounds of strong and fine-flavoured coffee, in a sealed [illegible]
Two pounds of very choice and excellent coffee, in a sealed [illegible]

[illegible] DAKIN'S ROYAL PATENT COFFEE.

Gentlemen of science and the public generally are respectfully invited [illegible] are mainly that the whole machinery, and [illegible] DAKIN'S ROYAL PATENT PROCESS for roasting and preparing coffee.

PUBLICATIONS, &c.

DEDICATED BY PERMISSION TO THE QUEEN
Now ready, the 7th thousand, post 8vo., cr[illegible], 2[illegible], with five Illustrations, 3s.;

THE PEARL OF DAYS; or, the Advantages of the Sabbath to the Working Classes. With a Sketch of the Author's Life. By a Labourer's Daughter.—London: PARTRIDGE and COMBE, 9, Ludgate-hill. 79, REGENT-STREET; and all Booksellers.

Just published,

INSANITY TESTED by SCIENCE, and proved to be a Literary penalty incapable of cure. By O. M. BARNETT, M.D. S. Lichfield, Poet-street

Price 2s. 6d. (Proof impressions on Lady's paper

A PANORAMIC PICTURE of the HOLY LAND, including Model Views of the principal Cities and Places mentioned in the Old and New Testament. With 85 References. Sent by [illegible] Part II at the Office of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, 198, Strand [illegible] all Booksellers

Eighteen Shillings, Vol. XII. of

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, Elegantly bound in cloth, gilt edges, rich in Illustrations of the [illegible] and valuable ILLUSTRATED CHRONOLOGY; together with a Selection.—The Covers for Binding Vol. XII., with the New Alphabetical Index, [illegible] Booksellers, &c., in the Kingdom, as also all the previous Volumes

NEW SONG, "We Yet May Meet Again." [illegible] Words by Mrs. [illegible] Music by [illegible] [illegible] You'll remember me." The melody is extremely fresh and [illegible] of the Author of the Rose has not sung such in "Sir Rupert" [illegible] for rapping. "I will return to thee," "I thought of thee," &c.; but We yet may meet again" contains them all in popularity.] London: DUFF and HODGSON 65, Oxford-street

NEW WORK ON LEARNING.
Small 8vo. 7s. 6d., cloth gilt,
THE HAND-BOOK of TURNING.
Containing Instructions in Concentric, Eccentric, Elliptic, and Eccentric Turning; also various Patent Chucks, Tools, and Instruments, and Directions for using the Eccentric Cutter, Drill, Vertical Cutter, and Rectangular Cutter, with Descriptions and Instructions for working them.
SAUNDERS and OTLEY, Publishers, Conduit-street.

A New Edition, price 6s. of
WADE'S HAND-BOOK to the PIANOFORTE, comprising an easy Rudimental Introduction to the Study of that Instrument and Music in general; the Art of Fingering, illustrated by Examples of the best masters, exemplified in various Exercises, Scales, &c., in all the major and minor keys; and interspersed by valuable Instructions, consisting of Popular Melodies, Airs, Romances, and selections from the Pianoforte Compositions of the most celebrated modern masters, with an easy Introduction to Harmony or Counterpoint, and a new Vocabulary of Terms
Published at CHAPPELL'S Music Warehouse, New Bond-street; and by WHITTAKER and Co., Ave Maria-lane.

COMPLETION OF THE WORK.
Now ready, price 2s. 6d.,
PART IV. OF
THE HISTORY and ART of WOOD ENGRAVING; containing AN INTERESTING HISTORY OF THE ART OF WOOD ENGRAVING FROM THE EARLIEST PERIOD
BY W. A. CHATTO and J. JACKSON.
With Fac-similies of various Specimens of Ancient Wood Engraving; Also, Original Engravings, by the Author, and Mr. Jackson.
THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS
And exhibit in various styles the progress of Wood Engraving
Drayton Manor (G Dodson)
Gazelle
La Fete du Mariage (P. Goodall)
Portrait of Bamborough
Keighley House (G. Dodson)
Hampton Court Palace (W. L. Leitch)
Prince Albert)
Portrait of Copyright (A. Pripp)
View Lear Folkestone (Ullis)
A Tale of the Wars (J. J. Jenkins)
Gordon Goose (W. Watson)
Chalky Church, Sackford-on-Avon (Duncan)
Portrait of Lord Anne Hathaway's Cottage
The Lovers' Walk (F. Dauby, R.A.)
The National Trial (W Harvey)
This Work is printed in the most careful manner, upon a warranted paper made expressly for the purpose, which considerably enhances the beauty of the Engravings. Now complete in Four Parts, 8s. 6d. each.
LONDON: W. LITTLE, 198, Strand; and sold by all Booksellers.

ANNUAL PRESENT.
THE ILLUSTRATED NEW TESTAMENT
(AUTHORISED VERSION)
Beautifully bound in leather, embossed and gilt sides, gilt edges, price 21s. Morocco, 30s. Morocco, Elegant, 42s. Calf, 42s. With Sixty Splendid Engravings from Drawings executed by Eminent Artists expressly for this Edition. Notes, Historical, Explanatory, and Descriptive, and embellished by a novel Panoramic Picture of the Holy Land, as seen from Mount Olivet, and a Map of the Holy Land, with Sixty

NEW LIGHTHOUSE AT CALAIS.

NEW LIGHTHOUSE AT CALAIS.

To-morrow (Oct. 15), pursuant to an official announcement from the Minister of Foreign Affairs in France, this new Lighthouse will be illuminated for the first time. It is situated at about 400 metres distance from the old Lighthouse Tower in one of the entrenchments of the fortifications of the town of Calais, at 50° 57′ 45″ north latitude, and 0° 29′ 2″ west longitude. The elevation of the lantern is 51 metres above the ground, and 58 metres above high water. The light will be within sight 20 miles. The light will change every four minutes, the bursts of light preceded and followed by partial eclipses, which, in ordinary weather, will not be total beyond about 12 nautical miles. Appended to the official notice is the following:—

In order to prevent the mistakes which may arise from the multiplicity of lights along the coast, it is necessary here to give the appearance of the lights adjacent to the Calais light.

Ricmond light.—A fixed light.
Dunkerque light.—An eclipse every minute.
Gravelines light. A fixed light.
New Calais light. Varied by bursts of light every four minutes.
Grenet light.—An eclipse every half minute.
Cayeux light.—(At the entry of the bay of the Somme.)—Varied by bursts of light every four minutes.

This new Lighthouse was first proposed in June, 1844, by M. Reynaud, Engineer-in-Chief of Bridges and Roads, and Secretary of the Commission of Lighthouses; the design for the elevation being furnished by M. Delabie, of Calais. The works were confided to M. Gandet, under the superintendence of the Engineer-in-Chief of the port of Calais.

The site was selected on August 25, 1845, and on September 5 the works were commenced. The foundation consists of blocks of stone, of great depth beneath the basement. This comprises two cellars for the oil, &c., besides a cistern; these cellars communicating with the vaults of the fortifications. The ascent from thence is by a stone staircase, to the ground-floor, which contains a vestibule and apartments: the staircases leading to the lantern are embellished, and the lantern-chamber and the vestibule are paved with marble. The interior of the tower is circular; the exterior, octagonal. The upper portion of the design consists of eight pilasters supporting an entablature, surmounted with a cornice and consoles; and above this is an open stone balcony, surrounding the base, upon which is placed the lantern, of elegant form.

The cost of this beautiful Lighthouse is £8000.

Another Suspension Bridge over the Niagara.—The Halifax Sun says:—"They talk of building another suspension bridge over the Niagara, opposite Queenston. At the location chosen, the water space is about 600 feet; between the towers, which are to be of stone, the distance is about 800 feet. Mr. Elliott, the engineer, offers to construct the bridge for carriages and foot passengers for 40,000 dollars, and to take 10,000 dollars of the stock himself. The remaining 30,000 dollars to be divided between Canada and the United States. We understand, says the Toronto Examiner, that Mr. Elliott has made affidavit at Lockport, that the bridge at the Falls, in its present state, is unsafe, and will not last two years."

Depreciation of Tolls on the Surrey Side of the River.—Since the opening of the extension line of the South-Western Railway from Nine Elms to the Waterloo-road, the trustees of the Surrey and Sussex roads have intimated that it will be necessary to erect new toll-gates, the ordinary income having been so greatly reduced by the railway as to be quite insufficient for the repair of the public roads. This announcement has created great dissatisfaction amongst the owners and occupants of household property, not only in all this part of the metropolis, but in the various suburban districts, which must be more or less affected by the exaction of a fresh toll. Several meetings have already been held in Camberwell, Walworth, and other places, for the purpose of resisting the threatened infliction of new tolls. The road trustees assert, however, that they have no other alternative; whilst other parties seem to be of opinion that the railway company, having obtained so much of the traffic, should be assessed in a proportionate degree for the maintenance of the public thoroughfares. The railway directors, naturally enough, demur to this proposition, the line having been already subjected to a heavy charge in the shape of highway rate. Should the road trustees put up any fresh gates, the matter will it is said be brought before Parliament immediately on its re-assembling.

NEW PATENT CURRICLE TRIBUS.

THE NEW CURRICLE TRIBUS.

This new public carriage, patented by Mr. Harvey, of Lambeth House, has just made its appearance in the streets of the metropolis. Our Illustration shows the vehicle en grand tenue: it is open in front, like Hansom's patent cab, and has seats for three persons; the driver sitting at the right-hand corner behind, and the conductor to the left of the door.

It is drawn by two horses, across whose backs is the horizontal steel bar, which formed a feature of the caparisoning of curricles of old. The carriage is handsomely appointed; and, besides the shutter windows in front, has side windows, filled with ground glass. Although drawn by two horses, cab fares only are charged by this new "Tribus."

It may be seen at Heath's York Stables, York-road, Lambeth, nearly opposite Astley's Amphitheatre; where it is let for private use.

Our Artist has depicted the new carriage passing the Bank of England; by which means are also shown the architectural additions just made to the Bank façade.

LITTLEMORE CHURCH.

LITTLEMORE CHURCH.

On Michaelmas-day, the Bishop of Oxford, in the presence of a large body of Clergy, consecrated the additions to Littlemore Church, near Oxford, consisting of a tower and chancel, which have been erected by the munificence of C. Crawley, Esq., and friends. The Bishop preached an impressive discourse on the occasion, and a large amount was collected at the offertory.

This church is remarkable as having formerly been held by the Rev. J. H. Newman, before his secession to the Roman Church. The additions are in the Early English style, executed in stone, with shafts of Purbeck marble. The tower is but half finished, and capped with a temporary covering. The chancel roof is of oak, and of an agreeable design; though, perhaps, rather too light. The screen and other wood-work is of oak, but slight, and, as a whole, of inferior design. The tall and narrow chancel windows are all filled with stained glass by Willement, in the style of the period; and, though not in themselves master-pieces of that art, yet relieve the monotony that would otherwise prevail, from the total absence (it is to be hoped, only temporary) of decorative colour at the end. Altogether, the pleasing proportions and purity of detail reflect great credit on Mr. J. Clarke, of London, from whose designs the works have been executed.

London: Printed and published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by William Little, 198, Strand aforesaid.—Saturday, October 14, 1848.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

No 340—Vol. XIII.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, OCTOBER 21, 1848. [Sixpence.

THE AUSTRIAN REVOLUTION.

WE have more than once endeavoured to correct an error in which some English journals that pretend to the greatest influence, and to the greatest accuracy, very pertinaciously persist—that the Revolutions of which Germany is now the theatre, were produced by the French Revolution of February, 1848. We do not yield to any of those journals in our regret for, or abhorrence of democratic excesses, whether displayed at Paris or Frankfort, at Vienna or at Berlin; but we think it perfectly possible to deplore and condemn those excesses, without mis-stating facts, or attributing them to any other than their real causes. It is worse than idle, to ignore the social evils which have produced these political convulsions. It is worse than unjust, to imagine that these various populations have rushed into the turbulent vortex of Revolutions, for no object more worthy or more sane than a desire to imitate the French, or a malignant love of turmoil and massacre; and utterly absurd, to suppose, as many do, that, if Louis Philippe had succeeded, as he ought to have done, in governing the French, the misgovernment of Prince Metternich might have been perpetuated in Austria. But such is the view taken of the extraordinary events now in progress in Germany, by public writers in this country; and such are the false notions of them which they seek to instil into the minds of their readers. It is difficult to conceive the object of such misrepresentations. They can produce no effect upon the Continent but wonder that English journals of character and reputation should be so ignorant, or indignation that they should be so unjust and so partial; while at home their effect ultimately, whatever it may be immediately, cannot but tend to convict them either of unpardonable misunderstanding, or still more unpardonable perversion of the truth.

No fact was better known to those who had studied Continental politics, or had taken even the most ordinary interest in the affairs of Germany, than the political caducity of the Austrian system under the sway of Prince Metternich. It needed no French Revolution to prove its rottenness. Prince Metternich himself, unless the common rumour of the last twenty years belied him, scarcely expected that Austria would hold together after his death. "After me the deluge," was the melancholy witticism (borrowed from Cardinal Richelieu) with which he but too clearly and emphatically expressed his conviction that misfortunes were preparing for his country which he might perhaps retard, but which he could not possibly avert. He and others may have erred in their calculations of the time when the event was to happen; but his knowledge of facts was too intimate to permit him to doubt, that, sooner or later, Revolution would be the result of the accumulated perplexities of the Austrian Empire.

That Empire as it existed but a year ago (we need not go further back into its history) was, as regards its component parts, the most extraordinary Empire in Europe—or in the world. Perhaps it is premature to say it was; and we may correct the expression by saying that it is the most extraordinary—the most incohesive—the most ill-assorted—the most heterogenous Empire of modern times. It is necessary, for the due understanding of the remarkable events that are now taking place in and around Vienna, that we should cease to look upon Austria, as we do upon the French Republic or the British Monarchy, as one and indivisible. On the contrary, we must look separately at its component parts, if we would ascertain the real condition and the wants of each.

Firstly, there is Austria Proper, and all those portions of the hereditary dominions of the Kaisers which are German in manners, traditions, and language. The movement which has taken place in this portion of the Empire is decidedly democratic, and is precisely the same in all its grand characteristics as that which agitates Prussia and other parts of Germany, as well as France. Freedom of speech, of writing, and of debate, and a share in the Government by means of a constitutional and representative system, are demanded by the German-Austrians, as they are by the German-Prussians. There is nothing to be surprised at in this. Such demands are the natural results of European civilisation. Prussia was promised a constitution in 1815; and there is such a necessary community of ideas between populations that speak the same language and read the same books, that what Prussia was promised as a matter of grace and favour, was ultimately expected both by Prussia and Austria as a matter of right. This community of ideas extended still further, and embraced the notion of German Unity. Neither is there anything surprising in this. A grand German Empire or Federation, of which the existing Federation of German States gives the shadow but not the substance, would so clearly be to the advantage of each individual State, that even the Monarchs of Germany have confessed the desirableness, while they have doubted the possibility of the consummation. This is one of the greatest of the forces now heaving in the Austrian volcano. Its tendency is clearly towards disintegration.

Secondly, the Italian dominions of the Emperor are agitated by the same desires for constitutional forms of Government, and by the spirit of nationality, influenced by language, religion, and tradition. Both forces impel them in like manner to separate from Germany, either to establish themselves as an independent State, or to form part of a great Federation of Italy. Here again there is a force, of which the unmistakeable issue is disintegration.

INSURRECTION IN VIENNA.—THE CONFLICT AT THE CATHEDRAL.

[COUNTRY EDITION.]

Thirdly, the ancient and proud Kingdom of the Magyars or Hungarians, speaking another language, and feeding its mind at other sources of inspiration, has its own necessities. The movement in this part of the hereditary dominions of the Emperor differs from the Italian and German movements in being decidedly aristocratic. It is a movement of the minority; for the Magyars do not form above an eighth or a seventh of the whole population of Hungary. But that fraction is powerful, and desires the independence of Hungary. The democracy of Austria Proper, and of Germany generally, as well as of Lombardy, sympathises with it, chiefly because its success would be their success, and a weakening of that central authority which has hitherto been strong enough to preserve a nominal cohesion to the Austrian Empire.

Fourthly and lastly, are the Sclavonic and Czech populations, more numerous than the Magyars, hostile to them and to the Germans—and, without any precise democratic tendencies towards constitutionalism, cherishing a pride of race even more intense than that of the Magyars. This pride vents itself in the idea of "PANSLAVONIA." Upon the affections of this portion of the people the Emperor of Austria seems finally to have thrown himself, either to build out of the materials which it affords a new empire more stable and homogeneous than the old, or to use it as a means of recovering his fading authority over the other three races of which he is in theory, though not in fact, the ruler.

Such is Austria at the present day. We have already shown in this Journal the woful state to which the finances of the Empire are reduced. One fact alone will show the scandalous mismanagement of its resources. At the conclusion of the war in 1815, the debt of Austria was two hundred millions of florins. At the present time, after a third of a century of peace and of unexampled progress in the arts of civilisation in all the rest of Europe, its amount is one thousand millions. Taxation has been carried to its extreme limit, and become not taxation, but spoliation. While the expenses of the Government and of the army have been and are enormous, and of daily increasing magnitude, agriculture and manufactures, without one or both of which no state can flourish, have been alike defective or undeveloped. "So defective is agriculture in Austria," says a well-informed contemporary, "that, although three-fourths of the population are engaged in it, there is need of large yearly importations of corn; and though capital is thus demanded for the culture of the soil, a prohibitive system diverts its manufacture, whilst this very manufacture is burdened by taxes upon its raw material." It is these social and fiscal evils, not the doings or misdoings of the French, which have produced commotion in Austria, and which in all countries, unless reformed in time, sow the fruitful seeds of political convulsion. In Austria this source of evil has, as we have seen, been aided by many others; and thus, although we may confess that the French Revolution has fired the train, it is quite clear that the gunpowder which exploded was not French, but Austrian.

The position of the Emperor and his Generals at the date of the last accounts from the capital, will, we think, be more intelligible after these few remarks. Having crushed the Italian movement in the meantime by the strength and good-generalship of Marshal Radetzky, the efforts of those who rule in behalf of this unfortunate Monarch were directed against Hungary. Jellachich, Ban of Croatia, was invested with powers to crush the Hungarians, as Radetzky had crushed the Lombards—with this difference, that the object was concealed. Jellachich is a Sclavonian, and shares the hostility of his race towards the Magyars. The plan of operations was to use the Sclavonians for the purpose of affirming their ascendancy in Austria, and of basing the throne of the Kaisers upon their support and allegiance. Having made an end of the pretensions of the aristocracy of Hungary, Jellachich was to perform the same execution upon the democracy of Vienna. But the scheme was too transparent: the Viennese took alarm—prevented the departure of troops from Vienna to support Jellachich, and brought on a catastrophe which has resulted in the second flight of the Emperor. He has finally taken refuge among the Sclavonians, the last accounts stating that he was at Ollmütz, in Moravia. In the meantime the crisis is hastening: Vienna is armed to the teeth; the whole population has been called to its defence; and the Landsturm has been raised both in Austria Proper and in Hungary. Almost under the very wall of Vienna, Auersperg, the Commander of the Imperial forces, is encamped with a large force, apparently only waiting orders or reinforcements to attack the capital. Jellachich is on the march to aid him, at the head of 60,000 Sclavonians: while, from Hungary, Kossuth, at the head of 70,000 men, is hastening to aid the Viennese, and try the chances of battle with Jellachich and Auersperg. While we write, the issue may have been decided. Whatever it may be, it cannot but prove the most important event of the many that now agitate Europe; and, in all probability, it will throw into the shade, by its magnitude, all the other revolutions that have signalised, or will yet signalise, the memorable year of 1848.

THE WEATHER.

The weather during the past week has been dull; the sky has been almost wholly overcast; the whole mass of air has passed from the N.: and the temperature has been below the average. The following are some particulars of each day:—TUESDAY, till 6h. P.M., the sky was mostly overcast, and it was chiefly clear after this time; the direction of the wind was chiefly N., and the average temperature of the air was 48°. Friday, the greater part of the sky was free from cloud till 3h. P.M., and it was overcast afterwards; the direction of the wind was N., and the average temperature was 49½°. Saturday, the sky was overcast till 8h. P.M., and it was alternately fine and cloudy afterwards; rain was falling frequently throughout the day; the direction of the wind was N., and the average temperature was 48½°. Sunday, rain was falling almost continuously, and the day was very dull and gloomy; the direction of the wind was N., and the average temperature of the air was 47°. Monday, the sky was overcast, the direction of the wind was N.; and the temperature of the air was 44½°. At midnight, the temperature of the air declined to 37½°; and on the morning of Wednesday the reading of the thermometer was as low as 34°; the day was bitterly cold, the sky was overcast, a cold north wind was blowing; and the average temperature of the air was 38° only, being full 10° below the average for the 18th of October, as deduced from the observations of the seven preceding years. The average temperature for the week ending this day was 45½°.

The following are the extreme thermometrical readings for each day —

Tuesday.	Oct. 12, the highest during the day was	56 deg., and the lowest was	41 deg
Friday.	Oct. 13, " "	52 " "	43
Saturday.	Oct. 14, " "	54 " "	43½
Sunday.	Oct. 15, " "	51½ " "	42½
Monday.	Oct. 16, " "	54½ " "	41
Tuesday.	Oct. 17, " "	51½ " "	37½
Wednesday.	Oct. 18, " "	42 " "	34

In the paper of last week were inserted the results of some observations made in the month of September, at Bristol, by means of two self-registering thermometers. Results of this class are of no value, unless the readings of both the dry and wet bulb thermometers be given, or the means stated, or tables used in deducing the results: mention also should be made as to whether the instruments had been compared with standards or not. I have before me the results from 40 different places in the month of September, and no mention is made at one of these places of the almost constant temperature of the dew-point, as indicated by those observations. The readings of the dry and wet bulb thermometers, and the deduced dew-point at Blackheath in September, were as follows:—

At 9h. A.M. mean reading of dry bulb	57·3	of wet bulb	54·5	reduced dew-point 52·7
" 3 " "	71·4	"	61·4	" 57·4
" 9 " "	54·3	"	51·1	" 47·8
" 9h. P.M.	56·3	"	53·3	" 50·4

The readings of the barometer as given are surely wrong: the mean reading at 9h. P.M., all over the country, was less than that at 9h. A.M., but not by so great a difference as 0·023 inch. It was not stated whether these readings were corrected or not, for temperature, &c: if not corrected, they are useless.

I avail myself of this opportunity to inform those readers of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS who have written to me on the subject, that these observations will be not seen by me before publication.

Blackheath, Thursday, Oct. 19, 1848. J. G.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

This week the aspect of political affairs has been varied by a partial change of Ministry, and the raising of the question of the propriety of removing the "state of siege" existing in Paris since the insurrection of JUNE.—Committee of the National Assembly having been appointed to report on this latter quæstio vexata, for which piece of progress towards "Constitutional Government" the ultra-Republican journals would have it they were indebted not to Government, but to the new Ministers' sentiments, notwithstanding, they write most bitterly. The Moniteur, however, has set the matter at rest by observing that "Certain journals assert that the raising of the state of siege, and the presentation of a decree ordering the removal to Algeria of the insurgents of June condemned to transportation, were conditions required by the new Ministers previous to their entrance into the Cabinet. These measures were already agreed upon since the vote on the proposition of M. Durrieu. They obtained, moreover, the assent of the whole of the new Ministry."

The modification of the Cabinet consists of the following appointments and retirements, viz.—of M. Dufaure to the Ministry of the Interior, in the place of M. Sénard; M. Vivien to the Department of Public Works, in place of M. Recurt; and M. Freslon to the Ministry of Public Instruction, in place of M. Vaulabelle.

The French Ministry, therefore, as at present constituted, is as follows:—General Cavaignac, President of the Council; M. Marie, Minister of Justice; M. Dufaure, the Interior; General Lamoricière, War; M. Goudchaux, Finance; M. Bastide, Foreign Affairs: M. Vivien, Public Works; M. Tourret, Commerce; M. Freslon, Public Instruction; M. Bethmont, Marine. Of these, MM. Dufaure, Vivien, Tourret, Freslon, and De Lamoricière, belong decidedly to the Moderate party. MM. Marie, Bastide, and Goudchaux are counted as Republicans of the ancien régime, although M. Marie was one of those who would have advised the transition to a Republic in February. He would have supported a Regency under the Duchess of Orleans.

The combination, which was announced in the Moniteur on last Saturday afternoon, has been made the subject of violent attack by the organs of the ultra-Democratic, Socialist, and Red Republican parties, who have been greatly annoyed at the new manifestations of General Cavaignac in favour of moderate Republicanism. Nothing, however, short of a Ministry composed of what they call Républicains de la Veille, who claim to be considered pure Republicans, principally upon the violence with which they promulgated wild and subversive doctrines when the Republic had been proclaimed, would satisfy this party. The men who reproached Ledru-Rollin with failing short of the standard of Danton, and who hold up Robespierre and St. Just as brilliant examples to be followed in the Republic of 1848, could scarcely be expected to approve of the appointment to Ministerial posts of such men as M. Vivien and M. Dufaure.

The République says:—"Where does General Cavaignac go to seek successors for his outstanding Cabinet? Is it in that part of the Assembly of which the opinions, alike progressive and practical, by inspiring confidence in the country, could have drawn round the Government an imposing majority? No: but in the convenicle of the Rue de Poitiers, that alte pudride of Legitimists, Orleanists, and Federalists, who pray so heartily for the fall of the Republic. He goes and chooses out M. Freslon, Procureur-General at Angers, the advocate of punishment of death, and the zealous defender of the commercial interest, who prosecutes, with an equal quietude of conscience, attacks made against the Monarchy and the Republic; he goes and chooses M. Vivien, the insignificant Minister of Justice of the weak Administration of March 1, who, since his fall, has known how to unite the popularity of a languid opposition with the profits of public functions; and, lastly, M. Dufaure, a fallen celebrity, the unfortunate patron of the dotation of princes, a Ministerial aspirant always ready for office, who withdrew with a religious horror from the Reform banquet of Saintes, because the directors of it thought that the dinner could very well pass over without a toast being drunk to the King! Such are the Republicans who obtain the sympathies of General Cavaignac. Nothing more remains for us to do than to cry out 'Vive le Roi!' and send a char-à-banc to the exile at Claremont."

The National even has condemned the new ministerial appointments.

M. Gervais de Caen has been appointed Prefect of Police, in the place of M. Ducoux. The latter resigned his functions in the following letter addressed to General Cavaignac:—

PARIS, October 14.

I have constituted a new Ministry, which, in my eyes, is the personification of the Republic, and which will be able, after eight months existence, by mon who, at all times, employed their talents and efforts to prevent it from coming into contact with the public, may be considered as the most perfect and approved model. In presence of the dangers which menace liberty in France, whilst it triumphs in Germany, I resume my place among the adversaries of Royalty, which I will combat under all its disguises. All the soldiers of democracy must be at their post; mine has ceased to be, where my political sympathies are so much shared. Here the kindness to give me a successor. Health and fraternity!

DUCOUX, Prefect of Police.

The representative of the people,

The Moniteur contains a general and statistical return of the 3423 insurgents of June transported to Havre, classing them according to their professions, ages, and origin. Among them were—7 literary men, 2 lawyers, 1 physician, 2 engineers, 2 clergymen, 2 students, 2 professors, 1 actor, 1 painter, 1 sculptor, 3 gamekeepers, 2 reporters, 36 historical painters, 30 engravers, 29 sculptors, 14 musicians, 8 architects, 2 comedians, 38 Gardes Mobiles, 26 Republican Guards, 44 city sergeants, 3 soldiers of the line, 1 sailor, 1 gendarme, 1 fireman, 1 wine retailers, 84 jewellers, 13 clockmakers, 54 glaziers, 46 printers, 8 bookbinders, 30 weavers, 23 splanners, 36 bakers, 25 cooks, 13 butchers, 12 pastrycooks, 107 shoemakers, 77 tailors, 30 hatters, 122 joiners, 28 turners, 28 carpenters, 117 mechanicians, 112 smiths, 35 slaters, 161 masons, 43 stonecutters, 11 plasterers, 16 farmers, 16 coachmen, 385 labourers, 40 servants, 7 proprietors, 271 of whom were born in Paris, 191 were foreigners, and the origin of 501 was unknown.

A return has been made within the week, by the French Minister of Finance, of the amount of the receipts received by the Treasury, under the head of "Imposts and Indirect Revenues," during the first nine months of 1848, which, compared with the receipts for the same period of 1848 and 1847, presents instructive though not very gratifying results. It shows a fearful diminution since February in the aggregate trade of the country; and, notwithstanding the rumours and strenuously spread of a gradual resumption in the trade and manufactures of [illegible] the receipts for July, August, and September, 1848, as compared with the same months of 1847, it appears that in July there is a diminution in the receipts of 1,756,000 francs; in August a diminution of 13,807,000 francs; and in September a diminution of 13,751,000 francs. On the whole three months there is an aggregate falling off of 37,303,000 francs as compared with 1848, and of 49,544,000 francs as compared with 1847. It also appears that while the falling off for the quarter just past of the present year is upwards of forty millions and a half, the falling off for the two previous quarters was under sixty-two millions. This surely shows an symptom of a resumption of trade

The following is a detailed table of the receipts of indirect taxes, for the first nine months of 1848, as compared with 1847

DESIGNATION OF THE TAXES	1848	1847
Registration duties, hypothèques, &c.	121,[illegible],000	[illegible],000
Stamp duties	72,[illegible],000	[illegible],000
Custom-house { Miscellaneous articles	41,750,000	[illegible],000
Import duties { Indian colonial sugar	[illegible],000	[illegible],000
{ Foreign ditto	[illegible],000	[illegible],000
Export duties	[illegible],000	1,478,000
Navigation duties	1,852,000	1,981,000
Duties and miscellaneous products at the Customs	1,377,000	2,129,000
Salt duties within the limits of the Customs	3,000,000	3,064,000
Duty on potable liquors	65,180,000	72,702,000
Salt out beyond the limits of the Custom-house	8,350,000	9,227,000
Tax on home-made sugar	15,685,000	[illegible],000
Miscellaneous	[illegible],000	[illegible],000
Produce of the sale of tobacco	86,904,000	88,[illegible],000
Duty of gunpowder	4,850,000	[illegible],000
Duty of letters, sending of money, &c.	37,490,000	[illegible],000
Duty of places in the "malle-poste"	1,100,000	[illegible],000
Dues of dire in packets	911,000	[illegible],000
Total	490,419,000	528,774,000

This shows an aggregate falling off on the present year of exactly 102,362,000 francs. There is a diminution under every head except three, and these three are significant. The export duties have increased to the amount of 45,000 francs, in consequence of the vast quantity of plate removed from France. The Post-office revenue has increased 635,000 francs, in consequence of the enormous quantity of newspapers and correspondence occasioned by the Revolution of February; and the produce of places in the packets has increased 911,000 francs, in consequence of the vast number of persons who have fled from France. This species of improvement will hardly be a matter of congratulation to the Minister of Finances. On the other hand, it will be seen that the import duties have fallen off to a frightful extent. For instance, the duties on French colonial sugars have diminished from 31,830,000 francs to 15,900,000 francs, or rather more than one-half; and the Custom-house duties on miscellaneous merchandize have diminished one-third. The only article producing a large revenue, upon which there is not a heavy falling off, is tobacco. It still returns nearly as much as it did in the February quarter of the present year.

The return of the direct taxes collected has also been published. The total amount of these taxes is—ordinary direct contributions, 43,457,000f.; and the 45-centimes tax, 101,780,000f., making in all 629,217,000f. Of this sum, the amount collected up to the 30th of September was 87,744,000f.; so that there remains 249,473,000f. of arrears still to be collected. [illegible] that 45-centimes tax.

Two members of the Municipal Commission of Paris, Messrs. Lionville and Littre, have resigned their functions. "Holding my office," writes the latter to the Prefect, "not from the Government, but from the people, and not being inclining towards a side which is not mine, I request you to accept my resignation of member of the Municipal Commission. Health and fraternity."

The new Archbishop of Paris, M. Sibour, was solemnly installed at Notre Dame on Monday.

The Moniteur publishes a decree of General Cavaignac, appointing the celebrated preacher Abbé Cœur, Bishop of Troyes. By another decree of the Chief of the Executive Power, Vice-Admiral Dupetit Thouars had been named Member of the Board of Admiralty, in the place of Vice-Admiral Casy. M. Bresset, the grandson of the celebrated Conventionalist of that name, has been appointed Secretary to the Minister of Public Works.

The committee appointed by the National Assembly to receive the communications of the Government, relative to the state of siege, have decided with General Cavaignac in favour of its removal. M. Aylies was to present a report to that effect to the Assembly, after which M. Marie, Minister of Justice, would submit to it a project of decree for the repression of offences committed by the press

It was reported that M. Etienne Arago had resigned the direction of the Post-office. M. Arago having refused his confidence to the Government, by his vote on Monday evening, could not with propriety continue in office

The great Socialist Dinner, at which above 2000 Red Republicans attended, and at which Pierre Leroux and Comte d'Alton Shee, an ex Pear of France, presided, took place at the Barrière Poissonnière, on Wednesday. The usual violent speeches were made, and the meeting dispersed without any disturbance. An immense military force was collected in the neighbourhood, but their interference was not required

The new Minister of the Interior, M. Dufaure, has already adopted measures to curb the licentiousness of the Paris press. La République was seized on Tuesday. It contained an infamous libel on the Government, on the subject of the insurgents of June, who have been transported.

An obstinate resistance continues to be opposed in the French provinces to the collection of the additional 45 per cent. imposed by the Provisional Government on the assessed taxes. At Luberzac, in the department of the Corrèze, the cattle of a reading farmer were seized in default of payment, but, though they were driven to several fairs, not a purchaser could be found for them.

NATIONAL ASSEMBLY.

MONDAY.—At one o'clock, M. Marrast, President, took the chair.

M. Dufaure, the new Minister of the Interior, ascended the tribune, and having presented a project of decree, tending to obtain an additional credit of 100,000f. for secret services purposes, proceeded to observe that General Cavaignac, in virtue of the powers vested in him by the Assembly, had invested several of its members with the direction of the affairs of the country. It was consequently indispensable that it should know the sentiments which animated the new ministers, and they had seized that opportunity to ascertain in a solemn manner whether those sentiments were conformable to theirs. It was impossible to conceive two different Republics. The country had spontaneously proclaimed the Republic, a Government which called every citizen to participate in the Government of the country—a noble institution, resting on the principle of the sovereignty of the people, and on liberty, equality, and fraternity, proclaimed eighteen centuries ago by Christian revelation. None but insane men could disown those principles, and they should be culpable if they attempted to elude them and not carry them into effect. Every man, gifted with any elevation in the soul, cannot but render homage to liberty, the source of all progress—to equality, which makes all citizens equal before society and God, who created them—and fraternity, which must ere long introduce into all social sufferings, and the remedy of those evils would be the incessant object of their solicitude and endeavours. He regretted to say that the very name of Republic inspired fear and distrust

PIEDMONT AND LOMBARDY. The Piedmontese Gazette of the 12th publishes a decree, in sixty-six articles, containing a complete reorganisation of the system of public instruction.

Advices have been received from Milan, which announce that the news of the struggle going on in Hungary had produced great agitation in the army of Marshal Radetzki. Croat and Hungarian regiments each demanded to march and join their countrymen. Nothing but the greatest energy on the part of Radetzki retained them. The Croats, especially, were in a state of excessive disturbance.

The National Congress of the Italian League, for promoting a federal union of the States of Italy, commenced its sittings in Turin on the 11th, under the presidency of M. Mamiani, and divided itself into three sections: political, economical, and military. Count Gabrio Casati was elected chairman of the first section: P. Sterbini, of the second; and General Recchia, of the third. The Congress afterwards proceeded to admit the Neapolitan members, Spaventa, Massarla, and Leopardi; and the Roman members, Sterbini and Pino. The Tuscan professor Giorgini had not arrived.

PRUSSIA.

The National Assembly, at Berlin, on the 11th, commenced discussing the 4 constitution. The first line of the preamble, "We, Frederick William, by the grace of God," &c., occupied the whole debate, upon an amendment of M. Scunedler, who proposed the omission of "by the grace of God." A long discussion took place upon this amendment, and, eventually, the question being put the erasure was carried by a majority of eighty-seven votes, the left centre having united with the extreme left. However, although the Chamber have thus got fit in its place without the words that God's grace has any connexion with the F. an Monarchy, it has admitted that Prussia is to exist, the title of the Sovereign being decided to run thus: "We, Frederick Wilhelm, King of Prussia." A Polish deputy proposed that the title of "Duke of the Grand Duchy of Posen" sho. d be added. A discussion arose upon this, an artful motion, and, although the se. e of the majority was evidently against it, the proposition was referred to the committee for a report. The chamber, having commenced the discussion of the Constitution, had, with some difficulty, got through five or six words during the sitting. It is calculated that if they continue as the same pace, it will require about six years to get through.

On the 13th, in the Assembly, the Burgher Guard Law, which of late had been the subject of much discussion, was put to the final vote. The Chamber decided, by a majority of 117 votes, for the adoption of the amendments which had been proposed to different articles of the law, and which were, in. that no oath should be taken on the law until the Constitution was completed; 2nd, that the commanders were to have the right of assembling the Burgher Guard on their own authority; and 3d, that the Burgher Guard were to remain in possession of the arms they now had, were likewise adopted by a great majority. The principal objection which was made to the law is to have not been removed, in consequence of these amendments having been carried

A new Game Law, which had been debated in previous sittings, was also adopted by the Chamber in the same sitting.

Much excitement prevailed at Berlin, in consequence of the news received from Vienna.

UNITED STATES.

We have this week advices from New York to the 3rd instant, which, however, present but little change in political matters. The Taylor and Clay party, throwing aside all disagreements, had agreed to the purpose of electing General Taylor. At a meeting of the joint parties, held for the purpose of concluding the nomination of Taylor and Fillmore, scarcely a dissentient voice was heard

Much comment has been occasioned by the publication of a letter from Senator Benton to the people of California. He tells the people of California that "The civil and military government established over them as a right of war at an end; that they are to form their own Government, not lawful officers, and can get none except by their own act,' and advises them to 'meet in Convention, provide a cheap and simple Government, and take care of themselves until Congress can provide for them.' He considers that Congress will not have passed no duties to the United States should pay them to the people of California—say 90 per cent on the value whence imported." On the subject of slavery he advises them to do nothing at present. "When you become a state," he says, 'the entire and absolute decision of it will be in your own hands.' He calls General Kearney, the late Governor, and Colonel Mason, the present Governor, 'each an synonymous,' and says the bill appropriating 700,000 dollars for Californian claims was 'baulked' by the 'Lea' communicated to Congress by Colonels Mason and Stephenson."

The steam-propeller Gokah, plying on Lake Huron, had been lost with all on board, comprising twenty five passengers. About eighty kegs of powder were put on board the Gokah at Buffalo, and they were not to be opened carefully in the extreme bow of the vessel, the farthest from the fire, and covered with merchandise. There were 60,000 shingles, 30,000 feet of lumber, and about forty tons of pressed hay stowed away between decks and on the upper deck—forming altogether a highly combustible cargo. The supposition is that the vessel took fire, and the gunpowder on board exploded, and thus steamer was lost. The local [illegible] reported that the crew had [illegible] ashore in a small boat near Leamgton. He saw the fire making its w [illegible] the powder, when he lowered the small boat and made his escape. When a short distance from the vessel he blew up with a tremendous explosion, and he was the only one left to tell the sad tale.

MEXICO

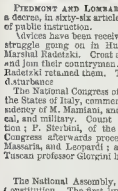
By the intelligence received from the city of Mexico we learn that Santa Anna had applied for his return The Paredes party were still disposed to give trouble The affairs of the country appeared outwardly quiet, but it was feared that there were elements of revolution within which would sooner or later break out into open hostility to the existing Government.

CENTRAL AMERICA.

VENEZUELA. Accounts from Puerto Cabello to the 4th ult continue to describe Venezuela as in a most deplorable condition. The foreign residents in that unfortunate country, in consequence of the want of protection enforced by the military commanders, had made repeated complaints to the Government, but without any effect. It was reported that the fleet belonging to the Constitutionalists had gained a victory over that belonging to the Government. An engagement took place on the 23d of August, in the vicinity of Margarita Island. After the contest the Paez squadron bore away for Curaçoa, where General Paez was staying. He ordered the fleet at once to sail for Maracaibo, to capture the castle, which was still in the possession of Monagas's troops. The general impression in Curaçoa was, that Monagas could not withstand the forces that would be brought against him by the Constitutionalists.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

SIR ROBERT MOUBRAY, K.H., OF COCKAIRNIE, CO. FIFE.

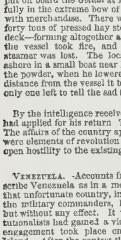


THE death of this excellent gentleman occurred on the 14th instant, at his seat of Cockairnie. He was a Colonel in the Army, and a Knight of the Royal Hanoverian Guelphic Order. His military career extended over a considerable period. In 1801, when a Captain in the 50th Regiment, he embarked at Cork under the orders of Colonel Wellesley, now Duke of Wellington, to join the standard of Sir Ralph Abercrombie, on the coast of Egypt; and subsequently ten years in India, and eight in the Mediterranean. In the first Campaign of 1805, Captain Moubray acted as

Assistant Deputy Adjutant-General, under Major-General Hay Macdowal

Few families in the empire are so ancient and illustrious as that of Mowbray. The chief branch resided in the 11th century, in the county of Lincoln, of which English history; and its scion, the Moubrays of Barnbougle and Cockairnie, fill no inconsiderable space in the annals of Scotland. The gentleman whose death we record wedded in 1794, the Hon. Barbara Hay, daughter of Waldegrave, fourth Earl of Kinnoull. In consideration of the splendid lineage, Sir Robert received the honour of Knighthood at Carlton Palace, 20th April, 1825.

At the period of his decease the worthy Knight had nearly completed his 74th year. He married, in 1807, Laura, fourth daughter of William Hobson, Esq., of Markfield, in Middlesex, and leaves a large family All the sons, inheriting the martial spirit of their ancestors, took commissions in the land service of their country. Sir Robert's only brother, the late Admiral Sir Richard Hussey Hussey, K.C.B., gained high distinction as a naval Commander. He adopted the name of Hussey in lieu of Mowbray, on succeeding to the Wood Walton estate in Huntingdonshire.



JOHN EDWARD O'REILLY, ESQ., M.P., OF ANNAGH ABBEY, COUNTY CAVAN.

MR. O'REILLY, of Annagh Abbey, whose recent death is deeply deplored, was the representative of a distinguished branch of the princely sept of O'Reilly. The family pedigree exhibits an unbroken descent of nineteen generations: and on the walls of Annagh Abbey a stone may still be seen bearing the inscription "Johannes O'Reilly fecit, 1686."

The lamented gentleman was born 21st January, 1803; and married, 26th May, 1847, Janeta-Maria, only surviving daughter of John Chas. Lorlaine, Esq., of Chester and Tranmer

ISAAC DONNITHORNE HARRIS, ESQ., OF HAYNE, IN DEVON.

MR. DONNITHORNE HARRIS died at his seat, near Lipton, a few days since, aged 78. The surname of Harris he bore in consequence of his marriage with Elizabeth, daughter and co-heir of Christopher Harris, Esq., of Hayne, representative of the Hayne branch of the great Devon family of Harris, which was established by the famous lawyer, Mr. Sergeant Harris, who purchased the estate from Nevill, Earl of Westmoreland. By the heiress of Hayne Mr. Donnithorne Harris leaves a son and successor, the present Christopher Arthur Harris, Esq.

IRELAND.

THE STATE TRIALS.

On Thursday, the 12th, the trial of Mr. M'Manus was brought to a close by his being found Guilty; and the trial of Patrick O'Donohue, on the same charge (high treason), was terminated on Saturday, also with a verdict of "Guilty" against the prisoner, the Jury adding a recommendation to mercy in both cases.

A writ of error has been advised in those cases, as well as that of Smith O'Brien.

TRIAL OF MR. MEAGHER.

MONDAY.—At the sitting of the Court, Thomas Francis Meagher was placed at the bar to take his trial for high treason. The great interest felt for the prisoner was manifested by a much fuller attendance of spectators than had been witnessed since the conclusion of Mr. O'Brien's trial. The indictment was similar to that in which the other prisoners were arraigned. Mr. Whiteside proposed that the names of the gentlemen who had served on the former juries should be abstracted from the list of jurors, and the remaining names put in the ballot-box, with a view to have the jury elected by ballot. The Court intimated that on this point they could not interfere; it was for the Attorney-General to say whether he would accede to the proposition The Attorney-General declined to do so, and matters proceeded in the ordinary way. When the Jury were about being sworn, Mr. Meagher protested against the exclusion of Catholics from the panel. The objection was not personal; he would as readily take his chance before a Protestant as to a Catholic jury, but on public grounds he felt bound seriously and solemnly to object to the course that had been adopted. After some objections on the part of the prisoner, the jury was sworn, and Mr. Attorney-General proceeded state the case of the Crown against the prisoner.

The examination of Mr. Hodges, one of a gentleman who proved the handwriting of the prisoner in some documents that were given in evidence, closed the proceedings of the day

TUESDAY.—The court opened at a quarter before ten o'clock.—T. S. Dobbin, the informar, was the first witness examined. He deposed to having seen Mr. Meagher at a meeting of the Curran Club at Dublin, in June. Mr. Meagher was not a member of the Curran Club, but was a visitor. He was present at the Grattan Club; he attended a meeting on the 22nd of June for the presentation of colours to the club. It was a tri-coloured flag. Mr. Meagher spoke of them standing by their colours to establish the independence of their country. Attended a meeting on the 21st. Mr. Meagher was present. Mr. Dillon was moved to the chair. No business was done until Mr. Meagher came. He was in the room when Mr Dillon was moved to the chair It was stated in the room that the meeting was for the election of an executive council. Mr. Dillon announced it from the chair. It was said that a council of 21 members was too numerous as their transactions would come out through so many hands, and that there would be more secrecy in a smaller number. Mr. Dillon mentioned certain names out of a letter brought to him by Mr. Lalor from Mr. Duffy, who was in Newgate; they were the names of persons whom Mr Duffy wished to be on the executive council; the names of three clergymen were read out—those of Mr. Hughes, Mr O'Malley, and Mr. Kenyon; the name of Mr. Lalor was also mentioned. Some of the members said, that as it was to be a war-council, it was not fit that priests should be on it. The persons announced to be elected were Mr. Dillon, Mr. Meagher, Mr. O'Gorman, Dunbry, Mr. M'Ge. ness, and Mr. Devin Reilly. Mr. Lalor said Mr. M'Manus wanted those present to give a pledge that they would expedite the insurrection by the 8th of August. Mr. Meagher objected to give any pledge of that sort, that he would have it on the 8th; but he was afraid to call all in his power to expedite it even before the 8th. Mr. Lalor stated that the council of five would in all next day to arrange to have four club meetings in Dublin on the next Sunday, the 23d; they were to have no speeches; that the names of the club-men were to be called out; they were not to tell the chairman about who they were to meet until about two hours before the meeting, as it was considered they should be sufficiently well organized to turn out at two hours' notice. The object of this meeting was to ascertain the numerical strength of the clubs; they were not to be armed. After a lengthened cross-examination, Dobbin was dismissed. and a police officer proved the finding of the letter written to Mr. Smith by Mr. Meagher, and read in court on the previous day. The house in Smith's house were also found many other letters in Mr. Meagher's hand-writing. Voting and other papers taken from Mr. Lalor were then put in evidence and identified.—Chamberlain Cauliffe deposed that he was present at Jones's Road, and heard Meagher say, that on the morning of Sunday, the 23rd, he saw Mr. Smith O'Brien, Mr Meagher, and Mr. Dillon, come into the town on a car; they addressed the people in the market-place. Meagher said he always was brave and determined that they all had a gun in a corner, and kept their powder dry, and were always sure to hit their mark.

After a great deal of evidence and cross-examination, during which it was contended that it was impossible to connect Mr. O Brien's and Mr. Meagher's purpose together, the Court adjourned to Monday.

SMITH O'BRIEN.—On Monday, at half-past 1 o'clock, the Lord-Lieutenant received the deputation appointed at the meeting of the citizens of Dublin to present a memorial to His Excellency praying for a commutation of the sentence passed upon Mr. Smith O'Brien. The Lord Mayor headed the deputation, which was composed of several most respectable citizens. The following is the address

TO HIS EXCELLENCY EARL CLARENDON, LORD-LIEUTENANT GENERAL, AND GENERAL GOVERNOR OF IRELAND

MAY it please your Excellency We, the undersigned, consisting principally of the inhabitants of Dublin and its vicinity, address your Excellency as the representative in Ireland of Her Majesty's gracious prerogative of mercy in its favour.

WILLIAM SHARMAN CRAWFORD, Gentleman.

The Lord-Lieutenant received the deputation with the greatest courtesy, and said, in order that there should be no mistake as to the nature of the answer he was about to give, he would read it. His Excellency then read the following answer:—

As it appeared to be the wish of Mr. Sharman Crawford and the gentlemen who accompanied him here last week, and subsequently of the Lord Mayor, that I should receive from the hands of a deputation the memorial, which has been so numerously signed by the inhabitants of Dublin, I have not hesitated to comply with that wish; but, still considering as I did that the Clemency of the Crown was not a matter to be discussed in the same offices as Mr. Meagher, any reference also, to the notes of a writ of error that has been given, I need hardly inform you—and I feel certain you will readily admit—that I could now give any definite answer to the memorial beyond an assurance that it would be given the consideration of the highest responsible jury who tried Mr O'Brien.

SUPPOSED ATTEMPT TO ESCAPE FROM NEWGATE.—On Sunday, between one and two o'clock, the Governor of Newgate having received information that Charles G. Duffy contemplated an escape from gaol, he (the Governor) at once proceeded, accompanied by the Deputy Governor, constables, and police, to the [illegible] officials who were in attendance, to the apartment occupied by the prisoner, and commenced an active search. In a leather trunk belonging to the prisoner they discovered a rope ladder about 40 feet long, and a quantity of rope about the same length, and it was said that by means of these the prisoner intended to make his escape The sentinel who was on duty over the prisoner's apartment alleges that he had been offered a bribe if he allowed the prisoner to escape. The officials belonging to the establishment, on making what they deemed an important discovery, at once removed the prisoner to a more secure part of the gaol, where double guards were placed on him, and the most rigorous search kept upon his movements. The room occupied by Mr. Duffy looked into Green street, and the window opens into the street for the purpose of ventilation This room had been previously allocated for the use of debtors. There was nothing of the kind found in the apartments of the other prisoners

PENSIONING THE CATHOLIC CLERGY.—At a meeting of the Catholic Archbishops and Bishops of Ireland, held at the Presbytery, Marlborough-street, Dublin, October 11th, 1848, the following was among setera. other resolutions unanimously adopted:—"That, having observed that a notice has been given of a parliamentary motion regarding a State provision for the Catholic clergy, and, as a Journal that he "continues to enjoy excellent health. He is perfectly cheerful and composed, and in his usual good spirits—not in the least depressed by the circumstances of his painful and perilous position. He rises at every morning, and breakfasts at half-past seven. Mrs. O'Brien, whose fortitude and strength of mind under her misfortunes are the admiration of all, visits her husband each morning at nine o'clock, and remains with him all the day None but the nearest members of his family are allowed to see him. He still occupies the same apartment as before his conviction."

FATAL ACCIDENT.—On Saturday morning last, an accident, attended with the sacrifice of life, occurred in the vicinity of Christ Church, Dublin Six dilapidated houses suddenly, and killed many of the inmates. Those houses were the property of the Dean and Chapter of Christ Church, and the inhabitants were not of the best repute. The inquest on the bodies of the parties killed shows that five persons lost their lives, and that thirteen or fourteen were desperately wounded.

ROYAL YACHT PROMOTIONS.—The usual annual promotions of the officers of the Royal steam-yacht Victoria and Albert have been promulgated. They are Lieutenants—Edward James Bedford (1838), to the rank of commander. Mates —William B Elphinstone (1847), Thomas B. Lethbridge (1848), and Thomas D. Atkinson (1848), to the rank of lieutenant.

AUSTRIA.

NEW REVOLUTIONARY MOVEMENT.

We noticed briefly, in our Postscript of last week, an insurrectionary outbreak of the people in Vienna, on the 6th instant; the partial fraternization of the troops with the insurgents, and the flight of the Emperor from the capital. At the risk of repetition, we give this week the details of those occurrences, in order to render more complete the narrative of the extraordinary events which now convulse the Austrian Empire, from its centre to its remotest limits, adds the latest accounts of all subsequent proceedings bearing upon the subject.

The publication of the intercepted correspondence between the unfortunate Count Latour, the Imperial Secretary at War, and Baron Jellachich, the Ban of Croatia (noticed last week), having completely confirmed the suspicions which the Liberals of Vienna entertained, that the policy of the Em Government was to abet the Croatians secretly against the Hungarians, with a view to the annihilation of the newly-acquired liberties of the latter, and to subsequent crushing of the popular party in Austria, the destruction of popular liberty there, and the establishment of a system of reaction, the indignation and rage of the people became greatly excited: and on the 6th instant this state of the popular mind was raised to a still higher pitch of exasperation by the publication of the Emperor's proclamation, declaring against the Hungarians. Public opinion had already been put on the alert by the concentration of large masses of troops in the vicinity of the capital; and the dissolution of the Hungarian Parliament, the appointment of Baron Jellacich to the Lord-Lieutenancy of Hungary, and other reactionary measures contained in a previous proclamation, were regarded as but the links of a chain which was to bind Austria down to the same despotism as that of the days of Metternich. It was stated generally, that the military had especially the German Grenadiers, were in favour of the popular cause Early on the morning of the 6th the Grenadiers were ordered to march and join the expeditionary force against the Hungarians. They did not refuse to quit their barracks, but they were forewarned of their march and its object, and had communicated with the corps of National Guards of the suburb of Gumpendorf, in which their barracks were situate, and with the Academical Legion, from both of which they received a promise that measures would be taken to prevent their departure.

Such measures were taken. The National Guards from the Hundsthurm assembled at six o'clock on the morning of the 6th at the terminus of the Northern Railway, from which they removed the rails, for the purpose of preventing the departure of the Grenadiers by that line. A short interval now elapsed, and the commanding officer, seeing that the removal of his troops by rail was impossible, gave orders for their proceeding on foot to Glinsendorf, a station on the line whence he hoped it would be possible to effect their conveyance by the railroad. But this plan too was resisted by the National Guards, the numbers of which increased with every minute. A barricade effectually stopped the march of the regiments near the Tabor bridge. Orders were given for the storming of this barricade; and the War-office being aware of the mutinous disposition of the Grenadiers, several batalions of cavalry were instructed to escort them. But the Grenadiers crossed the bridge, carried the barricade, and fraternised with the National Guards. The latter destroyed part of the bridge, thus preventing the cavalry from interfering. Regiments of infantry were then drawn up to reduce the insurgents, and to enforce obedience to the commands of the Government, and the artillery arrived at 10 o'clock, when the cannons were announced to surrender: this they refused to do, for they had meanwhile been reinforced by the Academical Legion. The parties stood thus opposed to one another, until a body of workmen proceeded to seize a powder waggon and four guns, which they effected without any opposition from the artillerymen But this act of the insurgents gave nevertheless the signal for a bloody conflict

The Austrian infantry fired three successive volleys [illegible] loud cheers and quick discharges [illegible] the Grenadiers [illegible] on seeing [illegible], their retrograde movement became a downright flight The Government troops had 50 killed; the insurgents 3; and there were many wounded.

After routing the Government troops, the insurgents marched from the suburbs into the town, where they placed their guns in the middle of the University square; the gates of the town were guarded by detachments of students and National Guards, the bonds was sounded, and a central committee formed for carrying on the war

At 1 o'clock a party of the insurgent National Guards were attacked on the Stephans Platz by a party of National Guards who were loyal by the Government. A short fight the latter were forced to retire into the Cathedral of St. Stephan, the doors of which they then barricaded from within. But the insurgents battered down the doors, entered the church, and dislodged their antagonists, whose leader was killed on the steps of the altar.

Those of the city gates, the Burgthor, still remained in possession of the Government troops. These commanding of sappers and miners, with four guns, stationed at 3 o'clock in the afternoon. They were at once attacked, and totally routed, in spite of the grape and canister which they fired from their pieces. Many of them were captured, disarmed, and confined in the University buildings. Formidable barricades were constructed while this fight was going on. The old fortifications of the city were occupied by the artillery of the National Guards.

After this the tide of insurrection rose to an unconquerable height. The rioters entered the War-Office between the hours of five and six, seized the cannon and arms deposited in that building, and captured the Minister of War, Count Latour. The wretched man was conducted into the street, and was murdered with horrible circumstances and slashings. The people tore the clothes and [illegible] from his bleeding body, and hung the [illegible] of corpse on a gibbet, where it remained suspended for a whole day, during which the National Guards riddled it with musket-balls. Count Latour's papers were seized and brought to the University.

At half-past six o'clock there was but one place of refuge left for the troops of National Guards who sided with the Government—that place was the Arsenal, famous for its glorious trophies from the Turkish wars. The people surrounded the Arsenal, and demanded from the garrison that they should give up the arms which it contained. They refused. A combat commenced, in the course of which the garrison swept the Renngasse with grape and canister, and killed and disabled a great number of the insurgents, whose fury increased after each unsuccessful attempt to gain possession of the building. The committee of students sent several flags of truce, summoning the garrison to surrender, but the bearers were shot dead on the spot. The people then commenced bombarding the Arsenal, and the firing continued all the night through, till six o'clock on the morning of the 7th, when the garrison surrendered. Those among the popular party who were not provided with weapons were then armed.

An [illegible] ness thus stated in the session on the 8th, [illegible] about two o'clock the Guards from the suburb Wieden entered the city, and were joined at by the Nationals from the Kirnthnerviertel, a division of the Guards which is described as the vulgar partisans the [illegible]-yeticus, and not considered to consist of haughty aristocrats and secret friends of the fallen system. They fired from the windows of St. Stephen's Cathedral, the doors of which were burst open, and blew upon a wedding [illegible] of the name of Baltz, killed before the high altar. A fearful struggle took place in the Cathedral. I have just now seen the marks of bullets on walls, pictures, and altars. Meanwhile a strong detachment, having taken the Arsenal, had taken their stand before the Kaerthnerthor door, their four cannon at the first discharge smashing and tearing away the Nationals and Academicians, who occupied the square before St. Stephen's. These, however, held out manfully, and made the first round attacks. The soldiers with fixed bayonets, drove them from their position, took two of their cannon, pursued them up the Graben, through the Kärnthnerstrasse into the yard of the War-office. Here the combat was carried on with the greatest fury, four cannon before the War-office being there at the service of the soldiers. They made grape-shot, especially into the Roggencreutzer, and the loss of Life and of property in that quarter is very great. In the middle of the night I stood on the Ferdinand's-bridge, and saw the flames and the smoke, while the poor wretches came in crowds to the road, endeavouring to escape over the roofs of the neighbouring houses In vain—they could not get out. It is impossible to say how many were suffocated by the smoke or perished in the flames. The remainder this morning delivered up their arms and were imprisoned. About 100,000 muskets, carbines, and other fire-arms fell into the hands of the citizens, and there is nobody now unarmed in Vienna. The people might have proclaimed any form of government, but not a single cry for a Republic was heard. They want a constitutional Monarchy, but with better guarantees than they have had hitherto; and all this frightful loss of life might have been spared, i. the Imperial family had entered heart and soul into the new state of things."

THE BASTIONS, AT VIENNA.

The list of dead and wounded, not including those in private houses and in the military hospital, published at 12 o'clock on the 7th (Saturday), gave as dead, 118; wounded, 162.

In the midst of the scenes above described, the Emperor and the other members of the Imperial family left Vienna early on Saturday morning (the 7th). They were escorted by 7000 cavalry, and took the road towards Linz.

The transactions of the Austrian Diet while these bloody deeds were enacting round them, were significant. On the 6th, at 11 o'clock, several members of the Left assembled and sent an address to the President, M. Strobach, asking him to summon the members of the House, in order that the effusion of blood might be stopped. The President refused to comply, because, as he stated, he did not think that the matter was sufficiently important. Upon this, the Diet assembled without him, constituted itself en permanence, and elected another President in the person of M. Smolka. After much discussion on the state of affairs, the Diet adjourned, and re-assembled at seven o'clock P.M., and appointed an Executive Committee, consisting of members of the Left. M. Löhner moved an address to the Emperor, demanding the formation of a new and popular Cabinet with Messrs. Doblhoff and Hornbostel in it; the removal of Baron Jellachich from his governorship of Hungary; the revocation of the last proclamation against the Hungarians, and an amnesty for those implicated in the riots of that day.

The House accepted the motion, and sent a deputation to the Emperor. Various other resolutions were also passed to meet the emergencies immediately pressing. M. Bowack proposed that M. Kraus should be appointed Minister, which was adopted unanimously. The Minister of the Interior Doblhoff, the Minister of Commerce Hornbostel, and M. Kraus, were named to manage the affairs of the country, and make propositions to his Majesty to complete the Ministry. It was further resolved to address a proclamation to the people, and a note to the Emperor on the events of the preceding day. M. Schuselka was chosen to prepare those documents.

At the sitting, 7 members remained standing, but there was no fighting.

In the mean time the military who had evacuated the city joined those who were at the Belvedere in the suburbs, and formed a strong force under the orders of the military commandant of Vienna, Count Auersperg; but he had declared that he would refrain from all hostilities unless he was attacked. Several soldiers stationed at all the Belvedere and the Schwarzenberg Garden were fired on in the night and killed; and two companies of Grenadiers had deserted Count Auersperg and joined the people.

A Committee of Safety which had been appointed was increased to twenty members, one-third of whom were to hold permanent sittings, and the newly-elected Common Council also declared itself (according to the instruction of the Diet) en permanence. The Diet declared itself a Sovereign one, and entrusted the formation of a new Ministry to Doblhoff, Kraus, and Hornbostel. A considerable number of students arrived in Vienna from Gratz on this day.

On the 9th great excitement prevailed in Vienna, as it was ascertained that Jellachich, after having crossed the Leitha, was drawing near to the capital. An estafette was immediately despatched to the Emperor, requesting him to order the Ban of Croatia not to advance any further. At 4 P.M., on the 9th, the population were called under arms, as it was announced that Jellachich was in the village of Schwechat. At the same time it was announced that the Hungarian General, Kossuth, with an army of sixty thousand, was close to Presburg, and following on the heels of his slippery antagonist. Fifteen steamers on the Danube were conveying in all haste his advanced guard to the capital, which stood with open arms ready to receive him. A great quantity of guns and ammunition, sent by Count Windischgratz, the Military Governor of Prague, the capital of Bohemia, to Gratz, were intercepted and brought into Vienna, and it became known that Windischgratz himself had arrived in the vicinity of Vienna. In the evening of the 9th every precaution was taken against surprise. The town was illuminated; and notwithstanding the number of barricades impeding the passage of the streets, and which had not been taken away, the gates were closed and cannon placed. At 11 P.M. favourable positions. Arms were served out in quantity from the Arsenal and sent out during the day to be distributed amongst the people of the surrounding country. The Emperor, it was understood, was at Boemberg, on the Danube, a château which was the favourite summer retreat of the late Emperor Francis. A castle has stood there from very ancient time, but, excepting a part of the foundation, the existing edifice is not older than 1617. Bösenberg owes its name to a dangerous bend of the Danube which commences below Pöls.

While matters were thus at Vienna, some thirty Bohemian members of the Austrian Diet assembled in Prague, and, in conjunction with the municipal authorities, held council on the necessary steps to be taken for upholding, under present circumstances, the interests of the kingdom of Bohemia. In the course of an animated address, Palacky denounced the recent successful insurrection in Vienna, as well as the proceedings of the Magyars, commended the loyalty of Jellachich, and declared that the throne and the dynasty could be upheld only by the Northern and Southern Sclavonians. The result of the debate was that a proclamation to the following effect was issued by the Burgomaster and Town-Council:—"Murder and violence in Vienna have succeeded—contrary to the wishes of the majority of the inhabitants—in compelling the Emperor-King (Kaiser-König) to take to flight, and in terrifying the Diet, the hitherto existing minority in which are now acting in an illegal way."

The municipal authorities of Prague protest against all the illegal acts of an assembly which, transgressing the bounds of duty, has endeavoured to usurp the executive power. The violent overthrow of a cabinet, acting with the majority of the Diet, is criminal and punishable. The municipal authorities of Prague are deeply attached to the dynasty and to the constitutionally Democratic Monarchy. Bohemia can only prosper when Austria is independent. The authorities of the above city place confidence in the Emperor and in his imperial word. Finally, the people of Bohemia are warned against disturbing public tranquillity, and are urged to drive from amongst them all the busy agents of the 'destructives.'"

The Diet received on the 11th a letter from the Minister Hornbostel (place from which it was written not published), announcing the resignation of his post, on the ground that he would not be responsible for all the steps which had been already taken, or which might be hereafter taken.

On the evening of the same day Jellachich's troops were posted on the Wiener Berg (Vienna Hill), in the immediate vicinity of the city.

Vienna itself was in a state of complete defence, all the bastions being well mounted, and all the gates well watched. Two of the suburbs only presented vulnerable points. It was agreed that, in case of imminent danger, the landsturm should be convoked to the aid of the metropolis, by means of signals from the tower of Stephen's Church—those signal to be, by day, columns of smoke, and rockets by night.

It was calculated that within the city there were not less than 100,000 men well armed.

Meantime, a number of Sclavonian members of the Austrian Diet took it upon themselves to call a congress at Brünn (for the 20th) of all their parliamentary colleagues who shared their opinion. The object of the congress was to devise the necessary measures for upholding the liberty of the Parliament, and the existence of the constituent Diet in the interest of the entire Monarchy.

The Austrian Lloyd's Gazette thus graphically describes the state and appearance of Vienna and its environs on the 12th:—"Perhaps never since the Middle Ages, when under the first Hapsburgers, under the sons of Rudolph and Albrecht I., the whole population often rose in arms to oppose the exorbitant demands of their seigneurs, have the streets and environs of old Vindobona assumed so warlike an aspect as in the last few days. An armed force of certainly not less than 80,000 men, capable of doing battle, is moving about in the town and faubourgs, and in a wide circle on every side of us, encamped with a menacing attitude, are large bodies of Imperial troops under the Hapsburg banner, prepared, if necessary, by dint of arms, to defend and ensure their Emperor's throne and rights in his loyal capital, once more, to the astonishment of the world, the focus of a revolutionary tempest.

"From the towers of the venerable old pile of St. Stephen's the eye can overlook all the legions that surround us—Ruthenens, Marsarer, Rusniaks, Poles, Galicians, Czechs, Bohemians, Germans, and Old-Austrians. They stretch from the camp at Belvedere, on the one side, to the village of Simmering and to the Danube; on the other, to the Southern Railway. In a wider range, from Klein-Neusied to Hiemberg, Mödling, and Brühl, to the declivities of the Vienna wood, swarm the battalions of the Ban Jellachich—Illyrians, with their red caps, the red cloaks (Szekelsmeer), Croats, numerous Grätzer, mingled with cavalry and artillery of the Imperial army.

"At the other side of the Danube, at Stissenbrunn, there is a Wallachian regiment—we know not where from and for what purpose detached bodies of pioneers and cavalry; and on the road to Hungary that battalion of Italian Grenadiers, which on the 8th of October was ordered to March from Vienna to Pesth, and whose Colonel, Ferrari, was compelled by his own officers to resign his command. In the background, however, in an easterly direction, on the right bank of the Danube, anxiously expected, the advanced posts of the Magyars are visible. It seems as if the whole Monarchy had appointed a military rendezvous under the walls of the capital, to watch with drawn swords and sharp eyes over the spectacle of this great movement of the people."

Notwithstanding the menacing attitude which it has been seen the military had taken up on the 11th and 12th around Vienna, the latest accounts mention that Jellachich and his Croats had retired from the Wiener Berg towards Styria, and Auersperg had abandoned his position on the Belvedere and the Schwarz-

CONFLICT AT THE UNIVERSITY, VIENNA.

TROOPS AT THE BELVEDERE

enberg Garden. The former had reached Neustadt. The latter had gone to Enzersdorf. Thus a complete separation has been made between the Austrian force and the troops of Jellachich. This was on the 19th inst.

Up to 2 P.M. on the 19th there was every appearance of a contest. The advanced posts of the Croatian army had commenced a partial attack on the National Guards near the gate of the Landstrasse; a few shots were exchanged, and then the assailants withdrew. Meantime all the popular force had received the alarm, and soon appeared under arms. The next intelligence was that the troops of Jellachich had left the Wiener Berg and proceeded towards Neustadt. The Hungarian army was at Brück, awaiting the invitation of the Diet to advance to the city. In the afternoon of the 19th that body held a secret sitting, at which it was understood that the question of requesting the Hungarians to enter Vienna was discussed therein.

In opposition to the contemplated Sclavonic congress in Moravia, the Austrian Diet has resolved to convoke one in Vienna of the Hungarian races.

Dobrhoff had resigned on the plea of ill health, and also because, as he stated, the policy of the Ministry in the course of formation would be different from that of the Cabinet to which he belonged.

The Emperor was understood to be proceeding slowly to Olmütz.

In Dalmatia a rising of the people, occasioned by the levying of tithes, has taken place, and a slight encounter with the military has occurred, but the matter appears of little consequence.

THE ILLUSTRATIONS.

The four accompanying Engravings show some of the localities of the leading incidents of the Insurrection.

The Illustration upon the front page depicts the frightful conflict at the Cathedral of St. Stephen's, between the loyal National Guards and a party of the insurgents; when the leader of the former was killed upon the very steps of the altar. The Church is very majestic; it is large, lofty, and profusely sculptured, and the spire rises to the extraordinary height of 465 feet.

In the next scene we have a view of the Bastions, with a distant view of the city. These ramparts are of brick and masonry, and are from 50 to 70 feet in height. Their broad summits are planted, and form, perhaps, the most beautiful promenades in the world. During the recent conflict, these fortifications were occupied by the artillery of the National Guards.

The University Square and the University Buildings, next represented, were the scene of many a hot struggle; the latter were used as a prison for the captured and disarmed sappers and miners.

The Belvedere (represented in the fourth Illustration) is the point to which the Government troops retired on the 7th, after the Emperor had left the city. The Upper Belvedere is a noble building, situated on a commanding eminence.

From the palace a vast and well laid-out garden leads to the Lower Belvedere—a palace but little inferior to its namesake. Both contain the collections of paintings, &c.

The Belvedere and its palatial domain are very prominent in Mr. Burford's admirable Panorama of Vienna, now exhibiting in Leicester-square. In this cleverly executed work the localities of the recent insurrection may be distinctly traced, even to the palace of Schönbrunn. This minuteness of detail very considerably heightens the interest of the picture, and invests it with sure and immediate attraction.

PICTURESQUE SKETCHES OF LONDON, PAST AND PRESENT.

BY THOMAS MILLER.

CHAPTER VII.—WESTMINSTER ABBEY.

What a crowd of solemn associations gather around the mind of the intellectual visitor on first entering the ancient walls of Westminster Abbey: the very silence which reigns around the vast edifice is startling, and the sound of a falling footstep seems to awaken a thousand sleeping echoes that were mute and voiceless as the surrounding tombs. We feel that we are in the presence of the mighty dead; and, as we gaze around, the deeds which throw a grandeur and a gloom over the pages of English history pass in vivid succession before the eye of the mind. The very pavement seems strown with the ruins of crowns, sceptres, helmets, and swords, mitres and croziers, bent, crushed, dented, and broken; while, amid the dim gold and the rusted steel, the green laurels of the poet alone remain unchanged. What moving scenes have broken the lengthened shadows which those high-piled pillars throw over aisle and choir! the christenings, coronations, marriages, and funerals of departed Monarchs, who have returned to the dust from whence they came. Light and darkness, summer and winter, have brightened and deepened thousands of times over the shadowy crypts in which their ashes repose—everything grand and imposing is swept away excepting the mighty monuments, which scarcely seem the work of human hands: they rise like images of eternity, ever bending and keeping watch above their silent graves.

Here, in the Pix-office, we are surrounded by Saxon architecture. How massive, plain, solid, and majestic is this portion of the venerable pile! As it stands now, so it stood before the shores of England were startled by the sound of Norman trumpets—a monument worthy of the descendant of Alfred the Great! The beautiful mosaic pavement that lies before the altar in the choir was brought from Rome by the good old Abbot Ware about the close of the reign of the third Henry—a King to whose liberality we are indebted for a great portion of the erection of the Abbey; for the completion of the whole was the work of many eventful years; and before its towers rose, as they do now, pointing to the sky, many a crowned head sunk in succession into the dark quietude of the tomb. Suns rose and set, and the mighty work prospered slowly. The noble and the lowly alike contributed towards its erection: the one with his gold, and the other with his mite of silver pennies—for it was an age of holy zeal, and simple faith, and lowly piety, in when our forefathers united together and built up those mighty cathedrals to the honour and worship of God. Many of their foundations are hallowed by old and solemn memories; they were dug when Christianity was in its infancy—they were the cradles in which our ancestors lay humbly, and first learnt to lisp the language which grew into the full utterance of our holy creed. Amid the tramp and thunder of a thousand battles, they have stood unshaken: they were too strong for the destroying hand of man; and Time, as if in reverence, has trod lightly as he stepped over them.

WESTMINSTER ABBEY.—EDWARD THE CONFESSOR'S CHAPEL

Amid such an assemblage of architectural grandeur as the Abbey presents, the mind is filled with a rich confusion of imagery, as if incapable of grappling with the whole. It seems like the sunlight that flames in through the deep-dyed windows; we stand amid a dazzle of blaze and beauty, that appears to have neither beginning nor end—here flashing like gold, there shading into the dim purple twilight, and gilding as it passes a shrine or a stony shroud: then settling down amid the vaulted shadows of the tombs, or just lighting faintly in its passage the uplifted hands of the recumbent image, that have been clasped for centuries in the attitude of silent prayer. We know not whether to start from the shrine of Edward the Confessor, or the Coronation Chair, to count our footsteps through the long chapters of history; for the forms of the actors themselves come crowding around us; starting upon the one, then seating themselves in the other a rapid succession of phantoms, each dazzling the eye for a moment in its splendour, then sinking down again into the cold stony image that is doomed to hold its hands in the mute, meek penance of unceasing prayer, as it has done through the grey old years of departed centuries. How beautiful is the figure which graces the tomb of Queen Eleanor! Gaze on the calm loveliness of that matchless countenance, and you will fancy that a serene sleep has stolen over it—that it has but laid down to rest awhile, and while dreaming its beauty burst forth and dispelled every shade of sorrow, as if Time himself had kept watch over it, and sheltered it from dust and ruin with his wings, and guarded it with his scythe, allowing no mortal finger to touch the hallowed shrine over which he has long kept jealous watch. Death seems never to have entered that cold grey marble palace of beauty. Here lie the remains of Richard the Second and his Queen; and while we gaze upon his monument, and read his "sad, eventful history," we think of the undying poetry in which Shakspeare has enshrined him, and feel as if we could sit for hours upon the pavement and tell "sad stories about the death of Kings." Bolingbroke ought to have been buried by his side; and for the sake of Shakspeare there would be no feeling outraged, nor no disrespect done to the dead, if his remains were exhumed and placed side by side with the Monarch he dethroned. How rich and magnificent is Henry the Fifth's monument—every way worthy of the hero of Agincourt! Strange that even amid the solemnity of death the eye of an Englishman kindles, while he reads the splendid achievements of this brave King—that neither the horrors of war, nor the blood shed at that victorious banquet, throw a sickening sensation over the heart while we gaze upon the tomb of the conqueror. The far past seems to deaden these sympathies; and we look upon the actors as we do upon the words on a time-worn monument, which tell how those who sleep below once lived and were famous in their day, that they died, and were buried: and we read and pass on with a feeling of pride, respect, or sorrow; and the next moment finds us gazing with similar thoughts and sympathies upon the grave of another. Above hangs the helmet which the warrior King wore in battle, showing by the deep dents which are imprinted upon it that it was borne into the very thickest of the strife, and had its share of blows dealt heavily, when men lived but to "conquer or to die."

There is a strange want of harmony between the ancient and modern monuments. Our ancestors understood the "keeping" of their subjects within the pale of style, beauty, and order better than we do or have done. They made their ornaments and furniture to correspond with the venerable and costly edifice which their taste and piety had reared; and in the fulfilment of their solemn ceremonies, allowed no meddling undertaker to disfigure the hallowed mansion with his grave mockery. A glance at the tombs of our old Kings is the proof—they have become a portion of Westminster Abbey, while the additions made during the last two centuries are, with a few exceptions, sadly misplaced. We look around, and feel as if, while in the midst of some impressive ceremony, a group of strange maskers had suddenly broken in, snapped the train of our thoughts, and, by their antics, diverted both mind and eye from the imposing subjects with which they were before so earnestly engrossed. Statues or monuments, that would look well in open squares or spacious halls, startle us by their very nakedness, when they step out between the shadowy and solemn crypts, where death itself is roofed over and vaulted in, at the foot of the mighty mound whose very magesty is overwhelming. It is as if the ex-voto, contemplating the grandeur of Parnassus, was disturbed by the white butterflies that are ever crossing each other at its base. Mere inscriptions on some Gothic tablet would be better than these abortions: a list of names would not offend. Like many of these gaudy, impressive countenances, that "fright" the aisle "from its propriety" in marble. The same alone in such a place would strike the right chord, while the . . . . but we are standing amongst the mighty dead.

The beautiful screen erected by Blore is a splendid exception to the mass of modern monuments. Turn to the monument of Sir Francis Vere, in the eastern aisle of the transept, and there you see what true genius can produce.

We will now glance at the Poets' Corner, a spot haunted by sad and sweet associations. Here stands the massy and solemn-looking tomb of Chaucer, that "morning star" of poetry which first dawned through the long night of Egyptian darkness. He, the earliest child of English song, was the first bard interred within this great national mausoleum; and although the monument was not erected until a century and a half after his death, there is an antique look about it which would leave a stranger to conclude that the tomb was almost as old as the Abbey itself. Gentle Spenser, author of the immortal "Fairy Queen," was the next heir to undying fame interred in this beautiful sanctuary; and Shakspeare and Jonson were no doubt mourners at that great funeral. Beaumont and Drayton were the next successors who sank into this silent city of the dead. "Rare Ben Jonson" soon followed; but he was buried in the northern aisle of the nave—it is supposed, very near to Killigrew's monument. Cowley, Dryden, Gay, Prior, and Addison, although the latter was the most conspicuous of the Abbey, may be numbered among the illustrious dead who sleep their long sleep within those ancient walls. Many other monuments stand here erected to the memory of our celebrated poets, whose remains lie far and wide apart—some in the beautiful churches of London, others in the quiet seclusion of the country. The author of the "Pleasures of Hope," whose mortal part we followed to the shallow grave which was opened near the front of Chaucer's tomb, was the last true poet consigned to his "narrow cell" in this great graveyard of genius. Grand and solemn were the tones which the mighty organ poured out that listening silence—sounds which seemed more allied to Heaven than earth; echoes that rolled on, then died away amid the shadowy crypts and pillared recesses, sounding as if the voices of the shrouded dead had found utterance, and were welcoming home another immortal spirit. Never was the funeral service more beautifully or feelingly read than on that occasion, by a brother poet. And that old Jerusalem Chamber in which we assembled, with its ancient tapestry, is itself a history. Here the great lived, after death, lain in state; and the "props and pillars" of the nation have been assembled to make over the last and more dignified resting-place for the remains of its illustrious dead. Here, on a pallet before the fire, Henry the Fourth died; the portrait of the ill-starred Richard the Second hangs in this very chamber where Bolingbroke existed.

If one portion of the splendid Abbey more than another calls up the scriptural image of a "holy temple made with hands," it is Henry the Seventh's Chapel. The opening of those beautiful gates which lead therein seems to reveal such a glimpse of heaven as we sometimes see in our sweetest dreams. The very roof appears buoyed up by the air, as it is rising so light and beautiful needed no more support than its own graceful ribs, forming a hand up by invisible hands; a fretwork of innumerable wings, netted and open like those which the gaudy dragon-fly displays, so that as if they were frozen while fluttering over an endless succession of flowers. On each side hang the banners of the Knights of the Bath, drooping without motion over the monuments of the dead, above the head of the once haughty Queen Elizabeth, who sleeps beside her sister Mary in the northern aisle. The brass screen which encloses the tomb of Henry the Seventh is of exquisite workmanship, and stands out in fine relief from the darkness of all in this department. In this chapel, the stern Protector, Cromwell, was interred; but his body was afterwards dragged out of its grave by the consent of Charles the Second, drawn on a hurdle to Tyburn, hanged upon the gallows until sunset, then taken down and beheaded, and afterwards thrown into a pit at the foot of Tyburn-tree; where, "after life's fitful fever, he sleeps well," awaiting the same blast of the last trumpet that will arouse his headless victim and heartless persecutor.

ROYAL COLOSSEUM, PARIS.—In addition to the numerous [illegible] of this Establishment now exhibiting (Day and Evening), a new grand PANORAMA of PARIS, by MOONLIGHT, as seen from a balloon suspended over the [illegible] Evening 48,000 square feet, painted under the direction of Mr. [illegible] Mr. Danson, in which will be the localities of the [illegible] Open from [illegible] Half past Ten o'Clock. Music from Two till Five, and from Seven till Half past Ten o'Clock. Admission, 1s; Children, and reduced to Gentlemen, 1s.

WEIPPERT'S SOIREES DANSANTES," PRINCESS' CONCERT-ROOMS, MONDAY, OCT. 23, and every Monday. A subscriber of Two Guineas is entitled to an admission for himself and lady any six nights during the season. Single nights each. Mr. Weippert's Polish Band as usual, conducted by himself. M. C. Mr. [illegible]. The Refreshments and Supper by Mr. Payne. Commence at Eleven, concludes at Three o'Clock. Programmes at Mr. Ransom's, and of Mr. Ovett, 28, Great Marlborough-street.

ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION.—A LECTURE on SANITARY MEASURES connected with the Progress of CHOLERA and other EPIDEMICS, by Dr. Ryan, daily at Half-past Three, and on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday Evenings, at Nine o'Clock. A LECTURE on the MANUFACTURE of GUTTA PERCHA, by Dr. Bachhoffner, Morning and alternate Evenings. An entirely new PHANTASMAGORIA, by CHILDE, at Eight and Half-past Nine Evening at Eight o'Clock, with appropriate music, directed by Dr. Wallis. The Diving Bell, with nautical descriptions, having been re-arranged, with additions, are shown at Half-past Four Daily, and in the Evenings at a Quarter to One. The Chromatrope, with new effects. The HOROSCOPE, at One o'Clock Daily. Diving-Bell: Working Models explained. Admission, 1s; Schools, Half price. The New Catalogue 1s.

MINERVA HALL, 7, HAYMARKET, next door to the Theatre NOW OPEN, every Morning and Evening, with a splendid series of [illegible] VARIATIONS of novel and novel character.—The Proprietor has the pleasure of announcing that the [illegible] Entertainment The New Emblems, a Grecian Festival, the Horrors of War, Ins and the Silent Beauties, every Morning at Three, Evening at Eight.—Admission, 1s.; Reserved Seats, 2s.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, Oct. 22.—Eighteenth Sunday after Trinity.
MONDAY, 23.—Saturn southing at 9h. 15m. P.M.
TUESDAY, 24.—Uranus south at 11h. 0m. P.M.
WEDNESDAY, 25.—St. Crispin. The Sun rises at 6h. 43m., and sets at 4h. 44m.
THURSDAY, 26.—Day breaks at 4h. 49m., and twilight ends at 6h. 36m.
FRIDAY, 27.—New Moon at 2h. 46m A.M.
SATURDAY, 28.—St. Simon and St. Jude.

TIMES OF HIGH WATER AT LONDON BRIDGE.
FOR THE WEEK ENDING OCT 28.

Sunday		Monday		Tuesday		Wednesday		Thursday		Friday		Saturday
M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.	M.	A.
h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m
10 20	11 5	11 40	* *	0 5	0 30	0 55	1 15	1 30	1 50	2 4	2 20	2 36	2 55

* There will be one high tide only on Monday, occurring at 11h. 40m. A.M.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"T." Belfast. Hemingway's Panorama of North Wales, price 5s.
"C. M." Clonmel, is thanked.
"Francis L.," Streatham, is thanked.
"T. T."—No. 1 of the impressions to a Henry III. penny, struck at Norwich. The obverse reads "Henricus Rex III.," and the reverse, "Hugo on Norenc" commona; worth about 1s. 6d. No 2. Charles I., Royal Irish farthing token; obverse, "Carol. D. G. Mag. Bri.," and on counterstamp on reverse, "Pro. et Feb. Rex" very common; worth about 4d. to 6d. The best works on English silver coins are "Hawkins," 18s.; "Snelling's Works Complete," £3 13s. 6d.; Ruding's "Annals of the Coinage of Great Britain," last edition, £4 4s.
"A Subscriber," who is anxious for further information respecting the Auckland Islands, should consult Mr. Enderby's pamphlet, entitled "Proposal for re-establishing the British Southern Whale Fishery." Third edition. Published by E. Wilson, Royal Exchange.
"Erskine."—We cannot undertake the recommendation.
"Rev. W. T."—Bramley, should consult the Life of William IV.
"R. B. E.," St. Helen's, has not stated any grounds for the withdrawal of the protection
"An Old Subscriber."—The widow will be liable, as far as her means allow.
"A P. S."—We shall be glad to see the Sketch, and particulars.
"W. S."—We cannot inform you.
"P. C."—Fandango, a Country Dance is a corruption of the French Contre Danse.
"Richard Fountain."—We have not room.
"An Old Subscriber."—From our publishing office, on Saturday.
"W. H. L." cannot proceed in the matter without the aid of a solicitor.
"Hookey Walker." The picture has been engraved, and the print may be had at a pawnbroker's
"R. B. H." Richmond Hill.—See the "Government Colonisation Circular," to be had at 90, Fleet-street.
"A Subscriber." We ourselves have used the ointment in question with success
"F. W. M." Man-hester. The recommendation for a gentleman to become a Fellow of the Society of Arts must be signed by two Fellows. The entrance fee is £2 2s., annual contribution, £2 2s.; compounded, £15.
"A London Undergraduate"—Three years will suffice at the Middle Temple for any students, to render them eligible to be called to the Bar.
"Candidus."—To effect a change of name, a sign manual must be obtained from the Queen. This proceeding is conducted generally by a member of the Heralds' College, and is attended with an expense of about £20. An additional charge of £40 is incurred if the name is acquired under the terms of a will. About £80 more are required for the arms. The supporters would not be granted.
"A Subscriber." The only channel through which a commission in the army can be obtained at the present time is by purchase. The length of time that may elapse between the application and its accordance is very uncertain. Generally three or four years. Our Correspondent's age would, we fear, be an insuperable obstacle to his success.
"Charley" is thanked; though the subjects suggested were previously in the engraver's hands.
"B. Jackson" is recommended to stay at home
"H. J." Hoxton.—The tale will be concluded next week.
"D. A. D." Medemblik, North Holland.—The missing Numbers may be had, at 1s. each.
"T. M." Stamfordham, will, perhaps, forward the announcement when it has appeared.
"M." Trevor-square.—"The celebrated Parisian Cavarni."
"Jesse." We cannot enlighten you upon Freemasonry.
"A Subscriber." Next week we shall present to our readers two Engravings from the Interior of the Sea Serpent.
"Mary." We regret that we have not room.
"A Subscriber." Apply to the Publisher of the Gazette
"Tyro." We do not know the constitution of the Irish Legion in the French Service. Commissions are not purchasable in France.
"A Barrister." Address "To the Hon. James ———," and "The Right Hon. Lord ———."
"An old Subscriber."—A Commission in the East India Company's Service cannot be purchased.
"H. N. L." The patronage of the East Indian Army rests, entirely, in the Directors. The pay of an Ensign on Service is, we believe, sufficient for the usual expenses.
"Anglo-Scotus." The only possessor of the Baronetcy of Kerr, of Greenhead, of whom we have any particulars, is Sir Andrew Kerr. He appears to have obtained the title in 1631, to have married Lady Mackenzie Carnegie, and to have died without issue in 1655, when the Baronetcy seems to have become extinct
"A Correspondent" is thanked; but we cannot find room to engrave, supplementarily, the spot on the Sketch.
"J. D." Plaistow.—Not forgotten.
"X. Y. Z."—Brompton.
"A. M." Hackney.—Apply to a navy agent.
"Tyro."—We cannot advise you as to the choice of law books.
"H. B. D." The price of Gutch's "Literary and Scientific Pocket-Book" is 5s.6d. We have not space for further reply.
"Fergus M. T."—We have not heard of the association.
"J. W." The salary ranges from 40 to 80 shillings weekly.
"C. L." We have not room for the lines.
"An Artist-Correspondent," at Clonmel, is thanked, but we cannot avail ourselves of the Sketches.
"T. D." Islington, should consult the histories of the countries. We cannot undertake such matters.
"E. B. H." Co. Wentworth, is thanked for his letter.
"Inquirer." Southport.—Brande's "Metrical Essays on History," perhaps.
"A Correspondent." The slight Sketch of the "Cragland Fete" did not arrive in time
"An Inquirer." Hull. "Commodore." "I. A."—We cannot reply
"A Constant Reader."—Apply to Mr. Weale, Architectural Library, High Holborn.
"P. C."—There is no joint liability for the debt of one partner, unless contracted in the course of the partnership concern.
"Guy Fawkes." The letting off of Fireworks in a street is a nuisance punishable by 20s. fine.
"J. C." Banbury, will not be exempt

THE GREAT SEA SERPENT. By the courtesy of Captain M'Quhae, of her Majesty's ship Daedalus, we shall be enabled to present to our readers, next week, TWO ENGRAVINGS of the SEA SERPENT seen from the Daedalus, on her passage from the East Indies. These Illustrations will be copied from the Drawing mentioned by Captain M'Quhae's communication to the Lords of the Admiralty.

BOOKS, &c. RECEIVED DURING THE WEEK.

Dr. Yeoman on Consumption.——Box-Bookkeeper's Guide.——Popular Natural History. Vol. 2.——Warren on the Duties of Attorneys and Solicitors.——Slavery at Washington.——National Education. By the Rev. W. Fletcher.
Music.—The Suite Quadrilles.——Oh, Lady! leave thy silken thread.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 21, 1848.

AN article upon the affairs of Austria appears in our first page. Since it was written, intelligence has been received of a most important character, tending to confirm the supposition therein expressed, that the Emperor and his advisers had finally resolved to throw the fate of the Dynasty and the Empire upon the support of the Sclavonian party. The war which now reigns in the hereditary dominions of the "Cesars" is a war of races—Germans and Hungarians upon the one side, Sclavonians upon the other. Vienna is for the present safe. Count Auersperg and Jellachich have retired—the former from his commanding position on the Belvedere and the Schwartzenberg Garden, and the latter from the Wiener Berg; while Kossuth, the Hungarian general, at the head of an imposing force, has arrived to the support of the Viennese, and awaits at Brück the orders of the Diet either to enter the city, or take such other measures as may be deemed more advisable. The advance of Kossuth, after having defeated, with great loss, a division of Jellachich's forces which had been left to overawe the Hungarians, has been the cause of the simultaneous retreat of the two generals. Their retreat, however, is manifest good policy; their object being to concentrate their forces in Moravia, north of the Danube, whither the Court has retired, and whither Count Windischgrätz is already on the march to join them. The danger to Vienna is, therefore, postponed only; and either within or under the walls of that city, or in the country between it and the Emperor's head-quarters in Moravia, the great battle which will decide the destinies of this ancient empire will in all probability be fought. The Croatian and other Sclavonian forces at the disposal of the Emperor greatly preponderate in numbers over those of the Germans and Hungarians; but the greatness of the danger, the savage nature of the war, and the certainty that no mercy will be shown by the Sclavonians, should they be the victors, may possibly be the means of inspiring the populations of Austria Proper and of Hungary with the energy of a life and death struggle. Already, the whole male population capable of bearing arms are called out; and the appeal is responded to with an earnestness which proves that the contest will be both violent and protracted.

The most deplorable circumstance in this dreadful war is the utter want of statesmanship, both in the Councils of the Emperor and among the democratic party at Vienna. If there were a man of wisdom and energy in the Imperial family, in whose favour the unfortunate Emperor might abdicate, there would be some hope that Austria might be maintained in her present position among the powers of Europe. Unhappily, this is not the case; and Austria, in the midst of convulsions unparalleled in the history of any civilised state (those of France in her first Revolution were simplicity itself compared with them), is left to the guidance of the nameless camarilla that have the care of the Emperor's person, and supply, as well as they can, the mind which is wanting in him. What the democrats of Vienna will do under the circumstances remains to be seen. Perhaps they may have men amongst them capable of rendering service to the country, and whose names may inspire confidence both among the Germans and Hungarians; but, if so, Europe has yet to learn who they are, and is far more inclined to doubt than to believe in them.

THE Ministerial modification in France, to which we made reference in our last publication as having been in contemplation, has since been announced. General Cavaignac, yielding to the avowed sentiments and predilections of the majority in the Assembly, and against his own convictions, has consented to the introduction into his Cabinet of three new Ministers, who are identified with moderate opinions. Two of them, Messrs. Dufaure and Vivien, held office in the administration of M. Thiers; and the third, M. Freslon, is known to be of similar political principles. These three gentlemen, like the majority of the Assembly, have accepted the Republic as a fact, which they did not seek or wish; but which, being a fact, they are desirous to respect. Their appointment has given much satisfaction to the friends of order and to the parliamentary majority, and as much dissatisfaction to that smaller party in the Assembly, and to that large party in the streets and faubourgs of the metropolis, whose constant bugbear is a Monarchical reaction, and who live in perpetual dread of the overthrow of the Republic. The new Ministers have explained the policy they wish to pursue—a policy of conciliation, and the establishment of a durable, and therefore Conservative, Republic. This is clearly the only safe course for France to pursue, if order is ever to be re-established; and if constant struggles, dissensions, and civil wars about forms of government, or the interests of particular dynasties, are not to distract that country for many years to come. There is some danger that the dissatisfaction of this party, under the excitement caused by the Democratic victories of the Viennese, may find vent in a renewed attempt at insurrection; but so many precautions have been taken, and the middle classes are so resolutely determined to maintain order at all hazards, that such an attempt, if made, would very speedily be suppressed, and the ultra-Democrats would take nothing by it but renewed humiliation and loss of character. A vote of confidence in the new Ministry has been passed by a majority of 570 members out of 725; and it has been arranged, with the consent of all parties, that the Constitution shall be voted with the least possible delay; so that a President may be elected, and the present anomalous Government be replaced by one of more permanent authority. It is fully expected that the Constitution will be voted by the 24th instant; and that the Presidential Election may take place towards the middle of November. The chances of General Cavaignac to the dignity are considered to have been greatly strengthened by the accession to his Administration of those men of talent and experience who had held office under Louis Philippe, and who had hitherto kept aloof from serving the Republic. There can be no doubt of their sincerity in their new allegiance; and if M. Lamartine could have been included in the arrangements, there would have been an additional security for order and tranquillity. It may not be too late to include him at some future period.

THE Cholera has at length reached Great Britain; but hitherto the visitation has been by no means so severe as was anticipated. There is, happily, not that panic terror which has existed in other countries, and which, more than the disease itself, has been the means of destroying human life; and all the experience we have yet had of it tends to lessen rather than to increase alarm. Medical authorities differ upon the question of its contagion or non-contagiousness; and, without presuming to offer an opinion upon a point so important and so delicate, we may be permitted to state that as yet the progress and course of the disease rather favour the supposition of its non-contagiousness than the reverse. The Government, upon the recommendation of the Board of Health, has abolished the six days' quarantine upon vessels arriving from foreign ports and suspected of Cholera—a proceeding which has not been without its effect in allaying public anxiety.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

PUBLIC MEETINGS.

CITY COMMISSIONERS OF SEWERS.—MEDICAL OFFICER FOR THE CITY OF LONDON.—On Monday a numerous attendance of the Commissioners of Sewers for the City took place—the Right Hon. the Lord Mayor in the chair, several of the members of the Court of Aldermen being present, for the purpose of return two meli men from the list of candidates to the Court of Common Council, in order the one of the two so returned might be elected medical officer until January of the latter body. The Court having retired to the private room, the nomination of two of the numerous candidates, and the chairman at the conclusion announced that Mr. John Simon and Mr. George Berkeley Hyde were returned to the Court of Common Council as fit to fill the office of medical officer of the City until the City Sanatory Bill came into operation. The Commissioners then adjourned.

ROYAL NAVAL BENEVOLENT SOCIETY.—A quarterly meeting of the Committee was held on Monday, at 32 Bedford Row, St. James's-street. Vice-Admiral Sir Charles Malcolm, K.t., in the chair. The financial statement submitted by the Secretary was, that the receipts for the past quarter, including donations, annual subscriptions, and the previous balance amounted to £1353 6s. 9d., and the disbursements to £374 5s. 7d. Thanks having been voted to the donors to the society, and those officers who had exerted themselves in its behalf, as well as to the Chairman, the meeting separated.

NEW INSTITUTE FOR THE INDUSTRIOUS CLASSES.—On Monday evening a public meeting was held at the Domestic Mission Institution in Chapel-street, Milton-street, Cripplegate, for the purpose of opening the institution on behalf of the industrious classes of the neighbourhood. The objects contemplated comprise the admission of members of mechanics' and the industrious classes to the advantages of a reading-room, well stored with popular periodicals, newspapers, &c., together with the use of a library already comprising more than 800 volumes in history, biography, travels, natural history, &c., besides occasional lectures, to be delivered at stated periods by popular lecturers, &c.; elementary classes are also formed: for the whole of which advantages only twopence per week is charged to each member.

MEDICAL RELIEF SOCIETY.—On Wednesday evening the half-yearly general court of the above charity—established to afford relief to the widows and orphans of medical men in London and its vicinity—was held at the Gun and Eagle, Goswell-road, Holborn: Martin Ware, Esq., vice-president, in the chair. From the statement for the last six months, it appeared that the receipts amounted to £5470, whilst near £700 had been distributed among 43 applicants—namely, 70 widows and 13 orphans. There was an increase in the number of sufferers relieved during the past half-year, proportionably to the advance in the income. The capital is upwards of £45,000. The report was adopted, and, after the election of officers and the other routine business had been disposed of, the court adjourned.

ROYAL GENERAL DISPENSARY.—THE CHOLERA. A meeting of governors of the above institution was held on Wednesday at the dispensary, Aldersgate-street, the object being to receive a report from the medical officers relative to the steps necessary to be taken for the relief of cholera patients, and to prevent the spreading of the disease. The chair was taken by W. Atkinson, Esq., and the secretary proceeded to read the report. This document, which was rather lengthy, began by stating that the committee had called the medical officers before council, "for the purpose of considering what steps should be taken by the dispensary for the alleviation of the sufferings of the poor under the visitation of the cholera." The medical officers recommended that relief should be dispensed at all hours and without recommendation to all persons labouring under symptoms of diarrhœa, and that sufficient quantities of the necessary remedies should be always kept in readiness. The medical officers believe that the existing dispensaries may be made the most useful agents for the prevention of cholera, and recommend that the institution should be at once placed at the disposal of the general board of health and the City commissioners of sewers. In the meantime they recommend that the sick be in all cases removed from the rooms occupied by the rest of the family, and that measures should therefore be taken to secure the use of one room in any house where cholera may be present exclusively for cholera patients. None of the family to enter the room, except such as are necessary for attendance. Nurses to be procured for those who have no relations about them. This object might be effected by communications with the various boards of guardians. The medical officers recommend the supply of fresh clothing and the washing of soiled clothes, and strongly object to the washing of the soiled clothes of cholera patients along with those of the rest of the family, and, therefore, recommend the opening of washing-rooms with a plentiful supply of hot and cold water in various districts of the City. They recommend ventilation and an entire carrying out of the "Nuisances Act;" and, finally, they urge the necessity of a plentiful supply of warm clothing and flannels, and of wine and brandy for medicinal purposes. The report, which was moved by the Rev. Mr. Rogers and seconded by Mr. Sax, was unanimously adopted by the meeting, and, thanks having been voted to the chairman, the proceedings terminated.

THE BATHS AND WASHHOUSES FOR THE POOR.—The committee of the above excellent charity, situate in Glasshouse-street, East Smithfield, on Wednesday made their third annual report, which states that the establishment is highly valued by the poor, as proved by the extreme avidity and anxiety with which its genial tenements are sought, it having been found that amongst the numbers who continually flock to the establishment many have purposely journeyed the distance of five and seven miles. During the past year the bathers were 33,655, and 34,843 poor women had washed and dried the clothes of themselves and families, and 12,210 had ironed. The institution has also proved of the furnished relief to the poor in the crowded and wretched localities in the neighbourhood of East Smithfield with whitewashes, chlorides, &c., for the purpose of cleansing and purifying their abodes, together with the use of the baths and washhouses, to an extent had prevented the spread of fever prevailing at different periods. The receipts of the year, £367 5s. 11d., have been considerably exceeded by the expenditure, which is to be regretted, as not only doing so much good, and in all probability preventing much danger to the community, will not be allowed to sink for want of support

BATHS AND WASHHOUSES. At the meeting of the Lambeth Vestry, on Saturday, Mr. Acton in the chair, Mr. H. C. Wilson directed attention to the question of the supply of water to the establishment now erecting. He found, upon reference to the minutes of the vestry, a very important communication had been sent to the Middlesex Water Company, promising to aid the vestry in the establishment of an institution so much calculated to benefit the poorer classes of the community. In order that the vestry might clearly understand the nature of the communication, he would read it. It was as follows:

New-road, July 29, 1848.

DEAR SIR,—I am instructed by the Directors of this Company to inform you that the water shall be received, as continued, until further notice, at a merely nominal rate, the present supply of water to certain charitable institutions in the vicinity contributing almost to the whole of the distance they receive their works extend. The rate of ten guineas now charged for the distance they receive their works extend. The rate of ten guineas now charged for the present supply of the Marylebone Almshouses at St. John's Wood will therefore be reduced to two shillings per annum, and the supply of the Asylum at Millbank-street, the Directors relying that the acting managers will prevent any improper use or waste of the water so supplied. I am further desired to avail myself of this opportunity to mention, that, at the vestry of St. Margaret's, Lambeth, on the 3rd inst., Bath and Washhouses in the parish for the poorer classes, or grounds for any other similar purposes for necessary purposes, this Board will be happy to afford every facility for the furtherance of such objects. I am, dear Sir, your obedient servant,

C. Flood, Esq., Vestry Clerk, St. Margaret's. (Signed) H. R. KNIGHT, Secretary.

Mr. M'Evily (a commissioner) said the letter alluded to by Mr. Wilson had been brought under the notice of the directors of the West Middlesex Company; but he regretted to say, instead of that company adopting a similar course to that of the New River Company with respect to the baths and washhouses in Goswell-street, Hampstead-road, on an estimate of the amount of water likely to be required, and a request sent in to know what the company would charge for such a supply, the demand was so enormous that the commissioners were perfectly astonished. A Veryman suggested that the question about the supply of water had originated in a misunderstanding, and that therefore was requisite as a preliminary step to receive answers to a Midsummer list, the Directors relying that the acting managers will prevent any improper use or waste of the water so supplied. I am further desired to avail myself of this opportunity to mention, that, at the Vestry of St. Margaret's, Lambeth, on the 3rd inst., Baths and Washhouses in the parish for the poorer classes, or grounds for any other similar purposes for necessary purposes, this Board will be happy to afford every facility for the furtherance of such objects. I am, dear Sir, your obedient servant,

C. Flood, Esq., Vestry Clerk, St. Margaret's. (Signed) H. R. KNIGHT, Secretary.

Mr

THE NEW FOREST.

THE SOUTHAMPTON ROAD.

tal of the Forest. It passes through the village of Four Posts. Spring Hill, an eminence on the right, commands extensive prospects. Freemantle House, in the same direction, was often visited by Cowper, at an early period of his life. Millbrook, a large and pretty village, is next reached. The churchyard contains a monument to the memory of Pollok, author of "The Course of Time," who died at Shirley, near this place, in 1827, at the age of 29. A mile further, at the head of Southampton Water, is Redbridge, an old port. Totton and Rumbridge are next reached; after which a branch of the Southampton Water is crossed, and we approach Hunsdown Hill, over which the road lies. From this point there are grand and commanding prospects of the Forest, which we enter about a mile distant from the base of the hill.

William Howitt, in his "Rural Life of England," gives a glimpse of this district. The Forest, he says, "has not acquired, like Windsor, too much of a park-like character, by becoming a Royal residence; nor has it been inclosed, and shaped into quadrangular fields; but there it is in its original extent—vast, wild, stocked with deer; with its alternations of woods and heaths, morasses and thickets; interspersed with hamlets and farms, and forest-huts, as were the forests of old.

"As you go from Southampton to Lyndhurst, you have a fine ride through its lower regions, and see enough to make you desire to steal away into the beautiful woodlands. Lovely streams come winding out of its shades, and hasten through [illegible] like expanses, or heathy wastes. The deer are wandering here and there: here you see whole troops of ponies, peculiar to the forest, pheasants and partridges come often running out on the way before you. All about grow hollies, which were encouraged in most ancient forests for winter browze; and you have glimpses of forest trees that were enough to enrich all the landscape-painters in the world."

MARK AND WOOD.

In this scene we have an illustration of forest life. Howitt thus glances at the numerous population within the limits of the Forest, who have "got a habitation there, by one means or other. On the skirts of the Forest, and round its vast heaths, are numbers of poor huts, whose inmates have very little visible means of existence, but profess themselves to be woodmen, charcoal-burners, and so on; but it is pretty well understood that poaching and smuggling are their more probable avocations. Some of their cabins are the rudest erections of boughs, turf, and heather. Their poles for charcoal-burning are reared in huge pyramids, with the smallest ends uppermost."

The condition of the lower inhabitants and borderers of the Forest has improved much in a moral point of view of late years. Of what they were only half a century ago, the reader may form some idea by the following account taken from Bernard Gilpin's work: "The many advantages which the borderers on the Forest enjoy, such as rearing cattle and hogs, obtaining fuel at an easy rate, and procuring little patches of land for the trouble of enclosing it, would add much, one would imagine, to the comfort of their lives: but, in fact, it is otherwise; these advantages procure them not half the enjoyments of common day-labourers. In general, they are an indolent race, poor and wretched in the extreme; instead of having the regular return of a week's labour to subsist on, the greatness many of them depend on the precarious supply of Forest pilfer. Their often whole business is, commonly, to cut furze, and carry it to the neighbouring brick-kilns, for which purpose they keep a team of two or three forest horses; while their collateral support is deer-stealing, poaching, and purloining timber. In this last occupation they are said to have been so expert, that, in a night's time they would have cut down, carried off, and safely lodged in the hands of some receiver, one of the largest oaks of the Forest; but the depredations which have been made in timber along all the skirts of the Forest have rendered this species of theft, at present, but an unprofitable employment. In poaching and deer-stealing they often find their best account, in all the arts of which many of them are well practised. From their earliest youth they learn to set the trap and the gin for hares and pheasants; to ensnare deer by hanging crooks, baited with apples, from the boughs of trees; and (as they become bolder proficients) to watch the herd with fire-arms, and single out a fat buck as he passes the place of their concealment."

The local Correspondent of the Daily News gives the following notes on the present population of the forest.

"Mr. Duckworth, of Beechwood, in the heart of the forest, has attempted to improve the population by the establishment and lavish endowment of schools. Mr. Mark Phillips, Mr. Justice Coltman, and other benevolent and distinguished gentlemen, who enjoy the hospitality of Beechwood, have assisted him in his endeavours; but the population generally, both in the forest and on the borders are greatly inferior to the population of other parts of the country.

"Beaulieu is one of the places where the pleasant story is told of the poor benighted inhabitants attempting to bridge in the cuckoo, thinking by that means to enjoy perpetual summer. The people are scarcely dead in the place who were believers in, and worshippers of, the celebrated Beaulieu witch, Mary Dore, and reverenced the power by which she could transform herself into the shapes of inferior animals while engaged in the nefarious occupation of wood stealing. The second Duke of Montague (the proprietor of Beaulieu Abbey) was a firm believer in the supernatural endowments of Mary Dore, and erected a monument to her memory. But should any one desire to see a forest population miserably deformed, as far as their mental structure is concerned, he should go into the neighbourhood of Cadands, on the eastern side of the Forest. These must be the veritable descendants of the Saxon serfs who were most oppressed by their Norman taskmasters, as their 'cowed' appearance, and the absence of all independence and enjoyment, seem to testify."

We intend to continue these picturesque Illustrations of the feudal Forest.

MARK AND WOOD.

THE GREAT DEE VIADUCT ON THE SHREWSBURY AND CHESTER RAILWAY.

By this noble structure, the Shrewsbury and Chester Railway crosses the river Dee, in the Vale of Llangollen, at one of the loveliest spots in the principality of Wales, where nature has grouped the various elements of beauty in the richest profusion, and art has rounded its triumphs by first-class works.

The view from the top of the Viaduct for extent and beauty is unequalled. Beneath winds the Dee, rushing by successive streams from pool to pool, glancing with silvery light over its pebbly channel in one space, then lowing itself behind a steep bank covered with oak trees and again appearing calm and tranquil in a glassy pool, in which are mirrored the ever-changing banks in all the brilliant colours of a autumnal landscape.

From the winding river the Trevor Hills rise with serrated outline on the left bank, and the mountains forming the continuation of the Berwyn range abut on the right bank. Their lower slopes are richly cultivated, and in one or two terraces are dotted the white cottages of the Welsh peasantry, whilst masses of dark wood crown the projecting heights. The Aqueduct of Pontcysyllte, one of Telford's greatest works, is seen crossing the valley about a mile distant from the Viaduct, and forms a striking feature in the present

The Castle Dinas Bran, the Barber's Hill, and the Glueig Rocks, form a background unrivalled for picturesque effect and encloses the vale in an amphitheatre of loveliness. Railways, canals, lime quarries, and the distant iron-works mark the progress of commercial enterprise.

The Viaduct consists of 10 semicircular arches of 45 feet span, and the height from the bed of the river to the top of the parapet at the centre pier is 148 feet. Its length is 1532 feet. The arches are built with a double ring of arch stones four feet deep, having a broad chamber cut off each arris, this double chamfered ring being continued down the piers without break to the foundation. There is no projecting or springing course to break the simple and majestic outline of the arch and piers. The piers are thirteen feet thick, and twenty-eight feet six inches long at the springing of the arch, and have a considerable batter or slope on the face, which gives strength and graceful form to the whole. The Viaduct is founded on the solid rock, and is built of stone, with the exception of the interior arching, which is of brick. The tint of the stones is warm and beautiful, the quoins or outer rings of the arches and piers are smooth-dressed, as the rest of the work is rough rustic, which conveys to the mind the idea of great strength and solidity. The parapet is set on a bold projecting string course, supported on dentals, these parts are in single stones smoothly dressed, and give a noble finish to the portion of the design.

The first stone of this great work was laid on the 19th of April, 1846, and the last arch was closed on the 12th of August, 1848, but the ceremony of keying the last arch did not take place till the 24th of August. The construction has occupied a period of two years and four months. The structure contains upwards of 6 millions cubic yards of solid masonry, and cost about £70,000. It is the largest of its class in the world yet erected, and its cost per cubic yard bears a favourable comparison with that of any similar work yet erected in this country. This vast structure has been quietly and steadily completed without attracting public attention, it being scarcely known beyond the vale which it spans.

The Viaduct has been erected under the direction, and from the designs of, Mr Henry Robertson, the engineer of the Shrewsbury and Chester Railway, who originally laid out this portion of the Railway in November, 1845, and who has now conducted the works to successful completion.

The line was opened to the public on the 14th of this month. It connects the mineral districts of North Wales with the manufacturing districts, and forms an extended communication between the estuaries of the Dee and the Mersey [illegible] Shrewsbury, it traverses one of the richest portions of England, skirting the base of the Welsh mountains

MUSIC.

THE FESTIVALS OF 1849.

It is somewhat early to write of the Musical Festivals to be given in the autumn of 1849, but already is the active standing committee of the Birmingham gathering in the field, and an important measure has been adopted, the result of which will impart an interest to the meeting of 1849, which cannot have been exceeded at any former festivals. It is the engagement of Mr. Costa, Musical Director and Conductor of the Royal Italian Opera, Conductor of the Sacred Harmonic Society, and also of the Philharmonic Society, to direct the performances at the festival of 1849. This nomination is equivalent to an announcement, that it is proposed to ameliorate the execution of the works by the great masters, and that the executants are to be of the highest order of talent, selected without favouritism or cliquism, but chosen absolutely because the ability of the players is solely to be the standard for a place in the Birmingham orchestra. We congratulate the Committee on their judgment and foresight in this first administrative act: it is a guarantee that the festival of next year will be one indicative of progress in art.

The Monday evening concerts at the Town Hall, under the direction of Mr. [illegible] are continued with the greatest spirit. The selections comprise choruses, madrigals, quartets, trios, duos, &c., of compositions by the old masters, and interspersed with organ-playing by Mr. Stimpson. Thus the Birmingham choral forces are in constant practice, and their services secure for themselves the advantage of a fund in the event of sickness. The price of admission will be 3d to the floor, and 6d to the side galleries; and there is always an auditory of more than one thousand persons to listen to the music. This is truly a national as well as a rational undertaking, and it is only to be regretted that London does not possess such an edifice devoted to such civilising and charitable purposes.

The example of the Norwich and Birmingham amateurs, in having permanent practice for their choral singers, might be followed by the towns in the Three Choirs, so as to secure a local chorus, with the aid of London professionals, for the Festivals. Hereford is to have the meeting of 1849; and we trust that the stewards for the time being will see the importance of engaging a special professor as conductor, whose experience will be a guarantee for the effective execution of the morning and evening performances. A clever musical director is to [illegible] festival, as a first-rate vocalist or the most skilful instrumentalist.

AMATEUR MUSICAL SOCIETY.—The annual statement of the accounts for the second season, 1848, has been submitted to the subscribers. The receipts have been £876 8s 6d., and the payments £839 12s. In 1847 the receipts were £760 [illegible], and the expenditure £808 6s 9d. Thus the deficiency of the first season has been reduced to £48 6s. 9d., which sum includes £18 8s. for still unpaid subscriptions. The society has reason to be gratified with this result. It may be mentioned that in the expenditure there is an item of £223 16s. 6d. for professional engagements—a proof that artists benefit by this association of amateurs. The only objectionable regulation in this society, is that enabling members acquiring more than one visitor's ticket to take out an extra half-subscription; and this rule is almost making the concerts of the society public entertainments, and must affect in some degree the organized professional concerts of the season. The amateurs, considering their wealth and position, ought to invite their friends, if their presence be desired. The third season will commence at the Hanover-square Rooms—March 2nd for the rehearsal, and March the 7th for the concert; and the hour of performance is changed from 8 to half-past 8 o'clock.

EISTEDDFOD ANOMALOUS OF THE ANCIENT BRITONS.—This festival, [illegible] revived, and received its proper station amongst the great periodical celebrations of the kingdom not merely a congress of musicians and poets—not merely an opportunity for exercising the chorus of bardic lore and the minstrels of early days, but an Eisteddfod where the great and learned of this and other lands meet the descendants of an aboriginal people, rich in historic traditions, holding learned and elaborate dissertations, as well as enjoying [illegible] rating scene of bardic competition peculiar to such a festival. The Hall of the Eisteddfod was densely crowded each day. In addition to the local gentry, there were also the Marquis of Northampton, Lord Fielding (who had accepted the appointment of President for the Eisteddfod of 1849), the Turkish Ambassador, the Prussian Minister, the Chevalier Bunsen, the Venerable Archdeacon Williams of Cardigan, Professor Hallam the historian, the Rev. Thomas Price, &c. The lesk was conspicuously worn in the procession, as well as other national symbols. Colonel C. Kemys Tynte, of Cefn Mably, M.P., was the President, and in his address dwelt on the fact, that by the patronage of her Majesty, the Eisteddfod was held under the patronage of the Prince of Wales, whose presence on some future occasion might be anticipated. An Awyrdun, or Song, made in honour of the Princess of Wales, was sung by Mr. Thomas; and he was one of singers from Merthyr. The Judges were, for Essays and Poetry, the Venerable Archdeacon Williams; Harpers and Singers, Mr. Brinley Richards; Sculpture, Drawing, &c., Mr. John Gibson, R.A.; and Welsh Airs, Mr. David Weial. Woollams, Mr. W. Watkins; Welsh Hats, Mr. David. The prize given by his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, of 25 guineas, for a critical essay on the history of the language and literature of Wales, "Traethawd ar Gyfrinach Cynan and Merlyn to that of Sir Gruffyd Llwyd and Gwyliedhu, accompanied with specimens, both in the original and in a close English or Latin translation, of the peculiar characteristic of the period, was won by "Gwyddon Gaerbenn;" who, called upon, proved to be Mr. Thomas Stephens, chemist, of Merthyr. The Marquis of Northampton having suggested the publication of this essay, the Chevalier Bunsen offered, amidst great cheering, to be at the expense. Chevalier Bunsen then invested Mr. Stephens with the prize. Professor Hallam and Lord Fielding addressed the society. The choral singing, the playing on the triple harp, and Pencillon singing was highly praised by Mr. Richards, who awarded the different prizes. All his suggestion a prize will be given next year for choral singing, and leading to improve congregational singing. Some working men and women from the mining districts particularly distinguished themselves. The principal harp prize was won by a young boy from Brecon. The business terminated by three cheers being given for the President and Judges. The National Anthem was sung in Welsh.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.—A rehearsal took place on Tuesday night, at Exeter Hall, at which Mr. Costa was present. The Society will open in November with Mendelssohn's "Elijah."

THE THEATRES.

COVENT-GARDEN.

The English version of Bellini's "Sonnambula" was produced on Wednesday night, to introduce Mr. Sims Reeves in the character of Elvino, which he had not before sustained in London. It was the best attended house since the opening, and nothing could be more enthusiastic than the reception of the popular tenor: it was encored twice, indeed, after he was permitted to commence the spoken dialogue, which, it, unfortunately, retained. But two or three seasons since, an English opera with recitatives was scarcely endured—but is it evident that a great change has taken place in the public mind in this respect. It has been remarked that the spoken portions of "Maritana," the "Bondman," &c., have been heard with ease and impatience, and that the gray speeches have stood in the way of the continuous musical interest. For the singer, it is more fatiguing to be constantly changing the pitch of his voice from the speaking to the singing, than if recitative prevailed throughout the opera. To return to Mr Reeves: his Elvino bids fair to be a greater favourite than even his Edgardo. He sang with the most impassioned feeling—he never spared himself; and whether in the accents of affection, of rage, or despair, his execution was equally remarkable for the total absence of defects, or rather peculiarities of his style, as well as a kind of roughness in the tones of his organ from time to time, he has so many redeeming—overwhelming, in fact—beauties, that he carries the sympathies of his auditory irresistibly with him. In the cavatina, "All is lost now," he was not only encored in the adagio, but compelled to repeat the concluding movement, and was then called on to receive an ovation which was the loudest testimony of his audience's delight at the fall of the curtain again and again. To state that he is the first English tenor, is scarcely to do him justice. Mario excepted, of course, it may be a question whether there is another European tenor who can compete with him in dramatic and musical energy.

Miss Romer was the Amina—a part in which she has had immense success during her career. She sang and played with undoubted vigour, and her fire and impulse had their effect upon the audience, for she was much applauded, a though to the dilettanti it was a matter of regret, that such a fine organ was not accompanied with more refinement and concentrated skill.

Mr. Wallworth made his first appearance at this theatre in the same opera, sustaining the Count Rodolph. It was a gentlemanlike performance, and very nicely and evenly sung. Mr. Corri was the Alessio, and Miss Messent Lisa. The actor has a comic quaintness about him; but he should try to change the usual conventional twang in speaking so peculiar to our "low" comedians. The chorusses and accompaniments were fairly executed.

Auber's "Haydée" is in active preparation for the début of Miss Lucombe Mr. Reeves and Mr. Whitworth are included in the cast. It is rumoured that Grecce has the credit of a large ship in construction, which will rather astonish the French nautticals who prepared the vessel for the Opera Comique in Paris, who, this beautiful work was first produced. The Gallic stage shipwrights made the ship of cleverly thin materials. Meanwhile, Nissen's débût in "Norma" will precede the production of the dramatic version of Mendelssohn's "Walpurgis Night;" and then Schira's opera of "Lenilworth" will be the next novelty.

PRINCESS'

The début of Charles Braham, son of the great tenor of that name, had been looked forward to with much interest by the profession, which will rather astonish the French nauticals who prepared the vessel for the Opera Comique in Paris, who, this beautiful work was first produced. The Gallic stage shipwrights made the ship of cleverly thin materials. Meanwhile, Nissen's début in "Norma" will precede the production of the dramatic version of Mendelssohn's "Walpurgis Night;" and then Schira's opera of "Lenilworth" will be the next novelty.

The patriarch of tenors, still in possession of a most powerful voice, was in a private box, looking remarkably well. His biography of Braham, an allusion to his marriage, there is the following passage: "In 1816, Braham was married to Miss Bolton, of Ardwick, near Manchester, who has blessed him with a fine family; and perhaps one of his sons,

> At some future period [illegible]
> Become the Braham of [illegible]

This prophecy will not exactly be fulfilled by his son Charles; but he has, by his singing in the opera of "Lodoiska," at once established himself in the favour of the public as a tenor, having a remarkably sweet and sympathetic organ. His [illegible]ention on his first entrance was most animated—the house rang again with the repeated bursts of cheering, and his execution of the first cantabile passage in a fine flowing manner, and his declamation evinced a knowledge of his art, and it was encored rapturously. His romance in the second act, "My boyhood's love," a charming melody, created such a sensation that it was double encored. He therein developed no inconsiderable degree of executive facility: his power of sustaining the notes, of swelling and diminishing the tones, reminded the hearer of his father's style. His shakes, articulated distinctly both in his natural register and his falsetto, which is very agreeable in quality, were neat and finished. Whether his voice is not more of a baryton than that of a legitimate tenor, we think has yet to be established. As an actor, he is a complete novice, and has everything to learn.

In respect to the opera itself, it is one of the prettiest works that has been produced for some time. M. de Faxon, the composer, has been very popular in Germany by his Cecilia," which, however, proved a failure at Drury-Lane Theatre, when produced in June, 184 and this may be ascribed first to the inefficiency of the artists in the powerful parts they undertook, and, secondly, from the [illegible]rich, secondly, that "Stradella" is not a grand opera, and is better adapted for a small theatre. Curiously enough, in the very same month of the same year that "Stradella," failed in London, his opera of "L'Ame en Peine" was produced at the Académie Royal de Musique, in Paris, and although it was not a striking success, the work maintains its place in the répertoire.

Miss Rainforth, who, under the name of Mdlle. Angeline, was at the Royal Italian Opera in 1847 as seconda donna, is animated in her acting and singing, and she is also very handsome; but the quality of her voice is harsh and disagreeable. In Paris, she cast incredible Mdlle. Nau, Mdlle. Dobré, who played the Countess Rosenthal, Gardoni as the Count, Bremond as the Seneschal, and Barolhet as Franz. At the Princess' Mrs. Weiss is the Countess, Charles Braham the Count, H. Hormansdie Seneschal, and Weiss Franz. The overture is struggling in the construction, but it contains the motif of a march, heard through the opera, the melancholy strain of which, as an index of the story, is the most striking feature in the composition. A hunting chorus opens the opera, in which there is a good effect produced by the sheers alternating the lines forte and piano, thus echoing the notes as it were in the hills. The aria d'entrata of Léoline, "Me, a poor child of the village," is engaging in the adagio, but is disfigured by a common-place cabaletta. Then follows a duo between the Count and Léoline. La is in love with the peasant-girl; but, called to the wars, he takes his leave, presenting her with a ring as a pledge of his faith. After this parting duo, Franz, who is head ranger of the forest and guardian to Léoline, enters and sings a delicious melody, "Ah, lovely flower, described as the fairest in the forest." The Count Rosenthal then salutes (the scene, by the way, is in Styria) gives rise to a pezie preluded by a cavatina, "Home of my youth," sung by Mrs. Weiss.

The bucolic and pastoral chorus, given with so much spirit by Weiss, "Kingly wine," was encored with fervour. It is one of the most spirited drinking songs of modern days, and will be popular. Then follows the melancholy incident terminating the act. Léoline hearing the distant march of her lover's regiment, ascends a lofty mountain, to stand on a bridge over a roaring torrent, in order to catch the first glimpse of her Leopold. The bridge, the tottering state of which has been mentioned previously by Franz, gives way, and she sinks into the boiling water to rise no more. This takes place off the stage, whilst the peasantry are waltzing; a noise is heard, but the dancers waltz on. Franz suddenly misses Léoline; he [illegible]speaks [illegible] vingers with his horn to call his people around him, all is anxiety and [illegible]xation. Franz reappears with Léoline's scarf and falls senseless, and the curtain drops. The composer has been successful in depicting the varied emotions of this scene.

In the first act, the action is within the range of natural events. In the second act, M. de Saint Georges, the librettist, has taken to the romantic and fanciful to the [illegible]ormer. The scene in the forest is lovely, and very [illegible]ctable if faithless, is ingeniously turned to account. Léoline's spirit, rather too substantially embodied, by the way, by Miss Rainforth, appears to test the Count's fidelity. She is the Undine of the German legend, the Melusine of the French. But Franz, the faithful Franz, who had never dared disclose his love whilst she was on earth, is wandering a confirmed and despairing lunatic, consigned to the [illegible]ge with his horn and his dog, in the pause, all is anxiety and [illegible]xation. Franz reappears with Léoline's scarf and falls senseless, and the curtain drops. The composer has been successful in depicting the varied emotions of this scene.

In the second act, the action is within the range of natural events. In the second act, M. de Saint Georges, the librettist, has taken to the romantic and fanciful to the former. The scene in the forest is lovely, and very [illegible]ctable if faithless, is ingeniously turned to account. Léoline's spirit, rather too substantially embodied, by the way, by Miss Rainforth, appears to test the Count's fidelity. She is the Undine of the German legend, the Melusine of the French. But Franz, the faithful Franz, who had never dared disclose his love whilst she was on earth, is wandering a confirmed and despairing lunatic, consigned to the [illegible]ge with his horn and his dog, in the pause, all is anxiety and [illegible]xation. Franz reappears with Léoline's scarf and falls senseless, and the curtain drops. The composer has been successful in depicting the varied emotions of this scene.

The music to the second act is elegant and picturesque, never soaring to lofty proportions or colossal conceptions, but it is a continued strain of melodious imagery, leaving themes which dwell on the memory and haunt the ear. The romances of "My boyhood's love," and "Come, dearest sister," the very clever song of the Seneschal, "When the ball of fire leaves the mountain," the St. Irene legend, and the trio between Léoline, Franz, and Leopold, in which the life of the latter is saved by the spirit, may be quoted as the most engaging items.

"Leoline" has been beautifully mounted—the property and appointments are excellent; and the choral and orchestral execution under Loder's conductorship was carefully attended to. The début of Mdlle. de Reissy from Paris is announced.

HAYMARKET.

This theatre opened for the winter season on Saturday, as we announced last week, the interior having been entirely re-embellished since the departure of the Adelphi company. It is now very light and elegant, and several most judicious alterations have been made. In addition to the re-decorations. A very effective Shakespearian drop-scene has been painted by Mr. Phillips.

"Romeo and Juliet" was selected as the opening piece, principally for the purpose of introducing Miss Laura Addison, late of Sadler's Wells, to a Haymarket audience. From the great popularity this young lady had earned in the northern districts of the metropolis, some degree of interest was excited, and the expectations of her friends and admirers were raised to a high pitch. We regret to state that Miss [illegible] to some extent disappointed her numerous supporters; probably, be pleaded in mitigation of the defects observed in her performance—indeed, in the balcony scene Miss Addison fainted, and the curtain was lowered for a short period. In the potion scene, however, she manifested much declamation, she was decidedly the most successful. As we have all along said, in noticing her performances at Sadler's Wells, her forte lies in the expression of the tender and pathetic passages. Of Mr Hollis' Mercutio we have before spoken. The Nurse was charmingly played by Mrs. Glover, and her entrance was the signal for the heartiest burst of applause of the evening. Mr. Keeley was as quaint and humorous as ever, but his quaintness and drollery; and we must not omit to mention Mr. Rogers' Friar Laurence, which was a clever and impressive performance. The applause at the end of the tragedy was very general, and Miss Addison took a call before the foot, was led on by Mr. Creswick. The National Anthem was sung by Miss P. Horton and Mr. Caulfield; and Mrs. Keeley, in the "Pas de Fascination," sent everybody home with sides aching from laughter. The tragedy has been repeated every evening this week.

OLYMPIC

When "La Protegée sans le Savoir" was acted at the French Plays, in the early part of the season, we pronounced it as likely to prove attractive in an English dress. The result of its production at this theatre on Monday evening, under the title of "Patronage," proves that we were right. A perfect success having been achieved, due no less to the clever manner in which it has been adapted, than to the excellence of the acting. The plot, which we have before given, is simple enough. A rich young man, desirous of befriending a talented young woman, who is an artist, commissions her to copy his picture at an extravagant rate. From the style of her stab ishment, kept up by the-e means, a slur is thrown upon her character, and she is reported to be the young man's mistress. Fortunately, an engagement, by which he is fettered, is broken off; and, free to wed whom he likes, he offers his hand to the young artist, and, by making her his wife, recompenses her for the distress she had suffered from the equivocal position in which he had with the best intention placed her

The two chief parts devolved upon Mr. Leigh Murray and Mrs. Stirling, and most exquisitely were they played. The latter lady, in particular, was perfection. Her acting throughout was charming, and her dress, especially in the second act, was a model of elegance and taste. They contrive to throw aside all the conventionalities of the stage, and their language, dress, and deportment is altogether that of excellent private society—attributes so rarely to be met with. They were well supported by Mr. Emery, also a valuable performer, who always takes the greatest pains with whatever is committed to him to interpret; and consequent on "Patronage" was entirely successful, and will be certain to run for a long time, and, what is better, to draw

MARYLEBONE

Mr. Davenport and Mrs. Mowatt finished a very judicious engagement here on Saturday. "The Bride of Lammermoor," which we saw at the beginning of the week, increased in attraction, as our custom operates, one after another, acknowledged the merits of the acting of this lady and gentleman, and they were each night loudly called for, and greeted with every mark of approbation and favour. It is to be regretted that their engagement terminated just as they were beginning to be appreciated by the audiences of that part of town.

On Monday, a clever one-act drama, by Mr. Morton, called "The Midnight Watch," was produced, and with great success. We think that another version of the same story was performed at the Lyceum, in the inter-regnum after the Keeleys left it: Mr. Morton's is, however, the best. It was well played; and the moonlight "set" which forms the scene one of the most effective things we have witnessed, good as the production of Mr. Dayes' pencil usually are at this house. On the same evening, Mr. T. P. Cooke appeared as William in Douglas Jerrold's popular drama of "Black-Eyed Susan," and was received with the liveliest enthusiasm. He played with all his old effective intensity, and is looking well—better, we think, than we have seen him for some time. All the great points and the finest hits the yarn of St. Domingo Billy, the hornpipe, the song, and the trial scene were applauded to the echo. The rest of the characters were played with equal merit. Miss Fanny Vining is decidedly our best male dramatic actress—young, good-looking, and intelligent. She gave strong interest to the part of Susan, and her acting in the last scene but one was most admirable. Mr. Herbert was a comical Gunthorpe, and Miss Saunders a lively Sally Maythorne. The piece was most beautifully put upon the stage as at the Lyceum, there is no theatre in the metropolis where such attention is paid to detail and artistic effect.

The applause at the conclusion was most enthusiastic, and Mr. T. P. Cooke and Miss Vining loudly called for. The real "British sailor" evidently sets time at defiance. We expect, and hope, years hence, when we are old and grey, that we shall be able to send our grandchildren at Christmas to the play, to see Mr. T P. Cooke dance his hornpipe, spin his yarn, and sing his song, with the same spirit as at present.

The LYCEUM bill has remained unchanged since the opening of the theatre, which is, in theatrical parlance, doing first-rate business.

Beaumont and Fletcher's licentious comedy of "Rule a Wife and have a Wife" has been revived at SADLERS' WELLS, altered to suit modern notions of propriety. It is admirably played, not the least deserving actor being Mr. Scharfe' as the Old Woman.

Miss Woolgar has been added to the troupe engaged for the Royal theatricals at Windsor. She will play Laura, in Kenny's "Sweethearts and Wives." As may be readily perceived, the greatest commotion is caused in the dramatic world by the forthcoming representations. Jealousies, bickerings, private intriguing and public comment, abound in all directions. The company, however, unquestionably includes the best talent now on the stage; and we believe that the directions with respect to the private worth of the ladies to be engaged have been somewhat stringent.

All the old scenery, properties, costumes, and appurtenances of the SURREY Theatre have been sold by auction. This is as it should be. Everything will be required new; and when it is being made, correct taste and effect may just as well be called into play.

The burning of the Ocean Monarch forms the subject of dramas at several of the small theatres and saloons.

Mrs. Barrow (late Miss Julia Bennett) will resume her professional avocations at the Haymarket.

Mr. Hooper, of the Brighton Theatre, has become the lessee of the Strand. We trust he may be able to solve a problem hitherto rather difficult—how to make money where the house is not large enough to cover the expenses of a decently appointed stage.

COUNTRY NEWS.

EAST SURREY REGISTRATION.—The Reform Registration Society gives the following summary of the registration: The number on the register of 1847-48, 6291; the number expunged incidentally, and through objections by overseers, 165; also, through objections made by agents, 17: deduct the total number expunged, 473, the residue of the electors of 1847-48, 5818. Add reclaims allowed, 174; ditto new claims allowed, 349: the number of electors for 1848-49, 6341: increase on the year, 43. Of the 473 electors expunged, 174 will be on the new register; 135 are deceased; and 194 are disfranchised, mostly through change of abode.

OPENING OF THE GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY LOOP FROM LINCOLN TO PETERBOROUGH.—Tuesday was the day appointed for the commencement of passenger traffic on the loop line of the Great Northern Railway Company. The first train left the station at Lincoln at the hour which had been appointed, 7 A.M. The scenery on the line from Lincoln to Boston, though flat, is of a very interesting character. Near to Lincoln are the ruins of the Monks' Abbey. Five miles further down the remains of Bardney Abbey can be seen. Nine miles from Lincoln the line passes close to the site of Bardney Abbey, where one of the Saxon Kings is buried. Various other ruins of monasteries and religious houses are in the neighbourhood, and ten miles further on the route to Boston is Tattershall Castle. For the next, the line between Lincoln and Boston was on the banks of the Witham, leaving the river occasionally to avoid the bends in the stream. The train reached Boston at nine o'clock, where a large concourse of persons were waiting its arrival. From Boston, through Spalding to Peterborough, the line is nearly straight. About four miles from Peterborough the loop line forms a junction with the Syston and Peterborough Railway, and in a meadow near Peterborough with the London North-Western and Eastern Counties Railways. The train reached Peterborough at half-past ten, having performed the journey (69¼ miles) in something less than three hours. NEW KIRKSTEAD the first train for Lincoln was passed, which would arrive there at 2 P.M. From Peterborough to Lincoln (Syston route) is 84 miles. At Boston the loop forms a connexion with trains to and from Hull by the East Lincolnshire line; at Walton junction with trains to Leicester, Derby, &c.; and at Peterborough to the Great Northern line to the West of England, as well as to the Eastern Counties and North-Western Lines, both of which run trains in conjunction with the Great Northern. The visitors to Peterborough left at 4.15 and returned to Lincoln at 7.15 P.M., and there was a general rejoicing at Spalding, in honour of the opening of the line, and on the 25th, at Boston, there will be a very grand celebration of the event by a public dinner and ball, which the Directors and Directress—Miss Burdett Coutts—have been invited to attend.

MANCHESTER CUSTOMS' REVENUE.—The receipts of customs at Manchester (being principally on the articles tea, coffee, sugar, wines, spirits, and tobacco), for the quarter ending the 10th of October last, amounted to £293,303, against £175,050 last year; being an increase of £48,253. The increase on the quarter is only £19,302. Manchester has only been a bonding port between three and four years, and considering that almost immediately after its establishment the duty on cotton wool, expected to be one of its chief sources of revenue, was wholly removed, its progress appears to have been considerable.

THE EDINBURGH CHARTIST TRIALS.—These trials have been appointed to take place before the High Court of Justiciary next month. One of the accused, John Fraser, who generally acted as president of the meetings, has been missing for some days past, and his bail having got some clue to his retreat, they have gone in pursuit of the fugitive.

THE DEMIT HONOURS.—The extensive establishment in Blair-street, Edinburgh, which, under the firm of "Sir David Hunter Blair and J. Bruce, printers to the King's most excellent Majesty," enjoyed for such a length of time the monopoly of printing the bibles sold throughout Scotland, as well as the various Scottish Acts of Parliament and other public documents, has been finally broken up and dispersed. Formerly, when the concern was most flourishing, about 100 persons were employed in the various departments; but for years there has been no printing done, two or three persons only being in attendance for the purpose of executing orders and gradually reducing stock; and, on Monday and Tuesday last, the premises, with the whole stock of bibles, printing-press, &c., were brought under the hammer of Mr. Peter Fraser, and "sold without reserve to the highest bidder."

EDINBURGH UNIVERSITY.—The new vacancy in the Hebrew chair of the University is about to be filled up. The candidates are Dr Liddell, Mr. Liston, Mr. Eadaile, &c. The applicants, in conformity with the late decision in the Court of Session, must deliver to the Clerk to the Senatus, Mr. Lefevre, to obtain information regarding the annuity-tax levied for the support of the clergy in Edinburgh and Montrose; and Mr. Ray Shuttleworth, charged with some commission regarding the education scheme, the precise character of which has not transpired.

SHOT IN A QUARREL.—On Monday night, a surgeon, named Addison was in company with Mr. Thomas Hall, drinking at a public-house in Southampton. They left about two o'clock on Tuesday morning, quarrelling with each other. When they arrived at the Houndsell, a large open space in the centre of the town, Addison took a pistol from his pocket, and shot Hartnoll in the groin. The report of the pistol was heard by some policemen, who immediately rushed to the spot. Addison was immediately apprehended. Hartnoll, after walking a few paces, fell, and was conveyed to the infirmary, where he now lies dangerously ill, and is not expected to recover. The ball has not yet been extracted. A magistrate has attended at the infirmary to take his deposition.

Two accidents on board the Grampus, off Portsmouth, occurred on Wednesday, by which one man lost his life and another was very seriously injured. The train was taking in a quantity of powder, consisting of 30 barrels, when the [illegible]Lower or Fowler), had, most incautiously, attempted to cross the line in the very face of the train. Both horses were cut to pieces and killed instantaneously, and such was the force of the shock, that the horses, together with the shafts of the waggon, were knocked a distance of 30 or 40 yards from the body of the waggon. The man, who had hold of the front horse at the time, most providentially escaped injury; but his garments were very much torn, and he was too much frightened then to give any explanation. The horses were stated to be valuable, and one of them was in foal. No blame whatever attaches to the driver of the engine. The line at this spot is on a perfect level with the adjoining lands, and the approach of the train could be observed upwards of a mile distant. The train was detained about a quarter of an hour by the occurrence. The accident happened at about a quarter to 12, at which period the train was nearly half-an-hour behind its proper time.

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

On the proposition of the Prussian Government, a Commission has been appointed by France, Baden, Bavaria, Hesse, Nassau, the Netherlands, and Prussia, to examine the Rhine from Strasbourg to the sea, including the Leek and the Waal, and to devise measures for improving the navigation

Mr. Leslie is appointed Provincial Secretary, and Mr. W. H. Merritt President of Committee of Council for the province of Canada. Mr. Sullivan is appointed Judge of the Court of Queen's Bench in Canada West.

It is reported that the Lords of the Admiralty will introduce a Bill early next Session for the better regulation of em grant vessels. The appointment of an inspector in each vessel has been suggested, with the view of correcting any carelessness with regard to baths, &c., on the part of the crew or passengers; and the system of overcrowding ships will also be taken into consideration. To the latter evil may be ascribed the dreadful mortality which prevailed amongst the emigrants who left Liverpool for America in 1846 47.

Dr. Cooke, of Belfast, has resigned his ministerial charge in that town, after nearly twenty years' service. He has received the live rest token of sympathy from the congregation and presbytery.

In the spirit-dealers' new Act, which has just come into operation, it is declared that officers of the Excise shall not participate in penalties and forfeitures under the Act. The penalties are to go to the Crown, and not, as hitherto, in part to the Excise officers. This is a very excellent provision

On Saturday night last, or early on Sunday morning, a dwelling-house on the Marina Parade, Dover, in the occupation of Captain Sir Thomas Trigge, was forcibly entered without creating any alarm. The thieves succeeded in packing up valuables to the amount of £1000 in a hat, when, it is supposed, they were disturbed, as the hat was found, leaving their valuable booty behind, and taking only £7 in gold and some silver.

The Dumfries papers mention the great abundance of herrings which the present fishery season affords. Apart from the large quantities salted, and lesser that find their way to different markets, four cartloads of fish brought every day to Dumfries are sold readily at the marvellously low price of eighteen for a penny.

Two Garden Mobiles, named Tasserand and Ponceau, have just been condemned by the Tribunal of Correctional Police at Paris, the former to a year's and the latter to six months' imprisonment, for robbery, swindling, and illegally wearing the dress of the Garden of Honour. Ponceau pretended to be the young Martin, who was decorated for his bravery in the insurrection of June, and introduced himself as such into some private houses, in one of which he stole 10*l*.

Lord Brabazon, of Shobdon Court, Herefordshire, has given free permission to his numerous tenantry to destroy hares and rabbits on their respective farms.

The newspaper press does not seem to flourish in Sheffield. On Saturday was published the last number of the Sheffield Mercury, a newspaper which has for the last forty-three years been the advocate of Conservative principles in Sheffield. A few weeks ago, the Sheffield Iris, a Liberal paper, expired in the sixty-first year of its age.

Mr. Green made his 201st ascent, from the Hippodrome in Paris, on Sunday. He was accompanied by four persons and a monkey, the latter in a pouch. A considerable height had been attained, and the parachute gently descended on a house in the Champs Elysées. Mr. Green and his companions continued their voyage, and descended near Cerisell.

The Bonnington and Chandos estates, in the county of Westmeath, will be brought to the hammer on the 24th instant, in Dublin. They comprise 6700 acres, producing a rental of about £3400 per annum. The remaining portion of the Villiers estate, in the Queen's County, comprising 2938 acres, will also be disposed of.

The Sarene Highness Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar is at present making a tour through the Irish military districts, in company with his Royal Highness Prince George of Cambridge.

The Buchstwire Journal announces the death of the Rev. John Edwards, of Morcom, the clergyman to whose settlement so great an opposition was manifested, giving rise to proceedings which ultimately led to the disruption of the Church of Scot and in 1843

Sir George Chetwynd, Bart., of Grendon Hall, near Atherstone, has given permission to his tenants to kill the game on their respective farms.

The viaduct of Indre, one of the most remarkable works of art on the Orleans and Bordeaux line of railway, has just been finished; it crosses the valley of Indre, 91 metres in length, has 59 arches of 9 metres 85 centimetres in width, and has been two years and four months in construction. A grand fête took place at Tours to celebrate the occasion.

The London and North Western Railway Company have presented, through Captain Huish, at the suggestion of J. F. Westland, Esq., M.D., to the medical officer in the Manchester district, a set of rech cut glass castors in a splendid silver frame, as a testimonial of his services at the late accident at Crewe.

On Monday morning, the Sappers and Miners having completed the cutting away of the metropolis, consequently abolishing the observatory, or "crow's nest," which has excited so much attention, on the summit of St Paul's Cathedral. The operation was observed at different points by great numbers of persons, and the needless way the men went about their work, the unpractical platform was calculated to create feelings of apprehension for their safety

Mr. Smith O'Brien has ordered a dozen copies of the lithographed Daguerreotype likeness of himself, done by Gluckman, to present copies to several friends.

It is said that the Common Council of Paris and the Etat Major of the National Guard intend to give a grand entertainment to the National Guards who came to the rescue of Paris during the battle of June, and that the Lord Mayor and Aldermen of London are to receive an invitation, as a mark of gratitude for the reception given to the French National Guards who have lately visited London.

In the course of the battle in the streets of Vienna on the 7th, Madame de Lacour, wife of the Envoy of the French Republic, went, in the midst of a shower of balls, to seek the wounded, and remove them to her residence, when soon became an ambulance.

Louis Napoleon, notwithstanding his adhesion to the French Republic, assumes the name and title of Prince. He communicates through a secretary, in so signs on the part of the Prince.

The Legitimists say that all Brittany will vote for the Duc de Bordeaux being President of the French Republic, notwithstanding his disqualification This assertion can influence about a million and a half of votes

Mr. John Tilley has been appointed Assistant Secretary to the General Post-office, in the room of Mr James Campbell, deceased. The assistant-secretaryship is a lucrative and important office. Mr. Tilley has hitherto filled the situation of Surveyor to the General Post-office for the northern district of England, the duties of which will be performed in future by Mr. J. P. wood.

The Lords of the Admiralty have placed her Majesty's steamer Lophaena at the disposal of his Excellency Count Reventlow, who proceeded in her on Thursday morning to Copenhagen. This visit of the Danish Minister has been rendered necessary by the negotiations still pending for the settlement of the Schleswig-Holstein question.

The Globe states, with reference to the statement made by Prince Carini, that a positive assurance had been obtained from Lord Palmerston that her Majesty's Government would not offer any kind of impediment to the military expedition which the Royal Government was preparing for the purpose of restoring peace and order in Sicily," that it has been authorised to say that the statement made by Prince Carini is without any foundation

A democratic banquet was given at Montpellier a few days since, at which the most execrable doctrines were promulged. At the conclusion the assistants paraded the streets in groups, singing the Carmagnole, and the Ca ira, and shouting "Down with the aristocrats!" "Vive Barbès!" "Vive Raspail!" "Vive la République Sociale!" "Vive Ledru!" "Vive Robespierre!" "Vive la guillotine!"

A petition was numerously signed during the week at Leeds, praying that the extreme penalty of the law may not be carried into effect in the case of Mr. Smith O'Brien.

The Lewes Deanery Branch of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts has made a grant of 300 Bibles and Prayer-books to the Brighton Branch of the Colonization Society, for the use of those emigrating under its auspices

The deliveries of tea last week were to a fair extent in London, viz 514,859lb.

The Exchequer-office, Lincoln's-inn, was entered after the termination of business on Saturday last, and plundered of a quantity of gold and silver, the thieves getting clear away with their booty.

In consequence of the failure of the potato crop, R. Knight, Esq., of Henley-in-Arden, has returned to the various poor people holding small allotments on his estate the Lalf of their respective rents.

The following officers have succeeded, from the 1st of September, to the pension of £100 per annum:—viz. Major-General Sir De Lacy Evans, Major-General J. M'Donald, C.B., Major-General Roderick M'Neill, and Major-General W. Sutherland.

Several placards were issued in Paris on Monday last, in favour of Prince Louis Napoleon as candidate for the Presidency of the Republic.

The Directors of the South Devon Railway Company have passed a resolution granting the usual Christmas gratuity to the employés on their line. The porters and policemen will have 14s. instead of 10s. weekly, and those of a higher grade will be reduced about 20 per cent. A reduction in the number of porters, policemen, and clerks is also contemplated.

On Thursday morning, last week, some convicts in the gaol of Lisburne (Ireland), attempted to escape. Two of them, who contrived, on their cells being opened in the morning, to slip out and shut in the turnkeys, were met in their outward progress by a sentinel, who fired and shot one of them dead. The other surrendered

Emigration yet continues from Ireland, the whole stream being directed to the States. Several families of farmers from Clare, Limerick, &c., are amongst the emigrants.

Christ Church, Highbury, which was consecrated last week by the Bishop of London, has cost nearly £5,000, and is erected after the early English style of architecture, of Caen stone and Kentish rag. It contains about 700 sittings, of which about 180 are free.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"L. S." The solution of the very beautiful Enigma No. 265 is as follows:—1. R to K R sq; 2. Kt to K B 3rd; 3. Kt to K B 2d, discovering check and mate.

"Simon Eser."—The twists "3. B.!!" are surely distinctive enough, without occupying our limited space every week with a long and meaningless signature.

"G. S. F. Liverpool."—Very acceptable, as usual.

"G. W. A." White, of course, is to mate in the stipulated number of moves, let Black do whatever he may.

"A. L." "The Rev. H. R." "The Rev. A. M'D.," "The Rev. G. C.," "The Rev. E. D. T.," "The Rev. H."—Private communications have been forwarded.

"Chess in the East."—The Problems shall have immediate attention

"P. B. S." "R. N." "C. W. B." Study the very able and novel variations on the "Evans' Gambit," by Mr. G. Walker, of Dublin, now publishing in the Chess-Player's Chronicle

"Zetticus." Sandbrook.—The publishers of the Berlin "Chess Magazine" are Messrs Wilhams and Norgate, the foreign booksellers; from whom you can also obtain the German "Handbuch" of Bilguer

"R. K." is thanked for the correction, which shall be considered.

"D. H."—z." "A. B. H."—z." "G. W. M."—Received, with thanks.

"W."—It appears to us, as it stands, a Problem of four moves; but, if our memory does not fail us, in the original there is a Black Pawn on A. It's let or 2d.

"W. H.," Reading. We shall always have real pleasure in promoting the interest of your young club.

"A Constant Reader" We have never seen likenesses of the two distinguished players mentioned; but they will, probably, be given hereafter in our Portrait Gallery.

"Rex Mexa."—It shall be examined and reported on shortly

"R. t." "J. R. N." Next week

"B. C." Ludsbury; "J. T. G.," "R. G. Jun.," "B. E." Under consideration

"D. E." Perth. If both parties persist in repeating the same moves (and Black would obviously do wrong to vary his), the game is drawn.

"Amens."—He can claim another Queen if he please.

"R. M. D." It shall be looked to.

"G. S. J."—We have not forgotten them.

Solutions by "Miles," "Sopracita," "G. A. H.," "Exe," "Phiz," "W. L.," "Jun.," "The dash Trio," "M. P.," "The Liverpool Trio," "A. W. B.," "J. M.," "R. M. D.," "G. S. J.," "F. G. R.," "C. A. M. K.," "P. H. T.," "Ole Joe," are correct. Those by "G. B. S.," "L. S. D.," "M. M.," are wrong.

 Any Amateur Chess-player desirous of playing a Match by Correspondence, may hear of a competitor by address ng "Amicus," Beedles, Suffolk.

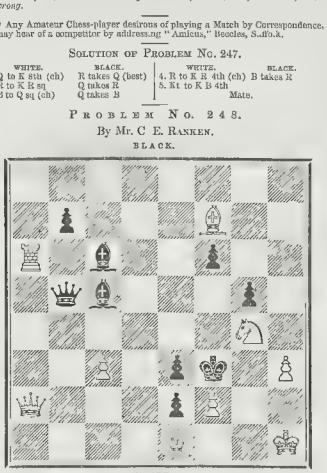
SOLUTION OF PROBLEM NO. 247.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
1. Q to R 8th (ch)	R takes Q (best)	4. R to R 4th (ch)	B takes R
2. R to K R sq	Q takes R	5. Kt to K B 4th
3. B to Q sq (ch)	Q takes B	Mate.

PROBLEM NO. 248.

By Mr. C. E. RANKEN.

BLACK.



WHITE

White to mate in five moves.

CHESS IN THE PROVINCES.

Mr. STAUNTON gives the Pawn and Two Moves to Mr. HANNAH, of the Brighton Chess Club

(Remove Black's K B P from the board.)

WHITE (Mr. H.)	BLACK (Mr. S.)	WHITE (Mr. H.)	BLACK (Mr. S.)
1. P to K 4th		15. B to K 3d (a)	Q Kt to Q 6th
2. P to Q 4th	P to K 3d	16. B takes R	Kt takes B (ch)
3. B to Q 2d	P to Q B 4th	17. P takes Kt	Kt to Kt 3d (b)
4. P takes P	Q to her R 4th (ch)	18. P to K B 4th	Q to K B 6th
5. Q Kt to B 3d	B takes B	19. Q to her sq (c)	Q takes Kt
6. K Kt to B 3d	K Kt to B 3d	20. Q to K Kt 4th (d)	Kt takes K B P
7. Q B to K B 4th	P to Q B 3d	21. Q R to sq	Q takes Q B P
8. Castles	K Kt to K 2d	22. R to R sq	P to Q Kt 4th (e)
9. P to Q R 3d	B to Q R 2d	23. P to K B 3d	B to Q Kt 2d
10. Q B to Q 6th	Q to K R 4th	24. Q R to Q B sq	Q to her 5th
11. P to K 5th	Castles	25. K R to K Kt sq	P to K Kt 4th
12. Q R to K 4th	P to K R 3d	26. B to Q 6 5th	B takes B
13. P to Q B 4th	K R to K B 5th	27. R takes B	Kt to Q 6th (f)
14. Q to her 2d	R takes K R	And White resigns

(a) Much better play than taking the Rook at once

(b) If he B4th. White would have been enabled to exchange Knights, by playing his Kt to K 3 2d.

(c) He appears to have no better move

(d) If he had played the Q to K R 2th Black would have moved Q to K Kt 7th (ch), and in a few moves take the B P with his Kt (ch). &c.

(e) Important, because it permitted him to remove his Kt without danger

(f) Black might also have taken the Q B with his Q, and, if the Kt were taken, have captured the K R, winning easily.

WELL-PLAYED GAME BETWEEN THE HONORARY SECRETARY OF THE LONDON AND THE HONORARY SECRETARY OF THE LIVERPOOL CHESS CLUBS.

(Evans's Gambit.)

WHITE (Mr. G. P.)	BLACK (Mr. G. S.)	WHITE. (Mr. G. P.)	BLACK. (Mr. G. S.)
1. P to K 4th	P to K 4th	16. Q to B 3d	R to Kt 2d
2. K to B 3d	Q Kt to B 3d	17. R to R sq	Q R to K Kt sq
3. K B to Q B 4th	K B to Q B 4th	18. K R to K Kt sq	P to Q Kt 4th
4. P to Q Kt 4th	P to Q 4th	19. P to Q B 4th	Q to K 4th
5. B takes P	Kt takes Q Kt P	20. P takes P	R takes K Kt P
6. B to Kt 3d	Q B to K Kt 5th	21. R takes R	Q takes Q R (ch)
7. P to K R 3d	B takes Kt	22. K to R 2d	B to Q 3d (ch)
8. Q takes B	Q to K 2d	23. R to Kt 3d	Q to K 8th
9. Castles	K Kt to B 3d	24. Kt to Q B 4th	B takes R (ch)
10. P to Q 3d	P to K R 3d	25. P takes B	Q R P takes P
11. Q B to Kt 2d	P to Q B 3d	26. Kt to K 3d	Kt to Q B 3d.
12. Q to K Kt 3d	Castles on Q's side	27. Kt to B 5th	Kt to K 4th
13. B takes K P	K to Kt square	28. Q to Kt 2d	Q to Q 4th
14. B takes Kt	P takes B	29. Q to B sq	Kt to B 6th (ch)
15. Kt to Q 2d	K R to Kt sq.	30. K to Kt 2d	Kt to K 8th.

Drawing the game by perpetual check (d)

(a) This defence is not so forcing as it appears, as it does not

(b) The following are probable moves if Black had attempted to win after move 30 —

	WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
30.	Kt to K 8th (ch)	K to B 8th	34. Kt to Q B 6th (ch)	K to B sq
31. K to B 3d	Kt takes Q P	35. Q to B 5th (ch)	Q to K 8d
32. P takes Kt	Q takes B	36. Q takes Q Kt P	Q to Kt 5th (ch)
33. Kt to K 7th	R to Kt 2d	37. K to B sq	R takes P

And White gives perpetual check

CHESS ENIGMAS.

No. 274.—By HERR KLIN.

White. K at his B sq, Q at Q sq, R at Q Kt 8th, B at Q Kt 4th, Kt at Q 8th.
Black K at h B 4th.

White to play, and mate in three moves

No. 275.—By Mr. MG——y.

White K at Q R sq, Q at Q Kt sq, R at Q B 8th, Kt at Q Kt 5th, B at K B 8th, P at K 8 2d.
Black: K at K B 5th, Q at Q B 3d, R at K 3d, Kt at K Kt 3d; Ps at K Kt 5th and 7th, K B 4th, and K 6th

White to play, and mate in three moves.

No 276.—By F. W. C

White: K at Q 4th, R at K B 7th, B at K 4th, Kt at K Kt 5th
Black: K at Q 3d.

White to play, and mate in four moves.

OUR MAGAZINE COLUMN FOR OCTOBER.

CELEBRATED PURCHASES.

Some of our most approved standard works went begging, from publisher to publisher, and were only accepted by a sort of accident at last. Prideaux's "Connexion between the Old and New Testament" was, for instance, handed from hand to hand, between five or six booksellers, for two years. By one publisher the author was gravely told that "the subject was dry: it should be endowed with a little humour." At last Eckard recommended it to Tonson. "Robinson Crusoe," it is well known, ran through the whole trade; finally, a bookseller, more knowing than his brethren, published it, and realised a thousand pounds from it. "Tristram Shandy" was offered by Sterne to a bookseller for fifty pounds, and was rejected; Dodesley eventually published it. The public, too, were oftimes as stupid as the publishers. For instance, the "Rosciad" was particularly unsuccessful at first; only ten copies were sold in five months. Garrick, finding his own praises in it, patronised it, and Churchill reaped a harvest from its sale. Gray's "Ode on Eton College," according to Warton, excited very little attention. What may surprise some people still more is, that "Blair's Sermons" were refused by Strahan, the publisher. To turn to another class of works: "Burns' Justice" was sold by its author for a small sum, for he was weary, as he declared, of importuning booksellers to buy it. It now realises an annual income "Buchan's Domestic Medicine" was purchased for five pounds. In light literature the author was also sacrificed to his own penury and eagerness, and to the blindness or cupidity of the publisher. Miss Burney's "Evelina," all the world can remember, sold for five pounds; "The Wanderer," by Savage, produced only ten; "The Vicar of Wakefield" was purchased, it is true, for the sum of sixty guineas, but it gained not that success until the "Traveller" had made the author's name famous One solemn word on these details, which bring to the mind the heart-ache of many a true genius, the disappointment, the degradation, the despair. We dare not dilate on modern days, one trait of which will, perhaps, suffice. "The Pleasures of Hope" were refused by every publisher of London and Edinburgh, and were only published, at last, on condition that the author should be content with the sum of ten pounds, and that not until a second edition had appeared.—Fraser's Magazine.

THE RACK OF DEBT.

What shall we say of a man of a decent and compact figure, a man of middle height; who nevertheless wishing to stand two inches taller in the world than fairly becomes him, consents to be stretched by the rack in the hope of walking the higher for the pulling? Now Mr. Jerolds was the foolish man. He wanted to stand higher in the world than his simple means allowed him; and he had submitted himself to the rack of debt, to be handsomely drawn out. To get appearance upon debt is, no doubt, every bit as comfortable as to get height upon the rack. The figure may be expanded; but how the muscle of the heart, how all the joints are made to crack for it.—A Man Made of Money." by Douglas Jerrold.

CHATEAUBRIAND.

As Chateaubriand approached the termination of his days, he retired into a sad and solemn majesty of manner, and a silence which seemed anticipatory of the tomb; yet he was far from remaining insensible to what passed around. All that breathed of religion, devotion, valour, moved him deeply. He wept, wept like infants, on being informed of the horrid death of the Archbishop of Paris, and in listening to the detailed exploits of a young and brave citizen. After his fervent love of God, M. de Chateaubriand had three objects next his heart—honour, liberty, and France. Religion is the shining ornament of his literary glory. He was a sincere Christian; his heart was no less convinced than his reason; he believed because he had suffered. "I have faith," he would say, with eager eyes, "and I would be a martyr with joy." We cannot doubt this, for no one was ever more ready to sacrifice his temporal interests, by a faithful adherence to his principles. He made real sacrifices to honour, that second object, which was the essence of his moral being, and did ever less the hereditary gift of his ancestors. After the revolution of 1830, when the victorious party carried hum in triumph, shouting "Long live the defender of the liberty of the press!" honour induced Chateaubriand to renounce all dignities, fortune, and political influence. Bound by respect for his own oath, more strongly than tempted by the promises of flattery, he remained firm in his high-persecuted and fidelity, at the same time retaining the unanimous respect of all parties. Sharpe's London Magazine.

I LOVE BUT THEE ALONE.

No distance e'er can alter me,
No time my heart can move,
No beauty win one thought from thee,
My early, only love!
And though I want the way to woo
In fancy's flattering tone,
Yet I can tell I love thee well,
I love but thee alone,
Alone, alone, alone,
And love but thee alone!

I love the best, the gentlest grace—
Then dearly art thou loved
Thou fairest form, the sleekest face,
The heart most truly moved;
But there, were I to call them mine,
I love but thee alone!

They blushes would disown,
Though a skill'd artist's art,
I love but thee alone,
Alone, alone, alone,
I love but thee alone!

Of lovelier flowers let others speak,
That bloom beneath lovelier suns,
I know no blossoms like thy cheek,
No sunshine like thine eyes;
And distance never will alter me,
Nor time, when years are flown,
One change will know, I love thee so,
And love but thee alone.
Alone of all the world
Oh! I love but thee alone!

—By William Forsyth, Dublin University Magazine

ORIGIN OF THE ORDNANCE OFFICE.

The origin of the Ordnance Office dates from the stormy protectorship of Richard, Duke of Gloucester. More than a century and a half had then elapsed since the invention of gunpowder, and its powerful and mora. influence in consolidating power, and tranquillising faction, probably suggested the necessity of an establishment which would direct and develope its application to war. Before this time the various appointments of grand-bowyer, galeator, &c., of the Tower, the various notices of engines, scorpions, trebuchets, petraries, rebaudes, bendles or bibles, aspringals, and mata fundis (with which the useless erudition of Vitruvius and Marcellinus acquaints us) indicate the rude and innocuous armoury which preceded the musket, the cannon, the howitzer, and the mortar. —Dolman's Magazine.

DUNGEONS OF BAGLAN CASTLE

The dungeons of Baglan, like those of some other castles of contemporaneous date, impress the beholder with horror, as he contemplates them in all their dismal gloom, and as he sees how utterly hopeless of escape would be the captive man immured; for, from these subterraneous abodes no cries for mercy could reach the air, no sentinel could be gained, no passing dealer wrought to pity; from their deep, dark, impure recesses, not the utmost exertion of the most powerful sense could reach the upper air. For even was the wretch confined pine into the dungeon at its base (as described) no sounds, could no man could, unaided, make his ascent. There, then, he remained, breathing the heavy vapour of human sighs, and groans unheard in such a deep gurrup as this, to rise to that Father of mercies from whom no hole of earth can hide his creature; or, perhaps, if his spirit were unchastened from above, in the ravings of his frantic despair, gnaw the scantily-fed arm which placed him there or, stupified by the excess of his grief, lost to reason and misuse, waiting in the most hopeless form of misery the dead, which to one immured in tombs like these is seldom long delayed.—This is Edinburgh Magazine.

FAIRIES.

Mr. Keightley says that he has conversed with a girl from Norfolk, who said she had often seen the faeries! She described them as being clad in white; as living under the ground, where they constructed houses, bridges, &c.; and she added, that it was not safe to go near them when they came above ground. In not many months since, that going into a house in Norwich, we noticed a very curious conical stone, somewhat larger than a plover's egg. On inquiring what it was, we were told a "fairy loaf." It had been found near Shotesham, where they were frequently met with; and the people there believe that while they kept a stone of this kind in their houses they would never want bread.—Hood's Magazine

MISSING—M. LEVERRIER'S NEPTUNE.

Some eighteen months ago, M. Leverrier discovered a new planet—weighed and measured it before it had entered into the system of human vision. Instantly however, upon the news reaching England, half a dozen of our astronomers, with an unanimity which did them credit, likewise discovered the planet to our system, were of them, at the same time, modestly gives the discovery out as the real original observers. Now, however, it turns out that the discovery is no discovery at all. Neptune is missing. Either he has been washed away, during the late rainy summer, or he has, for some hidden reason of his own, absconded into space a region in which even Mr Daniel Forester would be puzzled to find the celestial defaulter. What is to follow? M. Leverrier admits that he has been somewhat too hasty. But what is to be done with our second risible astronomical gantry, who indorsed the blunder—who were, indeed, so anxious to make themselves out the original acceptors of the bill, on public credulity? Sir J. South, for example, is a tremendous fellow for hunting comets. He bags dozens of them every frosty night; and if they are not to be seen on the succeeding evening, the "eccentric movements" of the long-tailed beasts are accepted as a sufficient apology. But planets are steady-going old buffers. Your comet merely engages furnished lodgings in a constellation, late one evening, and then bolts the next morning without paying his rent; but planets are, so to speak, quarry householders—substantial bodies, with regular rounds to go, and altogether individuals of staid and respectable habits, who are sure to be at home after dark. We would suggest to our astronomical friends the propriety of keeping these facts in mind when they go planet-hunting: and of being perfectly certain that they have brought it down their game, before they invite the public to banquet on the same. Man to the Moon.

MAXIMS FOR TEACHERS.

Franklin says, "If you want a good servant, serve yourself." I might startle you by saying, "If you want a good education, teach yourselves"—nor would it be wrong, if understood in too literal a sense, be sound; but it is true, beyond all doubt, that every man who has had really a good education, has done infinitely more for himself than his best teacher have done for him; and it is equally true, that many of the greatest men that ever lived have been self-educated. For my own part, I believe the greatest difficulty is overcome, when the scholar is made aware that with ardour and industry he may do everything for himself, and that without these good qualities, no teacher can help him.—Quarterly Educational Magazine.

THE RICHMOND, WINDSOR, AND STAINES RAILWAY.—THE BRIDGE AT RICHMOND.

THE RICHMOND, WINDSOR, AND STAINES RAILWAY.

BRIDGE AT RICHMOND.

By this handsome structure, the Richmond, Windsor, and Staines Railway crosses the Thames at Richmond. It is composed of three arches, each 107 feet span, and two side arches, each 20 feet span. The three central arches are supported by six cast-iron girders; and the piers are 9 feet each, with a heading of 20 feet from Trinity high-water mark. The engineer of this as well as every other work on the line is Mr. Locke.

The road is in a very good state, chiefly consisting of a gravelly bottom, and well laid. The buildings at every station are built after the same Gothic design as those of Richmond. Approaching Datchet, two fine bridges of wood cross the river Colne, where, also, a fine view of Windsor Castle presents itself, about one mile from the Datchet Station, across the Park, and one mile and a half from the old town of Windsor. Taking the distance from Richmond to Datchet, fourteen miles, it would be difficult to name a more beautiful succession of scenery within such limits.

The completion of the Railway to Windsor is, we believe, now arranged. The Company, it is stated, have made a proposition to pay the £60,000 agreed to be paid for the privilege of carrying the continuation of the Richmond line across the Home Park, by instalments of £10,000 per annum for the next six years. This proposition has been accepted by the Government, and the work is to be immediately commenced, but with some deviation in the direction of the line from that originally intended. Instead of coming right across the level plain under the north terrace of Windsor Castle, to the terminus near the foot of the hundred steps, it is now said the line will make very little encroachment upon that fine portion of the Park; and that the idea of devoting the remainder of it to a place of public recreation for the public generally is given up.

Since the opening of this line of Railway from the Waterloo Station, Windsor has experienced some increase of visitors.

Nearly the whole of the State Rooms in the Castle have been, for some time, until lately, necessarily closed, in consequence of the extensive works connected with the heating of the interior of the Palace by means of hot air. These works have been completed, and the following are now open to the public:—The Queen's Audience Chamber, the Vandyke Room, the State Ante-room, the Grand Staircase, the Grand Vestibule, the Waterloo Chamber, the Grand Reception Room, St. George's Hall, the Guard Chamber, and the Queen's Presence Chamber. These apartments will, in future, be shown to the public in the order above given, on Mondays, Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Fridays. Since the new regulation came into operation, in consequence of the memorial of the inhabitants of Windsor to the Lord Chamberlain, every facility is afforded to visitors to obtain tickets of admission at Windsor, by simply applying to Mr. Roberts, at the Winchester Tower.

It may, however, be useful to recapitulate the circumstances and conditions above referred to. Some time since, a letter was received by the Mayor of Windsor, from Earl Spencer, the Lord Chamberlain, in answer to a memorial, signed by 200 of the inhabitants of New Windsor, praying for a relaxation of the regulations under which the public are admitted to view the State Apartments at the Castle. His Lordship very reasonably represented that an unlimited influx of strangers into the Castle would be quite incompatible with the personal comfort of the Sovereign; but stated that her Majesty had given directions that the apartments should be thrown open to persons presenting tickets on Mondays, in addition to the days on which the public had hitherto been admitted. Persons obtaining tickets from Mr. Roberts, of Windsor, will in future be admitted without any intermediate delay.

The Lord Chamberlain's tickets may be obtained in London, gratis, of Messrs. Paul and Dominic Colnaghi, print-sellers, 14, Pall-Mall East; Mr. Moon, printseller, 20, Threadneedle-street; Mr. Mitchell, bookseller, 33, Old Bond-street; and Messrs. Ackermann and Co., print-sellers, 96, Strand; of whom also guide-books may be obtained for one penny each. The tickets are available for one week from the day on which they are issued. They are not transferable; and it is contrary to her Majesty's command that payment for, or in reference to, them be made to any person whatever. The hours of admission to the State Apartments are—from the 1st of April to the 31st of October, between eleven and four; and from the 1st of November to the 31st of March, between eleven and three.

WINDSOR CASTLE.

This picturesque scene is one of our series of Illustrations of the Royal Palace. It is taken from the Thames, above the Brocas; showing the north-western portion of the Castle, with the majestic Round Tower breaking the architectural outline; and beneath it the entrance archway to the northern terrace, whilst

> Thames along the wanton valley strays,
> Thames, the most loved of all the ocean's sons
> By his old sire, to his embraces runs—
> Hasting to pay his tribute to the sea,
> Like mortal life to meet eternity.

WINDSOR CASTLE, FROM THE THAMES.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

CAMBRIDGE. Oct. 14.

THE PUBLIC ORATORSHIP.—At a congregation held this day, the nomination of two candidates for the Public Oratorship was fixed to take place on Wednesday, the 25th inst. The election of one of the two gentlemen then nominated will be proceeded with on the following day (Thursday), the 26th inst.

THE REGIUS PROFESSORSHIP OF HEBREW.—At the same congregation, the Rev. Dr. Mill was elected to the Regius Professorship of Hebrew, vacant by the resignation of the Rev. Dr. Lee.

NOTICE.—The Vice-Chancellor has given notice that there will be a meeting on Monday morning, the 30th inst., at 12 o'clock, at Sidney College Lodge, of the Syndicate appointed by Grace to consider the cases of those undergraduates who have degraded and are desirous of becoming candidates for honours. The Syndicate wish it to be understood that cases not presented to them at the above meeting will be precluded from consideration till the next regular meeting in October, 1849.

The Rev. C. A. Heurtley, late Fellow of Corpus Christi College, Oxford, has been appointed an Honorary Canon of the Cathedral Church, Worcester.

The Lord Chancellor has presented the Rev. James Taylor, late of Ballio College, Oxford, to the Rectory of St. Ann's, Sutton, Nottinghamshire; value £230 per annum.

The Rev. W. F. Hood, late of Exeter College, Oxford, has been presented to the perpetual curacy of Hemswell, Lincolnshire; value, £63 per annum.

PATENT SPRING-STOPPED DECANTER.

THIS newly-invented stopper has been patented by Messrs. Gass and Co., Regent-street. It consists of a spherical glass stopper, made to close upon the neck of the decanter by a spring, the stopper being ground to ensure air-tightness. The method by which the stopper is removed is the novelty. A vine sprig passes down from the lip of the decanter, and being clasped by the hand as in the act of pouring, the stopper rises, and replaces itself upon the pressure being removed. This must be of great service for the preservation of the delicate aroma of wines and the essential property of spirits. The decanter and its mountings are in elegant taste.

PATENT SPRING-STOPPED DECANTER.

OLD ST. PANCRAS CHURCH, RE-CONSTRUCTED.

IN our Journal of June 10 last we illustrated and described the very interesting remains of the ancient Church of St. Pancras, and announced the commencement of the re-edification, now completed.

The style adopted in the re-construction of this Church is the Anglo-Norman. The enlargement consists of an elongation of the structure westward, by the removal of the old tower; the chancel and easternmost part of the Church being left in their original form, and only such parts of the walls cut through as were required for the introduction of the windows.

The additions are, a new tower and staircase on the south side, and a new vestry on the north side of the Church, in the best positions which the very limited unoccupied space would permit.

In these alterations a very large portion of the ancient material has been rendered available. Out of the heavy masses of rough stone and rubble-work, of which the old tower and other parts of the structure were composed, sufficient rag-stone has been obtained for the entire casing of the exterior.

The stone, which has existed in the fabric for centuries, and evidently been re-used from time to time, in the successive alterations of former ages, re-worked, has been again applied to the restoration and enlargement of the present time; and, consequently, no new stone of the above-mentioned quality has been required.

For the ornamental details, the stone was imported from Caen, in Normandy.

During the progress of the alterations many interesting antiquities have presented themselves, as related in our former paper; among others, some Roman bricks, a small altar-stone, and the capitals, broken shafts, and bases of columns supposed to have belonged originally to the principal doorway, and in character evidently belonging to very early Norman times; an early English piscina, a sedilia of later date, and some niches, well executed in moulded red bricks, of the Tudor period.

Of the arrangement of the structure, as now restored, it may be observed that the principal feature of the west front is its deeply recessed and somewhat richly carved Norman doorway. On either side of the entrance is introduced a circular-headed window, agreeing in character with those on the north and south sides of the Church; and a wheel window above, the gable being pierced with small loopholes for ventilation, and surmounted with a stone cross.

The western addition to the Church being rather less in width than the main body of the structure, has on the south face a semi-octangular turret adjunct, containing the stairs to the galleries; on either side of the same is a semicircular-headed window, with string-courses and hood mouldings, and a continuous arched corbel table immediately below the roof.

The Tower occupies a still more advanced and prominent position, nearly in the centre of that portion of the fabric which constituted the Old Church.

Two small arched recesses, within a larger arch, enclose the clock face, looking south; and a similar arrangement, with circular windows, occupy corresponding positions, east and west.

The belfry openings, in the four faces of the tower, consist of double arched, deeply recessed, louvre openings, within single arches with enriched heads; and three tiers of receding columns in each opening, with carved capitals and stone louvres.

Immediately above the belfry, a carved and enriched cornice, supported upon a continuous arched corbel table, is flanked at the angles by carved pinnacles, the lower part or shaft being semi-attached, and supported upon massive corbels.

From the upper part of the cornice springs the stone roof-covering, or spire which is also ornamentally carved and plainly weathered in horizontal compartments, alternately. It is pierced on the four faces with circular hooded apertures and surmounted with the vane from the old tower.

The chancel, on the south side, has, at the east end, a triple-lighted window, with small circular lights above.

The north side of the Church generally corresponds, with reference to details, with those on the south side, but having less carving upon it, is somewhat plainer in character.

The roofs are slated throughout, with an ornamental ridge-covering upon them; the eastern gable terminating with a metal cross, the chancel gable with the old stone cross re-worked; and the staircase roof having a spike finial.

The interior has a central aisle or gangway throughout the entire length of the church, a cross aisle to the baptistry formed in the lower part of the tower, and another in the chancel from the south door to the vestry opposite.

The chancel work is entirely of Caen stone, consisting of columns supporting a semicircular recessed and enriched arch. In the lower part a small arcade is filled in with gilt tablets, containing the usual inscriptions in illuminated characters.

The windows immediately above are filled with stained glass, executed by Gibbs, in the best manner.

The main timbers of the chancel roof have scroll ribbons, with appropriate texts of Scripture upon them.

The old altar-stone, found during the progress of the works, and engraved in our Journal for June 10, has been embedded in a frame, and re-set slightly raised above the chancel flooring, under the communion table.

Limited funds would not allow of the introduction of a new roof for the Church; a similarity of arrangement, therefore, with the old roof has been continued in the new parts, with some slight additions.

The wheel window at the west end of the Church is filled in with stained glass; and on either side there are scroll ribbons upon the walls, with appropriate texts of Scripture upon them.

The old monuments have been carefully restored, and re-fixed as nearly as possible in their original positions; adding materially to the production of richness of effect in the chancel.

In the recent operations rendered necessary for the enlargement of this ancient structure, its preservation and restoration with the least possible amount of destruction appears to have been constantly in view.

The accommodation now provided in the Church is for 750 persons; originally, only 125.

The Church was opened, in an unfinished state, for Divine Service, on the 5th of July last, by the Rev. Thomas Dale, vicar of the parish.

The entire outlay in connexion with the enlargement and restoration of this Church, with its fittings and furnishings, is about £7600. It has been effected in accordance with the designs, and under the direction, of Mr. A. D. Gough, architect, of Lancaster-place; contracted for, and executed by, Mr. W. S. Dove, builder, of Milner-square, Islington.

As may be seen from our illustration, the general effect of this re-constructed Church is extremely picturesque; and the details are exceedingly characteristic, and skilfully introduced.

OLD ST. PANCRAS CHURCH RE-CONSTRUCTED.

THE PROGRESS OF A BILL.

BY W. BLANCHARD JERROLD.

ILLUSTRATED BY KENNY MEADOWS.

(Continued from page 238.)

CHAPTER VII.

THE ACCEPTOR BECOMES AN INMATE OF THE QUEEN'S BENCH.

AT Boulogne, Pursey found time hang very heavily. There was no lack of amusement in the place; and in the suburbs there were quiet, calm retreats, cradled in richest landscape—such as you may find at every turn in Kent Peaceful, luxuriantly wooded nooks, and gurgling "translucent" streams—as poets love to call clear water—gives to the Valley du Denacre the appearance of an English dell. It must be confessed that the chief adornment of Pursey's home has not been painted in the most flattering light hitherto: and the sagacious reader may picture Pursey at Boulogne revelling in the enjoyment of a temporary bachelorhood. Be it the province of the writer to set him right on this head, and in parenthesis to assure all bachelors and maidens, that a home must be truly and insufferably wretched ere the husband finds protracted happiness elsewhere. For the especial edification of women, then, I must declare my firm conviction, that Pursey (apart from the anxiety upon the matter which had compelled his temporary exile) felt acutely this separation from his strong-minded wife. As they were about to separate they had felt fully the extent of their dependance upon each other for their mutual happiness; and if separation from a beloved object have no other beneficial effect, it has at least that of measuring decently the intensity of one's devotion.

If I could persuade myself that the long recital would prove a delectable composition to the reader, I might indulge in a right sentimental and flowery description of the emotions mirrored in Pursey's face as he turned his serious gaze towards England—not England the mighty mistress of nations to him then—but England that held the wedded mistress of his heart. But I must forbear: the rules of my history, and the impatience of the reader, bid me take up the thread of my narrative

Ten days after Pursey's arrival at Boulogne, the gay debtor-protecting town received Macfum into its hospitable bosom. The advent of his friend was wholly unexpected by Pursey, and was not, therefore, the less welcome.

"You have come to set me free, I hope?" said Pursey.

"Alas! no, my dear fellow. I am on my way to Paris in search of Lord Condiment or Sir George—they are both there."

"I understood you to say that Lord Condiment was on a shooting excursion in the Highlands."

"So he was; but he embarked in Lord Carton's yacht at Dumfries, and endured a tedious voyage to Antwerp, whence he proceeded to Paris. I only heard this when I was half way to the Highlands. It's a confounded nuisance—isn't it?"

PROGRESS OF A BILL.—THE ACCEPTOR GOES TO PRISON.

"I can assure you, Macfum, that this delay will compromise me fearfully."

"By heavens! you don't say so! My dear Pursey, I cannot express to you how I have cursed myself for having brought you into this trouble. Did ever man suffer such a series of mishaps as I have had lately? It's enough to make a man do something desperate."

"We must make the best of matters, however, I suppose. Didn't you get the other bull cashed?"

"No. Hanged if there's faith enough in all the bill-discounters in London to book a little nigger boy for heaven. Have you heard from your wife?"

"I hear every day."

"That must be a source of great consolation to you, old fellow. Does she bear up against it pretty well? Of course, she feels your absence; but I mean, does she write in pretty good spirits?"

"Yes."

At this moment a letter was put into Pursey's hand: it was from his wife, and here to him the news of old Solomon's residence in his house, and the fellow's discourteous conduct to Mrs. Pursey. Macfum watched the change that passed over Pursey's features as the latter read the letter, and was prepared for his friend's anger The preparation was not in vain, inasmuch as Pursey burst into a violent passion, and called Macfum the accursed cause of his utter ruin.

"This is a pleasant result of my willingness to oblige you, sir."

"I can understand your anger, Pursey, and will not therefore hold you answerable for any disrespectful language you may have addressed to me in the heat of your passion. I am fully alive to the misery I have brought upon you, and am deeply, profoundly grieved that all my efforts to ward off the calamity have failed as yet. But let me call to your recollection the fact that it is not Pursey the part of a generous man to taunt an innocent friend (for I am innocent in intention) with the wilful ruin of your prospects. I repeat again, emphatically, what your generosity should not allow me to repeat; namely, that no effort of mine shall be wanting to restore to you, in a few weeks, any loss you may sustain now on my behalf. Letters to the 'Poste restante' will reach me in Paris. Farewell!"

And, without waiting for a reply, Macfum disappeared precipitately, leaving Pursey to indulge in no very bright hopes for the future.

Pursey at once resolved to return to England, at all hazards. At worst, he could but begin the world again. His furniture would realise the amount of the bill; and he might return to his old furnished lodgings a more wary, if not a wiser man. He could scarcely believe, even now, that he had been fascinated by an ingenious scoundrel, and had, as the saying goes, been done. He was still inclined to look upon the author of his ruin as an unfortunate gentleman whom he was bound to succour; and his generous soul shrunk exonerate from all blame in the matter. In this state of doubt he returned home, in the confident hope that as his goods (which were worth more than the sum distrained for) were in the possession of the sheriff, he, personally, was safe. Blissful delusion!

His wife was glad enough to see him once more at home; a happiness in which old Solomon by no means participated, particularly when he was informed by Pursey, that, if he did not behave himself while he was there, he would, in spite of his years, give him the soundest thrashing he had ever received. This hint was not thrown away upon the old man. It amused Solomon, however, to watch the confident air of security with which Pursey trod his parlour carpet. It was a delectable study to that man, versed in villainy, to note the unconcern with which the unsophisticated Pursey opened his door to receive the gentlemen who were to bear him to that exquisite retreat for "fast" men, called the Queen's Bench.

"You have my goods, which are worth more than the amount. What do you want—what claim, then, have you upon me?"

"You are mistaken, sir," replied the most genially dressed of the pair; "the appraiser says they ain't worth a farthin' more than seventy."

"The Jew! Why I paid one hundred and fifty pounds only last year for them!"

"Dare say, sir; but the law ain't answerable for the weaknesses of gents 'Cos one gent doesn't know nothing about furniture, his fellows ain't compelled to share his ignorance. You see, it's all right," added the fellow, producing the document that gave him power to consign Pursey to the tender mercies of the governor of the Queen's Bench

Hereupon Mrs Pursey burst into an uncontrollable flood of tears, and clung to her husband, vowing that she would not be separated from him.

"No more you needn't. You can get snug quarters there together: can't they, Jem?"

"Of course they can provided they've got the necessary needful," answered the second functionary.

"Now, mum, it's all nonsense crying in that manner; we'll take care on him, depend upon it. He shan't be run over, or lost in a crowd."

"Silence, fellow. Confine yourself to the strict fulfilment of your duty."

"Well, then, that is to see you safely lodged you know where. So come along."

Pursey drew his wife aside, whispered some words of comfort to her; then unfolded himself from the arms that bound him to her heaving bosom, and followed his captors

Having undergone the usual formalities, Pursey was at length lodged in the Queen's Bench Prison, with no very definite idea as to the probable length of his compulsory sojourn there. Shame, at the first blow with his lawyer, who assured him he should soon be set free, and written a letter to his employers containing a candid statement of his case, he began to look about him with some composure. He strolled into the yard, where he found a number of gentlemanlooking men playing with some dexterity. He noticed that the seediest man of the party was the best player; and he naturally imagined that this skilful individual owed his dexterity and shabbiness to a long residence in the prison This shabby person was a captain, of course. What man who wears a moustache and owns a debt is not? Well, the man was perhaps a scamp, a rogue, a heartless debauchee; but he was the life and soul of his fellow-prisoners, and deserves some consideration on this score. He had the most wonderful flow of humour; talked with indifference of his misfortunes, and, when once he was set free, exclaimed in a parting speech to his fellow-prisoners, "Never mind, my boys, we'll regard no more sees. I shall soon be among you again." This jovial captain, perceiving with his practised eye that Pursey was a new-comer, accosted him with, "Good day! Glad to meet you under such extremely favourable auspices. Do you intend to make a long stay?"

"I hope not."

"Complimentary, truly. Gentlemen," continued the captain, raising his voice that all persons in the ground might hear him; "Gentlemen, here is a visitor who declares that he has come on a flying visit, and that he hopes soon to free himself from us. He appears to be a jolly fellow, however, and we must honour him as a novice; for I feel convinced that he will remain to be worthy of the honour which the sheriff has this day conferred upon him; and hereupon that which must be doubly gratifying to him, since I feel assured it was unsolicited."

This speech was received by the company with considerable applause; and Pursey, half-bewildered, yet somewhat annoyed at the liberty that had been taken with him, bowed his acknowledgments. The place was so utterly strange to him, that he was fearful of committing some blunder that would make him ridiculous in the eyes of his fellow-prisoners; and, taking the captain's conduct to be the custom of the prison, he resolved to make the best of it.

The limits of this history do not permit me to give the reader a narrative of Pursey's sojourn in the Queen's Bench. Sufficient it is for the moral which the reader is expected to gather from this progress, that Pursey remained in confinement about four months; and that during that time he had leisure to ponder over the means by which he had brought himself there; and to declare that he hoped that irretrievable beggary might come to him and his if he ever signed his name again upon a bill stamp. While in the Bench he also learned that Macfum had passed the second bill, and that when he found him at Boulogne he was making his way to Paris with the money he had obtained on it. The discovery that the celebrated poet was from the callers of Mrs. Moss, completely dispelled any doubt that yet remained in the mind of Pursey; and when he next wrote to his solicitor, he had no hesitation in writing Mr. Julius Macfum down a scoundrel.

(To be concluded next week.)

THE CHOLERA.

THE disease having manifested itself so decidedly on board the Justitia, convict-ship, moored in the river off Woolwich, without having made its appearance either in the crew or the guard, it was decided that it was the safest course to proceed inquiry; and it has been found that the fatal malady has arisen entirely from the bad state of the ship, the whole of the men who have been attacked being those who slept on one side of the ship, and none of the prisoners either on the other side of the same deck or on the upper deck have been attacked. It has been discovered that the timbers on this side of the vessel are rotten, and the water-closets having leaked, these rotten timbers have become completely saturated with the foul matter, so as to form a very offensive cesspool. It is said that under the advice of Captain Fitzroy, acting superintendent of Woolwich Dockyard, the convicts on board the Justitia will be removed from the Arsenal to the Dockyard, and accommodated in temporary wooden hill another hulk can be prepared for them. It is right also to state, that, in addition to the above causes two sewers discharge themselves into the Thames at the head and stern of the Justitia, and it is proposed to carry those sewers as far as low-water mark.

Some few cases have been reported in town during the week.

The Earl of Clarendon is expected to arrive at his seat, the Grove, Hertfordshire, this day (Saturday), for the first time since he resided there in various capacities. Many years have elapsed since the noble Earl visited his former home. The Rev. Henry Harding, A.M., late Fellow of King's College, Cambridge, and Prebendary of Lichfield, is appointed to the vicarage of Stratford-upon-Avon; patroness, the Countess Amherst.

DEATH OF PROFESSOR TENNANT.—It is with extreme regret that we have to announce the death of Mr. William Tennant, Professor of Oriental Languages in the College of St. Mary, St. Andrews, but more extensively and enduringly known as the author of "Anster Fair," and various other works in general literature. The Professor died at his house, Devon-grove, Dollar, on Sunday last. Scotsman

ROYAL COLOSSEUM.—The colossal panorama of Paris by night continues as attractive as ever; being exhibited by artificial light, the picture is seen with equal effect in November as in the brightest days of summer.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

For God's sake treat me like a man, and not as a milch cow. –Sir Walter Scott to John Buchanan

"Nil magnum absque labore" is a proposition older than the Pyramids. Magna Charta was not had for the asking, neither were more modern rights, or claims, or boons, or whatever the phrase may be in parliamentary language, denied, the peasantry with which a principle is maintained, is the surest test of its worth.

The false and foolish fire that's whisk'd about
By popular air, log-dances, and long swords.

It is in this conviction we practise what we preach, notwithstanding the dogmas, from constant urging, like the Archbishop of Grenada's homilies, "smell of apoplexy"

This is the last week but one of the Turf Session. When next its representatives meet for the dispatch of business, they will deserve well of their constituences if the leisure of the recess shall have been applied to a practical revision of the existing laws and usages of horse-racing. When the Rules and Orders of the Jockey Club were framed, probably they were sufficient for their purpose; but did they promote all the designs of the abstract sport in its present condition (which they do not), they would fulfil only the half of their present duties. Those upon whom conventional observance has bestowed authority in racing matters, now deal with betting as an integral part of the system. The money brought into the ring by persons who are neither breeders nor runners of horses is regarded (no matter how fabulous the theory) as parcel of the racing endowment. Does the code of turf laws equally serve the racing and the betting man? It does not. If, as the sequel will assume, modern changes in the principle of racing call for modifications in its humblinus; if the position of the speculator—the recognised contributor to its resources—be shown to be unjust; then surely the time has come when those having control of these things will reform them altogether

The practical effect of racing should be to deduce from methodical data the properties of animals engaged in it. Now, previous to the year 1833 foals took their ages from the 1st of May; ages now are calculated from New Year's Day. We will suppose, then, for the sake of illustration, that a colt engaged in a Produce Stakes for Two-Year-Olds, at the early Spring meetings, is foaled about Easter—by no means uncommon. His Two Year-Old engagement falls in the first week of April—that is to say, a year sooner than it would have done according to the old calculation of age in 1832. He is, therefore, by the "old style," a yearling, and his carries 8st. 7lb. Occasionally, the Houghton Meeting at Newmarket occurs in November. The weight for three-year-old colts is 9st. 7lb. A three-year-old foaled in January, and running in November, wants but a few weeks of being four years old. Thus the same weights are assigned to thorough-bred racing stock, according to the age they actually have attained, and two years of age as at first As regards the sporting department of the turf, the admits of amendment. And now fares it with the mere speculator?

A mere arc two sexes for his transactions—winning and losing. He can only win by the animal he backs passing the chair first, bringing home its weight, and not having crossed the track of another in the race—contingencies over which his influence can exercise no control. He can only lose because the animal he has backed was started to lose, with a view to being lightly weighted for some "crack" handicap—a piece of policy not generally made public. He may lose because having backed the best horse in a race for which the proprietor also possesses the worst, and preferred to win with the latter. He may lose because, having taken £600 to £100 that the favourite would not win, and, being required by the owner to bet him £1200 to £100 to the same effect, he declines, and the favourite is "scratched."

These are a few "modern instances" of the status of racing policy in '48. The Jockey Club as an organ of the turf should look to the blemishes of its sporting system. As a society of gentlemen, it will not shut its eyes to the doings of last week; as a body of human beings, with bowels of compassion, it will not shut its ears to the complaint even of the leg, when his prayer is—" Treat me like a man, and not as a milch cow."

TATTERSALL'S

MONDAY.—The Cambridgeshire betting was tolerably brisk; but, beyond making Lanesborough second favourite, and sending Geraldine to the right about, it averaged pretty nearly the prices last quoted from Newmarket. An immense field is expected.

11 to 2 agst Derby (t)	25 to 1 agst Lanercost	30 to 1 agst Basset Buck (t)
7 to 1 — Lanesboro' each (t)	25 to 1 — Consolin	33 to 1 — Bullet
10 to 1 — Charcoal (t)	25 to 1 — Miss Sarah	33 to 1 — Dutiful (t)
10 to 1 — The Cur	26 to 1 — Hollyrood	33 to 1 — Hegg (t)
20 to 1 — Geraldine	30 to 1 — Coelli...gwood	66 to 1 — Gallur ireen
20 to 1 — Wanda (t)

11 to 2 agst The Flying Dutchman | 40 to 1 agst Escalade
8 to 1 — Honeycomb | 40 to 1 — Tiresome
—200 to 200 agst Scott's list (t)

THURSDAY.—The grand movement this afternoon was the advance of Backbiter, from the extreme outsize to the premiership, an extraordinary rise, seeing that he did not start. Next to this, the decline of the favourites on The Cur must be noted—he must have had a very "bad night," for no one would back him at any price. An improvement in Fern was the only alteration worth speaking of.

4 to 1 agst Col. Peel's list	10 to 1 agst Backbiter	25 to 1 agst Miss Sarah
6 to 1 — Backbiter (t)	20 to 1 — Fern	25 to 1 — Basset Buck (t)
7 to 1 — Pavia (t)	20 to 1 — Geraldine	30 to 1 — The Cur
8 to 1 — Lanesboro' (t)	20 to 1 — Wanda (t)	50 to 1 — The Moor (t)
	60 to 1 — Dutiful (t)
	CAMBRIDGESHIRE
5 to 1 agst Sibatria colt		6 to 1 agst Garrick

THE STATE PAPER AND PUBLIC RECORD OFFICES.—It is reported that the selection of Mr. Thomas Duncombe, Chairman of the Commons Committee, for consolidating the State Paper-Office with the Public Record Office, has been noted upon by the Cooking department—and that it has been resolved that the union shall take place immediately upon the retirement of the Keeper of the Records and Papers, Mr. H. Rebhouse. This arrangement, as well as the transfer of Admiralty, Treasury, and other papers—in fact become a really National Record Office. But these movements make the necessity for providing a safe building all the more urgent.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

Although money continues abundant, it is pretty generally believed that within a short period it will become gradually "tightish." The tendency at present is towards an export of the precious metals, which will probably be augmented by the importation of corn required in consequence of the deficiency arising from the indifferent harvest and potato disease, while the trade will be increased by the quickening of demand for our manufactures, must leave the balance against us to be paid in gold. Notwithstanding, however, the present easy state, Consols have been ..., ranging from 84¾ to 85 during the week. The settlement of the transfers ... in the speculators for the "rise;" but the continuation being only 14-16 per cent, proved the readiness with which affairs were arranged. On Wednesday Consols closed 84⅞ ⅞ for Money, but a firmer market on Thursday gave the closing quotations as 85¼ to 85. Intelligence from Austria and Germany generally is awaited with much anxiety, from the dread of Russian interference, should affairs not speedily assume a more pacific shape. France, for the moment, is disregarded as the absorbing interest fix in the Austrian insurrection; and the settlement of the Presidential election is viewed with alarm. Exchequer Bills continue firm, from the demand created by the indisposition to permanently meet at present. Bank Stock is rather lower, and Reduced is dowry. The market as the close of the week was firmer, and the quotations:—Bank Stock, 183; Reduced, 83⅞; Consols, 85¼ ⅜ ¼ ½ ⅝ ¾ ⅞ per Cent. Annuities, 84¼; Long Annuities, to expire Jan ary 1860, 8 7-16; Ditto, October 10, 1859, 8 3-16; Ditto, 30 Years, January 5, 1860, 8 9-16; India Bonds, £1000, 36 p.; Ditto, under £1000, 36 p.; Consols for Account, 85; Exchequer Bills, £1.000, March, 38 p.; Ditto, £1000, June, 38 p.; Ditto, £500, March, 38 p.; Ditto, Small, March, 38 p.; Ditto, Small, June, 38 p.

With the exception of Mexican and Dutch Stock, there have been no fluctuations worthy of record in the foreign Market. Mexican has been well supported, from a belief that the agents here will be directed to pay a dividend, the guarance required for that purpose being, it is said, now on its way to this country. We give the on dit, not professing any belief in the present case, or Mexican faith or capability to pay generally. Dutch Two-and-a-Half per Cents advanced 1 per cent. on Tuesday, and have since maintained the rise. The closing quotations are, for Brazilian Bonds, 71; Ditto, New, 1829 and 1839, 70; Equador Bonds, 3; Grenada Bonds, Deferred, 2; Mexican Five per Cents, 1846, 19; Portuguese Four per Cents, 23, Spanish Three per Cents, 21¼; Dutch Two-and-a-Half per Cents, 44⅜; Ditto, Four per Cents, 89¾.

Shares generally have not improved, although in a few instances prices have somewhat advanced. Sales, however, continue to preponderate. Prices, at the close of the market, were for—Caledonian, 17½; Ditto, New, £10 Preference, ; Chester and Holyhead, 10½; Eastern Counties, 3⅝; Half per Cent. Deposit, ; Western Counties, 12½; Ditto, New Guaranteed 6 per Cent., 8; Ditto, Five per Cents., 99; Eastern Union, Scrip (Six per Cent.), 5¾; East Lincolnshire, 20, Edinburgh and Glasgow, 37½; Ditto, Half Shares, 18¾; Great Northern, 84, 16; Ditto, Half, A, deferred, 3; Ditto, Half, B, Six per Cent. guaranteed, ; Great Western, 74⅞; Ditto, Half Shares, 4⅜; Ditto, Quarter Shares, 2; Lancashire and Yorkshire, 32½; Ditto, Quarter Shares, 8; Leeds and Thirsk, 14; London and Blackwall, 4¼; London, Brighton, and South Coast, 59½; Ditto, New £50, Guarantees, 6 per Cent., 4; London and North-Western, 93⅛; London and South-Western, 39½; Manchester, 94⅝, 5; Midland, 72¾; Ditto, Consolidated Pref., £50 Shares, 8¾; Norfolk, 49, North British, 18⅞; Ditto, Halves, 6¾; Ditto, Quarters, ; Ditto, Thirds, 2¾; North Staffordshire, ; Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton, 22½; Reading, Guildford, and Reigate, 8½; Scottish Central, 23, Scottish Union, 3; South Eastern, 21; Ditto, No. 3, 19; Ditto, No. 4, Tvlvale, 6; West Valley, 9 per Cent. Guaranteed, 16½; Windsor, Staines, and Swaines, 9½; York, Newcastle, and Berwick, 22½; Ditto, Original New and Berwick, 22½; Ditto, Great North-Eastern Preference, 4½; York and North Midland, 44; Ditto, Preference, 6; Ditto, East and West Riding Extension, 2; Orleans and Bordeaux, 14 x. d.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE, [illegible]. The arrivals of wheat from our own growth coastwise have been moderate, but the foreign arrivals into London have been very large, and both red and white commanded a steady, though not an active sale, at the prices of this day week. The supply of barley has been very large, and the sale heavy, at a decline of 1s per quarter. The supplies of oats have been moderate, and the trade was steady, at the prices of this day week. The arrivals of beans and peas have been moderate, and the trade was steady, at the prices of this day week. The arrivals of flour have been moderate, and the trade was steady, at the prices of this day week.

MARK LANE, Oct. 19.—The supplies of wheat, both English and foreign, have been moderate since this day week, and the trade has ruled steady, at the prices of that day. The supplies of barley, oats, beans, and peas have been moderate, and the trade was steady, at the prices of this day week. The arrivals of flour have been moderate, and the trade was steady, at the prices of this day week.

The Seed Market. Linseed and rape cakes, as well as winter tares, command a steady sale, at full prices.

Provisions. Hamburgh wheat, 40s to —; white, —s to —s; barley, —s to —s; oats, —s to —s; beans, —s to —s; peas, —s to —s per quarter. Flour, American, 27s to 31s per barrel; Baltic, 27s to 31s per barrel

ADVERTISEMENTS.

THEATRE ROYAL, DRURY LANE.
M. JULLIEN'S ANNUAL SERIES OF CONCERTS
FOR ONE MONTH ONLY

M. JULLIEN begs leave most respectfully to announce that his ANNUAL SERIES of CONCERTS will commence on FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 3rd, 1848, and continue for One Month.

During the recess, M. JULLIEN has endeavoured to perfect those [illegible] which have been honoured with so much approbation last year, and trusts that the [illegible] number of Private Boxes have been made, the whole redriled, and the [illegible] been considerably augmented, decorated, and carpeted. The lighting and ventilating, generally so much neglected in all the public buildings [illegible] tion of the Theatre cleansed and painted. In short, M. JULLIEN trusts [illegible] in his last series of Concerts will render them Entertainments still more worthy of that patronage hitherto so liberally bestowed upon them.

The Orchestra will be conducted by M. JULLIEN, and, as usual, include the first-rate talent. In addition to Signor Sivori and his favourite Solo Performance, who are acknowledged to be unrivalled [illegible] the English public will have the honour of making their first appearance [illegible]

In order to give the greatest relief to the performance of "GOD SAVE THE QUEEN" on the opening night, M. Jullien has expressly arranged that National Anthem for

FIVE DISTINCT BANDS,
CHORUS, and ORGAN; and has, therefore, given permission of the Commanding Officers of the regiments of the Royal Guards, obtained permission to use the assistance of their splendid Military Bands, viz.—
The Band of her Majesty's 1st Life Guards, under the direction of Mr. Waddell.
The Band of her Majesty's Royal Horse Guards Blue, under the direction of Mr. Tinton.
The Band of her Majesty's Grenadier Guards, under the direction of Mr. Schott, and
The Band of her Majesty's Coldstream Guards, under the direction of Mr. Godfrey.

THE NATIONAL ANTHEM
will, therefore, on this occasion, be executed by the extraordinary combination of The Full Concert Orchestra,
The above Four Military Bands,
With Chorus and Organ

On the First Night will be performed a Grand Selection from Meyerbeer's Opera, LES HUGUENOTS (now so popular in this country), arranged expressly by M. Jullien, and including the Overture—the Chorus of Luther—the Romance of Raoul, Pif, Paff—the Bolero—the Grand Trio—To-morrow—the Benediction of the Poignards—the Grand Finale, embracing all the chief beauties of the composer's [illegible]

The programmes during the present season will embrace the classical [illegible] selections of the great masters of music, the most worthy [illegible] Beethoven, Gluck, Mozart, Weber, Handel, Haydn, &c., will be presented, in addition to these, M. Jullien will endeavour to produce a variety of novelties of a lighter character, amongst which, as a companion to the Swiss and English Quadrilles, he has composed

A NEW FRENCH QUADRILLE, founded on the National Airs of French Soldiers,
MONSIEUR PUNCH LA PATRIE;
DES LAMPIONS! DES LAMPIONS!
LE CHANT DU DEPART;
LA MARCH DE TIR « ARDE NATIONALE,
THE MARCH OF THE GARDE MOBILE,
AND
THE MARSEILLAISE.

In order to give as much variety as possible to the Concerts, M. Jullien has secured the services of the distinguished Contralto Singer, for whom several New Songs have been composed.

MISS MIRAN,

PRICES OF ADMISSION

Dress Circle	.. ..	..	£0 2 6
Promenade and Boxes	.. ..	..	0 1 6
Private Boxes	.. ..	..	0 0 6
Pit	.. ..	..	0 1 0
Ditto	.. ..	..	1 1 6

The Doors will be opened at Half-past Seven, and the Concerts commence at Eight precisely, and terminate before Eleven

Full particulars will be duly announced.

M. Jullien begs respectfully to state that the Theatre being [illegible] by Messrs. Braham, the Concerts cannot by contract commence [illegible]

HALL of ROME, Great Windmill-street, Haymarket.—Enthusiastic reception of the 3rd Cosmorama, from the painting of — Etty, Esq., R.A., and the "Tableaux Actuins" never before attempted in this country, with moonlight effect, the whole under the direction of a celebrated foreign Anachronist. Mr. W. W. Waddell, will be repeated every morning and evening until further notice. Also the much-admired tableau of "Venus rising from the Sea." Morning Performances at Three. Evenings at Eight. Stalls, 3s.; Reserved Seats, 2s.; Promenade, 1s

PIANOFORTES, the best of every description, New and Second-hand, for Sale or Hire, at 20, REGENT-STREET, and 13, Pall-mall, Regent-street.

PIANOFORTES.—The cheapest house in London to purchase good instruments is at H. TOLKIEN'S, 6, King William-street, London-bridge. H. T. a splendid cottage Pianoforte, with 6½ Octaves, Metallic Plate, C G Pall, &c., only 26 guineas. An immense stock always on show

TOLKIEN'S, 33, King William-street, London-bridge

THE SAFETY CHAIN BROOCH (patronised by the Queen) is manufactured into a variety of new and elegant designs in BLACK as well as Gold and Silver. They may be sent by post to any part of the kingdom, and ordered DIRECT FROM THE INVENTOR, HENRY HOLLAND, 22, Pall-mall. Also Ornaments of every description made to order in Invernshire Silver

PATRONISED by MDLLE. JENNY LIND, and several ladies of distinction PARIAN BROOCHES. These elegant articles of dress, manufactured in Circles of Crosses, Ovals, and Groups of Flowers, can be obtained direct from Mrs. MARY BRIDGMAN, Berlaston, staffordshire, and through any part of the United Kingdom, on the receipt of 1s. in postage stamps

JONES'S £4 4s. SILVER LEVER WATCHES, at the Manufactory, 338, Strand opposite Somerset House. The complete every modern improvement, and are warranted not to vary more than half a minute per week. The great reduction of price at once sets aside all rivalry, either of the Swiss manufacturers, or any other house. On receipt of a Post-office Order, payable to JAMES JONES, for £4 4s., one will be sent Free. Read Jones's sketch of Watchwork, sent Free for a Twopenny Stamp

WATCHES and their MANAGEMENT.—T. COX SAVORY and Co have published a PAMPHLET, describing the construction of the various watches in use at the present time, and explaining the advantages of each, with lists of prices. It is intended to give that information which should be obtained previous to the purchase of an article, the principal characteristics of which should be accurately known, and also containing remarks on the proper management of watches. It may be had gratis on application personally, or by post.

T. COX SAVORY and Co., 47, Cornhill, London, seven doors from Gracechurch-street.

SILVER PLATE, New and Second-hand.—T. COX SAVORY and Co. have a large stock of Plate with estimates, to be had gratis, or will be sent free, if applied for by a paid letter. The articles are the property of the Firm, consisting of new and second-hand Silver Spoons and Forks, new and second hand Tea and Coffee Services, Waiters, Silver-edged Plated Goods, the new plated white metal Spoons and Forks, Watches, Clocks, Ladies' Gold Chains and Jewellery.

T. COX SAVORY and Co., 47, Cornhill (seven doors from Gracechurch-street), London.

SILVER-PLATED DISH COVERS, and CORNER DISHES.—A. B. SAVORY and SONS, 14, Cornhill, London, respectfully call the Nobility, Hotels, Taverns, and Clubs to their Manufactory of Silver-plated Dish Covers, Corner Dishes, Meat Screens, Urns, Tea Trays, Dressing Cases, Candlesticks, Table Forks, Spoons, &c. Their Illustrated Catalogue, with prices annexed, forwarded to any part of the kingdom postage free.

SILVER TEA SERVICES, of New Patterns, A. B. SAVORY and SONS, Working Silversmiths, 14, Cornhill, opposite the Bank, have recently finished several new and elegant patterns of TEA and COFFEE SERVICES of novel and elegant design, and of the highest finish. The following have been generally admired:

The Portland Pattern, tastefully engraved:	The Louis Quatorze Pattern, richly engraved:
Strong Silver Tea-pot .. £12 15 0	Strong Silver Tea pot .. £15 10 0
Ditto Sugar Basin, gilt 7 10	Ditto Sugar Basin, gilt 9 0
Ditto Cream Ewer, gilt 5 5 0	Ditto Cream Ewer, gilt 6 18 0
Ditto Coffee-pot .. 14 15 0	Ditto Coffee-pot .. 17 17 0
£49 0 0

A large stock is offered for selection in the Show-Rooms, including every variety of pattern, from £34 upwards

SARL'S ARGENTINE SILVER PLATE.—SARL and SONS, 18, Cornhill, opposite the Royal Exchange, manufacture and upholds STOCK of SPOONS and FORKS of every variety of pattern. The late extensive demand for this article has long rendered a constant supply impossible, S. and Sons take the opportunity of informing their friends and the public that there is an opportunity of immediately executed. All the articles usually made in solid silver are now manufactured by best workmen in their establishment. Pamphlets of prices and patterns gratis.

A HANDSOME PRESENT.—A GOLD WATCH and FINE GOLD CHAIN, fitted complete in a morocco case, for £5 10s, very suitable for a present. The description of the watch is as follows: Double-backed gold case, gold dial, horizontal movement, four holes jewelled, substantial jewel to go while being wound, and all recent improvements, a written warranty given, and a twelvemonth's trial allowed; the chain is of the best quality. Manufactured by WEST and SONS, Watch Manufacturers, 16, Cornhill, opposite the New Royal Exchange.—N.B. These elegant presents can be forwarded to any part of the United Kingdom with perfect safety, upon the receipt of an order for the amount.

PUBLICATIONS, &c.

NEW WORK BY MR. ANGUS B. REACH
On the 1st of November will be published, Part I., price 1s., completed in Six Monthly Parts, of

CLEMENT LORIMER; or, The Book and the Iron Chest. A Romance of Times Past and Present. By ANGUS B. REACH. Illustrated by GEORGE CRUIKSHANK. Also, Part the First, Price 6d., and sold by all Booksellers

RE-ISSUE of the ILLUSTRATED EDITION of MATTHEW HENRY'S COMMENTARY, in Shilling Parts (1 and 2 are now Ready. Published Fortnightly. To be completed in Twenty-six Parts, Demy 8vo. Handsomely Illustrated by Steele, and Supplementary [illegible] are all Booksellers

NEW SONG.—"DEAREST, THEN TELL A LOVE YOU MORE," price 3s. (post postage free.) This is an answer to "Why, ah, why have we been," is now, for the first time, issued in Songs of the season. The melody and words of the present Ballad are by GEORGE LINLEY, and his name as the former, and will no doubt obtain a similar share of popularity.

London: DUFF and HODGSON, 65, Oxford-street.

MUSIC.—ITALIAN OPERAS in the PIANISTA.—Les Huguenots; Robert le Diable; Norma; Sonnambula; Il Barbiere; Lucia di Lammermoor; Il Giuramento; Lucrezia Borgia; Il Barbiere; Crown Diamonds; Fra Diavolo; and 20 others in Two music size, 3s. each, or, post-paid, 30 stamps.—CRAMER, BEALE, and CO., 201, Regent-street.

TWELVE NEW SONGS, Words and Music, for 1s. by post, is. 2d. Books 1, 2, and 3 of Original English and Scotch Songs. Book 3 contains the Prison Song of the Temperance Society of Edinburgh. Published and Sold by Purkiss Richardson, 23, Poultry, E. Hime, 163, Piccadilly. G. Bradford, 49, Princes-street, Edinburgh; and 4 McKenzie, 31, Glassford-street, Glasgow.

ALL the AUTUMN and WINTER FASHIONS, as issued from the Court of Fashion, the WORLD OF FASHION, on the 31st of October. Ladies may depend on sending a requisite assemblage of novel Fashions for the Season, Bonnets, former effects, and easiest as equalled by any other publication. It is the only authority for Ladies' Fashions. 3 Plates, 1s. Sold by all Booksellers received by all Booksellers Price only One Shilling

STARTLING NOVELTIES in the LADIES' GAZETTE OF FASHION for NOVEMBER, price 1s.—The 1st correct WINTER FASHIONS Double the number given in any other work. A superb coloured Fashion Plate (more than 196 inches), and other large Plates; 89 Figures, 150 Patterns, the Royal White Dresses, 20 Cloaks, 16 Children's Dresses, 30 Hats, 16 Caps, 6 Dressing Gowns, &c. A fine equestrian Picture of the royal Family, on Black Prince. Inscription &c. Sent postfree for 14 extra

G. REDGE, Holywell-street, Strand, and all Booksellers

MRS. TROLLOPE'S NEW NOVEL
Immediately, in 3 vols. post 8vo.
THE YOUNG COUNTESS.
BY MRS TROLLOPE
Author of "Widdington" "The Barnabys," &c.
Also, just published,
MILDRED VERNON; a Tale of Parisian Life in the Last Days of the Monarchy.
BY HAMILTON MURRAY 3 vols
"An uncommonly clever book."—SPECTATOR
"This brilliant work is a sort of new and more refined 'Mysteries of Paris.'"—MORNING HERALD
HENRY COLBURN, Publisher, 13, Great Marlborough

Now ready for delivery, uniform with Tuckie's Imperial Histories of England, Scotland and America, Part I., price 1s. 6d.
THE HISTORY of IRELAND, from the earliest period of the Irish Annals to the Rebellion of 1848. By LEONARD MACNALLY, Esq., B.A., &c. &c. Corresponding Member of the National Institute of France,
Author of "The Bivouac," "The Biographia Britannica Literaria," "Essays Historical and Critical," &c.
Illustrated by Numerous Engravings, chiefly from Irish Antiquities, and other sources.
Part I. will contain [illegible] engraving, chiefly from original drawings by [illegible], President of the New Wellington Institute, Regent and Argyle-streets, Port Louis, price 1s. 6d.
London: JOHN TALLIS, 100, St. John-street, and all Booksellers.

Just published, price 6s. with 60 Illustrations, 10s. 6d. coloured,
GERMAN IN ONE VOLUME. By FALCK-LEBAHN.
An investigation of the book will satisfy any one that its title is not a misnomer.
It is especially adapted for those who desire to educate themselves.
"We consider this Volume to be without any compeer."—Sun.
"It comprises all that is necessary for a thorough knowledge and rapid progress in the study."—Morning Chronicle.
WHITTAKER and Co. Ave Maria-lane, and at the Author's Classe-Rooms 23, Newman-street, Oxford-street.

NO MORE MEDICINE for INDIGESTION: Novocomus, Low Spirits Drowsiness, Torpidity of the Liver and Intestines, &c., Published by Dr. BARRY. Price 8d., or 8s. (in stamps), free per post, the fifth edition of DU BARRY on INDIGESTION: a Popular Treatise, with numerous cases practically illustrating the Restoration of Health to the most delicate, or shattered constitution, without Medicine, or artificial means of any kind, and without Expense.—Dr. Barry and Co., 7a, New Bond-street, London

A CIRCULATING LIBRARY for SALE, consisting of 300 VOLUMES of POPULAR MODERN WORKS in History, Biography, Voyages, Travels, and Romance. These works are newly bound, and fit for immediate circulation. The purchaser will receive 100 printed descriptive Catalogs, and ready for distribution, with the name and address on. Also a Circulating Library, in a convenient locality, to be let on the above terms. Catalogues sent to order, enclosing an addressed envelope. Apply, and consulting of a Library, intended for those unacquainted with the business. Catalogues sent to order, enclosing an addressed envelope. Apply to Mr. BULL, Librarian, Holles-street, Cavendish-square.

"OH! How very Comfortable!" exclaim all who sit in the NEW MEDICAL EASY CHAIR; quite an essential to invalids. Prices, cushioned complete, Eguinea Shillings to Forty, according to size or quality. JOHN INGRAM and SONS, manufacturing upholsterers, 20, City-road, Finsbury.

GELATINE.—The purest quality of this article to be obtained in London is the TRANSPARENT BRITISH GELATINE. In appearance it closely resembles the finest isinglass, and is quite equal to it in strength and purity, at one third the price. Inspected, R. G. BLUNT and Co., 9, East street, Blackfriars.

DEANE'S MONUMENT RAZORS have established their reputation for a keen and durable edge during nearly 50 years. DEANE'S LONDON-BRIDGE RAZOR STROP, a necessary and valuable appendage. Also, Penknives in great [illegible] and is still an universal favourite. DEANES, Cutlers, at King William-street, London-bridge. Established on Old London-bridge.

HEAL and SONS have made a considerable REDUCTION in the lower qualities of BED FEATHERS, and are now selling them at the following prices, warranted quite sweet and free from dust, being purified by steam, with patent machinery

Best grey goose	per lb	Best grey goose	2s 9d per lb
Ditto	1s 2d	White Goose	2s 6d
Foreign Grey Geese	1s	Best Dantzic ditto	2s 6d

A list of prices of every description of Bedding sent free by post, on application to Heal and Sons' Factory, 196 (opposite the Chapel), Tottenham-court-road.

THE LANTUM FLUTINA, comprising the tones of the Serpolcon and Guitar sold only at the ACCORDION and MUSICAL REPOSITORY, 20, Leicester-square. These melodious instruments, as also Accordions, concert pitch, with the extra improvement, together with Accordeons with a [illegible] and piano and forte Musical-Boxes, may be seen in wonderful variety at the above warehouse, which being the only one entirely devoted to the sale of these instruments, gives purchasers the advantage of selecting from a stock that may be London, and at very reduced prices.—An assortment of second-hand instruments always on sale.

NEWSPAPERS.—The Times, Herald, Chronicle and Post, forwarded by the Morning Mails charge per Quarter .. .. £ s. d.
Ditto ditto—per Quarter 1 1 0
Ditto ditto—the Half-Year 2 2 0
The day after publication—per Quarter 0 15 0
Ditto ditto—the Half-Year 1 10 0
The Daily News, or The Express—per Quarter 0 15 0
The Daily News, by evening mails—per Quarter 0 18 0
The Standard and Sun—per Quarter 0 15 0
All the London Last and Weekly Newspapers and Sixteen forwarded in early time, newspapers in all parts of Kingdom per [illegible] with the greatest regularity. Particulars by [illegible] be had on application, by letter, [illegible]

FINE HEAD OF HAIR.
ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL.—[illegible] and [illegible] in hair in its [illegible] and [illegible] it from scurf and [illegible] continues its possession of healthy [illegible] and [illegible] the latest period of life. [illegible] recommended, as forming the basis of a beautiful [illegible] during the use of the fine comb [illegible] obtained the ornamental appearance of her hair [illegible] of its [illegible] Court of the civilized world. Price 3s. 6d. and 7s. [illegible] Bottles (equal to four small), 10s. 6d.; and double that size.

On the wrapper of each bottle of the GENUINE Article are these words, in two lines, "ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL." Sold by them at 20 Hatton-garden, London; and by all Chemists and Perfumers.

PROFESSOR HAMON'S ORTHOPEDIC ESTABLISHMENT, for the Treatment and Cure of Spinal Curvature, and all the Contraction of the Elbow and Knee Joints.
N.B. The hour of attendance to [illegible] Mon., Thurs., Fri., & the Morning.

THE LIVERPOOL AND LONDON FIRE AND LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY.
No. 5, Wood-street, Liverpool.
3, Charlotte [illegible] Manchester; and 26, Regent-street, Waterloo-place, London.
CAPITAL £1,000,000. SURPLUS, £ 60,000
Liability of the Proprietors Unlimited.
Fire Insurances effected at Home and Abroad
Life Insurances with and without Bonuses
Full Prospectuses may be had on application
SWINTON BOULT, Secretary to the Company
BENJ. HENDERSON, Resident Secretary in London

DANCING TAUGHT in the most Fashionable style at WILLIS'S ROOMS, 41, Duke-street, Grosvenor-square, by Mr GEORGE BARNETT (late assistant to Mr. Wyndham). Lessons in Ladies' Classes, each from one to 3s 6d; private lessons [illegible] Guineas. Classes on Monday and Friday. A Class on Wednesday and Saturday Terms may be known at Home

PATENT ITALIAN PAPIER SHADES.—New Designs for the Season. This elegant and economical [illegible] has now been introduced for the illumination of all the Lounge Gas Lamps and Chandeliers, its extraordinary reflective power exceeding that of any [illegible] former. They are known by the name of Chinese Lanterns, and can be expanded to any size or description of shade required, from a variety of ornamental designs. Drawings sent. To be had, from 1s to 5s each, of a large [illegible] dealers and [illegible] in the Trade, at the Manufactory, BROOK, SUGARY, and CO., 119, Bunhill-row.

BERLIN WOOLS, HABERDASHERY, Assortments made up to any amount, and sent carriage paid to all parts of England and Ireland. Information given to parties commencing in either of the above trades.—DRESSER ROGERS, Manufacturer of every description of Berlin Wools and Crochet Goods to Haberdashers and Berlin Warehousemen, 161, Borough, London

CHEAP FRENCH MERINOS, in all colours. The quality [illegible] sold at 2s 9d per yard for 2s 6½d, the finest [illegible] at 4s 6d per yard, for 4s 11½d; fine Scotch [illegible] 3s 6d, for 3s 11d per yard, Coburg cloths, [illegible] 2s 6d, usually sold at 3s 6d, Velvet-finished [illegible] 2s 6d, usually sold at 3s 6d. WALKER and HALDWICK, 66 and 67, Oxford-street, four doors east of the Princes Theatre

RICH VELVET DRESSES for a less sum than is usually paid for a very silk.—Beautiful garnet velvets, 3s. 6d. per yard, cannot value to 5s; rich Solferino Velvets, 3s. 6d. per yard, cannot value to 5s; rich Solferino Velvets, 3s. 6d. per yard, for which is usually paid 12s 6d; superb ombre velvets, 9s 9d per yard, and all the new shades which have been in demand. WALKER and HALDWICK, 66 and 67, Oxford-street, four doors east of the Princes Theatre

CHEAP MANTLES, made of the best materials, and of the newest and most approved fashion. Woollen Mantles in tweeds of all shades, also plaids of great variety, lined and wadded throughout, at 14s. 6d., which pay purchasers 5s. 6d. in the pound. The [illegible] article is velvet or plaid, lined, wadded, and [illegible] with fur, at 28s 6d., usually sold at 14 to 16 Guineas. Rich Velvet Mantles [illegible] three-quarters with sable, and quilted, at 4 to 5 Guineas, usually sold at 8 to 10 Guineas. WALKER and HALDWICK, 66 and 67, Oxford-street, four doors east of the Princes Theatre

CHEAP SILKS for the AUTUMN. An immense [illegible] variety of beautiful Fancy and Gros de Naples Silks, as well as Rich Gros de Naples and Brocades, [illegible] 2s 6d, 3s, 3s 6d, 4s, 4s 6d, 5s, 5s 6d, 6s, 6s 6d, and 7s per yard, [illegible] most fashionable and Brocades, [illegible] intermixed with the richest [illegible] of colour, at £1 10s 6d the robe, worth [illegible] Gros grenes, striped Brocades, at 2 guineas the [illegible] of 12 yards, [illegible] Dresses, usually sold at 3 guineas, at £1 12s 6d the dress [illegible] tiss, at £1 5s 6d the dress; rich [illegible] Satin Striped Brocades, value 5s 6d, at 2s 9d per yard. The above, in addition to their extraordinary cheapness are equally distinguished for their [illegible] and [illegible] and generally possessed advant[illegible] which may [illegible] said for [illegible] others in the trade. WALKER and HALDWICK, 66 and 67, Oxford-street, four doors east of the Princes Theatre

THE BADEN-BADEN TOWELLING.—From the large importations WALKER and HALDWICK have made of this article, and the [illegible] in Damask Towelling, Huckaback, they are enabled [illegible] it 10s 6d the Dozen Towels, instead of 14s; 15s 6d, usually [illegible] at 21s; 18s 6d, usually [illegible] at 25s; Irish Linens &c., extraordinarily cheap. Fo[illegible] Linen Furnishers at Three, Evenings at Eight. Stalls, 3s.; Reserved Seats, 2s.; Promenade, 1s

PIANOFORTES, the best of every description, New and Second-hand, for Sale or Hire, at 20, REGENT-STREET, and 13, Pall-mall, Regent-street.

PIANOFORTES.—The cheapest house in London to purchase good instruments is at H. TOLKIEN'S, 6, King William-street, London-bridge. H. T. a splendid cottage Pianoforte, with 6½ Octaves, Metallic Plate, C G Pall, &c., only 26 guineas. An immense stock always on show

TOLKIEN'S, 33, King William-street, London-bridge

THE SAFETY CHAIN BROOCH (patronised by the Queen) is manufactured into a variety of new and elegant designs in BLACK as well as Gold and Silver. They may be sent by post to any part of the kingdom, and ordered DIRECT FROM THE INVENTOR, HENRY HOLLAND, 22, Pall-mall. Also Ornaments of every description made to order in Invernshire Silver

PATRONISED by MDLLE. JENNY LIND, and several ladies of distinction PARIAN BROOCHES. These elegant articles of dress, manufactured in Circles of Crosses, Ovals, and Groups of Flowers, can be obtained direct from Mrs. MARY BRIDGMAN, Berlaston, staffordshire, and through any part of the United Kingdom, on the receipt of 1s. in postage stamps

JONES'S £4 4s. SILVER LEVER WATCHES, at the Manufactory, 338, Strand opposite Somerset House. The complete every modern improvement, and are warranted not to vary more than half a minute per week. The great reduction of price at once sets aside all rivalry, either of the Swiss manufacturers, or any other house. On receipt of a Post-office Order, payable to JAMES JONES, for £4 4s., one will be sent Free. Read Jones's sketch of Watchwork, sent Free for a Twopenny Stamp

WATCHES and their MANAGEMENT.—T. COX SAVORY and Co have published a PAMPHLET, describing the construction of the various watches in use at the present time, and explaining the advantages of each, with lists of prices. It is intended to give that information which should be obtained previous to the purchase of an article, the principal characteristics of which should be accurately known, and also containing remarks on the proper management of watches. It may be had gratis on application personally, or by post.

T. COX SAVORY and Co., 47, Cornhill, London, seven doors from Gracechurch-street.

SILVER PLATE, New and Second-hand.—T. COX SAVORY and Co. have a large stock of Plate with estimates, to be had gratis, or will be sent free, if applied for by a paid letter. The articles are the property of the Firm, consisting of new and second-hand Silver Spoons and Forks, new and second hand Tea and Coffee Services, Waiters, Silver-edged Plated Goods, the new plated white metal Spoons and Forks, Watches, Clocks, Ladies' Gold Chains and Jewellery.

T. COX SAVORY and Co., 47, Cornhill (seven doors from Gracechurch-street), London.

SILVER-PLATED DISH COVERS, and CORNER DISHES.—A. B. SAVORY and SONS, 14, Cornhill, London, respectfully call the Nobility, Hotels, Taverns, and Clubs to their Manufactory of Silver-plated Dish Covers, Corner Dishes, Meat Screens, Urns, Tea Trays, Dressing Cases, Candlesticks, Table Forks, Spoons, &c. Their Illustrated Catalogue, with prices annexed, forwarded to any part of the kingdom postage free.

SILVER TEA SERVICES, of New Patterns, A. B. SAVORY and SONS, Working Silversmiths, 14, Cornhill, opposite the Bank, have recently finished several new and elegant patterns of TEA and COFFEE SERVICES of novel and elegant design, and of the highest finish. The following have been generally admired:

The Portland Pattern, tastefully engraved:	The Louis Quatorze Pattern, richly engraved:
Strong Silver Tea-pot .. £12 15 0	Strong Silver Tea pot .. £15 10 0
Ditto Sugar Basin, gilt 7 10	Ditto Sugar Basin, gilt 9 0
Ditto Cream Ewer, gilt 5 5 0	Ditto Cream Ewer, gilt 6 18 0
Ditto Coffee-pot .. 14 15 0	Ditto Coffee-pot .. 17 17 0
£49 0 0

A large stock is offered for selection in the Show-Rooms, including every variety of pattern, from £34 upwards

SARL'S ARGENTINE SILVER PLATE.—SARL and SONS, 18, Cornhill, opposite the Royal Exchange, manufacture and upholds STOCK of SPOONS and FORKS of every variety of pattern. The late extensive demand for this article has long rendered a constant supply impossible, S. and Sons take the opportunity of informing their friends and the public that there is an opportunity of immediately executed. All the articles usually made in solid silver are now manufactured by best workmen in their establishment. Pamphlets of prices and patterns gratis.

A HANDSOME PRESENT.—A GOLD WATCH and FINE GOLD CHAIN, fitted complete in a morocco case, for £5 10s, very suitable for a present. The description of the watch is as follows: Double-backed gold case, gold dial, horizontal movement, four holes jewelled, substantial jewel to go while being wound, and all recent improvements, a written warranty given, and a twelvemonth's trial allowed; the chain is of the best quality. Manufactured by WEST and SONS, Watch Manufacturers, 16, Cornhill, opposite the New Royal Exchange.—N.B. These elegant presents can be forwarded to any part of the United Kingdom with perfect safety, upon the receipt of an order for the amount.

FORD'S EUREKA SHIRT.—To a Gentleman, a good fitting SHIRT is a matter of no small importance. The EUREKA SHIRT, with a good fit, combining ease, comfort, and which is the perfection of shirt making Price, Six for 40s., by at FORD'S, 185, Strand, London

FORD'S EUREKA SHIRT.—Coloured Shirts, such as Stripes, Fancies, &c., the newest styles registered under new Design Act, price 8s each made the Eureka pattern To be had only at FORD'S, 185, Strand, London.—Patterns sent post-free

FORD'S EUREKA SHIRT.—Six for Forty Shillings.—The superior fitting Shirt is made from cloth of peculiar fabric, manufactured expressly for making FORD'S EUREKA SHIRT Detailed catalogues, with directions for self-measurement, sent post-free from FORD'S, 185, Strand, London

SCIENCE in TROWSERS.—E. CAHAN candidly asserts there are many imitators, but none equalling trial will prove their superiority over all others!!! Newest Designs the Season!—87½, Strand, adjoining Exeter-hall.

TO TAILORS and WOOLLEN-DRAPERS. Messrs. TWEABLES, BROTHERS, Wholesale and Manufacturing Warehousemen, 24, Bishopsgate, Aldgate, respectfully invite Woollen Buyers to inspect their extensive Stock. Being now enabled to manufacture extraordinarily low prices, they feel confident the quality, superior quality, and low prices will give satisfaction, [illegible] 24, Bishopsgate, Aldgate

"AS YOU LIKE IT."—Either Six Pounds of Sperm CONGOU for 6lbs., or Five Pounds [illegible] quality and strength, at the extraordinary reduction of 1s. per lb. Larger parts of the kingdom, packed in the usual [illegible] INVICTA BRADEN, Tea Merchant, 13, High-street, Islington, London

PRESENTS for WEDDINGS, BIRTHDAYS, &c., may be selected from SUMMERLY'S ART-MANUFACTORIES, sold by all first-class Retailers. The late Novelties are—the Camellia Vase, Clematis, a Wooden Bowl for Butter and Knife, Glass Flower Vase, &c.—A Catalogue, with 24 Designs, sent, on receipt of Three Postage stamps, from SUMMERLY'S, 12, Old Bond-street.

SPARKLING CHAMPAGNE, 42s. per dozen; pints, 24s.; first Sparkling and Rhenish, 42s. per dozen; Burgundy, 54s. per dozen, sparkling St. Peray, 48s. per dozen.—HEIGES and CO., Importers of Wines, 150, Regent-street, W. In consequence of the troubles and state of France, have purchased, for cash, a large assortment of the above, and can confidently recommend them as a most [illegible] article. A large stock of Sherry, 20s., 24s., 30s., 36s. per dozen; and Gordon's Golden Sherry, 36s and 36s per dozen

NO CHIMNEY is WANTED for RICKETT'S PATENT CALORIFERE GAS STOVES, in Churches, Halls, Shops, and for apartments where ventilation is defective. A small pipe can be attached to convey away the products of combustion into the Kitchen Flue, Chimney, Cloaks, a Wooden Bench for Butler and Knife, Glass Flower Vase, &c.—A Catalogue, with 24 Designs, sent, on receipt of Three Postage stamps, from SUMMERLY'S, 12, Old Bond-street.

SPARKLING CHAMPAGNE, 42s. per dozen; pints, 24s.; first Sparkling and Rhenish, 42s. per dozen; Burgundy, 54s. per dozen, sparkling St. Peray, 48s. per dozen.—HEIGES and CO., Importers of Wines, 150, Regent-street, W. In consequence of the troubles and state of France, have purchased, for cash, a large assortment of the above, and can confidently recommend them as a most [illegible] article. A large stock of Sherry, 20s., 24s., 30s., 36s. per dozen; and Gordon's Golden Sherry, 36s and 36s per dozen

DAVIES'S CANDLES, 8½d. and 6d. per lb.; Sperm, 1s 6d and 1s 8d; Transparent Wax, 1s 9d; Gemmine, 1s 10d; Composite, 8½d, 10d, and 10½d; Wax Taper, 6s 8d, and 6½ per 12½; Moulds, 6½ and 6½, Windsor, 1s 6d per packet. Price-Lists sent free by post. Sold by Messrs. LLOYD, 18, Strand, per lb. Argand, or Vegetable Oil, 4s 6d per gallon [illegible] Sperm, 7s 6d. For Cash, at DAVIES'S Manufactory, 74, St. Martin's-lane, opposite Slaughter's Coffee

DOYLEY'S SCOTCH WAREHOUSE, Established 1670, for the Sale of Scotch Cashmere Dresses, Shawls, Scarfs, Plaids, Tartans, Mantles, Tweeds, Table Covers, and Drabbets. A. WALKER and CO also beg to state, they have now a large Stock of the mixed Rose Table Covers, of which Boyd are the sole manufacturers. Eight quarter and nine quarter Bulfard and other sizes of Carpets, Rugs, Covers and Drabbets. A new and elegant style of Over-Coat made to measure, price Two Guineas and a Half; Liveries, for Coats, and Hats, at moderate prices

198 Strand, opposite Waterloo-bridge

BROWN'S PATENT ELASTIC MOURNING SHIRT.—This Shirt is fitted to the arm in a moment, and is equally removed from the arm in the same manner, has no buttons to spoil the best silk crape, and, being composed of the richest mourning silks does not become rusty with the dampness that usually requires [illegible] new, but clean or mended. To be had in all wi[illegible], from two to six inches in length, of the Patentee, JOHN BROWN, 4, Spence Terrace only supplied by the manufacturer's sole agent, J. PATERSON, 104, Wood street, [illegible] and an experienced [illegible] which [illegible] unavoidable odour, and its [illegible] to adhere

"LET a WOOLLEN BELT be WORN ROUND the BODY" is the recommendation of the Board of Health No. 10, in accordance with the above, a GENTLEMAN'S RIDING BELT, of a novel construction, and composed of the finest woollen flannel, has been introduced. Its construction ensures to it the power in the greatest possible degree, without the addition of the material [illegible] a gentle warmth, without causing the extreme heat, and consequent chill, which renders the heavy stiff belts in common use so dangerous. To be procured through any respectable hosier [illegible] danger, by asking for the Registered Spring Belt, recommended by Registered June 23, 1848. Wholesale at 8[illegible]

SHOOTING. The attention of Sporting Gentlemen is specially directed to E. MOSES and SON'S present STOCK of SHOOTING COATS, which for price, style, and fabric will be found unequalled, made in every description of tweeds, doeskins, and Doe skins Commencing at 35s 6d

Letter-sent and Measure-Cards, with Lists of Prices and Directions for Self-Measurement, may be had on application, or forwarded free

E. MOSES and SON,
[illegible] Minories, and 88, 84, 86, and 86, Aldgate City, London

BERDOE'S NEW OVER-COAT for the Winter, the PALLIUM TEPIDUM. This superior garment is made of the well known WATERPROOF PALLIUM, which from its [illegible] and [illegible] is a most [illegible] garment ever invented. Price 45s. and 50s. A large [illegible] of superior and really Waterproof Over-coats Driving Wrappers, &c.

BERDOE, 96, Cornhill.

PROUT'S Large and Fashionable ASSORTMENT of LADIES' CORSES is unequalled for elegance choice, and variety of shape, and any kind of Corset having been [illegible] or [illegible] from its extent, affords a chance that is not to be met with in the trade. A large assortment of [illegible] and [illegible] to various patterns, including all the late improvements, are constructed for their [illegible] of [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] are supported in all parts of the world. Prout's Hair-Brushes stand any climate, and are the only ones that preserve the natural curl. Observe the Address

Ladies come abroad, can furnish themselves at this [illegible] with every article for the toilet, many of which are [illegible] used and at the lowest prices [illegible] PROUT, Brush and Comb-maker [illegible] Court Theatre, 229, Strand

FOUR FIRES for ONE PENNY, by E. WARD'S PATENT FIREWOOD.—Sold by all oilmen and [illegible] 300 delivered to the carrier, on receipt of [illegible] amount for 19s. payable to THOMAS STOPHER, Manufactory, 15, Hanover-road, Lisle-road

DOES YOUR HAIR FALL OFF OR GREY? Use BEST'S Tea Bridge Caledonian Oil, ensuring the loss of hair is still offered for pub le benefit, and will be sent by return of post to any Lady or Gentleman enclosing 24 stamps to Mr. CHILD, of Chertsey, Surrey

HAIR DYE.—A lady will forward to any who one enclosing 2s. or 24 postage stamps, the recipe for a most valuable and [illegible] Hair Dye, which she has used for many years. It does not discolour the skin, is free from all injurious qualities, and one application will last for [illegible] Address Mrs. BAKER, Post-office, Ramsgate.—N.B. It has had [illegible] satisfaction.

DO YOU SUFFER TOOTH-ACHE? BELL

THE ATMOSPHERIC PILE-DRIVING MACHINE.

CLARKE AND VARLEY'S ATMOSPHERIC PILE-DRIVING MACHINE.

Among the various operations included in the widely-extended field of civil engineering, where of late years the vast resources of science have done so much towards the reduction of human labour by substituting for it the powers which exist in nature, made available through the medium of an infinity of mechanical contrivances, that of pile-driving has appeared hitherto to exist in the same primitive condition that it was in the earliest days of engineering. The same slow and tedious monkey and crab engine labours at its work now with no better effect than it did half a century back. The economy of timber, now so extensively used in constructions on railways, docks, harbours, and other works, has given the operation of pile-driving an importance which it never before possessed, and mechanical skill is at length beginning to be applied to its improvement.

In the common crab-engine, the weight of the rammer is necessarily limited by the amount of manual power that can be conveniently brought to bear upon it; and the necessary amount of force in the blow is made up by the height from which the rammer is made to fall. But it is found that a succession of short, quick blows, with a heavy rammer, does the work, not only with much greater speed, but in every way with greater efficiency; damaging the timber less, and, in fact, forcing it through hard ground which by the old method it would be found impossible to penetrate. Nasmyth's Direct-Action Steam Pile-Machine was, we believe, the first application of steam-power to this purpose. But, besides being costly, it is difficult to move about; the source of power, namely, the steam-boiler, being fixed to the same framing as the rest of the machine, causes it to be very heavy and difficult of transport. This also precludes its application in situations where it would be exposed to the action of tidal waters—a not unfrequent case in works of this nature

An invention recently perfected by Messrs. Clarke and Varley, the patentees of the Elastic Tube Atmospheric Railway, promises that the power of a steam-engine fixed at any convenient spot can, through the medium of atmospheric pressure, may be made available at any required distance by the simple application of a vacuum cylinder, with its apparatus of self-acting valves, chains, and pulleys attached to a pair-engine of the common construction.

Our Engraving shows one of these machines at work, driving piles at the extensive coffer-dam in process of erection for the purpose of rebuilding the river-wall on the site of the late fire at Irongate-wharf, near St. Katherine's Dock. It is worked by a small high-pressure steam-engine, fixed on the shore, to which is attached an air-pump for producing the exhaustion. Communication is made hence to the Pile-Machine by lengths of small galvanised iron pipes, connected together by flexible joints. These appear in the Engraving as coming down from the right to the machine, which stands near the centre. This latter consists, as will be seen, of an air-cylinder of wrought iron, open at the top, but closed at the bottom. Within this is a piston, connected by an iron rod to a chain, which passes over a pulley on the top of the frame, the other end of the chain being fixed to a suspended pulley; over this passes a second chain, one end of which is attached to the rammer, and the other passes down to the bottom of the engine, whence again returning upwards it is fastened to the top of the pile. The action, then, is this:—The rammer being supposed down on the head of the pile, and the piston consequently at the top of the air cylinder, the air in the cylinder is now rarified by the action of the air-pump above, until the external pressure is sufficient to counterbalance the weight of the rammer; this then immediately rises, and, as soon as the piston has reached the bottom of the cylinder, a motion takes place in the self-acting slides, by which the air is suddenly admitted under the piston; equilibrium between the pressures above and below being thus restored, the rammer immediately falls with its whole force on the pile, bringing in its progress the piston again to the top of the cylinder, when, the slides being reversed, the operation is repeated. Thus a constant succession of short heavy blows is given, and never ceases until the pile is driven to the required distance into the soil. And as, by the arrangement of pulleys, the distance between the pile-head and the rammer is always the same, a regularity of action is obtained quite unknown in the old Pile-Driver.

The machine itself requires no attendance while in operation; only one man is employed occasionally wedging up the pile to preserve its true direction. It is moved with great facility from pile to pile, being very little heavier than the common crab engine. Under the cylinder is fixed a small crab, which is used to raise the pile to its place, previously to being driven.

CHRIST CHURCH DISTRICT UPPER SCHOOLS, ST. GEORGE'S-IN-THE-EAST.

FUNERAL OF THE EARL OF CARLISLE.

The interment of this lamented nobleman took place in the Mausoleum, in the park at Castle Howard, on Tuesday. We described this edifice last week: it is nearly two miles from the Castle, and the cortège did not reach the dormitory until nearly four o'clock. The procession consisted of the hearse and nine carriages and four horses; the Earl's coronet borne upon a crimson velvet cushion

THE MAUSOLEUM AT CASTLE HOWARD.

plumes, &c. The funeral was conducted by Mr. Beale, of York; the furnishers of the carriages being Messrs. Smalpage and Firby, of Leeds. Next week we shall engrave the scene presented in the Park and at the Mausoleum upon this mournful occasion

CHRIST CHURCH DISTRICT UPPER SCHOOLS.

JOHNSON-STREET, ST. GEORGE'S-IN-THE-EAST.

These additional Schools have been erected at a cost of £4000, chiefly through the instrumentality of the Rev. W. Quekett, the incumbent of the district of Christ Church. The structure, which is a noble pile of building, in the Elizabethan style of architecture, is generally admired. G. Smith, Esq., is the architect; and Mr. Joshua Wilson, of the district of Christ Church, the builder.

The three Schools are capable of containing upwards of 700 children; and were opened on the 12th inst., in the presence of Lord Robert Grosvenor, M.P., and many of the clergy of the neighbourhood. There are residences for a master and two mistresses, and likewise rooms for pupil-teachers, and class-rooms for each school, well adapted for the use of the scholars.

The upper part of the building is so arranged as to be capable of being made one large room for lectures and examinations, and will be used on Sundays for Divine service until the new Church be completed, the foundation-stone of which was laid on the same day.

These are the second schools the rev. gentleman has built within the last seven years for the district of Christ Church.

The Junior Schools, as they are now called, are strangely situated under the arches of the Blackwall Railway, and contain 600 children.

When the new Church is completed and endowed, there will have been spent upon the district of Christ Church, within the last seven years, for the benefit of the inhabitants, upwards of £22,000.

London: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by William Little, of 198, Strand, aforesaid.—Saturday, October 21, 1848.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

No. 341.—Vol. XIII.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, OCTOBER 28, 1848. [Sixpence.

THE RAILWAY QUESTION.

The spectacle offered by Great Britain in the memorable year 1845 was by no means creditable to our character as a nation. The speculation of the period passed the limits of folly, and bordered upon those of crime. Under the influence of cupidity, men who perfectly well knew that the Railways then projected could not be constructed, and that even if they could be constructed, they could not remunerate the bonâ fide shareholders, rushed into the market for premiums, and fostered the frenzy which they did not share. As in the Mississippi madness which afflicted the French, and the South Sea delusion which made lunatics of the English, at the commencement of the eighteenth century, wise and foolish, great and little, rich and poor, were smitten with the lust of gain; all ranks and classes of men scrambled for wealth, not caring who was ruined if they could gain a portion of the spoil—not condescending even to look at remote but inevitable consequences, if, in the meantime, they could clutch premiums; and, in many instances, loading with abuse the few sage and cool-headed men who in that time of frenzy were courageous enough to tell the truth. The madness was so contagious, that not only that simple and credulous portion of the speculators who in good faith considered Railway stock as the most stable and the most profitable of all forms of investment; but the wiser minority, who were perfectly aware that "it was not and could not come to good," yielded to the irresistible attraction of the new and fierce excitement of the time.

Though in earlier periods of our commercial history we had been guilty of astounding folly, all previous follies were cast into the shade by the superior magnificence of this. Too serious to be laughed at, too violent to be arrested, too obstinate to be reasoned down, too attractive to be despised, too natural to be wondered at—all that sensible men could do was to watch the course of the mania, and predict a day of reckoning and a return to reason. As they predicted, the day of the reaction arrived. The rush out of railway speculation was as violent and unreasonable as the rush in. The madness of cupidity was succeeded by the madness of fear, and dupers and duped floundered together into one large quagmire of perplexity, alarm, and bankruptcy. So true it is that error invariably carries its own punishment along with it; and that the rule of right is never violated with impunity, either by small offenders or by great ones, by individuals or by nations.

But the great panic blew over, the first unreasonable terror and distrust subsided, and men looked somewhat more dispassionately upon the true state of the undertakings to which they were pledged. Attempts were made by those whose sole business was Railway management, and who were interested professionally, either as engineers or law agents, in the stability and prosperity of these undertakings, to put the best face upon the matter, and to depict the various projects in the most flattering light. These attempts were far from unsuccessful, and something like confidence in the great lines of Railway succeeded the panic of 1846. Amalgamations and extensions became the order of the day. Competing companies were bought up, branch lines were undertaken, and previously established short lines were drawn into the "system" of the great ones.

The cost at which all these operations was effected was startling. Six, and eight, and even ten per cent. was continually guaranteed to the shareholders of such lines as were necessary for the extension of the great leviathans; but though people wondered, they did not distrust. Shares continued at a premium; tempting dividends were declared, and the Railway world continued to wag almost as merrily as before. This comfortable state of things did not, however, last long. It was found that, although dividends of eight and ten per cent. were declared, the calls were far more onerous than the dividends were remunerative; and that the man who received a dividend of ten pounds on a share, had not unfrequently to pay twenty or thirty as a call, to carry on the work either of construction or of amalgamation. Railway affairs underwent another change in popular estimation. A new form of mistrust arose—a mistrust that these glittering and too beautiful dividends were declared out of capital, not out of revenue; and that the expenses of Railway management were too enormous to allow even moderate dividends, without a total change of system. We are in the midst of this new perplexity at the present moment; and the stock of the Great London and North-Western line—the triton among the minnows of railways—which, in the palmy days of confidence, was considered cheap at 250, is down at par, or a shade under, with a tendency to a still further depreciation.

Other lines, both great and small, are in a similar predicament; and thousands and tens of thousands of persons, who have invested their savings in these great national and pre-eminently useful undertakings, see their property gradually melting before their eyes, without power to avert the ruin, or even to stop it at the point to which it has arrived. They would, in many instances, be content to surrender their shares, to be secured from further liability. But, even upon these terms, they cannot free themselves. Calls continue to be made, and must be met—not under the simple penalty of loss of interest in the concern—but under the aggravated penalty of the liability of the whole fortune of shareholders, if the demand be disregarded. Thirty-one millions of pounds sterling were called up last year; nearly twenty-six millions have been called up this year; and the Directors of the various Companies are empowered by their acts of Parliament to make further calls for the completion of their lines of no less than 170 millions. Can the shareholders continue to meet this enormous drain? is one question now very seriously asked. Can the established lines continue (burdened as they are with amalgamations, leases, and preference shares) to pay remunerative dividends? is another question no less urgently put. While a third question, quite as important as either, arises, should both of them be answered in the negative, which is—What should be done to put an end to the first evil, and to bring Railways into a fair condition -useful to the public, and remunerative to the men by whose energy and enterprise these triumphs of our civilisation have been constructed?

OPENING OF THE GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY.—BARDNEY-BRIDGE.—(SEE PAGE 272.)

Without going minutely into figures, it may be stated, on authority which we have not seen impugned or contradicted, that, independently of a capital of nearly 24 millions expended upon lines which as yet pay no dividend, a sum of £107,390,000 represents the actual capital of the lines in full operation, and which pay dividends of greater or lesser amount. The traffic receipts of these lines in the aggregate, for the past half-year, amounted to £4,346,475. If these receipts were all profit—if the lines cost nothing to manage or to keep in repair, the average dividend fairly payable upon the railway property of the kingdom would slightly exceed 8 per cent. But the receipts are not all profit · the management is liberal; armies of directors, engineers, clerks, drivers, policemen, and station-keepers are employed; the wear and tear is considerable; the public convenience is generously looked to; and trains are constantly kept running to suit both the necessities of the men who travels for business, and the whims of him who travels for pleasure. So costly or so liberal is the management, that the working expenditure amounted to £2,100,737 for the past half-year, reducing the dividend from 8 to somewhat less than 4 per cent.

The attention both of Railway Directors and the public has been so strongly drawn to these facts—the fall of stock has spoken in language so plain of impending ruin, unless a change of system be adopted—that attempts have been made to save expense by effecting amalgamations of the great lines; and schemes have been debated whereby the fares would be raised to the public, and a morning and evening train substituted for the hourly or even half-hourly trains that now whirl us from one end of the country to the other. There can be no doubt, we think, that union for the purposes of cheap and efficient management would answer its object. There can be no doubt, also, that the companies can not be expected to convey the public at fares which are unremunerative; and as little doubt, that, if two or three trains a day would meet all the legitimate necessities of the travelling public, it is a mere waste of the resources of the management to run a larger number.

But the two last-mentioned reforms are of a nature to require tender handling. If the fares be raised too high, and if trains are too infrequent, travelling for pleasure will receive a check which will seriously endanger dividends; and we shall, notwithstanding the magnificent facilities of railway locomotion, make a step backwards towards the days of slow coaches, and thousands will be induced to stay at home, who, under the present system, are tempted into travelling. Upon the first point, too, although the advantages of union are obvious enough to shareholders, they are not quite so obviously calculated to promote the interest of the public. Already the principal lines are great, and by many considered oppressive and dangerous monopolies. A junction of three such lines as the North-Western, the Great Western, and the South-Western, would put an amount of power into the hands of their joint directors which might be abused. Already some, if not all, of these companies, have shown themselves tyrannical enough. To compel people to travel in first-class carriages, they have made second-class carriages as uncomfortable as they dared; and had it not been for the forcible interference of the State, their carriages for the poor would have been little if any better than the trucks for the conveyance of cattle.

In France and Belgium, where the State has exercised a more careful supervision over Railway management, the carriages for second-class passengers are as comfortable as first-class carriages with us; and the mercenary tyranny of rendering poverty unnecessarily uncomfortable has not been resorted to. This is but one of many forms of public evil, which these great monopolies may assume; and it becomes a question of national importance, whether it is right to consent to any further increase of power in the hands of Railway Directors. It seems to us—all-important as these and other questions of profit are to the great mass of capitalists, large and small, who have invested their wealth in these splendid undertakings -that we must not, in our pity for them, lose sight of the great interests of the whole people, which are involved not only in the prosperity, but in the proper management of the great highways of the kingdom. The past career of the men who are now at the head of these lines is not of a character to give either Railway proprietors or the public any overweening confidence in their prudence or their capacity; and it is time more than once been pointed out, that Parliament committed an error in trusting any private individuals with such powers as have been confided to them.

The highways of the nation should, we think, belong to the nation; and the present depression, caused by the faults, follies, and over-reaching cupidity of those who undertook, for private purposes, the management of such large undertakings, offers an opportunity for retrieving the past error, and buying them in on behalf of the whole people. Whatever Railway Directors may think upon the point, we are of opinion that the large majority of their unfortunate shareholders would only be too happy to know that such a solution of the manifold difficulties that beset them was likely to be successfully attempted by the Legislature of this country.

THE IRISH CONVICTS.—It is understood that the Cabinet Council on Tuesday was held for the purpose of considering the recommendations to mercy which had been preferred by the several Juries on the trials of Smith O'Brien and his accomplices at Tipperary; and that the result of the deliberations of the Council is a determination to give effect to those humane appeals, and to spare the lives of the prisoners.

THE GERMAN DEMOCRAT, HECKER, IN NEW YORK.—RIOT.—On the arrival of the steam-ship Hermann at New York, a riot occurred on the pier between two parties of Germans, during which knives were freely used, and several persons [illegible] the German re-action in the Fatherland. When the first were two parties, the democrats and aristocrats, between whom all feelings of animosity [illegible] long existed, increased by the opposition of their principles to the Society for Protecting German Emigrants. On the arrival of the steam-ship both parties met on the pier for the purpose of receiving Frederick Heck, when they came in collision, and the result was the defeat of the aristocratic party, who retired in about two hours. However, they returned with a reinforcement, and met their opponents in Broadway, at the head of Morris-street, when a regular fight ensued between them. A posse of policemen were soon on the ground, for the purpose of preserving the peace, but for some time their efforts were ineffectual. During the riot from 15 to 20 persons were either stabbed or severely bruised.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

Another modification of the Ministry has taken place this week: M. Goudchaux having resigned the office of Minister of the Finances, has been succeeded by M. Trouvé Chauvel; and M. Recurt has been appointed Prefect of the Seine in place of M. Trouvé Chauvel.

The tedious discussion on the Constitution has at length been brought to a close, and thus one of the three great tasks necessary to secure the French Republic out of its "provisional" state has been taken. The Presidential election and the enactment of a code of "organic laws" remain, however, to be accomplished, before the Republic can be said to be fairly "on its legs." The former engrossed public attention, almost to the exclusion of every other subject; and with respect to it, it was understood generally that the Government desired the prorogation of the Assembly immediately after the adoption of the Constitution, in order to allow the representatives to go into the departments, to prepare the country for the election of the President of the Republic, and to direct their constituents in the choice of a proper candidate, which was interpreted to mean a canvass for General Cavaignac.

Several crowded meetings of the Club of the Rue de Poictiers were held during the week, for the purpose of considering what part it would be thought advisable for the Moderate party to take on the subject. M. Degousée, one of the questors of the Assembly, was the only one who spoke on these occasions in favour of the Government plan, and in opposition to the proposition of M. Fresnau, a member of the Moderate party, who had given notice of a motion to the effect that there should be no prorogation, and that the Assembly should sit during the election en permanence. He contended that it was absolutely necessary, in the present critical position of affairs, that the representatives should go to their constituents, to enlighten and direct the people on the choice of a President. MM. Thiers, Marquis, Berryer, &c., strongly protested against any such individual plan of action. They declared that it was only as a collective body, by the acts as the representative Assembly of the nation, and by its official political acts, that the National Assembly ought to exercise any influence upon public opinion, or could do so with propriety and advantage to the State. The result of these discussions was, that the club almost unanimously determined that it should oppose the prorogation (a fact that would, at the same time, do all in its power to assist the Government in the preservation of order during the approaching momentous epoch.

In the National Assembly, on Friday, the Government sustained a damaging defeat on the subject of "military substitutes." In the original project of the Constitution, the right of remplacement militaire, or the power enjoyed by every citizen who should be drawn for the army to serve by a substitute, was interdicted. This clause was afterwards removed; and it was proposed to adjourn the question until the epoch of forming the organic laws. Considerable alarm, however, was created through the country by the many rumour of the possibility that every citizen might be compelled to serve in the army in person, no matter what his situation or circumstances; and the public anxiety had become so strong, that the majority of the Assembly could not resist the opinion that it could not even be adjourned, so as to leave any uncertainty remaining. The Government, however, through General Lamoricière, Minister of War, proposed the mere adjournment, for the present, of the question of interdiction, and in this they were supported by the party of the ultra-Democrats. The Moderate party and the Legitimists gave the most energetic opposition to the proposition of the Government, and MM. Thiers and Delarochejaquelein delivered speeches against the proposition. Upon the division, the Government were left in a minority of 370 against 369.

On Saturday, accordingly, the discussion of the question was resumed; and M. Thiers delivered an able speech full of historic illustration and reference to the wars of the Empire, the opinions of Napoleon on the constitution of armies, with a view to showing the impolicy and impracticability of the abolition of substitutes.

The question was brought to an issue by the moving of the following proposition: "The right to serve in the army by substitutes is interdicted;" which, on being put to the vote, was rejected by 668 to 140. The Assembly afterwards adopted an amendment of M. Dusolard's, adopting the principle of the right to military service by means of substitutes, and postponing, until the discussion on the Organic Laws, the establishment of the mode and conditions by which each citizen may liberate himself from the military service.

The Assembly next rejected an amendment of M. Pierre Leroux, who proposed to exempt "all citizens professing a creed which reproved war as a barbarous principle, and contrary to divine and human law."

On the abolition of the state of siege in Paris, a decree was proposed by M. Marie, in order to strengthen the hands of Government, the purport of which is to expedite the course of legal proceedings against the Clubs. This decree was examined in the standing committees of the National Assembly on Saturday last, and the majority of the Commissioners appointed by the Committees to prepare a report on the subject declared themselves in favour of the measure.

Another Social and Democratic banquet took place on Sunday, called the Banquet of Passy. There were from 4000 to 5000 persons present; but M. Ledru Rollin did not preside. Nine representatives were present, MM. Pierre Bac, Greppo Pierre Leroux, Pierre Leroux Buvignier, Martin-Bernard, Laurent, and Rargin Fayolle. The toasts were of the usual Social and Democratic character; the remarkable ones being, "To the Memory of the Exiles," and "To the speedy advent of Socialism." The latter was proposed by M. Proudhon. The proceedings were perfectly peaceful.

The Ultra-Democratic Socialist clubs, whose existence was justly considered incompatible with good order or public tranquility; viz. the Club of Charenne, the Club of the Grosse Tête, and the Club of the Acacias, in the Rue St. Antoine, have been closed by virtue of an ordinance issued from the council-chamber.

A review of part of the National Guard, the Garde Mobile, and some regiments of the line, by General Changarnier, took place on Sunday in the Place du Carrousel. It was observed on the occasion that the cry of "Vive la République!" was heard here and there among the line; but the National Guard was silent and cold. "Down with Cavaignac!" were heard from among the crowd which was present on the occasion.

In consequence of a report circulated that an emeute was about to take place under the name of Napoleon, Prince Louis Napoleon published in the journals of Tuesday a memorandum to the following effect:—"Well-informed persons having asserted M. Louis Napoleon Bonaparte that certain persons were labouring secretly to prepare an emeute in his name, with the evident purpose of compromising him in the eyes of sincere Republicans and the friends of order, M. Louis Napoleon has decided to inform M. Dufaure, Minister of the Interior, of the reports; and indignantly rejects all participation in proceedings so completely contrary to his political opinions, and so entirely at variance with the conduct he has pursued since the 24th February."

M. de Lamartine, who had left Paris on a pleasure tour, was, on his arrival at Macon "en route" for his château of Monceau, presented by the Mayor with a complimentary address, to which M. de Lamartine delivered a suitable answer. M. de Lamartine gave on the occasion 2000 francs to be distributed among the poor. The tour of the distinguished orator in the provinces has been generally considered as undertaken with a view to his candidateship to the Presidency, but a paragraph in the Bordeaux journals would lead to the impression that he declines the candidateship.

The organisation of the 500 battalions of the National Guard Mobile was being actively proceeded with at the Ministry of War. Almost all the persons who formed part of the first category had already received a letter inviting them to appear at their respective mairies, should they have any complaint to make. It was said that the 500 battalions were to be simultaneously formed before the end of the year, and that a certain part of the officers were to be chosen from amongst the non-commissioned officers belonging to the six companies of veterans in barracks at Paris.

Some surprise was manifested in Paris on Monday at the sight of forty-five pieces of artillery, quite new, of the calibre of 8, 12, 16, and 24-pounders, mounted on new gun-carriages, and escort by a double column of troops, with, it was said, their muskets loaded with ball-cartridge. They arrived from Vincennes, and, having traversed the Boulevards at a quick pace, they proceeded through the Champs Elysées and the Bois de Boulogne to the fortress of Mount Valerien. This fort is at present armed with a hundred pieces of cannon. The other forts round Paris have likewise been provided with artillery.

The Journal du Peuple, of Bayonne, states that the unfortunate Spaniards, sentenced to transportation, who had revolted at sea and sought refuge in France, had been sent back to Spain by order of the French Government. It appears that after agreeing to their surrender it changed its determination, but the vessel [illegible] too late. The vessel, on board of which the refugees were placed, [illegible] already sailed for Santander.

M. Emile de Girardin has been elected a member of the National Assembly, as representative for the Colony of Senegal.

THE NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

MONDAY.—The discussion of the 10th chapter of the Articles of the Constitution was resumed. Art. 118, maintaining the Legion of Honour, and providing for the revision of its statutes, was adopted. The 114th Article, as follows, "The territory of Algeria and of the colonies is declared a French [illegible] shall be ruled by separate laws until a special law shall have placed them under the regimen of the common law"—was adopted after the rejection of one or two amendments proposed by members who contended for the subjection of Algeria to the laws of the French Constitution, and the extension of the new [illegible] to Martinique, Guadaloupe, and Guiana. The discussion [illegible] was then commenced. Article 115 (under this head) provides the revision of the Constitution, and its total or partial modification by the National Assembly, during the last year of its legislative existence, in the following [illegible] "The wish of the Assembly shall be converted into a definitive resolution, after three successive deliberations, adopted at intervals of one month, and by the three-fourths of the suffrages. The revising Assembly shall only be named for three months. It shall be exclusively occupied with the revision, for which it has been convoked. Nevertheless it may, in cases of urgency, act as a legislative assembly." An attempt was made to abolish the provision requiring a majority of three-fourths of the suffrages, and that confining the power of revision to the last year of a Legislature, but they were both defeated by small majorities [illegible] next moved the number of voters be at least 500: adopted. Art. 115 was then adopted in toto. After the adoption of several "transitory provisions," Art. 119 was put from the chair, providing for the election of the President by the nation immediately after the adoption of the Constitution and "the discussion by the Assembly of the Organic Laws intended to complete that Constitution, but M. Durpin, in the name of the Committee, having demanded the temporary suspension of the article, and the immediate discussion of the 120th article, the Assembly adopted his proposal. M. de Puysegur subsequently proposed an additional article, to this effect:—"Immediately after the vote of the Constitution it shall be submitted to the sanction of the nation in the form determined by a special decree. The President of the Republic shall afterwards be elected." A division was called for, which gave only 42 votes in its favour against 733 in opposition to its adoption.

The other remaining articles were then voted, and the discussion on the Constitution was thus at last brought to a close.

TUESDAY.—M. A. Marrast presented, in the name of the Committee of the Constitution, a bill providing for the election of the President of the Republic on the 10th of December next, in the form and manner prescribed by the decree of March 5 and the instructions of March 8.

At the close of this sitting the Assembly adopted, without discussion, the ensemble of the bill relating to the accounts of the Provisional and Executive Governments, and adjourned at a quarter past six.

WEDNESDAY.—In to-day's sitting, an incidental discussion having arisen respecting the letter addressed to M Dufaure by M. Louis Bonaparte, and published in the newspapers, M. Clement Thomas rose and inveighed in such violent terms against the Constitution, a bill providing for the election of the President of the Republic on the 10th of December next, in the form and manner prescribed by the decree of March 5 and the instructions of March 8 against M. Louis Bonaparte, and particularly against the election of the President, that M. Louis Bonaparte and publ shed in the newspapers, M. Clement Thomas rose and inveighed in such violent terms against the Constitution, a bill providing for the election of the President of the Republic on the 10th of December next, in the form and manner prescribed by the decree of March 5 and the instructions of March 8 against M. Louis Bonaparte, and particularly against the election of the President, that M. Louis Bonaparte was a candidate, not for the Presidency, but for the Imperial dignity. After some discussion the sitting was temporarily suspended; the President vacated his seat, and proceeded to the Salle des Pas Perdus, where a warm altercation, followed by a second challenge, ensued between M. Pierre Bonaparte and M. Clement Thomas. The result is not stated.

On the resumption of the sitting, General Lamoricière deposited a project of decree, modifying that of the 27th of June, relative to the insurgents' sentence, to banishment, and recommending the transportation of the 3557 rebels, whose sentences have not been commuted, to Algeria, there to form agricultural establishments distinct from those of the voluntary colonists.

The Assembly next proceeded to discuss a project of decree providing for the annexation to the domain of the State of the property constituting the private domain of the ex-King Louis Philippe. The first article, empowering the Ministers of Finance to adopt such measures as might seem expedient to effect the entire liquidation of the debts of the former Civil List and private domain, as respected the State or private individuals, was adopted without discussion. The whole bill was equally voted without any opposition.

The Assembly then adjourned, after adopting another project of decree relative to the composition of the Committee of Surveillance of the Sinking Fund.

SPAIN.

Accounts from Madrid, of the 20th instant, mention that the Marquis de Miraflores had resigned the government of the palace, and that a decree of the Queen had been published, investing the King with the direction of the Royal household, and suppressing the post of Governor of the Palace. The Duke de Gor, or the Duke of Ahumada, would, it was believed, be appointed to assist his Majesty in the discharge of those functions.

The Pensenia, Barcelona journal, of the 19th instant, announces the arrest of the Republican chief, Ballera, and nineteen of his followers, at Las Illas, by the French police.

ITALIAN STATES.

TUSCANY.—Intelligence from Florence to the 16th inst. gives the composition of the new Ministry which the Grand Duke of Tuscany was forced to form when the events of Vienna became known at Florence. The following are the persons composing it:—M. J. B. Nicolini, President, M. Guerrazzi, Interior; M. Montanelli, Foreign Affairs; M. Mazzoni, Public Works; Professor Puoli, Public Instruction; M. Guidi Bernardi, Justice; M. Pezzi, Finance; M. Mariano Bugnai, War. It may be remembered that M. Guerrazzi was the chief of the Insurrection at Leghorn.

The report on the financial condition of Tuscany has been published, from which it appears that the public debt amounts to 47 millions of francs, and that the expenditure for 1847 was 30 millions.

NAPLES AND SICILY.—Advices, dated Messina, 13th instant, state that the greatest tranquillity prevailed, and that the place had recovered some degree of its commercial activity. The hostile forces had been separated nearly 20 miles from each other, and a large extent of neutral ground established, by the intervention of the English and French naval commanders of the station. Great anxiety prevailed to know the final terms of mediation offered by the English and French Governments, as the island was much affected by the ad interim state; and the utmost uncertainty prevailed whether in future it was to be governed by Neapolitan or native rule.

PIEDMONT AND LOMBARDY.—The Concordia, of Turin, of the 20th, contains a report of the sitting of the Chamber of Deputies of Turin of the 19th. The Minister of the Interior read a discourse containing the following statement as to the Anglo-French mediation between Austria and Northern Italy:—1st. The bases of the propositions made by England and France are not yet accepted by Austria, and, after two months of diplomatic discussion, the place of holding a Congress is not yet fixed. 2nd. The armistice is prolonged from eight days to eight days. 3rd. If the mediation shall not succeed, the Government is ready to resume hostilities with a case will be the judge of the time and opportunity. Austria (added the Minister) has made overtures, which have been supported by the mediating powers, but no direct answer has been received from the Cabinet of Vienna. The Government of the King then declared, that, bound by its promise, it had waited the issue of the negotiation, but with its hand on the guard of its sword. The mediating powers had proposed a prorogation of the armistice for 30 days. Austria had replied that she would not attack if she were not attacked. Hostilities were not to be resumed without notice.

From Milan there is news of an insurrection against the Austrians on the 18th, but, however, they have since been confirmed, and is generally doubted. The intelligence is dated Alessandria (Piedmont), the 19th inst., and states that a special courier had reached that fortress from Milan, which he had left on the 18th, blow them up. This did not, however, prevent the exasperated people from attacking the military. Several fires were lost, and the whole city rose in arms. The tocsin was sounding from every tower, and complete confusion prevailed.

GERMAN STATES.

FRANKFORT.—The state of siege in which the city was placed shortly after the recent insurrection, was raised by proclamation on the 21st instant.

The remains of the unfortunate Prince Lichnowski had been conveyed to Grosau and Ratibor, to the family seat, the Château of Grätz, near Troppau, for interment. The Frankfort papers announce the departure of Archduke Stephen from that city for London.

BAVARIA.—On the 16th instant there were some serious disturbances in Munich, on the occasion of the raising of the price of beer, the new tariff having come into operation on that day. Many breweries, bakers' shops, and public-houses were attacked and damaged, and a number of persons were wounded or otherwise injured during the collision between the rioters and the police. Numerous patrols were compelled to give their parole to all comers. A number of soldiers took part in the riots. The disturbances did not originate in any political object; but the ultra-democrats (Republican) of Munich had endeavoured to turn that city for London.

BAVARIA.—On the 16th instant there were some serious disturbances in Munich, on the occasion of the raising of the price of beer, the new tariff having come into operation on that day. Many breweries, bakers' shops, and public-houses were attacked and damaged, and a number of persons were wounded or otherwise injured during the collision between the rioters and the police. Numerous patrols were compelled to give their parole to all comers. A number of soldiers took part in the riots. The disturbances did not originate in any political object; but the ultra-democrats (Republican) of Munich had endeavoured to turn that city for London.

Stephen from

hence their withdrawal from, or rather their objection to enter upon, the Austrian territory. On the other side, the Vienna National Guards were beginning to call the Diet itself to account, and it was not unlikely that their republican, the Provisional Commander-in-Chief of the National Guard, would place himself at the head of the movement. He had organised three battalions of garde mobile, and had displayed considerable activity in completing the defences of the city. Eighteen cannons were planted near the Belvedere, in the vicinity of which were the head-quarters of General Bihm, a distinguished and experienced commander, warmly attached to the popular cause. Altogether, the Viennese were in possession of an artillery park of 100 guns.

Accounts dated Prague, 18th inst., state that the army about to be directed against Vienna would be assembled on the 23rd or 24th inst. That army will amount to at least 100,000 men, and from Vienna it will be marched against the Hungarians. It will be composed of the Bohemian corps of 50,000 men; the Moravians, 12,000; the army of Poland, 12,000. General Auersperg has 20,000 men under his orders; and the army of Baron Jellachich amounts to 60,000 men. The deputies to the Diet at Vienna, who quitted that capital and assembled at Prague, having sent a deputation to the Emperor to demand that the Diet should be transferred from Vienna to some other city, his Majesty returned the following reply:—"I will take care that full security be guaranteed to the Diet of Vienna, in order that it may continue its labours, because I desire that it may occupy itself, without any adjournment, with the Constitution which it has to prepare for the Empire." The House accordingly, at its rising, adjourned till the following terms to a deputation from the municipal authorities of Prague, which demanded a pacific intervention in favour of Vienna, menaced by an army—"I do not misunderstand the noble motive of your petitioning, but the state of the capital is such that I must reserve to myself the right to employ, according to circumstances, all the means at my disposal to re-establish tranquillity and security in that city. My most ardent desire is, that the least possible force be employed, and that my paternal exhortations may be sufficient."

PRUSSIA

On the morning of the 16th inst. some disturbances of a sanguinary character took place, in consequence of a body of labourers being attempted to be set to some machinery, the use of which had thrown them out of employment. At break of day the 15th battalion received orders to march to the Kopnickerfeld to prevent a tumult. When this guard arrived at the place, the workmen received it in the most friendly manner, and seemed to be full of gaiety. Unfortunately some of the guards repelled their advances, and this greatly irritated them, and several of the workmen threw stones at the soldiers. Hostilities were prevented, but the workmen insisted that the guards who had insulted them should be withdrawn. About twelve o'clock both the workmen and the guards received reinforcements. The workmen commenced the attack, but instead of doing so hurled stones at the guards. Upon this 20 shots were fired from the ranks of the guard, and four or five workmen were killed, and several were wounded. The cry of "To arms!" was raised, and some of the guards were disarmed by their opponents, and others were driven off by a shower of stones. The conflict was continued in the adjoining streets. Some of the workmen took up the bodies of their companions who had been killed, and exhibited them in the streets. Barricades were formed in the street near the Köpnickerfeld. The battle was renewed, and several were killed on both sides. The number of persons killed is stated officially to be eleven. The city was perfectly tranquil on the 18th. In the sitting of the National Assembly on that day, a petition, signed by 14,000 workmen, was presented, praying for the punishment of the National Guards who fired upon the people, and that the slain might be interred at the expense of the State. The Assembly decided on a judicial investigation of the circumstances.

On the 20th the unfortunate victims of the collision between the civic guards and the labourers were interred with considerable pomp and solemnity.

On the morning of the 22nd General Pfuel tendered his resignation, and that of his colleagues, to the King. His Majesty requested the general to withdraw his resignation, but was met with a positive refusal. The immediate cause of this step on the part of General Pfuel is ascribed in a great measure to the anticipated result of the debate on the territorial question, in favour of the amendment of M. Brodowsky, by which the Grand Duchy of Posen will continue in its integrality, that is, it will not be divided, according to the project of the commission, into two (German and Polish) portions, and will not be annexed in any way to the Confederation, but continue, as heretofore, under the sovereignty of Prussia. This decision, so important to the Poles, will be in direct opposition to the system proposed by preceding Prussian Cabinets, and in absolute opposition to the plan of separation and demarcation proposed and defined by General Pfuel himself.

HOLLAND.

Accounts from the Hague, dated the 23d instant, mention that the Government has laid before the States-General a project of law for the purpose of obtaining authority to extend, by the sum of ten millions, the amount of Treasury Bills to be issued by virtue of the law of the 27th of December, 1840, in order provisionally to cover the deficit arising from the ways and means, and the increase of the expenses of the army for the year 1848. The exposé of the motives which accompanied this project indicates the reasons which have decided the Government to take this measure. It was considered necessary either to decree an augmentation of the contributions or a loan. But the exceptional situation of the present Chambers did not seem appropriate to the Government to demand the vote of a new tax, besides that the Government appear satisfied for the financial operation of raising a loan. The only resource, therefore, was the issue of the Treasury Bills.

THE UNITED STATES

Advices have been received this week from New York to the 11th instant. Among the various movements to which the approach of the Presidential elections had given rise, was the issuing of a manifesto of the Negroes, claiming for themselves the right of the elective franchise. They assembled by a delegate convention held at Cleveland, Ohio. It is signed by Frederick Douglas, the coloured person who lately visited England for the purpose of procuring assistance to carry out his abolition views.

Several political meetings had been held in New York. A great "Mass Meeting" of the cartmen of New York, for the purpose of expressing their approval of General Taylor as President; a "Free Soil Meeting" in the Park, by torchlight, at which speeches were delivered by John Van Buren and others; and a great German "Mass Meeting," to receive a political refugee, Herr Hecker, at Hanmony Hall, for the purpose of hearing from him "an account of the efforts, the doings, the hopes, and the prospects of Republicanism in Europe, and especially in Germany."

Elections had been held in Pennsylvania and Ohio for Governor and members of the State Legislature. The returns were in favour of the Whig party in both States.

A tremendous gale, which took place in the Gulf of Mexico, had submerged the island of Brazos to the depth of seven feet; the inhabitants were rescued by a transport ship.

The Board of Health at New Orleans had officially announced the disappearance of the yellow fever from that city.

MEXICO

Accounts from the city of Mexico state that the country is now tranquil, and that Herrera's Government was progressing prosperously. A telegraphic despatch from New Orleans to New York states that Santa Anna was making preparations to return to Mexico. If he does so, we may soon expect to hear of some disturbance.

An insurrection had taken place at Tabasco, and a fight was hourly expected between 400 of the insurrectionists and 600 of the Government troops.

Accounts from Yucatan to the 30th of September state that the official bulletin issued at Merida declared the rebellion to be nearly at an end. In all the strongholds of the Indians the whites were prevailing. Valladolid, however, had been received at Charleston on the 10th from Yucatan, which stated that a battle had been fought between the whites and the Indians, in which the American company that recently volunteered from New Orleans were engaged. It is said that six American officers were killed. The result of the battle is not given.

BRAZIL.

We are in receipt of accounts from Rio Janeiro to the 28th of August, viâ New York. The Emperor of Brazil was under an attack of erysipelas. Montevideo dates to the 14th have also been received. A smart shock of an earthquake was experienced at that place on the 9th, by which the houses were shaken, and even the vessels in the harbour felt the shock.

PERSIA.

DEATH OF THE SHAH.—The Journal de Constantinople has the following:—"Letters from Persia, viâ Trebisond, which arrived here, announce an important event. The King of Persia, Mohammed Shah, died on the 29th of last month, at the attack of gout, to which he had long been subject. Mohammed Shah, son of Abbas, and grandson of Fetti Ali Shah, who died in 1834, and whom he succeeded to the throne of Persia, was the third Sovereign of the dynasty of the Kadjars, founded in 1794 by Aga Mohammed Khan. He was born in 1808, and his heir, Nadjus Salthanet, Governor of Azerbaidjan, is eighteen years of age. If the news of the death of the King of Persia be confirmed, it is probable that the Salar, who is in arms near Khorassan, will march upon Teheran, while the Princes, who have taken refuge on the frontiers of Turkey, in consequence of events which have taken place in different parts of the kingdom, and among whom are Assaffed Dewlet, the Shah's maternal uncle, and Zell us-Soulthan, who reigned for several months after the death of Fetti Ali Shah, under the name of Ali Shah, will probably make some attempt on the southern provinces, where they have numerous partisans. These two last Princes are at this time at Kerbella, living upon a pension granted them by the Ottoman Government. It is said that the communications between Bagdad and Teheran are already intercepted."

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE

DEFEAT OF THE REBEL BOERS.—By the Rosamond steamer, arrived at Portsmouth on Tuesday, we have received advices from the Cape to the 9th September, and accounts from Sir Harry Smith's quarters, six miles north-east of Bethany, dated August 31, stating that two days previously (on the 29th) Sir Harry Smith encountered the rebel Boers, who were strongly posted, to the number of 1000, under Pretorius, at a place called Boom Plaats, and, after a sharp contest, defeated and drove them before him with great loss, and that Sir Harry Smith was wounded in the knee, and had his horse killed under him.

The report that Sir Harry was wounded is not confirmed by the authorised particulars of the action; but accounts from official sources leave little doubt of the fact. Among the "mortally wounded and since dead," we regret to find the name of Captain Murray, one of his Excellency's aides-de-camp. We believe he was the only son of Major-General the Hon. H. Murray, C.B., Commander-in-Chief of the Western District.

Forty-nine of the enemy were counted dead upon the field. Their wounded may be considered upwards of 150. Owing to the nature of the ground, which afforded great advantage to the rebels, the loss on the side of her Majesty's troops is unfortunately rather large.

The return of killed and wounded gives a total of 7 officers wounded; 8 men killed, 30 wounded; horses killed, 11; wounded, 13.

Officers wounded:—Lieutenant-Colonel Bisset, Rifle Brigade, severely; Captain Murray, ditto, mortally (since dead); Captain Armstrong, Cape Mounted Rifles, severely; Lieutenant Sale, ditto, dangerously, Lieutenant Mill, ditto, severely; Ensign Steain, ditto, dangerously; Ensign Crampton, 91st Regiment, dangerously.

Vice-Admiral Dacres, in his flag-ship the President, 50 guns, returned to Simon's Bay from Tamatave (Madagascar), a few days prior to the sailing of her Majesty's ship Rosamond, and announced the unpleasant tidings of his failure to open friendly relations with the Queen.

THE WEST INDIES.

According to advices received this week, we learn that the Governor of Jamaica, Sir Charles Grey, was expected to be able to return from his country residence to Spanish Town, on the 27th of September, the accident from which he suffered not having been so serious as reported. At the sitting of the House of Assembly on the 20th, a message was brought by the Governor's secretary, intimating that his Excellency acceded to the request of the House, to be allowed to adjourn to Nov. 24. The House accordingly, at its rising, adjourned till that day. The committee appointed to report on several public documents which had emanated from the Governor, containing grave charges against the [illegible] body, had not reported up to the time when this adjournment took place. [illegible] nal notices of motion on the subject were given against the next session.

The commercial accounts from the island continue gloomy.

In Barbadoes, we learn that, should the weather prove favourable next month, the crops will equal last year.

In Demerara, it is expected that the crops will this season be better than for the last three years, and about 50,000 hogsheads is stated as the probable shipment of the colony.

INDIA

Intelligence has been received this week, in anticipation of the Overland Mail, dated Bombay the 15th September, Calcutta 7th September, and Hong Kong the 23d August; and from it we learn that a considerable force is now assembled at Mooltan, ready to commence the siege of that fort. Moolraj, it was said, had resolved to sell his life dearly, and he had some devoted followers who would stand by him to the last. Moolraj was making great exertions to enlist the Sepoys of the East India Company.

In Bombay there was some improvement in business, and a large number of shares having been taken up in the proposed Railway Company (Great Indian Peninsula), as many as 20,000, great hopes are entertained that this important undertaking will soon be gone on with. A second general meeting of the Bombay Steam Navigation Company had been held immediately after last mail left, and their affairs, not in an over-flourishing condition, discussed in a very friendly spirit. Mr. Richmond, of the late firm of Richmond and Co., had been appointed manager, and it was expected that he would do much to retrieve the fortunes of the company.

The Governor remained in the Deccan, where lately the weather had been extremely pleasant. His Lordship was expected at Bombay on the 15th proximo. His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief was also in the Deccan, engaged on a tour of inspection. The Judges of the Supreme Court had been sitting at term three weeks, the cases being numerous, and some of them important. A steamer owned by natives was about to be regularly put on the line between Bombay and the Persian Gulf. The trade on that line, heretofore principally carried on by small craft, called baghows, was very great, and good judges were of opinion that it would support several steamers, if well conducted.

At Calcutta, the everlasting Union Bank affair makes no progress, except in difficulty and entanglement. It was understood that the leading men among the resident shareholders had applied to Government for a special Act to wind up the concern, and that the proposition was favourably entertained.

From Madras we learn the painful news of the removal in custody of an assistant-surgeon, Mr. Daubeny, from Khotagherry to the Presidency, charged with murder.

The Delhi Gazette Extraordinary of the 3d September mentions that, on the 1st, the troops of the Dewan came out of the fort to oppose the British troops. A battle took place, when the Moolt anees were defeated, and compelled to take refuge in a ravine.

A sharp skirmish had also taken place on the 16th of August, which resulted in the defeat of the Moolt anees, with the loss of 18 killed and several wounded. The British had none killed, but seven wounded.

The latest advices from Ceylon received in Calcutta, indicate the speedy suppression of the insurrection. It would, however, have cost money in the transportation of troops, the destruction of property, and the necessary preparation against future disturbance.

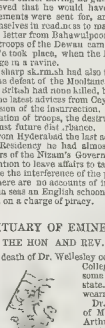
From Hyderabad the last accounts were, that since General Fraser's return to the Residency no had almost ostentatiously avoided any interference in the affairs of the Nizam's Government, so much so that it was surmised to be the intention to leave affairs to take their own course until long enough ruin should make the interference of the paramount state unavoidable.

There are no accounts of importance from the eastern settlements. In the China seas an English schooner has been captured by her Majesty's ship Children, on a charge of piracy.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

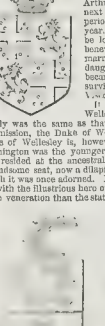
THE HON AND REV. GERALD VALERIAN WELLESLEY, D.D.

THE death of Dr. Wellesley occurred on the 21st inst., at his residence in the College, Durham. The reverend gentleman had, for some time since, been in a feeble and gradually sinking state. His decease renders vacant the stall in the rectory of Bishopwearmouth, and a canonry in the church of Durham.



Dr. Wellesley was the fourth son of Garrett, first Earl of Mornington, by Anne his wife, eldest daughter of Arthur, first Viscount Dungannon, and was, consequently, next younger brother of the Duke of Wellington. At the period of his demise he had not quite completed his 79th year. His loss is much deplored, and his memory will be long cherished by all classes of the community, for benevolence, kind-heartedness, and generosity. He married, in 1802, Lady Emily Mary Cadogan, eldest daughter of Charles Sloane, first Earl Cadogan, and became a widower Dec. 22, 1839. He leaves issue two surviving sons and four daughters, of whom the third is Viscountess Loftus.

It is not very generally known that the name of Wellesley was formerly written Wesley, and that the family was the same as that of John Wesley, the preacher. In his earlier commission, the Duke of Wellington is styled "Arthur Wesley." The surname of Wellesley is, however, one of assumption only. The first Lord Mornington was the younger son of Garret Colley, Esq., of Castle Carbery; and resided at the ancestral seat of Dangan, near Trim, county Meath, then a handsome seat, now a dilapidated ruin, divested of all the fine plantations by which it was once adorned. It is, nevertheless, classic ground; and, in connexion with the illustrious hero of Waterloo, will be regarded, in future ages, with more veneration than the stateliest hall or proudest castle.



SIR JOHN KENNEDY, BART.

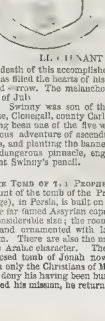
Accounts from Ireland announce the death of this respected baronet, a resident in Portarlington, and Deputy-Lieutenant of the county of Dublin.

He was born in 1785, the son of the late Hon. Ward Kennedy, Esq., of Johnstown, and Lady his wife, daughter of John Bayly, Esq., of Gowran, and 1st cousin and grandson of Darby O'Kennedy, Esq., of Ballykerrogue Castle, county Waterford. The title of Baronet was conferred on him by patent in 1836. Sir John married, in 1819, Maria, daughter of William Beauman, Esq., of Rutland-square, Dublin, and had by her one daughter, Maria, and five sons, of whom the eldest succeeds to the family honours, and is now Sir Edward Kennedy, second Baronet of Johnstown.

LIEUTENANT SIDNEY R. SWINNY, ROY. ART.

The death of this accomplished and deeply-lamented officer, at the early age of 33, has filled the hearts of his parents, brother officers, and friends with anguish and sorrow. The melancholy event occurred at Port Louis, Mauritius, on the 10th of July.

Mr. Swinny was son of the Rev. George Stoney Swinny, of Ballyredmond House, Clonegall, county Carlow. His high spirit and courage are evinced by his having been one of the five who, a month before his death, accomplished the perilous adventure of ascending the almost inaccessible mountain of Peter Botte, and planting the banner of England on its summit. The clever sketch of the dangerous pinnacle, engraved in our Journal for Sept. 2, was from Lieutenant Swinny's pencil.



THE TOMB OF THE PROPHET JONAH.—The village Neby Yunus (so called on account of the tomb of the Prophet Jonah, which is supposed to be within the village), in Persia, is built on an ancient artificial mount belonging to the ruins of the far famed Assyrian capital. The tomb of the Prophet Jonah is in a mosque of considerable size; the room where the tomb is is richly furnished with carpets and ornamented with large and beautiful Arabic inscriptions from the Koran. There are also the names of the four Khalifas (or Califfs) written in the large Arabic character. There was formerly a Christian monastery where the supposed tomb of Jonah now stands. The Christian tradition (of course, I mean only the Christians of Mosul) is, that Jonah preached in that place, but they deny his having been buried there; they believe that when he had accomplished his mission, he returned to his native country.—Jewish Chronicle.

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

We are authorized to state that private Frederick White, of the Grenadier Guards, who was convicted by the civil power on the 23rd inst., of [illegible]-deadly appropriating 5s. 4d., the property of one of the French National Guard, will be dismissed from her Majesty's service for his disgraceful conduct on his release from the imprisonment awarded him for his offence.

At the Banbury Horse Agricultural Meeting, last week, a silver medal was awarded to Sir R. Peel for his estates in Oxfordshire, as the owner, not being the occupier, who has laid down the greatest number of rods of stone or tile drains in the best manner.

A flat in bankruptcy against M'Manus, who has recently figured in the so-called Irish rebellion, having been taken out shortly after he left Liverpool for Ireland, he has become an outlaw in consequence of his non-appearance in the Liverpool Bankruptcy Court last week, when called upon to surrender.

On Sunday morning, one wing, containing the library, with the valuable collection of books, paintings, &c., of the beautiful mansion of H. G. Marshall, Esq., Vicar's Island, Derwent-lake, was destroyed by fire. The remainder of the building, as well as the splendid timber trees by which the mansion is surrounded, [illegible]

At the Autumn Sessions for Durham, Mr. S. [illegible] forged [illegible] the second, for forging another cheque to a large amount upon the firm of Simpson and Co., at Peterborough; and another of a similar character. The prisoner was sentenced to seven years' imprisonment on the second and third charges, and ten years' transportation on the first.

At the Southampton Quarter Sessions, on Friday morning (last night), the several persons charged with stealing timber from the New Forest surrendered to take their trials. There were a large number of magistrates and the Bishop of Winchester present on the bench. Many of the accused pleaded guilty.

A movement for the formation of a British League has been commenced at Glasgow, the fundamental principles of which are to procure and circulate accurate and authentic information regarding national and colonial industry and interests, to watch the character of all measures introduced into the imperial or colonial legislatures which affect our industrial interests; and to promote and maintain a harmonious intercourse between the industries of the British Empire.

The Jesuits driven from Europe are flocking to the United States. It is stated that no less than 800 of them are now on their way from the Atlantic coast to the west, and that their purpose is to found a community beyond the Rocky Mountains.

During the sitting of the National Assembly of France on Friday, last week, M. Maurilne, the black representative for the colony of Martinique, whose features are those of the darkest hue, and of the true negro type, drew all eyes upon him on his entering for the first time to take his seat, by walking up through the Assembly to the extreme end of the Chamber, where, seated under the clock, he coolly drew out an eye-glass, and proceeded leisurely to examine the different parts of the Assembly. It was some moments before the President could procure sufficient attention to allow the discussion on the Constitution to proceed.

It is stated that the works at the new Houses of Parliament are to be entirely stopped during the winter, in consequence of the masons' strike. On Saturday 300 of the men were discharged, and it is said 800 more will be dispensed with this week.

Orders have been issued to all departments under the control of the Treasury, that whenever a vacancy occurs, no promotion or new appointment is to take place until special inquiry has been made whether the office cannot be reduced.

On Thursday (last week), another convoy of emigrants, consisting of 85 persons above the age of two years, and 70 children under that age, left Paris for Algeria.

On the 1st of this month the decree for the complete emancipation of the Jews of the Roman States came into force. They are thereby declared fit for the exercise of all civil rights.

An official work thus briefly sums up the casualties among naval officers since the United States have had a navy: Died, 294; killed in action, 52; killed in duels, 21; killed by accidents, 7; drowned, 67; lost at sea, 87; murdered, 6; resigned, 163; dismissed, 402; cashiered, 81; discharged under peace establishment, 227; discharged, 106; last appearance or unknown, 645; deserted, 71; in service, 1856—total, 3750.

By an elaborate and interesting report furnished to the Court of Quarter Sessions of Durham by the Chaplain of the County Prison, it is proved that during the last year crime has increased thirty-three per cent. in that county.

It is stated that an important change is about to be introduced into the French infantry—all the soldiers are to be trained to artillery service. This arises from the observation that frequently in campaigns the artillerymen are put "hors de service" the guns become useless, and that cannon taken from the enemy are frequently obliged to be spiked for want of men to serve them.

It is somewhat singular that the Duke of Rutland should win the Leger and Stakes, with Nina; the Duke of Bedford, the Bedford Stakes, with St. Rosalie; and Lord Chesterfield, the Brethy (his Lordship's seat), with Sister to Ariervista.

A man who lost his leg by railway accident has adopted the plan of exhibiting, in the market-place of Lincoln, a rough sketch of himself and the rail at the place where the carriage was passed over his leg, underneath the picture being written, "They won't give me nothing."

M. Olozaga, formerly President of the Council of Ministers at Madrid, has arrived at Paris, coming from London and Paris. It is said that he intends remaining with his family at Bayonne.

The large quantity of 41,323 boxes, casks, and other packages of tobacco; 782 casks of porter, 96 packages of hams and tongues, 719 casks of lard, 1063 barrels of beef, and casks of butter; 934 barrels and 1 case of packages of salmon, 42 of honey, 22 of pork, 163 of malt, and a variety of articles of food of lesser importance and extent, were imported into the metropolis from Ireland, the produce of that country, during the eighteen days comprising from the 23rd ult. to the 14th instant.

The disciples of Fourrier held their annual banquet on Saturday, at the Jardin d'Hiver. About 700 persons, many of whom were families and children, sat down to the tables. Amongst the toasts were the following:—"Fourrier, whom his disciples called the first demiurge of the earth!" "The unity of the human species, and the extinction of war!" "The democratic and social republic!" and "The droit au travail!" The banquet was conducted with [illegible] order, and in the evening an immense number of persons were admitted by tickets to hear the speeches and the concert.

The first railway in Spain, from Barcelona to Mattaro, has just been opened. It is five leagues long.

On Monday, Mr. Hodgson, the auctioneer, again put up to public competition, by order of the mortgagees in possession, the copyright and printed stock of the Pharmaceutical Times. Bidders were very shy, and after considerable delay it was knocked down to Messrs. Palmer and Clayton, the printers, for £130.

The next anniversary of the Birmingham Corn Exchange was celebrated by a dinner in that establishment on Thursday. C. F. Newdegate, Esq., M.P., Richard Spooner, Esq., M.P. (the Members for the borough), and the High Bailiff, were among the invited guests.

At the late Quarter Sessions held at Berwick, there were no criminal cases for trial. This is the fourth occasion in succession at which there has been no business before the Court.

The Sémaphore de Marseilles of the 20th inst. announces that the Board of Health had ordered the pilots to bring into Pomegue or the Frioul all the vessels arriving from the Baltic, England, Ireland, and Holland, which should have sailed from thence since the 9th inst. They were to be there subjected to a quarantine of nine days.

Lieut.-Gen. Sir G. K. Williams is to succeed the late Sir Maurice O'Connell in the colonelcy of the 80th Foot; and Lieut.-General Sir Guy Campbell the late Sir Charles Maxwell in the Colonelcy of the 3rd West India Regiment.

Letters from Tarbes announce that the potato disease has appeared in the worst form in the department of the Upper Pyrenees.

A return moved for last August by Colonel Sibthorp, M.P., shows that the gross total expense of the numerous "Commissions of Inquiry" appointed by Parliament since the year 1830, including the salaries of Commissioners, clerks, officers, &c., amounts to £248,372. Of these commissions, the great majority have expired, there being only about 14 still in existence.

Lieutenant (now Capt.) Hamilton, Captain Labelmoiderie, and another military gentleman, all employed under the Board of Poor-law Commissioners in Ireland as Poor-law Inspectors, have received orders to join their respective corps. Some of those gentlemen have been, it is said, fully six years employed in Ireland.

The Iberia, which left Southampton on the 17th inst., was unable to get pratique at Vigo, in consequences of a rumour which reached the authorities of the Spanish port that the cholera was prevalent at Edinburgh. The Vigo and Oporto mails, after being fumigated, were delivered to the British Consul at Vigo through the health officer. The Oporto mails were sent overland, from Vigo. The Iberia will not get pratique at Lisbon, Cadiz, nor Gibraltar, in consequence of being refused pratique at Vigo.

A silver cradle is to be presented to Mrs. Thrall, the wife of the Mayor of Liverpool, on Saturday (this day). "This (says the Liverpool Standard) will receive a very general civic sanction, while it will express the kind sense which the donors entertain of his worship."

Lord J. Russell has appointed next Monday, at one o'clock, for the reception from the Peace Congress at Brussels, [illegible] deputation that body to the British Government.

On Wednesday evening a crowded soirée was held in the large room of the Wellington Club in commemoration of the second centenary of the nationality of Switzerland as acknowledged by the powers of Europe in the treaty of Westphalia. The appearance in the room of some of the French National Guard, which formed a part of the escort of honour, was greeted with loud cheering, at which the citizen soldiers seemed greatly gratified. The "Marseillaise" was sung by Mr. Collet.

PROCESSION OF THE NEW ARCHBISHOP OF PARIS, FROM NOTRE DAME.

PROCESSION OF THE NEW ARCHBISHOP OF PARIS.

On Wednesday, the 18th instant, M. Sibour, the new Archbishop of Paris, who took possession of his See by deputy on the 12th, made his solemn entry into the metropolitan church. The chapter, curés, and vicaires of the Diocese, the seminaries, ecclesiastical communities, and an immense crowd of the faithful, were assembled.

On arriving at the great door of the church, the Prelate was complimented by the Abbé Gagneraet, first Vicar-General, Archdiacre of Notre Dame, and Dean of the Chapter, who, in a well-timed speech, reminded the new Archbishop, that, three months before, the walls of the church were ornamented with inscriptions in honour of the pastor who had given his life for his flock; and that the church of Paris, laying aside its mourning, saw with joy the arrival of a pastor disposed to make the same sacrifice, if God should require it.

The Archbishop replied in suitable terms.

He was then conducted to the altar, where some prayers were said. He then ascended the pulpit, and delivered an address to the people on the duty of the pastor to the flock and the flock to the pastor. On returning to the altar he received the obedience of all the priests, who, two by two, kissed his ring, and he gave them his blessing. This ceremony terminated, he chanted from his pontifical chair the vespers of St. Denis, first Bishop of Paris, after which he gave the solemn benediction. The "Te Deum" was then chanted; and on its conclusion the clergy, in procession, re-conducted the Archbishop to the archiepiscopal residence. A considerable crowd pressed round the procession, and the Archbishop frequently gave his blessing to the people.

The Illustration shows the procession as the Archbishop went to take possession of the Palace in the Isle of St. Louis, after the consecration at Notre Dame. The cortège is just emerging from one of the gateways placed at the extremity of the suspension bridge that joins the Isle of the City with that of St. Louis. The crowd of persons kneeling, especially women and children, was very great: there were many nuns present; and the windows, balconies, and roofs were crowded with spectators. Lines of priests (perhaps numbering 2000) extended to the Cathedral. The Archbishop, preceded by halberdiers and other functionaries, is blessing the multitude as he bears the crozier.

FUNERAL OF THE EARL OF CARLISLE.

In our Journal of last week we briefly recorded the interment of the mortal remains of George, sixth Earl of Carlisle, in the catacombs of the Mausoleum erected by Vanbrugh, in the park of Castle Howard. It is circular in plan, surmounted by a dome, and surrounded by a handsome Doric colonnade. Within above the vault, is a circular chapel, 34 feet in diameter, and 60 feet high; with a circle of Corinthian columns, supporting the entablature upon which rests the dome, faced internally with mosaic, in squares, with a rose in each. The floor is of marble, and the fittings are ornamentally carved. The reading desk, &c. were on this mournful occasion hung with black cloth.

Early on Tuesday week, the day of the Funeral, the weather promised to be fair; and before noon great numbers of persons were making their way by the various routes towards Castle Howard. The bright sunny morning was, however, succeeded by almost incessant rain, from which hundreds of well-dressed persons in the Park could get no refuge. The Funeral was appointed to take places at 3 o'clock; and, owing to the stormy weather continuing, many persons were prevented joining it who had travelled several miles for that purpose. Very punctually, however, the procession left the Castle for the Mausoleum in the following order:—

FUNERAL OF THE EARL OF CARLISLE, AT CASTLE HOWARD.

ALLHALLOW EVEN.—DRAWN BY DODGSON.

Four Mutes.
Page. The Undertaker. Page.
Treasurer—two abreast.
Tradesmen—two abreast.
Gamekeepers and Park-keepers on horseback.
Page. The House Steward (Mr Thorpe) on horseback with the Coronet and Cushion Page.
Mute. Board of Plumes. Mute.
Six THE HEARSE, Six
Bearers. drawn by Six Horses, with Escutcheons and Ostrich Feathers Bearers.
Four Mourning Coaches, each drawn by four horses, and attended by Pages.
First Mourning Coach, containing the present Earl of Carlisle, the Dowager Countess of Carlisle, the Hon. E. Howard, and the Lady Caroline Lascelles
Second Mourning Coach, containing the Lady Dover, the Duchess of Sutherland, the Hon C. Howard, and the Hon. W. Lascelles
Third Mourning Coach, containing the Lady Elizabeth Grey, Lady Mary Howard, the Earl of Burlington, and Lord Cavendish
Fourth Mourning Coach, containing the Hon. Mrs E. Howard, Miss Ellis, Lord Cilden, and Mr Ellis
Fifth Mourning Coach, containing Miss Lascelles, Miss H. Lascelles, Miss D Lascelles, Mr. J. Ellis, and Mr Locke (the late Earl's solicitor)
Sixth Mourning Coach, containing Mr Sheffield and Mr. Teesdale (the medical attendants), Mr Henderson (the steward), Mr Carter, Mr Calverwell, and Mr Reynolds.
A Chariot, containing the Honourable and Reverend H. Grey and the Reverend W. Walker (the officiating clergy)
The late Earl's Private Carriage, with outriders.
Private carriages.

On the procession reaching the Mausoleum, the body was conveyed into the edifice, and the mourners having been seated, the service was read in a most impressive manner by the Hon. and Rev. H. Grey, assisted by the late Earl's private chaplain, the Rev. W. Walker. In the chapel were Sir Tatton Sykes, Bart., Sir W. Worsley, Bart., W. Garforth, Esq., Colonel Norcliff, R. Bower, Esq., and others of the neighbouring gentry, who were present to testify their high respect for the deceased Earl. The catacombs were lighted with wax in silver chandeliers, which, with the black cloth draperies, had a sombre effect.

The shell was lined with rich white satin, and inclosed in a lead coffin. The outer coffin was made of the finest English oak, covered with black silk velvet, with richly chased gold tire, and silver plate, on which was engraved a coronet, and the following inscription in Old English characters:—"The Right Hon. George, sixth Earl of Carlisle, died October 7th, 1848, aged 75."

The arrangements of the funeral were under the direction of Messrs. G. and T. Beale, of Leeds, and were efficiently conducted. The funeral equipage was furnished by Messrs Smalpage and Firby, of Leeds. In our Illustration, the cortège being shown in the distance, the superior description of the appointments is not seen. The Hearse is of appropriate architectural design.

In the Leeds Mercury, the number of spectators assembled in the Park is estimated at 4000; but, had the weather been fine, the number would probably have been trupled.

At the appointed hour for the interment, the great bell of York Minster was tolled.

In the Illustration, the procession is seen advancing through the Park to the Mausoleum, at which moment the rain and sleet fell heavily. In the view are shown one of the ornamental bridges, and part of the stately oak and beech woods of the domain—the latter being in splendid autumnal tint.

THE WEATHER.

Till Monday, the weather was mostly dull and bad, with rain falling frequently. Tuesday was a fine day, and Wednesday was rather fine after the early morning. The following are some particulars of each day: Thursday, the sky was for the most part covered by clouds, although at times it was partially, and at other times quite, clear; the direction of the wind was N., and the average temperature of the air was 47°. Friday, the sky was overcast, and rain was falling frequently; the direction of the wind was N., and the average temperature of the air was 46°. Saturday, rain was falling early in the morning; the sky after this time was generally cloudless; the direction of the wind was N. at the former part of the day, and S.W. at the latter part; the average temperature of the air was 45°. Sunday, till the evening the sky was overcast, and it was principally free from cloud after this time; the direction of the wind was S., and the average temperature of the air was 44°. Monday, rain was falling frequently during the day, at times heavily; the direction of the wind was S., and the average temperature of the air was 50°. Tuesday was a fine day; the sky was at times partially free from clouds, but it was mostly covered by a thin cirrostratus, and there was a coloured solar halo; the direction of the wind was S.W., and then S.; the average temperature of the air was 52°. Wednesday, there was a gale of wind in the morning; after this, the sky was mostly cloudless; the direction of the wind was W.S.W., and the average temperature of the air was 52°; and that for the week ending this day was 49°.

The following are the extreme thermometrical readings of each day:—

Thursday,	Oct. 19	the highest during the day was	53 deg.,	and the lowest was 42 deg.
Friday,	Oct. 20	.....	50	 43
Saturday,	Oct. 21	.....	51	 36
Sunday,	Oct. 22	.....	57	 33
Monday,	Oct. 23	.....	56	 43
Tuesday,	Oct. 24	.....	57	 47
Wednesday,	Oct. 25	.....	59	 45

Blackheath, Thursday, October 26th, 1848. J. G.

ALLHALLOW EVEN.

THE revels of this olden festival of October—the Vigil of All Saints' Day, which is on the 1st of November—are pictured with truly artistic feeling, in the accompanying Illustration. One of the amusements customary on this night with young people in the North of England is to dive for apples, or catch at them when stuck upon one end of a kind of hanging beam, at the other extremity of which is fixed a lighted candle; and that with their mouths only, their hands being tied behind their backs.

Nuts and apples chiefly compose the entertainment; and from the custom of flinging the former into the fire, or cracking them with the teeth, it has had its vulgar name of Nutcrack Night.

The catching at the apple and candle reminds one of the ancient English game of the Quintain, now almost forgotten.

The throwing of Nuts into the fire is beautifully described by Gay, in his "Spell."

Two hazel nuts I threw into the flame,
And to each nut I gave a sweetheart's name:
This with the loudest bounce me sore amazed,
That in a flame of brightest colour blazed.
As blazed the nut, so warm the passion grow,
For 'twas thy nut that did so brightly glow!

In a collection of poems by Charles Graydon, Esq., printed in Dublin in 1801, we find this apt illustration:

These glowing nuts are emblems true
Of what in human life we view
The ill-matched couple fret and fume,
And tuns in strife themselves consume;
Or from each other wildly start,
And with a noise fly over part
But see the happy, happy pair,
Of genuine love and truth sincere;
With mutual fondness while they burn,
Still to each other kindly turn;
And as the vital sparks decay,
Together gently sink away;
Till life's fierce ordeal being past,
Their mingled ashes rest at last.

The object of this sport was to propitiate omens touching matrimony; when, if the nuts lay still, and burned together, they prognosticated a happy marriage, or hopeful love; if, on the contrary, they bounced and flew asunder, the sign was unpropitious. There is a similar custom in Ireland, and Burns has commemorated the sports of this festival, "cheep and cheery," in the west of Scotland—

Some merry, friendly countra folks,
Together did convene
To burn their nits, and pou their stocks,
And haud their Hallow'en,
Fu' blythe that night.

THE TREE KANGAROO AND BLACK LEOPARD.

SPECIMENS of these rare and highly interesting animals have just been added to the Menagerie of the Zoological Society, in the Regent's Park, through the kindness of Lieutenant-Colonel Butterworth, Governor of Singapore, by whom they have been presented to the Society.

The Tree Kangaroo (Dendrolagus ursinus) we have figured in the first that has arrived in Europe alive. Its habits, &c., are perfectly unknown, and it is hoped that the specimen now here may live, so that its manners may be better observed. Its general appearance much assimilates to the common Kangaroo, having many of that animal's peculiarities. We find the upper lip slit; the claw of the inner toe (third foot) double, as in the Kangaroo. It seems to have the power of moving very quickly on a tree: sometimes bolding tight with its fore feet, and bringing its hind feet up together with a jump; at other times climbing ordinarily.

The Black Leopard is supposed to be a variety of the common Leopard; for there seems to be no specific difference by which to separate them. Though in general it looks black, yet in some lights you still see the blacker spots showing through, giving a peculiarly beautiful embossed appearance.

Pennant, in his "History of Quadrupeds," 1793, figures a black Leopard, and describes the variety as follows:

"In the Tower of London is a black variety, brought from Bengal by Warren Hastings, Esq. The colour universally is a dusky black, sprinkled over with spots of a glossy black, disposed in the same form as those of the Leopard; on turning aside the hair, beneath appears a tinge of the natural colour."

TREE KANGAROO AND BLACK LEOPARD, IN THE MENAGERIE OF THE ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY, REGENT'S-PARK.

ON WEDNESDAY, 1st NOVEMBER, WILL BE PUBLISHED

THE ILLUSTRATED

LONDON ALMANACK

FOR 1849;

Being the Fifth Annual Issue of this most beautifully embellished and useful Almanack. Illustrated by RICHARD DOYLE, B. FOSTER, &c.; and finely engraved by DALZIEL, VIZETELLY, &c. Country Scenes, by THOMAS MILLER; besides a variety of useful Tables usually published in Almanacks. The Astronomical Department by JAMES GLAISHER, Esq., F.R.A.S., and of the Royal Observatory, Greenwich.

Published by WILLIAM LITTLE, 198, Strand, London.

 Country orders supplied for cash only.

ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION. A LECTURE on SANITARY MEASURES connected with Health, Disease, and Longevity, by Dr. KAHN, at Three, Half-past Four, and Eight. Also, on the Manufacture of Cast Iron, by Mr. WILLIAMS, at Half-past Three and Eight. An entirely new Dissolving Panorama, by Mr. CHILDREN, illustrating the Chromatropes, with New Effects. The Vertascope and the Cyclorama. Lyric and Diving-Bell. Working Models explained. Admission, 1s.; Schools, Half-price. The New Catalogue, 1s.

HALL of ROME, Great Windmill-street, Haymarket.—Fifth Castle ascent for the Coral Fairy (from the great Exhibition), by Mr. ETHERIDGE, Esq., R.A.M. The Midsummer's Night's Dream, and numerous new Scenes and Tableaux never before attempted in this or any other Room. Wonderful Sport with the Cascade, or Fairy Fountain, by Mr. ARCHER, the Performer of the Feats. Mr. W. G. WARWICK will be repeatedly seen plunging and swimming with his head under water. Also the much-admired tableau of Venus rising from the Sea. Morning Performance at Three. Exchange of Lights, Shells, Illuminations, Scenes, &c., every week. Admission, 1s.

WALHALLA.—SALLE DE VALENTINO, Leicester-square. This spacious and elegant SALOON is OPEN EVERY EVENING. The Lighting, Warming, and Ventilation of the Room are on the most approved principles for the accommodation of thousands who attend. All lovers of Dancing are invited to visit this delightful Temple of Terpsichore. The dancing is regulated by four masters of the ceremonies in full costume. The new and much-admired Quadrille, "Jacquette and Jacko," every evening. Musical conductor Herr Redl. Doors open at a Quarter past Eight; Dancing to Commence at Half-past Eight, and Close at Half-past Eleven.—Admission, 1s.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, Oct. 29.—Nineteenth Sunday after Trinity.
MONDAY, 30. The sun rises at 6h. 53m., and sets at 4h. 30m.
TUESDAY, 31. All Hallows Eve.
WEDNESDAY, Nov. 1.—All Saints. Venus sets at 5h. 33m. P.M.
THURSDAY, 2.—All Saints. Michaelmas Term begins.
FRIDAY, 3.—Day breaks at 5h. 4m., and twilight ends at 6h. 22m.
SATURDAY, 4.—King William III. landed. The Moon enters her first quarter at 6h. 2m. P.M.

The planet Saturn will be in the constellation Pisces during the month of November; he is an evening star, and sets midway between the W. and the W. by S. points of the horizon, on the 1st, at 2h. 12m. A.M.; on the 15th, at 1h. 13m. A.M.; and on the last day, at 0h. 16m. A.M. He rises at about 2h. P.M., and sunbs at an altitude of 28° on every day on the 1st, at 6h. 36m. P.M.; on the 15th, at 7h. 42m. P.M.; and on the last day, at 6h. 43m. P.M. His motion among the stars during the month is slowly westward at the beginning, and eastward at the end of the month, the planet being stationary with respect to the stars about the middle of the month. He is near the moon on the 7th. The ring is invisible. These particulars were not inserted in the ILLUSTRATED LONDON ALMANACK for this month, for the want of room, and therefore they are inserted here.

TIMES OF HIGH WATER AT LONDON BRIDGE, FOR THE WEEK ENDING NOVEMBER 4.

Sunday	Monday	Tuesday	Wednesday	Thursday	Friday	Saturday
M. h m	A. M. h m	A. M. h m	A. M. h m	A. M. h m	A. M. h m	A. M. h m
3 10	3 52	4 40	5 32	6 31	7 40	8 51
A. M. h m	A. M. h m	A. M. h m	A. M. h m	A. M. h m	A. M. h m	A. M. h m
3 36	4 23	5 13	6 13	7 23	8 36	9 45
P.M. h m	P.M. h m	P.M. h m	P.M. h m	P.M. h m	P.M. h m	P.M. h m
4 2	4 50	5 46	6 55	8 6	9 17	10 21
P.M. h m	P.M. h m	P.M. h m	P.M. h m	P.M. h m	P.M. h m	P.M. h m
4 28	5 17	6 19	7 36	8 48	9 56	10 57

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"A Subscriber," Auchterarden.—The coin is numismatically of no value.

"Twin." Dependent upon the neighbourhood.

"M. A. B." Retired.

"A Constant Reader," Liverpool, should inquire of some bookseller in his town.

"C. P. C. W."—Taylor's Short-hand," improved by Harding.

"M. A. W.," Neath.—To a bookseller.

Pearson," Huntingdon.—We cannot interfere to card questions.

"P. S. T." We do not remember

"A Subscriber,' Little Moorfields.—The motto is, "Be faithful, even in adversity."

"C. B." Oxford.—The song is not suitable

"G. H. B.," "Jachin," and "Boaz." Your questions are too trifling.

"Abel Log."—We have not room

"A. B."—A work on "Vegetable Cookery" is published by Wilson, Royal Exchange.

"L. . ." See the Treatises on Electricity and Optics in the "Library of Useful Knowledge."

"H. F. W.,' Co. Meath. We cannot spare room.

"J. W. S.," Old Kent-road, should advertise.

"A Subscriber."—Lowe's work is in the Queen's Library.

"P. H.," Sandham.—The time and place will be shortly announced.

"T. T. M. D."—We will inquire.

"W. H.," Hull.—To the Mechanics' Magazine.

"H. S. T."—Derlanco

"Miss A. C.," Cork, is recommended to send the Views to a bookbinder

"R. Q." The light of the sun is eight minutes and eight seconds in its transmission through the space from that orb to the earth.

"T. H. G.," Feston. The idea is ingenious; but a newspaper is not a proper vehicle for its publication

"E. A. C." The MS. has been returned to Bovey Tracy, Newton Abbott.

"Anna."—We cannot refuse you.

"Alpha" has not plainly stated his question.

"Pale Ball,' Birmingham.—We have not illustrated the localities in question.

"J. C. C.," Hull.—We think not.

"A Constant Reader."—No. 60 of our Journal may be had by forwarding 1s. in postage stamps to our office

"C. S. Exeter.—We cannot inform you.

"T. E. M.," Dublin, is thanked, but we cannot find room.

"C. W. P.," Boston. Enclosed for our Journal

"A Bachelor." The charge by a respectable Solicitor would, probably, be two guineas

"W. H. B.," near Bradford. A respectful letter would prove a refresher.

"W. H. D.," Dronfield, Germany. Your correspondent's letter is a counterpart of hundreds of such communications with which printsellers are every year inundated, and they are puzzled how to advise in such cases. One thing is quite certain, that there is no Engraving of Swift when young. In fact, all the prints he has been engraved from nearly the same picture, repeated in various forms, that is the whole length, in Dublin, of which the best and most accurate engraving is in Monck Mason's history of St. Patrick's Cathedral," Dublin, in which, by the way, is the most accurate life of Swift. Young portraits of him may exist as paintings, but we have never seen or heard of them.

"E. F. B." The price of a serjeant in the Light Dragoons is £840

"S. Barrister." Countenances in the Marines are not, we believe, purchasable.

"George Gudilin." The only means by which the appointment of Pursuivant or Herald can be obtained is the favour of the Duke of Norfolk. His Grace has the sole patronage of the Heralds' Office, and appoints all its members. The appointments are not now purchaseable

"A Subscriber."—Influence at the Horse Guards would much expedite the attainment of a commission in the Army, but is not indispensable

"A Constant Reader" must apply at the Austrian Embassy.

"A Constant Reader," Bangor, Anglesea.—From the general statement which our correspondent is so good as to send us, it was clapparent that a change of Christian name existed some [illegible] at Chelmsford.

"C. H.," Bonnington Mount, Hucknall-under-Huthwaite, Notts.

"H. R.," Stone-fold. Any music-seller

"W. J. L." Sidup.—The two celebrated designs, "Night" and "Morning," of which sketches have been received, are by Thornhillers

"A Five Years' Subscriber," Sidup.—We regret that we cannot inform you.

"Amicus" In Degra the accent is on the first syllable; in Balmoral, on the second

"A Z." may find the Table in question in some of the Almanacks for 1849.

"A Reader," Andrew" Her Majesty's Theatre, Haymarket"

"R. H." Reading. The "Law of Parochial Settlement," published by Benning, [illegible]

"[illegible]," near Ware, Herts," Cold-street, Hockham-st, Kent."

"L. A." [illegible] you are to [illegible]

[illegible] is decided that the sons of ex-Aldermen are not [illegible]

[illegible] which appeared in our Journal of to-day, have been approved of by Capt. [illegible]

"A Lady" must hear of Scott's Stores at any respectable ironmonger's

"W. D."—The boat race [illegible] was rowed on the Cross of St. Louis in June last See the Sporting Intelligence of the 21

"R."—I entertain a [illegible] the doctrine is maintained that the witness is God [illegible] of heathens at the open-air of those who maintain that [illegible]

"J. C."—The Adelphi [illegible] belong to us King-street, Covent-garden. We cannot [illegible] the date of "the Dukes' letter.

It was last week to have been expected, from the tenour of the unconnected scraps of intelligence which reached this country from various parts of the Austrian Empire, that a decisive battle either in or before Vienna was at that time imminent. A change, however, in the relative position of the belligerents has taken place. The Hungarian army, which, according to some of these accounts, was encamped within sight of the walls of Vienna, is now reported to have declined entering the territory of Austria Proper. At a meeting of the Austrian Diet on the 18th instant, the fact was announced by Herr Schuselka, who stated that the Hungarian army acted under orders from the Hungarian Diet. He added, amid deep silence in the Assembly, that he could not tell whether this resolution on the part of their friends was the result of the interview which the Hungarian deputation had had with Count Auersperg, or whether it had been caused by any menaces on the part of Russia. The Viennese do not appear to have lost heart in consequence. They still reckon upon the support of the Hungarians, and upon that of the democratic party throughout all the states of Germany. A deputation appointed by the ultras in the Frankfort Assembly, to express sympathy with, and offer aid to, the Viennese, arrived on the 17th, and were received with the utmost enthusiasm.

There are no precise accounts of the proceedings of Jellachich; nor is the position of Windischgrätz or his intentions towards Vienna to be very clearly understood from such flying and often contradictory rumours as find their way into the German papers. It is certain, however, that Auersperg awaits at Inzersdorf the orders of the Emperor.

It seems probable that the Milanese have taken advantage of the critical position of the Empire to strike a new blow for their independence; and that the King of Sardinia is on the watch for a favourable moment to renew the war. Intelligence of an outbreak at Milan was received by electric telegraph on Wednesday. It is stated that the people, although unarmed, had attacked the Croats of Radetsky; that a general rising had taken place; that the tocsin was rung from all the belfries of the capital and the surrounding district; and that Radetzky had mined the palaces and the splendid Cathedral (a world's wonder, and the especial pride of the Milanese), and threatened to lay them in ruins. The Milanese seem to have calculated for support on the Hungarians, who form a large portion of the forces under Radetsky, and many of whom had openly avowed their reluctance to be made instrumental in the subjugation of the Italians. No details or confirmation of this intelligence have been received up to the time at which we write; but their authenticity is generally believed.

The discussions upon the French Constitution were brought to a close on Monday night. They have excited marvellously little interest in France, and still less in this country. The election of President is felt in both to be a matter of more immediate importance. The Committee on the Constitution, having finished their labours, and seen the new Charter safely through the perils of debate, have recommended that the President be elected on the 10th of December. A special decree to this effect has been presented, and, as neither of the great parties in the Assembly is opposed to it, the probability is that it will be forthwith agreed to. A project for the adjournment of the Assembly until after the election has been warmly opposed. General Cavaignac expressed his readiness to be responsible for the maintenance of order in the absence of the Assembly; but M. Thiers and the Moderate party have declared that no consideration whatever should induce the Assembly to abandon its post, even for a single day. They feel that the Assembly, although, by passing the Constitution, it has in reality effected the purpose for which it was called together, is virtually the only authority in France; and that, if it were to separate, the chance would be, in the excited temper of the Red Republicans, that on its return it would find the doors closed against it. M. Ducoux, the ex-Prefect of Police, said as much, with a significant hint of the desirability of such a consummation. The danger is so obvious, that the Moderate majority are forewarned and forearmed, and scarcely need the eloquent exhortations of M. Thiers to avoid committing themselves. We may expect that a host of candidates for the Presidency will declare themselves as soon as the Assembly shall have definitively agreed upon the day of election. The ultras are undecided between M. Ledru-Rollin and M. Raspail. The former has gone on a tour to the provinces, with the avowed purpose of strengthening his own chances. The latter is a prisoner in the castle of Vincennes, and cannot employ the same tactics; but the Red Republicans seem to consider M. Raspail the captive a better "card" to play than M. Ledru-Rollin the free man, and to see in his imprisonment an additional claim to their support. M. Lamartine is spoken of by another section of the Republicans, but his chances are not great. It seems probable that the real contest will be between General Cavaignac, M. Thiers, and M. Louis Napoleon Bonaparte.

The Lord Mayor of London is not quite so powerful or important a personage as the Prefect of the Seine; but in the imagination of the French he plays a part as conspicuous. In their eyes he represents not the ancient City of London alone, but the vast and magnificent metropolis which has grown around it. We therefore feel no surprise that they should invest him with an importance which is not his due; and that their National Guards, who have in such large numbers made their appearance in our streets, should express their good-will towards England, by a friendly call upon the Lord Mayor. A party of three hundred, introduced by a note from their Ambassador, waited upon his Lordship at the Mansion-House, on Wednesday; and the Commandant, in the name of his travelling companions, expressed the gratification they felt at the kind and cordial reception they had met from all classes of the people on their visit to the British metropolis. He added that it was the ardent wish of the National Guard of Paris that the good understanding and the kind feeling which prevailed between the two countries should meet with no interruption, and he expressed his belief that such visits as these, and such receptions as the English people had given them, were calculated to cement and increase the friendship of the two nations. We quite agree in the Commandant's sentiment, and in the sensible reply of the Lord Mayor. We wish, for the sake of the French, far more than for our own, that they know a little more of us and of our institutions; and that they would study the results of our quiet and rational liberty, not alone from the distant point of Paris, and from the midst of the ideas of Paris, but from the English soil itself. They would by that means learn a fact which is of so much importance to them and all Europe—to understand that real liberty is not the growth of a day; that it is the result not of abstract theories violently established, but of the habits and virtues of an industrious, intelligent, and peaceful community; and that it must be elaborated by time, and strengthened by experience. No people can be free before they are fitted by political education to become so. In this essential the French are as yet deficient; but a more intimate intercourse with England, and more frequent opportunities of fraternizing with our people, will enable them to understand somewhat better than they do at present, the conditions under which nations can achieve and consolidate the only liberty that is worthy of the name. We trust also, for our own sakes, that the good understanding between the two nations will be permanent; and that gradually the old animosities that have separated them will die out amongst the French, as they have died out amongst ourselves.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

THE COURT AT WINDSOR.

On Saturday afternoon the Queen of the Belgians, attended by the Countess de Hinel, arrived at the Castle. Lord J. Russell left the Castle in the course of the day.

On Sunday morning the Queen and Prince Albert, the ladies and gentlemen of the Court, and the domestic household, attended divine service in the private chapel of the Castle

On Monday morning Prince Albert enjoyed the sport of shooting.

On Tuesday evening, the Royal dinner-party at the Castle included the Duchess of Kent, the Duchess of Gloucester, the Princess of Hohenlohe-Langenbourg, the Lord Chancellor and Lady Cottenham, Lady Anna Maria Dawson, Lady Caroline Murray, Baroness de Spath, Viscount and Viscountess Hardinge, the Right Hon. Sir Robert and Lady Peel, Sir G. Couper, and Colonel Reid.

On Wednesday the Royal dinner party at the Castle included the Duchess of Kent, the Duchess of Gloucester, the Princess of Hohenlohe-Langenbourg, the Lord Chancellor and Lady Cottenham, Lady Anna Maria Dawson, Lady Caroline Murray, the Baroness de Spath, Viscount and Viscountess Hardinge, Sir Robert and Lady Peel, Sir George Couper, and Mr. Glover

A CABINET COUNCIL was held on Tuesday afternoon at the Foreign Office. The Ministers present were Lord John Russell, the Lord Chancellor, the Marquis of Lansdowne, the Earl of Minto, Sir G. Grey, Viscount Palmerston, Earl Grey, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the Earl of Auckland, Sir J. Hobhouse, the Right Hon. H. Labouchere, Lord Campbell, the Marquis of Clanricarde, and the Earl of Carlisle. The Earl of Clarendon was present at the Council. The Council last three hours.

THE Earl of Clarendon had an interview with Lord J. Russell on Monday, at his official residence in Downing-street. The noble Earl had also an interview with Sir G. Grey.

THE Chancellor of the Exchequer has arrived in town from his seat, Hickleton-hall, Yorkshire.

THE Lord Chancellor has appointed Thursday, the 2nd November, for the reception of the Lord Mayor Elect, at his residence in Park-lane, on which occasion the noble and learned Lord will signify her Majesty's approbation of the election of Lord Mayor. The Lord Chancellor will afterwards receive the Judges, Queen's Counsel, &c., Thursday being the first day of Michaelmas Term.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

OXFORD. Oct. 21.

AN EXAMINATION, for the purpose of electing a Sanscrit Scholar on the foundation of Colonel Boden, will take place in the Clarendon on Thursday, Nov. 23, at 10 o'clock

TWO FELLOWSHIPS are now vacant in Brasenose College, which will be filled up in the course of the present Term. 1. One of the original foundation of the College, for natives of the ancient diocese of Lichfield and Coventry, the election having regard in their choice to the preference given by the statutes in the first degree to the natives of Prescot and Prestbury, and in the second to natives of the counties of Lancaster and Chester. 2. One of the foundation of Brian Higden, for natives of the county of York. Graduates of the University of Oxford, under eight years' standing, are eligible. Candidates are required to exhibit to the Principal, on or before Saturday, Nov. 11, the usual testimonies and certificates.

CAMBRIDGE. Oct. 26.

ELECTION OF PUBLIC ORATOR. The polling for the Public Oratorship commence 1 on Thursday morning, and within the Senate House the proceedings were carried on with much spirit The following is the close of the poll:—Bateson, 458; Williams, 396: majority, 62.

CONSECRATION OF HURSLEY CHURCH. On Tuesday the Bishop of Winchester consecrated the parish church of Hursley. The present new erection covers the whole space occupied by the former parish church. The old walls are cased in the new ones; the old tower stands, but the building is considerably prolonged eastward. The former church was built about 150 years ago or more, and that, too, upon the site of another. Mr. Harrison is the architect, and the style is the Decorated.

LAYING THE FOUNDATION STONE OF A NEW CHURCH.—On Tuesday the ceremony of laying the foundation-stone of a new church took place at Saltley, a hamlet two miles from Birmingham. The site has been given by Mr. C. B. Adderley, M.P., who also contributed £3000 towards the erection, and undertakes to provide an endowment of £150 a year. Mr. Wright, the railway-carriage builder, has given £500. The church is to be 107 feet in length, and its entire breadth, at the transepts, about 83 feet, with chancel, two aisles, and two porches north and south. The nave is to be clerestory; there is to be an embattled tower on the western side of the nave transept; the building is to be in the Perpendicular style, of stone, and will cost about £6000

THE DEATH OF PROFESSOR TENNANT, of St. Andrew's, has caused a vacancy in the Professorship of that University as well as in Edinburgh Colleges. The endowment in St. Andrew's is £110, in Edinburgh £115. A subscription has been commenced to reimburse Mr. Macdonald for his expenses in contesting the Edinburgh Hebrew chair.

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

THE Commander-in-Chief has issued circulars to the commanding officers of the various regiments stationed in Great Britain and Ireland, requesting their opinion in respect to the new canteen regulations, whereby the sale of spirits is forbidden therein.

HEALTH OF THE TROOPS. We are happy to state that the accounts from head-quarters of each regiment are of a most satisfactory nature, and describe the troops to be generally in a healthy condition. Some of the men belonging to the 1st battalion of the 1st or Grenadier Foot Guards, now stationed at the Tower, have lately been suffering from complaints of the bowels, and other incipient cases of cholera, but there has not been any fatality. The regiments stationed in Ireland have suffered somewhat from fatigue, owing to the numerous and heavy marches in pursuit of the rebels. The most of these men had a different orders to march from Athlone to Limerick in 1846, that of distributing the Government relief in the famine district.

DRUNKENNESS IN THE ARMY.—The following circular has been issued:—"It being prescribed by the 75th article of war that the instances of drunkenness, whereby it may be proposed to prove a habit of drunkenness, are to be such only as are to be entered in the defaulters' books, it becomes indispensable that the last of the instances should, in all cases like the others, be so recorded, for the punishment of such habit. Some instance must be left to the Court, which will award such a sentence upon such last instance as may be deemed equitable after hearing evidence of the circumstance. By order of his Grace the Duke of Wellington, Commander-in-Chief: JOHN MACDONALD, Adjutant-General."

PRIZE MONEY. THE "MUTINE." Notice is given in Tuesday night's Gazette to the officers and company of her Majesty's sloop Mutine, Richard Borough Crawford, Esq., Commander, that an account of the balance of the proceeds of ivory and dollars found on board of, and of tonnage bounties for, an Arab boat or vessel, name unknown, seized on the 2nd of January, 1846, will be deposited in the Registry of the High Court of Admiralty on the 21st instant, agreeably to Act of Parliament. —THE "CONWAY." Notice is also given to the officers and company of her Majesty's ship Conway, William Kelly, Esq., Captain, that an account of the proceeds of, and tonnage bounties for, the Brazilian brigantine Boa Intrusa, seized on the 24th of May, 1847, will be deposited in the Registry of the said High Court of Admiralty on the 21st instant, agreeably to Act of Parliament.

WESTERN JEWISH GIRLS' FREE SCHOOL.—The second annual examination of the pupils of this charitable institution took place on Monday at the new schoolroom, 20, Dean street, Soho, the Duke of Cambridge presiding. A report was read by the secretary, from which it appeared that the progress of the school since its commencement had been most satisfactory. The number of pupils had increased from 13 to 93; and 11 of the children who had been apprenticed out had given the most satisfaction to their employers. The committee had been obliged to draw £50 of the reserve fund from the savings-bank; but trusted that future subscriptions would enable them to replace it, and to extend the usefulness of the institution. The report having been adopted, the children were examined by the Chief Rabbi in scripture history, Hebrew, and the usual elements of an English education, after which an occasional ode was recited, with music by the secretary, from Miss Elizabeth Phillips, one of the pupils; and the prizes having been distributed and a collection made, the proceedings terminated

HER MAJESTY'S "pardon" has been granted to John Smelley and William Lewis, convicted at the last Spring Assizes, Devon, for housebreaking and robbing on the highway Mr. James Reddicliffe, of Whitchurch, and sentenced to fifteen years' transportation. These men are labourers, and, from their condition in life, were prevented at the trial from bringing witnesses to prove an alibi, which was said to have been established, their cases having been benevolently taken up by Mr. R. P. Ker, counsel, and Mr. Holmes, attorney, of Tavistock.

POSTSCRIPT.

IRELAND.

THE CONVICTS AT CLONMEL.—An official notification was sent from the Castle on Thursday to William Smith O'Brien, J. F. Meagher, T. B. M'Manus, and Patrick O'Donohue, that the sentence passed upon them at the late commission, will be mitigated to transportation for life.

THE PRIEST'S ENCOUNTER AGAINST THE NEW IRISH COLLEGES. Copies of this long-expected and important document, addressed to the four Roman Catholic Archbishops, arrived in Dublin from Rome on Sunday last, and was published in the Freeman's Journal of Wednesday. The rescript, issued from the Propaganda, is dated the 11th instant, and is signed by Cardinal Fransoni. It reiterates a portion of the former rescript, which was considered adverse to the new colleges. Since that time, the new statutes have been drawn up, with a view of meeting all difficulties. Those statutes were recently published, with a letter from the Lord-Lieutenant, who transmitted them to Archbishop Murray. The present rescript, as I am informed, disapproves of those new statutes, and consequently of the system on which the colleges are to be conducted, even in the modified form. The Pope suggests to the Irish Roman Catholic Bishops the necessity of establishing a Catholic University in Ireland, entirely unconnected with the Government Colleges. Finally, his Holiness earnestly recommends a thorough and cordial union amongst the Roman Catholic prelates of Ireland.

NEWMARKET RACES.—FRIDAY.

	Sweeps for Two and Three-yr-olds.	T.Y.C.
Cotton Lord	.. ..	1
Cashier	.. ..	2
	Handicap. T.Y.C.
New Forest Deer	.. ..	1
Circus	.. ..	2
	Sweepstakes for Three-yr-olds. T.Y.C.
Archery	.. ..	1
Alphela	.. ..	2
	The Nursery Stakes—(First Class).
Stronghow	.. ..	1
Garrick	.. ..	2

The Nursery Stakes (Second Class) of 25 sovs each, for two yr-olds.
Lord Clifden's Tressome, 8st 9lb.. 1
Mr. Greville's Clarissa, 7st 11lb 2

The Audley End Stakes of 30 sovs each.
Lord Exeter's Theophane, 3 yrs, 7st 12lb 1
Lord Exeter's Iophana, 3 yrs, 8st 12lb 2

CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT.

CHARTIST TRIAL.

On Thursday, George Bridge Hollins, aged twenty-two, described as a surgeon, was placed in the dock, charged with feloniously compassing, imagining, and intending to levy war against her Majesty, &c

The prisoner pleaded Not Guilty

The Jury having been sworn and sworn,

The Attorney-General stated the case to the Jury, and detailed the history of the conspiracy, describing the nature of the evidence which would be adduced in support of it. The prisoner, in the same manner, and to the same effect, and nearly in the same language, as he did on the trial of Dowling, Cuffy, Lacy, and others.

The witnesses were then called—

Thomas Powell, the police-spy, gave precisely the same evidence which he gave on the former trials; which it is unnecessary to repeat.

The trial lasted over the whole of Thursday and Friday.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

FRANCE

At the close of Thursday's sitting, the National Assembly divided on the question of the election of President of the Republic, when the following was the unexpected result:—Number of votes, 831; majority for the decree, 587; against it, 232; majority, 355; consequently the election will take place on the 10th of December. The result created the greatest surprise.

ITALY.

The Turin Chamber of Deputies have resolved, by a large majority, that the armistice with the Austrians shall be extended.

AUSTRIA

The Emperor has appointed Prince Windischgrätz Commander-in-Chief of all the Imperial armies, with the sole exception of the Italian army under the command of Count Radetzky; the Emperor has, at the same time, issued a manifesto, in which he declares himself, with a bleeding heart, to meet the rebellion which now shamelessly rears its head in my residentary city, as well as in all other places wheresoever it may appear, to oppose it by force of arms, and to combat it till it shall have been completely quelled, and the murderers of my faithful servants, the Counts Lamberg and Latour, be given over to the avenging hand of justice."

* * * * * * *

"After subduing the armed rioters, and restoring peace, it will be the task of my Ministers, in unison with the members of the Constitutional Diet, to bring about by legislation a code of rights which will secure to the Austrian Peoples, fraternally abreast press, the right of association, and popular armaments—which, without infringing liberty, shall secure authority and respect for the laws."

The manifesto is dated Olmütz, Oct. 16.

COUNTRY NEWS.

THE DUCHESS OF SUTHERLAND AND SUNDAY TRAVELLING.—The Secretary of the Scottish Central Railway has published the following explanation of the circumstances relative to his alleged refusal to allow the Duchess of Sutherland a special train on Sunday week, when hastening to be present at the death bed of her father, the late Earl of Carlisle:—" Sir,—I have only this instant noticed in your journal of the 16th instant, an article copied from the Glasgow Scottish Reformers' Gazette, headed 'Refusal of the Scottish Central Railway Company to convey the Duchess of Sutherland to her dying father, the Earl of Carlisle;' in which, after detailing several particulars relative to her Grace's journey from the north, her arrival at the Perth station, and disappointment at being told that the railway was closed against carrying passengers on Sunday, the following sentence occurs:—'The secretary was immediately communicated with, and the sorrowing circumstances mentioned which compelled her Grace's attendance at Castle Howard.' The train was delayed for a short time in order to have a final answer from the Secretary, but the reply was, "No; the rules of the company cannot be departed from." Now it so happens, that, with the exception of stopping the train, not one word of this is true. I was not communicated with, and, consequently, could send no answer; nor did I hear anything whatever on the Sunday of the occurrence referred to, till several hours after the departure of the train and of her Grace, in different directions. When, for the first time, I also learned the very pressing nature of her Grace's journey, not having received intimation till then that there was the slightest specialty in the case. On the morning of Saturday, between nine and ten o'clock, when accidentally at the station, I was informed, through a second hand, that her Grace had sent to inquire if she could be carried forward by the mail-train on the following day. To the question I at once replied, being precluded by a vote of the shareholders from carrying passengers on Sunday, it would be impossible to comply with her Grace's wishes; the inquiring party answering that the Duchess would in that case proceed by the Saturday night's train.

Advertised to carry passengers on Sundays, and which starts 40 minutes before the Central mail-train, or perhaps wait until the following day. The message did not call upon me. I received no letter upon the subject. I am not aware any one connected with the railway would have been ready to facilitate her Grace's journey by every possible means, had the circumstances attending it been made known to them; but no candid man will blame the parties consulted for the not doing what in ordinary cases they had not power to do, nor yet for declining to incur the responsibility of making a special exception in favour of her Grace, ignorant as they were of those facts of the case which constituted the exception of its specialty, and seeing that there were twenty four hours to make other arrangements and other means of accomplishing the object with equal speed.—ROBERT D. EAR, Secretary.—Scottish Central Railway Office, Perth, Oct. 18."

AN ASSOCIATION has been formed in Glasgow for the purpose of checking further depreciation in railway property. The means proposed are the publication of correct accounts of the capital and income of each line, and their intentions and powers in regard to new works, branches, and amalgamations. The Glasgow and Ayr Company was to take the initiative in this judicious course, by publishing full and accurate details of their present transactions and future business.

ROMAN PORTERY AND BURYING-GROUND DISCOVERED IN KENT.—A notice of a discovery of Roman antiquities at Higham, Kent, occurred at the meeting on Friday evening se'nnight, of the British Archæological Association. Mr. Burkitt, who forwarded the communication, stated that, with the assistance of Mr. Crafter, of Gravesend, and Mr. Sharp, a considerable portion of the ground had been excavated, by which a vast quantity of pottery had been turned up. The description of vases varied considerably in texture as well as form, and included the embossed Samian, dishes of fine black and red colour, jars and urns of many devices. Of the latter, several, nearly entire, contained burnt human bones and fragments of iron weapons, which indicated a sepulchral origin. The site of the field of their labours was within 200 yards of the church, where Roman bricks have been found worked up in the walls. Mr. Burkitt describes the ground as having been opened by him in various directions, covering a space of about four acres: at each spot indications of similar deposits; and although at a depth of one foot from the surface the greatest quantity of pottery was discovered, at three feet six inches there was a plentiful supply. At the latter depth their work was arrested by land springs forming a black mud; in this was discovered a queern much worn, formed of lava. From a careful inspection by the Committee, they were able to form some notion as to the cause of this extraordinary accumulation, which they conjectures to have been the site of a Roman potter's field, which, when exhausted of the finer sort of loam, was subsequently appropriated as a place for burying the dead, the pits affording convenient receptacles for depositing the funeral urns, which are found embedded, as before described, and the remains of a custom of that period recorded by St. Matthew, who purchased a portion of a potter's field for burying strangers

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

FRENCH NATIONAL GUARDS IN THE METROPOLIS

On Monday night upwards of 400 of the Parisian National Guard, in uniform, and wearing side-arms, arrived in the metropolis, on the South-Eastern Railway from London-bridge terminus, and were conducted on leaving the station to the foreign hotels in the vicinity of Leicester-square: a great number marching in detached parties attracted considerable curiosity as they passed through the thoroughfares. The hotels in the vicinity of the Haymarket, Leicester-square, and Regent-street were crammed to overflowing by the unexpected influx, and many were compelled to put up with very indifferent accommodation. On Tuesday another body of the Parisian National Guards, to the amount of 300, arrived at the London-bridge terminus of the South Eastern Railway from Dover. Arrangements were made with the Northern of France Railway for their conveyance.

The following particulars have been communicated to us by the authorities of the South-Eastern and Continental Steam-packet Company of their expected visit at Calais, the Princess Maude and Queen of the Belgians steamers were despatched to convey them in three detachments to Dover, whence they were brought by special train to London. On alighting from the carriages they were couches and cabs in abundance, waiting the arrival of the special trains, and on Sunday and Monday morning, and again on Monday night, last evening, the weather being fine, the majority of the National Guards preferred walking. A number of those who arrived, on Monday, consisting of Lancers, Chasseurs, Voltigeurs, and Grenadiers, have been promenading the streets in the West End. In Leicester-square more than two hundred formed in regular marching order, and proceeded to the Horse Guards to see the Guards parade. They afterwards paid a visit to the Wellington Barracks, and on leaving expressed their admiration at the comfortable arrangements made for the soldiers. On Monday night one of the National Guards was hustled by some of the small mob in Regent-street, who took the barret off the Parisian, with which they were highly delighted. Several National Guards visited the Central Criminal Court to hear the trial of Mr. Smith O'Brien. Most of the other public institutions were also inspected by detached parties. The most remarkable visit, perhaps, was that paid on Tuesday evening by a number of these Parisians to the scene of exile of the dethroned King of the French: several became passengers on the South-Western Railway about mid-day on Tuesday, having stopped at the Surbiton station, gratified themselves curiously by a sight of the Palace of Claremont. In the evening a large party, consisting of upwards of 100, visited Covent-Garden Theatre, to witness the "Bohemian Girl" and the ballet of "The Amazons." In the latter they were highly delighted with their favourite, Mdlle. Plunkett. Other divisions were taken to the Adelphi, Lyceum, and Haymarket Theatres; while some 300 preferred visiting the Walhalla—Sadler's Wells, perhaps, was the last point of the kind. Some of these Parisians to the scene of exile of the dethroned King of the French: several became passengers on the South-Western Railway about mid-day on Tuesday, having stopped at the Surbiton station, gratified themselves curiously by a sight of the Palace of Claremont. In the evening a large party, consisting of upwards of 100, visited Covent-Garden Theatre, to witness the "Bohemian Girl" and the ballet of "The Amazons." In the latter they were highly delighted with their favourite, Mdlle. Plunkett. Other divisions were taken to the Adelphi, Lyceum, and Haymarket Theatres; while some 300 preferred visiting the Walhalla—Sadler's Wells, perhaps, was the last point of the kind. Some of these Parisians to the scene of exile of the dethroned King of the French: several became passengers on the South-Western Railway about mid-day on Tuesday, having stopped at the Surbiton station, gratified themselves curiously by a sight of the Palace of Claremont. In the evening a large party, consisting of upwards of 100, visited Covent-Garden Theatre, to witness the "Bohemian Girl" and the ballet of "The Amazons." In the latter they were highly delighted with their favourite, Mdlle. Plunkett. Other divisions were taken to the Adelphi, Lyceum, and Haymarket Theatres; while some 300 preferred visiting the Walhalla—Sadler's Wells, perhaps, was the last point of the kind.

DEPUTATION TO THE MANSION HOUSE. On Wednesday, in consequence of a communication from the Ambassador of the French Republic, the Lord Mayor made arrangements to receive a large deputation from the Parisian National Guard, at the Mansion House. At twelve o'clock, by the direction of the Lord Mayor, several extra officers of the City police were in attendance, and the National Guards were received at the grand entrance by the officers of the household, who conducted them to the Egyptian Hall. The Lord Mayor, accompanied by Alderman Wilson, Humphrey, and Musgrove, and by the Lady Mayoress, immediately after the visitors, to the number of between three and four hundred, had assembled and placed themselves in exact order round the hall, entered, and, amidst loud applause, proceeded to the top of the room. The Commandant then addressed the Lord Mayor: he stated that the members of the Parisian National Guard then in the metropolis felt that they could not visit the shores of England without paying their respects in the Lord Mayor of London, personally as the Commandant expressed an anxious hope that the Lord Mayor would pay the National Guard of Paris a visit, and receive from them their warm acknowledgments in their own country of the reception which they had received in England. His Lordship responded to the invitation, and the members of the National Guard then retired, and proceeded to visit the Royal Exchange and the other public buildings of the City

HOUSE OF LORDS.—By order of the Lord Chamberlain, the House of Lords was ordered to be thrown open for the inspection of as many of the Parisian Guard as chose to attend. Two or three hundred availed themselves of his Lordship's offer, and went in sections to view this national building. Upon entering, every one seemed struck with amazement at the magnificence of the edifice

VISIT TO THE HONOURABLE ARTILLERY COMPANY. On Thursday evening, nearly a hundred of the Garde Nationale of Paris paid a visit to the Artillery Company, and their dépôt in Finsbury. About 90 of the corps were under arms, who gave a most cordial reception to the strangers, and gratified them by going through the musket and platoon exercises in their presence. In the course of half-past nine the visitors sat down to supper with the corps, and the party did not break up till past midnight. Nothing could exceed the enthusiasm with which the toast of "La Reine d'Angleterre," "France and Belgium," and "The Gentlemen of the Garde Nationale," and others of a similar character, were received: and the Commandant expressed in glowing terms the gratification he and his comrades had derived from the unexpected kindness and hospitality which they had received from their English brethren in arms. He concluded by inviting the corps to visit them in Paris, an invitation which was seconded by M. Louis Cubet, one of the Parisian Garde Nationale, in his passage on Wednesday, on board of the Dahlia, between Hungerford-bridge and London-bridge, had his pocket picked of a worsted purse, in which were three sovereigns and two half-sovereigns, twenty-five 20-franc pieces, fifteen 21-franc pieces, 15 cents, 16 gulders (Holland), and fifteen 25-franc pieces; the two latter sums were wrapped up in a piece of paper. The police have not been able to discover the number of the "swell" who so adroitly effected the robbery.

PUBLIC MEETINGS

ROYAL AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY OF ENGLAND.—The last meeting of the council, previous to the recess, was held, on Tuesday afternoon, at Sir Sebastian's house, Hanover-square; Mr. Raymond Barker in the chair.—Several new members were admitted, and the report of the finance committee, which showed the Society's affairs to be in a very prosperous state, was received and adopted. Mr. P. Pusey, M.P., chairman of the journal committee, announced that the prizes to be competed for during the current year had been settled, and that the list of them would be ready for delivery before the end of the month, being at the meeting of the members in December. Amongst them are four prizes of £20 each for the best essays on the farming of four English counties, in addition to those already obtained. The council have reason to hope that the large sum set apart in order to procure these essays has not been misapplied. The object proposed was that of procuring sound practical information upon matters of very great importance. The competitors for these essays are required to describe the peculiarities of the soil, the influence of climate, and the various modes of farming pursued in the respective localities. These essays being subsequently published in the society's journal, are widely diffused amongst the agricultural body, who are thus enabled to judge how far the modes of farming recommended by such essays are applicable to their own districts. The Duke of Richmond, and to what extent agricultural operations may be promoted by chemical or other scientific agency. There are at present upwards of six thousand five hundred members of the society, including life-governors, governors, annual subscribers and honorary members

THE SHAKSPEARE SOCIETY AND THE CHANDOS PORTRAIT.—A special meeting of the Council of the Shakspere Society was held on Tuesday, in order that Mr. Payne Collier, the Director, might communicate the prompt acquiescence of the Earl of Ellesmere, as President of the Society, in the request of the members that they might be permitted to engrave, in a large size, and by one of the first artists of our day, the Chandos portrait of Shakspere, recently bought by his Lordship at the sale at Stowe. The Council, after a vote of hearty thanks to his Lordship, agreed to the unanimous resolution to procure an engraving. In order that the copy of the original picture, to be distributed to the members of the society who shall have paid their subscriptions on the 1st of January next, should be confined to such a work of art and as a fac-simile. The Director was requested to furnish accompanying letter-press, relating to the authenticity of the Chandos (now the Ellesmere) portrait, as compared with all the other real or supposed contemporaneous portraits of Shakspere. The engraving will probably also be one of the intended engraving, so that the members may either bind it as a book or frame it for suspension. As soon as the members have had time to record their names, the number required will be ascertained; and after the number of plates and proofs have been printed, the plate will be destroyed, so that there can be no multiplication of bad impressions. As we said, the circulation will be confined to members who shall have recorded their names on the 1st of January next: when the subscription for the coming year becomes due. A sub-committee was appointed with full powers to carry the project into complete effect, without limitation as to the cost of the engraving, or anything else that may be necessary to do justice to the liberality of the noble owner of the picture.

BENEVOLENT SOCIETY OF BLUES.—The [illegible] general meeting of the members of this society which was established in 1794 for the purpose of affording relief to persons overtaken by distress, who received their education at Christ's Hospital, and to their widows, &c. was held on Wednesday, at the London Tavern: J. Perkins, Esq. (a former pupil of Christ's Hospital), occupied the chair. Two additional pensioners were elected, at the twenty candidates, and gratuities were presented to the disappointed candidates. According to the report, the receipts for the half-year amounted to £533 8s., which included a previous balance of £180, donations, subscriptions, &c. The total stock in the possession of the society now amounts to about £9800.

LONDON CLERKS' PERMANENT BENEFIT BUILDING SOCIETY.—A meeting in furtherance of the objects of this society, was held on Tuesday evening, at the Western Institution, Mr. Nelson, secretary to the Medical and Invalid Assurance Company, in the chair.—The chairman stated that he had assembled the gentlemen on which the society was proposed to be established, and was of opinion that they were quite capable, and indeed certain, of fulfilment. Mr. Ball stated the objects which were proposed to be carried out, and the mode which was to be adopted. The first object was to encourage habits of providence in the class of clerks, and to enable each member of the body to purchase a house for his own residence. Each member, on having deposited about £30, would be entitled to draw on the society's funds to the amount of £300, to be secured to the society by mortgage on the premises purchased, such mortgage to be redeemed by an annual increase on the rent, the rent under the liquidation of the debt instead of being paid for mere use and occupation, as in the case of renters. The point in which the proposed society would differ from its predecessors was this: that whereas most of the societies now established were for a fixed term of years, the proposed society would be of a permanent character. The advantage of this would be, that members could come in at any period without the payment of large arrears, as in the case of societies established for a fixed period. They expected to effect this by allowing depositors a rate of interest for the first five years less than the interest proposed to be charged to borrowers. It was expected that they would be able to allow five per cent. for the first five years, and about seven per cent. for the subsequent period of deposit. An objection had been made to these societies, that in cases where the capital lay in the coffers of the society, no profit could accrue to the depositors. His experience told him that such a contingency was not likely to occur; on the contrary, he had generally found it necessary to arrange the advances of the bankers for the purposes of the society, and those advances had subsequently repaid out of the accumulations. He had lately seen Mr. Field Pratt, who had expressed himself most favourably of building societies, and approved of the plan now introduced to public notice. Mr. Pratt had told him that there was at the present moment £6,000,000 invested in building societies, and argued the best results from this fact, as proving the great benefit arising from having an interest in the preservation of the public peace, and the stability of our institutions. The subscribers to this society would not have to wait for the winding up of the society, or be dependent upon the chance of the affairs having been well managed for the promised solution. They would enter for fixed periods of five, ten, or fifteen years, paying proportionate annual amounts on their shares, and at the end of the stipulated terms would be put in absolute possession of their property.—Mr. Richards, solicitor, entered into various details explanatory of the working of the society. Resolutions pledging the meeting to its support were then agreed to, and the proceedings terminated

THE NATIONAL GALLERY, which has been closed since the 7th of September last, re-opened to the public on Monday. During the recess the Vernon Collection has been removed from Mr. Vernon's house, in Pall-mall, to the lower rooms of the Gallery, where they will for the present be exhibited to the public.

ST. JUDE'S, WHITECHAPEL.—This new church, situated in Commercial-street, was opened for divine service on Sunday last. The sermon in the morning was preached by the Rev. T. Gibson; in the afternoon by the Rev. Rector; and in the evening by the Rev. Hugh Allen, incumbent of the church; a collection being made for each service. Mr. Beale presided at the organ, which is of great power combined with richness of tone, and so constructed as to show the great west window of the church between the towers of the instrument: it was built by Bishop, of Pimlico

BUILDING ON THE INCLOSURE, LEICESTER-SQUARE. On Wednesday, preparations commenced within the inclosure, Leicester-square, to convert that hitherto useless spot of ground into an Exchange Bazaar, to be called the Royal Victoria Arcade Bazaar. There will be four distinct entrances—one at each angle of the square—the arcade being in the form of a cross, the statue of King George the First forming its centre, round which will be constructed a circular promenade, open to the air. Within each angle an ornamental fountain will be constructed, to be supplied with water from the Artesian Wells that furnish those in Trafalgar-square. This ground was originally leased to Miss Linwood by the Crown, together with the opposite building, known as Saville Palace, with an express covenant that it was not to be built over. In consideration of the Inclosure Commissioners' consent to the construction of the vast improvement it will be to the neighbourhood, the Commissioners of Woods and Forests are understood to have consented to the erection.

DEATHS AND DEATHS FOR THE WEEK ENDING OCT. 21.—The births registered in the metropolis and suburbs during the week ending last Saturday numbered 1196, of which 592 were males and 574 females, being 137 less than those of the preceding week. The deaths during the above week were 893 (503 males and 390 females), being eight less than those of the preceding week, and 183 less than the births. They were also less than the average weekly deaths for the last five returns by 171. Those diseases the fatality from which were less than the average were—measles 15 (average 44), hooping-cough 30 (average 34), influenza 1 (average 21), croupy 13 (average 20), consumption 103 (average 136), hydrocephalus 23 (average 32), cephalitis 7 (average 12), apoplexy 18 (average 24), paralysis 13 (average 20), convulsions 32 (average 47), disease of the heart (average 35), bronchitis 61, pneumonia 63 (average 74), asthma 14 (average 15), diseases of the lungs, &c., 7 (average 15), teething 7 (average 13), &c. Those diseases the deaths from which exceeded the average were principally small-pox 56 (average 10), scarlatina 147 (average 47), dysentery 14 (average 5), cholera 45 (average 1), typhus 45 (average 36), &c.

THE CHOLERA.

SOME isolated cases of cholera have been reported during the week. Relative to the continuance of ships off Woolwich, Mr. Rixon, the registrar of the sub-district, Woolwich Arsenal, makes the following statement: "The seven deaths from cholera mentioned as registered by me last week occurred in the Dolphin hospital ship, among convicts from the Justitia hulk, lying off the Royal Arsenal wharf. The surgeon attributes the disease to the unhealthy state of the atmosphere and to the foul and pestilential miasma arising from the unwholesome vicinity. The inside of the ship ascribes it to the rotten condition of the hulk, and to heat generated during the night by so many men being closely packed together, a ward having from forty to sixty or four men sleeping in it according to its size. The last two cases were of athletic young men, and lasted four days. The former patient was painless from the first, and comatose during four hours previous to death.—The latter was seasick to the last. They were carefully attended to, and visited every hour, night and day; and were treated with mercury, mustard poultices, stimulants, and all the usual remedies. The whole of the convicts were removed on the 20th inst. from the Justitia, and put on board the Hebe and Sulphur receiving vessels, opposite the Royal Dockyard; which arrangement, I find, has created some alarm in the yard. Scarlatina is still very prevalent in Woolwich."

The Iphigenia, formerly the Marine Society ship, was towed up from Woolwich to Deptford on Monday, and moored at her former station, to be appropriated exclusively as an hospital ship for cholera cases. The 42pr reserve was towed from her moorings opposite the west end of Woolwich Dockyard, and is now stationed alongside the Unité, for the purpose of having the cholera cases which may subsequently occur kept separate from the other patients.

CHOLERA WARDS AT THE FREE HOSPITAL.—On Wednesday, a meeting of subscribers and committee of management of this Hospital was held in the committee-room of the Institution: Jacob Bell, Esq., chairman of the committee-board, presiding; when it was announced that the committee, to meet the exigency of the late visitation of Asiatic cholera, have established two additional wards, containing 100 beds, to be opened for the reception of cholera patients.

WHAT SHOULD BE DONE, IF ATTACKED BY CHOLERA?

As the great depression of the vital powers, and the consequent coldness of the body, are the most formidable and striking symptoms, it is obvious that to raise the system, and restore the warmth of the surface of the body, or, in other words, excite reaction and bring back the circulation of the blood to a natural state, are the objects to be secured. A vapour, or HOT AIR BATH, should be had recourse to if at hand; as this, however, will probably not seldom be the case, put the patient into a hot bed, and apply a large hot mustard poultice over the whole of the stomach. Then set a boiling saucepan full of water, or a kettle of boiling water, as hot and dry as possible, be laid over his body, and confine it in the vapour, by placing dry blankets over it, renewing it the moment it loses its heat. Put bottles filled with hot water to the feet, and, if at hand, bricks or tiles wrapped in flannel, to his feet; at the same time rub the feet, legs, and arms with hot flannels. Give the patient a glassful of hot brandy-and-water, or a tea-spoonful of salvolatile in a wine-glassful of water, or a tea-spoonful of sulphuric ether in a wine-glass full of camphor julep; if neither of these hands be in the house, give hot coffee or hot small tea. The above-mentioned remedies can be obtained. If there be much pain in the stomach, or the spasms be severe, or either of the above remedies do not afford relief, give a tea-spoonful, or from 60 to 80 drops of laudanum in hot brandy-and-water: if there be a severe burning or sensation in the stomach, the laudanum should be the first remedy. If the liquid given be rejected, repeat the dose in a few minutes; and if one remedy will not keep down, try another. Persist in these means till you find the warmth of the skin restored, and the cramps and spasms relaxed; but in the meantime send for a medical person, who will find, on his arrival, half the danger removed, if you have duly followed the plan here recommended. Do not fear exciting the complaint yourself; let not that selfish feeling one moment enter your head: your very exertions will be the best and surest means of preventing your being attacked from "—Five Minutes Common Sense about the Asiatic Cholera." By a Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons of England.

---

* The Medicator Bath was for many years, and with the most great success, used in the hospital of Christ's Hospital, under the superintendence of Dr. Bostock, and is now in the possession of Mr. Bostock, who, we believe, continues to use it.

† The strong solution of camphor of Sir John Murray's small pox hospital if possible an object of which a tea-spoonful of either in the Asiatic cholera, or a dose of laudanum, will be sufficient, the coldness of admission

THE SEA-SERPENT WHEN FIRST SEEN FROM H.M.S. "DÆDALUS."

THE GREAT SEA-SERPENT.

"Strange things come up to look at us—
The masters of the deep."—Song, "The Return of the Admiral."

A NEW attestation of the existence of the Great Sea-Serpent has just been placed upon official record; and has very naturally reawakened the interest attached to this much vexed question. We purpose, therefore, to present to our readers this testimony in the documentary form and order in which it originally appeared; and it will next be shown that the first report has already received some corroboration, and has called forth some unpublished evidence upon the subject.

The first intelligence of this new evidence appeared in the Times of the 19th inst., in a communication from Plymouth, dated Oct. 7, as follows:—

"When the Dædalus frigate, Captain M'Quhae, which arrived here on the 4th inst., was on her passage home from the East Indies, between the Cape of Good Hope and St. Helena, her captain, and most of her officers and crew, at four o'clock one afternoon, saw a Sea-Serpent. The creature was twenty minutes in sight of the frigate, and passed under her quarter. Its head appeared to be about four feet out of the water, and there was about sixty feet of its body in a straight line on the surface. It is calculated that there must have been under water a length of thirty or forty feet more, by which it propelled itself at the rate of fifteen miles an hour. The diameter of the exposed part of the body was about sixteen inches; and when it extended its jaws, which were full of large jagged teeth, they seemed sufficiently capacious to admit of a tall man standing upright between them. The ship was sailing north at the rate of eight miles an hour. The Dædalus left the Cape of Good Hope on the 30th of July, and reached St. Helena on the 16th of August."

Next the following very interesting report, by Captain M'Quhae, was forwarded to the Admiralty:—

"Her Majesty's ship Dædalus, Harnoaze, Oct. 11.

"Sir, In reply to your letter of this day's date, requiring information as to the truth of a statement published in the Times newspaper, of a Sea-Serpent of extraordinary dimensions having been seen from her Majesty's ship Dædalus, under my command, on her passage from the East Indies, I have the honour to acquaint you, for the information of my Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, that at 5 o'clock P.M., on the 6th of August last, in latitude 24° 44′ S., and longitude 9° 22′ E., the weather dark and cloudy, wind fresh from the N.W., with a long ocean swell from the S.W., the ship on the port tack heading N.E. by N., some[illegible] very unusual was seen by Mr. Sartoris, midshipman, rapidly approaching the ship from before the beam. The circumstance was immediately reported by him to the officer of the watch, Lieutenant Edgar Drummond, with whom and Mr. William Barrett, the Master, I was at the time walking the quarter-deck. The ship's company were at supper.

"On our attention being called to the object, it was discovered to be an enormous Serpent, with head and shoulders kept about four feet constantly above the surface of the sea; and as nearly as we could approximate by comparing it with the length of what our mainto'gall-yard would show in the water, there was at the very least sixty feet of the animal à fleur d'eau, no portion of which was, to our perception, used in propelling it through the water, either by vertical or horizontal undulation. It passed rapidly, but so close under our lee quarter that had it been a man of my acquaintance I should have easily recognised his features with the naked eye; and it did not, either in approaching the ship or after it had passed our wake, deviate in the slightest degree from its course to the S.W., which it held on at the pace of from 12 to 15 miles per hour, apparently on some determined purpose.

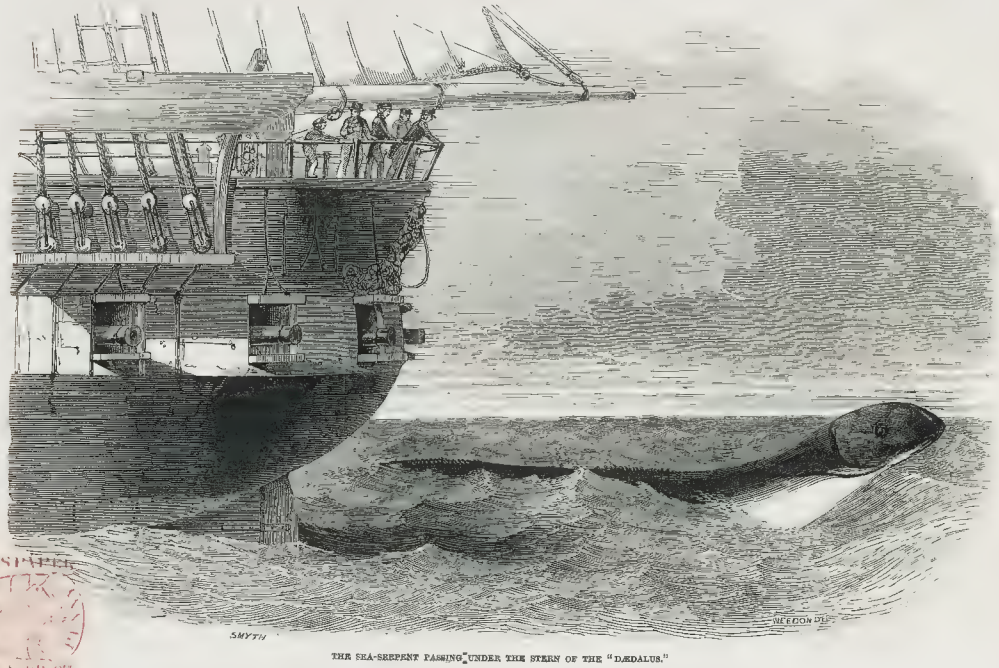
"The diameter of the Serpent was about 15 or 16 inches behind the head, which was, without any doubt, that of a snake; and it was never, during the 20 minutes that it continued in sight of our glasses, once below the surface of the water—its colour a dark brown, with yellowish-white about the throat. It had no fins, but something like the mane of a horse, or rather a bunch of seaweed, washed about its back. It was seen by the quartermaster, the boatswain's mate, and the man at the wheel, in addition to myself and officers above mentioned.

"I am having a drawing of the Serpent made from a sketch taken immediately after it was seen, which I hope to have ready for transmission to my Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty by to-morrow's post.—I have, &c.,

"PETER M'QUHAE, Captain.

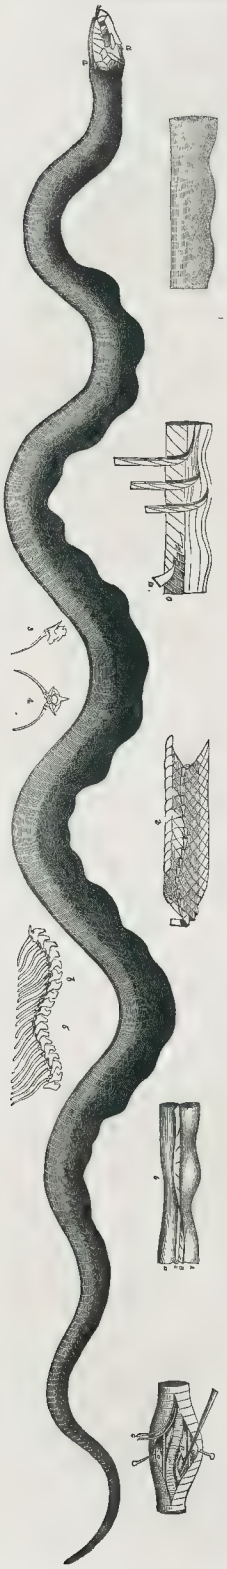
"To Admiral Sir W. H. Gage, G.C.H., Devonport."

The drawing above-named has been received by the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, and, by the courtesy of Captain M'Quhae, our Artist has been permitted to copy this pictorial evidence, as well as further to illustrate the ap-



THE SEA-SERPENT PASSING UNDER THE STERN OF THE "DÆDALUS."

NEWSPAPER



THE GREAT AMERICAN SEA-SERPENT.
SCOLIOPHIS ATLANTICUS

HEAD OF THE SEA-SERPENT SEEN BY CAPT. M'QUHÆ

pearance of the Serpent, under the supervision of Captain M'Quhæ, and with his approval of the authenticity of their details as to position and form.

The next communication is the following letter, addressed, within the past ten days, to the Editor of the Globe:—

"Mary Ann of Glasgow, Glasgow, Oct. 19, 1848.

"Sir,—I have just reached this port, on a voyage from Malta to Lisbon; and my attention having been called to a report relative to an animal seen by the master and crew of her Majesty's ship Daedalus, I take the liberty of communicating the following circumstance:

"When clearing out of the port of Lisbon, upon the 30th of September last we spoke the American brig Daphne, of Boston, Mark Trelawny master; she signalled for us to heave to, which we did, and standing close round her counter-lay to while the mate boarded us with the jolly-boat, and handed a packet of letters, to be despatched per first steamer for Boston on our arrival in England. The mate told me that when in lat. 4° 11′ S., lon. 10° 15′ E., wind dead north, upon the 20th of September, a most extraordinary animal had been seen—from his description, it had the appearance of a hugh serpent or snake, with a dragon's head.

"Immediately upon its b[illegible]ng seen, one of the deck guns was brought to bear upon it, which, having been charged with spike-nails and whatever other pieces of iron could be got at the moment, was discharged at the animal, then only distant about forty yards from the ship. It immediately reared its head in the air, and plunged violently with its body, showing evidently that the charge had taken effect. The Daphne was to leeward at the time, but was put about on the starboard tack, and stood towards the brute, which was seen foaming and lashing the water at a fearful rate. Upon the brig nearing, however, it disappeared, and, though evidently wounded, made rapidly off at the rate of fifteen or sixteen knots an hour, as was judged from its appearing several times upon the surface. The Daphne pursued for some time; but the night coming on, the master was obliged to put about and continue his voyage.

"From the description given by the mate, the brute must have been nearly 100 feet long, and his account of it agrees in every respect with that lately forwarded to the Admiralty by the master of the Daedalus. The packet of letters to Boston I have no doubt contains the full particulars, which I suppose will be made public.

"There are letters from Captain Trelawny to a friend in Liverpool, which will probably contain some further particulars, and I have written to get a copy, for the purpose of getting the full account.

"I have the honour to be, Sir, your most obedient servant,

"Broomielaw, Berth No. 4." "JAMES HENDERSON, Master.

The inquiry next called forth the annexed evidence from one of our most scientific officers and ablest naval surveyors:—

Extract from a Letter addressed by Captain Beechey to Sir Francis Beaufort, F.R.S., Admiralty Hydrographer:—

"What an extraordinary creature the Daedalus seems to have fallen in with?

The description recalls to my mind an extraordinary appearance we witnessed in the Blossom, in crossing the South Atlantic. I took it for the trunk of a large tree, and before I could get my glass upon deck it had disappeared and I could nowhere find it—fresh breezes at the time."

By the courtesy of the Secretary to the Admiralty, we have been favoured with the following letter from a gentleman long resident in Norway:—

"13, Great Cumberland-street, October 25, 1848.

"MY DEAR SIR,—I regret that I have not yet found the volumes referred to in our conversation respecting the recent authentication of the existence of the Sea-Serpent by Captain M'Quhæ, of H.M. frigate Daedalus, but I will give you that part of the information which I remember best. Several years ago, a museum was established at Bergen in Norway, the directors of which have, amongst other subjects of interest, turned their study to natural history in general, and to the elucidation of some of its more doubtful or less known subdivisions.* The question of the Sea-Serpent's existence had previously attracted the attention of several scientific men in Northern Europe; and my friend, the late Dr. Newmann, Bishop of Bergen—a man much and justly respected for his learning, research, and energy made it the subject of enquiry within the last twenty or twenty-five years among his clergy and those of the adjoining dioceses. The amount of proof thus collected was sufficient to convince any one, however sceptical, as it is not mere hearsay evidence, but the testimony of known and respectable persons in various walks of life. One of the most striking statements is made by some fishermen, who saw the animal quite close to them, and of whom, one more hardy than the rest struck it with a boat-hook, upon which it immediately gave them chase; and, had they not been very near a small island or rock, on which they took refuge, in all probability they would have been destroyed.†

"The size of the Sea Serpents seen in the Norwegian Fjords varies much; and I do not now remember what the dimensions of the largest are said to be. As far as I can tax my memory, none of them lately seen are larger than that described by Captain M'Quhæ. The one seen by the fishermen above alluded to was, I think, not above 70 feet long. I have written to my colleagues in the direction of the Bergen Museum; and as soon as their answer arrives, I will give you a more full account.

"There are, I believe, several varieties of the reptile known as the Sea-Serpent, but almost all the accounts agree as to the existence of a mane, and as to th great size of the eye. In several of the fossil reptiles somewhat approaching the Sea-Serpent in size and other characteristics, the orbit is very large, and in this respect, as well as in having short paws or flappers, the descriptions of the Northern Sea-Serpents agree with the supposed appearance of some of the antediluvian species. A great part of the disbelief in the existence of th Sea-Serpent has arisen from its being supposed to be the same animal as the Kraken, or rather from the names having been used indiscriminately.

"In concluding this hurried statement, allow me to add my own testimony as to the existance of a large fish or reptile of cylindrical form (I will not say Sea-Serpent).

THE SEA-SERPENT.—FAC-SIMILE FROM EGEDE'S WORK.—1740.

* Mr. Christie, a well-known contributor to the natural history of many of the Balænæ, and a discoverer of several new parasitical animals, is the President of this Association.

† The Fjords, in Norway, are extremely deep; and such an island or rock may have 100 fathoms depth within 50 fathoms of its shore. Some Fjords are more than 300 fathoms deep at certain points

Three years ago, while becalmed in a yacht between Bergen and Sogn, in Norway, I saw (at about a quarter of a mile astern) what appeared to be a large fish suddenly fling the otherwise smooth surface of the Fjord, and, on looking attentively, I observed what looked like the convolutions of a snake. I immediately got my glass, and distinctly made out three convolutions, which drew themselves rapidly through the water; the greatest diameter was about ten or twelve inches. No head was visible, and from the size of each convolution I supposed the length to be about thirty feet. The master of my yacht (who, as navigator, seaman, and fisherman, had known the Norwegian coast and North Sea for many year as well as a friend who was with me, an experienced Norw an sportsman and porpoise shooter, saw the same object at the same time and formed precisely the same opinion as to form and size. I mention the fact of my friend being a porpoise shooter, as many have believed that a shoal of porpoises following each other has given rise to the fable, as they called it, of the Sea-Serpent.

"I remain, my dear sir, faithfully yours,

"J. D. Morris Stirling.

"Captain Hamilton, R N., Secretary to the Admiralty."

EVIDENCES OF THE FORMER APPEARANCE OF THE SEA-SERPENT.

The Sea-Serpent is referred to in the "Naturalist's Library," conducted by Sir William Jardine, Bart., F.R.S.E., F.L.S., &c., as one of a group of sea monsters, in these words:—

"The term cete was by the ancients used in a wider sense than at present, being made to include, along with the whales, those animals which they regarded as sea monsters. We have but very obscure intimation of what those monsters really were; they were a terror to mariners, but were reputed to be prodigious animals, whose form and nature were imperfectly understood, and which were particularly the object of vulgar superstitious dread. Now, it so happens, that, even at the present day, it is asserted that such monstrous cete, whose characters all the assidnity of naturalists has not hitherto satisfactorily ascertained. The most remarkable of these creatures are the Sea-Serpent and the Kraken."

Thus far the introduction by the editor, Dr. Robert Hamilton. We now proceed to quote the instances recorded under the group previously introduced:

"That much fable and superstition," says the author, "have been mixed up with the history of the great Sea-Serpent, cannot be doubted; still, however, the inquiry recurs, what portion of truth is involved amidst this error?

First is described an animal apparently belonging to this genus, which was stranded on the Isle of Stronsay, one of the Orkneys, in 1808. It was first seen entire, and measured by reputable individuals; and its remains are preserved in the Museum of the University of Edinburgh, and in the Museum of the Royal College of Surgeons. It measured 56 feet in length and 12in circumference. The head was small, not being a foot in length, from the snout to the first vertebræ; the neck was slender, extending 3 feet. All accounts agree in describing a fin-like mane on the shoulders something like a bristly mane commenced, which extended to near the extremity of the tail. It had three pair of fins, or paws, connected with the body. Dr. Fleming suggests that these members were, probably, the remains of pectoral, ventral, and caudal fins. The skin was smooth, without scales, and of a greyish colour. The eye was of the size of the seal's; the throat was too narrow to admit the hand.

Next is an "unvarnished account" of a great animal which excited considerable astonishment and alarm among the Western Isles of Scotland. Mr. Maclean, the parish minister of Elgg, saw the animal in June, 1808, on the coast of Coll, within a few yards of the boat he was in. Its head was somewhat broad, and of rather oval form; its neck somewhat smaller; its shoulders (as to speak) considerably broader; and thence it regarded towards the tail. The observer did not perceive any fins, and it seemed to progress by undulation up and down, under water, very rapidly. Its length was believed to be between seventy and eighty feet. This animal was likewise seen by the crews of thirteen fishing-boats; and one of a crew pronounced the head as large as a little boat, and its eye as large as a plate. (See "Transactions of the Wernerian Society," vol. i., p. 442.) This animal does not appear to have been strictly superstitious.

Dr. Hibbert mentions that the great Sea-Serpent has occasionally been recognised in the Shetland Seas, and specifies one which was seen off the isle Stonness, Yaley Island, and Dunrossness. ("Shetland Islands," p. 586.)

We pass over Dr. Hamilton's details of the American Sea-Serpent, as we have given the description from other sources in an adjoining column.

Long before the great Sea-Serpent was suspected of being a visitor of the British Isles, or of the New World, it was regarded as a well known member of the Fauna Fluvii Scandiniæ. Thus, Hans Egede (a native Bishop) Egede, in "A Full and Particular Relation (Narrative) of his Voyage to Greenland, on a Missionary, in the year 1734," published in Danish, at Copenhagen, 1740, record-

"On the 6th of July, 1734, when off the south coast of Greenland, a sea monster appeared to us, whose head, when raised, was on a level with our main-top. Its snout was long and sharp, and it blew water almost like a whale; it had large broad paws (the Danish word is 'Labber') like those which sometime between paws and fins; a seal's flippers are called 'Labber'); these were covered with shell-fish, or scales (the Danish word must here be significant); its skin was rough and of a dark colour. Its progress was very great; and when it dived, its tail, which was raised in the air, appeared to be a whole ship's length from its body."

We have engraved the representation by Egede, from the copy of his work in the British Museum.

We next subjoin the accounts—older and more recent—given of this animal by what may be called its native authority, Bishop Pontoppidan, in his "History of Norway:" "Our coast," says the learned Bishop, "is the only place in Europe visited by this terrible creature." He then professes his own incredulity of the monstrous size usually assigned by persons of credible and experienced fishermen and sailors, of whom hundreds see the creature annually :—

Dr. Hamilton then says:—

"After this, a long letter is supplied from Captain L. de Ferry, who was in his boat, with a crew of eight men, when they saw a Sea-Serpent, which he fired at and wounded. His description very nearly agrees with that already given, and every particular is authenticated by the affidavits of the crew. We are also informed that Governor Berestrup states, that he saw a similar animal a few years before, and drew a sketch of it. Mr. Hans Strom, a clergyman of [illegible] witnesses are named. The Bishop concludes, 'I might mention, to the same purpose many more persons of equal credit and reputation.' But we must bring these statements of Pontoppidan to a close with one other short quotation. 'Those who are desirous of knowing the exact dimensions, yet all who have seen it are unanimous in affirming that it appears to be about 600 feet long; that it lies in the water in many folds, and there appears like so many hogsheads floating in a line, at a considerable distance from each other.'"

In the Literary Gazette, for Saturday last, will be found engraved Pontoppidan's representation; with the accompanying deductions, by the Editor, appended to copious extracts from the learned Bishop's work:

"We have now only to point to the very remarkable resemblance between Captain Dunn and Pontoppidan's description. One might fancy the gallant captain had read the old Dane, and was copying him, when he tells of the dark brown colour and white about the throat, and the neck clothed as if by a horse's mane or hair of some sort; and the count words of Pontoppidan, 'This snake, however, did not seem to care for the fresh wind and roughish weather, but kept, as in the calm, its head several feet above the water, and stretched out its length so as to be visible for the space of six or seven miles.' This motion was not perceptibly impelled by vermicular or land-surf-ant action! Had it, then, large fins? There must be some power. The picture engraved in the folio reprosents it like a series of six barrels, or casings, wik, the intermediate parts under the sea."

We now return to the instances cited by Dr. Hamilton:—

"Sir A. de Capel Brook makes mention to this animal in his 'Travels in Norway. He states that he did not witness it himself, but that the fishermen of Bergenstad stated it was seen in 1815 in the Folden fiord. In July, 1819, it made its appearance off Osersun in Norway, and Captain Schneborg stated to Sir Arthur that it was seen daily during the whole month, and frequently while the weather lasted, as if dozing in the sun-beams. When Captain S. first saw it, he was in a boat at the distance of about 200 yards, and supposes its length to have been about 600 feet. The Bishop of Nordland had seen two of them about eight miles from Dronthem; he was not far from them, and considered the largest to be about 100 feet long. In 1837, one of these creatures, reported to be as bulky as a large ox, and about a fourt. of an English mile in length, made its appearance off the island of Sorde, near Tunnask, and was seen by many of the inhabitants."

In the newspapers of Dronthelm, in 1837, an account from Tozen, of the end of August, stated that since the beginning of the dog-days, the Sea-Serpent had been seen at various parts of the coast of that district. One of them seems to have remained constantly during the summer at Stenness, at the Kegrsan Islands. Very credible persons affirmed the length of this Serpent to be 600 or 800 ells, or perhaps more, for when people were near its head, they could not discern its tail. We agree with Dr. Hamilton. In considering this to be "a shoal of porpoises."

Our attention has been drawn to the Zoologist for the past year, wherein are several communications tending to authenticate the existence of the great Sea-Serpent. Thus, in the number for February, 1847, we find paragraphs quoted from the Norse newspapers, stating that in the the ghbourhood of Christiansund and Molde, in the province of Romsdalen Amt, Norway, several highly respectable and credible witnesses have attested the seeing of the Serpent. In general, they state that it has been seen in the larger Norwegian fiords, always in the quiet days in the middle of the sea, at Christiansund it has been seen every year, though only in the warmest season, in the dog-days, and then only in perfectly calm weather and unruffled water. Length stated at about 44 feet, and twice as thick as a common snake, in proportion to the length. The front of the head was rather pointed; the eyes sharp; and from the back of the head commenced a mane, like that of a horse. The colour of the animal was a blackish-brown; it swam swiftly, with serpentine movements, like a leech. One of the witnesses describes the body to be two feet in diameter, the head as long as a brandy-anker (ten gallon cask), and about the same thickness; not pointed, but round. It has no scales, but the body quite smooth. This witness acknowledged Pontoppidan's representation to be like the serpent he saw.

The writer of the above account letters for Mr. Søren Knudtzon, stating that a Sea-Serpent had been seen in the neighbourhood of Christiansund by several people; and from Dr. Hoffmann, a respectable surgeon in Molde, stating, that lying on a considerable fjord to the south of Christiansund, Doctor Hammer, the keel, our tie, and several persons, very clearly saw, while on a journey, a Sea-Serpent of very considerable size

Four other persons saw a similar animal, July 22, 1845

The next communication, dated "Sand's Parsonage, August 31, 1846," records the appearance of a supposed Sea-Serpent, on the 6th, in the course between the islands of Sartor Leer and Ile Early on this day, just as the steamer Bergenjen passed through Ragnefiar, owing a wind in front of it 8 feet in length, and 3 or four feet in circumference, the back of a light ash colour, and the belly thereof yellow. According to the log, the ship was becalmed at the time. You may rely on the correctness of this (says the writer), and any one desirous of satisfying himself may see the original log.—S. H. Saxby, Banchurch, Isle of Wight, Sept. 8, 1847."

Here we close our evidences, referring the reader for the circumstances of each case to the Zoologist, as they are too lengthy and minute for full quotation.

THE GREAT AMERICAN SEA-SERPENT.

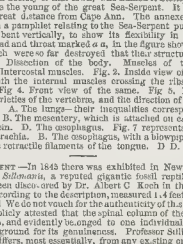
The Sea-Serpent, seen by Captain M'Quhae on the 6th of August, seems to confirm the accounts of a similar animal seen at different periods off the northeastern coast of the United States, between Cape Cod and Penobscot Bay

In consequence of the reports of a great Sea-Serpent having been frequently seen during the month of August, 1817, both in the harbour of Gloucester, Massachusetts, and at a short distance out at sea, off the same coast, the Linnæan Society of Boston appointed a committee to collect evidence with regard to the existence and appearance of such animal; and, from their report, by Augustus Story, we gather the following particulars

It was seen on the 10th of August, 1817, in the harbour of Gloucester, at a distance of about 130 yards. The head, which was about a foot above the water, appeared much like the head of a sea-turtle, and the colour of the body was a dark brown. It moved with great rapidity through the water, at the rate of from 20 to 30 miles an hour. It was seen a second time by the same person, on the 23rd of August; it was then lying perfectly still, and the deponent judged that the portion which he saw was at least 50 feet long. The body appeared to be about as thick as that of a man. Solomon Allen, sail-maker, also saw the animal in the harbour of Gloucester, on the 12th, 13th, and 14th of August, and estimated it to be between 80 and 90 feet in length and the body to be about the thickness of a half-barrel. The head was something like a rattlesnake's, but was nearly as large as the head of a horse, and was sometimes carried about two feet above the water. It appeared to have patches or protuberances on the back. Mr. Nash, however, who took the depositions, and has also seen the animal, considers that these apparent bunches were merely caused by the animal's vertical motion. Matthew Gaffney saw the [illegible] distance of about 30 feet, and fired at it. "I aimed at his head," [illegible] present," and think I must have hit him. He turned towards us immediately after I had fired, and I thought he was coming at us; but he sank down and went directly under our boat, and made his appearance at about 100 yards from where he saw it. He did not turn over like a fish, but appeared to settle down like a rock. He did not, however, appear more shy after being fired at, but continued playing as before." John Johnson, who saw it on the 17th of August, within the harbour of Gloucester, judged it to be at least 50 feet long. W. B. Fearson, merchant, when in a sailing-boat, on the 18th of August, off Webber's Cove, saw a strange marine animal, which he believed to be the same that had been seen several times in the harbour of Gloucester. It passed under the stern of the boat, and afterwards (turning) crossed the bow at about 30 yards' distance. From what he saw of the animal, he should say that it was nothing short of 70 feet in length. Its body appeared to be about as large as a hogshead, and as green as sea-soil, considering its comparative size. Robert Brazer, mariner, saw the animal from the deck of the schooner Lenara, about a mile and a half from Cape Ann. He judged very correctly that it was between 60 and 70 feet; and estimated it feet of the body was above the level of the water to the height of six inches The head was like a serpent's, rather blunt, and larger than the body. When about 30 feet astern of the schooner, one of its tusks, which appeared to be about two feet long, and something like a fisherman's harpoon The Serpent was in sight about ten minutes, and seemed to move at the rate of about four knots an hour.

Besides the depositions of eleven persons who had seen the animal in August, 1817, the Committee received several communications relative to a similar animal which had previously been seen at various times for several years past. The Rev. Abraham Cummings says that, in Penobscot Bay, within the thirty years preceding 1809, a Sea-Serpent, supposed to be about 60 feet long, and as thick as a sloop's mast, had been several times seen. Mr. Cummings saw it himself, at a distance of about 80 yards, and judged it to be about 70 feet long. It was also seen by the British in their expedition to Bagadoe during the first American war, and he at least 200 feet long. Mr. Cummings considers to be an exaggeration. It was again seen in 1809 and 1811. The Committee were also informed that, about 1780, as a schooner was lying at the mouth of the river Kennebec, or in the bay, one of these enormous creatures leaped over it between the masts; that the men ran into the hold for fright, and that the weight of the serpent sank the vessel one streak or plank. The schooner was about eighteen feet burthen.

About a month after the Committee had received the depositions previously referred to, a serpent, of remarkable appearance, was sent to Boston, and exhibited to the Linnæan Society of that town, who named it Scoliophis atlanticus, and considered it to be the young of the great Sea-Serpent. It was killed on the sea-shore, at no great distance from Cape Ann. The annexed cut is from an engraving of it, in a pamphlet relating to the Sea-Serpent published by the Society. The body is bent vertically, to show its flexibility in that direction. The portions of the head and throat marked a a, in the figure showing the whole form, are those which were so far destroyed that their structure could not be ascertained.—Fig. 1. Dissection of the body. Muscles of the back. B, Lateral muscles. C, Intercostal muscles. Fig. 2. Inside view of the cavity of the ribs and spine, with the intercostal muscles attached to the ribs. Fig. 3. Inside view of a vertebra. Fig 4. Front view of the same. Fig 5. Portion of the spine, showing the varieties of the vertebræ, and the direction of the ribs. Fig 6. Portions of viscera. A. The lunge. The intestines were not preserved in the cavities in the spine. B. The mesentery, which is attached on each side to the ribs. C. The great vein. D. The œsophagus. Fig. 7 represents an opening in the throat. A. The brachia. B. The œsophagus, with the lunge inserted into its cavity. C. Elastic retractile filaments of the tongue. D D. Extremities of the ribs.



1 Pectoral Sea-Serpent.—In 1845 there was exhibited in New York a specimen of the Hydrargos Sillimanii, a reputed gigantic fossil reptile, or Sea-Serpent, stated to have been discovered by Dr. Albert C Koch in the state of Alabama. The bones, according to the description, measured 114 feet in length, and weighed 7300 pounds! We do not vouch for the authenticity of the discovery; but Professor Silliman publicly attested that the spinal column of the skeleton measured 114 feet in length, and evidently belonged to one individual; adding, that there was the fullest ground for its genuineness. Professor Silliman remarks, that "the skeleton differs, most essentially, from any existing or fossil serpent, although it may resemble the lacertine muscles among the ribs. Fig. 1 is a side view of a vertebra. Fig 4. Front view of the same. Fig 5. Portion of the spine, showing the varieties of the vertebræ, and the direction of the ribs. Fig 6. Portions of viscera. A. The lunge. The intestines were not preserved in the cavities in the spine. B. The mesentery, which is attached on each side to the ribs. C. The great vein. D. The œsophagus. Fig. 7 represents an opening in the throat. A. The brachia. B. The œsophagus, with the lunge inserted into its cavity. C. Elastic retractile filaments of the tongue. D D. Extremities of the ribs.

Supply of Newspapers at Railways. Messrs. Smith, the extensive newsagents of the Strand, have concluded a contract with the Midland and Chester, and Holyhead Railway Companies, for the privilege of selling newspapers, books, &c., at the various stations. As they already hold a similar contract with the North-Western Company, these gentlemen have now secured the right to supply periodical literature to passengers over one thousand miles of rail. In case of irregularities of any description, or of failure in the supply of newspapers at this important service, the public will know to whom in future to apply for remedy, and we are assured that their complaints, if well founded, will be promptly attended to.—Morning Post

Marble Veneering, or Slaty Paint.—In Ohio, according to a New York paper, a Mr. Hake, of Akron, has discovered a colour resembling soft at first, and like indigo, but hardening, in a few days into a slaty stone. On marble it is found to consist of about one-half silex, one-fourth alumina, with manganese oxide and shades of iron, lime, and carbon. By reducing it to fine powder mixing with linseed oil into thick paint, and applying it with a brush to wood, iron, tin, zinc, or brick, it becomes, after a few months' exposure, perfectly hard and indestructible. As a preservative against damp it is said to be invaluable. In the west it is in large demand for covering roofs of houses, for tombs, and fences, &c., all of which it protects from weather as well as from fire. School slates are manufactured from it by applying it to thin wood or pasteboard. On wooden mantel fronts and tables, its appearance, when polished, is said to be not inferior to the finest Egyptian marble. Mr. Blake has procured a patent for his discovery. Would not Portland cement, in fine powder, and thus applied, with linseed oil, produce a slaty veneer over similar surfaces? We make a present of the suggestion to the Portland cement manufacturers. Parian cement mixed with oil, and might thus, we think, be used as paint, or for stony veneering; and certainly the surface of blocks of Portland cement reminds one a good deal of slate; the barcening, too, from a soft or moist state very much adds to the resemblance which it bears to this New World's wonder. By the way, silex, with lime, has been found, if we mistake not, to form a sort of cement well adapted to give a stony veneering, like that to plaster. The Builder.

MUSIC.

ENGLISH OPERA AT COVENT-GARDEN THEATRE.

There has been no novelty since our last Number. Bellini's "Somnambula" has been performed six times, owing to the attraction of Sims Reeves in Elvino. Miss Romer, who has been singing nearly every evening since the opening of the season, has been quite exhausted with the fatigue, and on Wednesday night it was necessary to claim the indulgence of the audience on her behalf. The event of another prima donna has been generally felt, but to-night (Saturday) Miss Lucombe will make her début on an English stage in "Haydée;" and on Tuesday Mdlle. Nissen, the Swedish vocalist, is to make her first appearance in "Norma." Mr. Whitworth and Mr. Reeves are precluded in the cast of Auber's popular work, which will be done for the first time in London with the whole of the music. Grieve's scenic effects for "Haydée" are reported to be very effective, particularly the entrance of the Venetian Admiral's ship of war into Venice. In "Norma," Mrs. Donald King, wife of the tenor of that name, is to make her appearance as Adalgisa. The ballets of the "Amazons" and the "Devil to Pay" have been the concluding entertainments after the operas.

Sussex Hall. The City Amateurs Lad the treat of an evening Concert on Tuesday, given by the Misses Adelaide and Harriet Lavender, who were sustained by Miss Sara Flower, Miss L. Pettigrew, Miss E. Badger, Messrs. George, Wicks, Gregg, and Phillips in the vocal department; and by Miss Burfield (pianoforte), Miss E. Bywater (harp), and Mr. F. Chatterton (harp). Mr. Maurice Davies and Mr. Stocking were the accompanyists

Sacred Harmonic Society.—The first Concert for the season of this old-established society will be given on Wednesday night, at Exeter Hall, when Mendelssohn's "Elijah" will be performed. It will be the first appearance of Mr. Costa as the conductor of the society, and his début, in fact, as the director of a public musical oratorio. The orchestral and choral departments have been increased, so far as professional aid is concerned. The Bishop of London has become a subscriber, in addition to the most influential amateurs; and there is every expectation that the society will now make the progress so long desired in the perfect execution of the great works.

London Sacred Harmonic Society. This society was formed last season, and is at present offshoot of the Sacred Harmonic Society. The Rev. G. Roberts is the President. Mr. Surman, who has established the new society, is the conductor, and Mr. H. Blagrove the leader. The first performance will be in Exeter Hall, when Handel's "Messiah" will be given.

Promenade Concerts at Drury Lane Theatre. M. Jullien is again in the field, and on Friday next will commence his campaign. He promises the "National Anthem" with five distinct pieces, and he has also arranged the principal pieces of Meyerbeer's "Huguenots," after the same manner as he did so successfully the "Robert le Diable." A new French quadrille, in which the French national airs are to be embodied, is another tempting novelty. M. Jullien has also secured the services of the English contralto, Miss Miran. Mr. Frederick Gye continues to be the administrative director of these popular concerts, and the general arrangements could not be in more competent hands.

Music in Manchester.—M. Henri Panofka, the violinist and composer, who was selected by Mr. Lumley as one of his musical directors, in the season 1847, for Her Majesty's Theatre, is now engaged in Manchester, accompanied by Mr. Willy, the violinist, Haussman, the violoncelle, and John Parry, the English buffo, has made a very successful tour in the southern and western towns of England

The Western Madrigal Society The performances of the music of the old masters will commence for the season next Saturday (the 4th). Mr Turle is the conductor, and Mr. G Buzil hon. secretary

Foreign Musical News.—St. Leon's ballet of "La Vivandière" has been produced at the Opéra de la Nation de Berlin, with success. Madame Hebert-Massy and Poultier have been singing Lucie and Edgardo. Madame Widemann's début in Halévy's "Charles the Sixth" has taken place. Her magnificent contralto voice was admitted, but the part was not considered best adapted for her abilities. A new basso named Junca has appeared as the Cardinal in Halévy's "Juive." He is regarded as a useful acquisition. At the Italian Opera, Mdlle. Castellan and Mdme. Carl had both failed in Abigail, in Verdi's "Nabucco." Mdme. Castellan's return in Adèna, in the "Ebair," was a great success; and she was admirably supported by Bouché in the part of Nabuccodonosor.—The new opera of the "Val d'Andorre" is in rehearsal at the Opéra Comique.—A new mass, composed by Adolphe Adam, was executed on Sunday last in the Chapel of the Palais de Justice, which was a complete success.—The reports of the progress of music in Holland, presented at the last meeting of the "Society for the Encouragement of Music," which consists of 1800 members, are most favourable.—The successor of the lamented Guhr, as conductor of the Frankfort orchestra, is Herr Lachner.

THE THEATRES.

LYCEUM.

Much excitement was created in the theatrical world by the appearance, at the Lyceum, on Wednesday evening, of Mr. John Reeve, a son of the late popular Comedian of the Adelphi and the house was crowded with friends anxious to witness his début. It could, however, scarcely be called such, as Mr. Reeve has already played in London, both as an amateur and in public; since then he has been, we believe, in the country, and his style of acting has greatly improved.

The piece written for his introduction on Wednesday was called "My Father all to Serve me," and was, as may be supposed, entirely made up of allusions to the young actor's position. It was not, certainly, a very brilliant affair; but it answered its purpose, with which qualification we may dismiss it. Mr. Reeve was most enthusiastically received. Independently of the number of friends in the house, very many who recollected his father gave him a hearty welcome on the score of old associations; and the applause was continued throughout the piece. Mr. Reeve has much humour, we do not, however, think that he will take a very high position just yet as a comic actor He lacks the uncouth comicality of his father, and has acting has still something of the constraint of a débutante. Perhaps this is a fault which will signify diminish. The best part of his performance was a song, after the style of "The Country Fair," in which he went through all the regular business of the showfolk and ran the gauntlet of every clever joke, to the intense delight of the audience, who were at last exhausted with laughing.

The other characters were played by Mrs. Yates—whose long [illegible] of the Adelphi was additional attraction—Mrs. Stirling, Mrs. Frank Matthews, and Mr. Selby. The young lady as a soubrette, and the gentleman as a fashionable fop—a character Mr. Selby has [illegible] well and thoroughly sustained.

HAYMARKET.

Since our last notice, Miss Laura Addison has been playing Mabel in the "Patriot's Daughter;" and, we are happy to add, with marked success: indeed, it is to be regretted that she did not confine herself to this part, as we are confident she would then at once have created a great effect. She was loudly and generously applauded, and will, with care, establish herself as a recognised favourite at the Theatre.

Mr. T. P. Cooke is still the figure-head of the Marylebone play-bills, and reefs his pinnacle, bores his captain, belays his best bower, and goes through all his other nautical manœuvres with the same success as of old. "My Poll and my Partner Joe" has been played all this week, produced in the same creditable style that signalises every thing brought out by this management.

The performance of Tuesday at all the theatres has been very remarkable; we expect, seldom before have so many houses been open together with so few new pieces to attract an audience. A newcomer at the Haymarket, an opera at Covent-Garden, a drama at the Adelphi, and a vaudeville at the Lyceum, would be as acceptable to the public as advantageous to the respective treasuries. It must be recollected that in another week Jullien will be drawing the evening fineurs by means of the promenade concerts, and that some counter-attraction must be put forward

We regret to announce the continued indisposition of Mr. James Wallack, whose absence from the boards of Drury Lane is severely felt by the dymarket

Mr. Dickens' last novel, "Dombey and Son," is about to be produced, in a dramatic form, at the Adelphi

Mr. Buckstone and Miss Mordaunt have finished their successful engagement at the Brighton Theatre. It is to be hoped that we shall, before long, see them in London. At a time when a talk is raised about the dearth of dramatic talent, we can ill afford to spare one of the best and brightest stars of the theatrical hemisphere. We must have Mrs. Nisbett in London, if it is only to hear her laugh.

During the week, the theatres, and other public resorts, have been enlivened by the presence of large parties of the National Guards, who have entered, with the readiest good temper, into our convivial amusements, and are pronounced everywhere to be "good fellows." It is impossible to speak too highly of the urbanity and general propriety of our Continental neighbours, or the earnest desire evinced by our country men to show them attention and hospitality!

Although not precisely within our province, we may, by the way, notice the performance of one of the professional singers at present at the Cyder Cellars, named Ross, which has really created some excitement in the best literary and theatrical circles of the metropolis. The song this gentleman produces so great an effect in is nothing in itself a sort of death chant of a low thief going to be hanged; but the intense dramatic power and vivid conception of the real and terrible exhibited in it is beyond description. He makes up a character in every way as striking as the Sykes of "Oliver Twist," and depicts the brutal dogged determination of a criminal with startling effect. We have seen nothing like it for some time.

IRELAND.

THE STATE TRIALS AT CLONMEL.

On Thursday se'nnight, the case for the Crown having been concluded, Mr Whitside commenced his address to the Jury for the defence, direct ng their attention to the speec ies and written evidence given against the prisoner, to show that they proved no intent supporting the charge of "levying war" against the Queen.

FRIDAY.—Mr. Whiteside resumed his address for the defence After a brief recapitulation of what he had advanced on the previous day, he entered into a minute analysis of the evidence and character of the witness D'Orvin. He first pointed out the discrepancies in his evidence, and then the additions made to it since his former examination, which alone would render it suspicious. He denounced his whole story, and condemned the officers of the Crown for not attempting to sustain it by any corroboration. The means were within their power; a few witnesses had been placed upon the table who could have corroborated portions of his story had it been true, and yet the Attorney-General had not dared to examine them on these points. Dobbyn's history, as extracted on cross-examination, was next handled with great effect; and Mr. Whiteside closed this part of the case by asserting that on Dobbyn's evidence the whole case hinged, and no twelve men in their senses could place the slightest confidence in his testimony. The speeches, as reported by the police, were next commented upon, and the speaker concluded in strong language the employment of illiterate men in such duties as are likely to impair their efficiency, and bring them into great contempt. He went rapidly through the remaining evidence, concluding as follows:—"Before you bring down upon yourselves the horror of shedding the blood of a fellow-creature, be certain to demonstration that he is guilty. A demand at quadruple heavens the case is not proved—because justice requires it. Give your verdict in conformity with the law, and posterity will remember and bless you and your verdict, and say that, empanelled in a period of strong excitement in a case affecting human life, you gave that verdict between the prisoner and the Crown with fairness—the happiest duty you could perform. Words form the case against my client, and a verdict of acquittal will relieve them from the unconstitutional doctrine of constructive treason and vindicate the law."

Mr. Whiteside was quite exhausted at the close of his address, which ended at about half-past one, and on this occasion even surpassed his effort on behalf of O'Brien.

The evidence for the defence was then called. The first witness deposed to being a member of the Red Hand Club, and being acquainted with Dobbyn. He was a member before Dobbyn, and swore that neither Dobbyn nor any one else had ever been appointed a delegate from the club, under any circumstances, and none of the club had ever been arrested.

Mr. Kirwan, the solicitor for Mr. Meagher, then deposed that he had examined the bail-ing papers for the Counsel of War, and though Dobbyn had stated that Mr. D. Reilly and Mr. Lalor had an equality of votes, the numbers, according to the papers, were—for Mr. Reilly 16, and for Mr. Lalor 10, and this on the first ballot.

Similar evidence to that in the case of O'Donohue was then given, showing that Mr Meagher, on the day of the attack at Widow Cormick's, was some miles distant, and could not have been there.

After a short adjournment, Mr Butt followed on the same side as Mr. Whiteside, on whose speech he passed a high eulogium. He necessarily passed over the same ground as on the same evidence, though his speech was very able and argumentative, and not concluded at half-past seven, when he prayed the indulgence of an adjournment, which the Court refused, till Mr. Meagher asked them to do so as an act of justice to his counsel.

SATURDAY.—Mr. Butt resumed his address; and, at its conclusion,

The Lord Chief Justice (Blackburne) informed Mr. Meagher, that if he wished to say anything, that was the time.

Mr. Meagher replied: No, my Lord; I will say nothing. I have committed my case to counsel whose abilities and genius I am satisfied will, and who have said all I could wish

The Solicitor-General then replied on behalf of the Crown; and

The Lord Chief Justice summed up, reading the evidence of Dobbyn verbatim, respecting which he told the Jury that they must be the sole judges of his veracity.

The Jury retired, and at a quarter to eight returned into court with a verdict of Guilty against T. F. Meagher, strongly recommending him to mercy, on account of his youth, and for other reasons.

MONDAY. The proceedings of this protracted Commission terminated to-day with the sentence on the three prisoners—Messrs M'Manus, O'Donohue, and Meagher. At the opening of the Court, eight of the peasants who were taken in arms were arraigned at the bar, and severally pleaded Not Guilty. They were then directed to withdraw, and, on the motion of the Solicitor-General, the three convicts were brought to the bar, and were severally asked what they had to say why sentence should not be passed upon them. All three addressed the Court in reply, in speeches highly characteristic. M'Manus spoke in the tone of a man who felt that he had played for a high stake and lost it, and that it was beneath him to complain of the forfeit being exacted. Towards the close of his observations he said—"And now, my Lords, in this, which may be the first time for me to put this sentiment on record, I say, that, standing in this dock, and about to ascend the scaffold, it may be to-morrow it may be now it may be never—whatever the result may be, I wish to put this on record, that as an part of my conduct, in no part of the proceedings I have taken, have I been actuated by feelings of animosity towards Englishmen individually, whatever I may have felt of the acts of English men in this Island. Therefore, I have only to say, it is not for having loved England less, but for having loved Ireland more, that I now stand before you." (Murmurs of applause in the gallery.)

In O'Donohue's observations there was nothing to call for notice: he merely evinced the spirit of "the lawyer's clerk," in adverting to points of law which his counsel had already fully dwelt upon.

Mr Meagher, on being called on to say why sentence of death should not be passed upon him, spoke as follows:—"My Lords, it is my intention to say a few words only. I desire that the sentence of the law may be passed on me as soon as much of the public time should be of short duration; nor have I the indelicate wish to close the dreary ceremony of a state prosecution with a vain display of words. Did I fear that, hereafter, when I shall be no more, the country I have tried to serve would think ill of me, I might indeed avail myself of this solemn moment to vindicate my sentiments and my conduct; but I have no such fear. The country will judge of those sentiments and that conduct in a light far different from that in which the jury by which I have been tried and convicted have received them; and by the country, the sentence which you, my Lords, are about to pronounce will be remembered only as the severe and solemn attestation of my rectitude and truth. Whatever be the language in which my sentence be spoken, I know that my fate will meet with sympathy and that my memory will be honored. In speaking thus, as one sure of my fame, I am not actuated by any vain-glorious motive. To the efforts I have made in the just and noble cause I ascribe no vain importance, nor do I claim for those efforts any high reward; but it so happens, and it will ever happen so, that they who have tried to serve their country, no matter how weak their efforts may have been, are sure to receive the thanks and blessings of their race. With my countrymen I leave my memory, my sentiments, my deeds—possibly fearing that they require no explanation from this day. To my fellow countrymen, it is true, have found me guilty of the crime of which I stood indicted. For this I bear not the slightest animosity or resentment towards them: influenced as they must have been by the charge of the learned Chief Justice, perhaps they could have found no other verdict. But, what of this charge? Any strong observations upon it, I feel sincerely, would ill befit the solemnity of this scene; but I would earnestly beseech of you, my Lord—you who preside on that bench when the passions and prejudices of this hour shall have passed away, that you will appeal to your own conscience, and ask if it were a charge, as it ought to have been, impartial and indifferent between the subject and the Crown. My Lords, you may deem it a hyperbole coming as it does from the lips of a beggar in the words—to restore ancient constitutions, and her native powers—this has been my ambition, and this ambition has been my crime. Judged by the law of England, I know that this crime entails on me the penalty of death; but the history of Ireland explains this crime and justifies it. Judged by that history, I am no criminal; you (turning and addressing Mr. M'Manus) are no criminal. You (turning again to Mr. O'Donohue) are no criminal. Nor do I now deserve punishment. Judged by this history, the treason of which I stand convicted loses all guilt, has been sanctified as a duty, and will be ennobled as a sacrifice. With these sentiments, my Lords, I am ready to abide the issue. Having done what I conceived to be my duty having spoken now, as I did on every occasion during my short career, what I feel to be the truth—I now bid farewell to the country of my birth, of my passion, and of my death: the country whose misfortunes have invoked my sympathies, whose factions I have sought to quell, whose intellect I have prompted to lofty aims, whose freedom has been my idle dream. To that country I now offer as a pledge of the love I bore it and as a proof of the sincerity with which I thought, and spoke, and struggled for its freedom, the life of a young heart, and with that life all the hopes, the honours, the endearments of a his ry and an honourable home. Pronounce, then, my Lords, the sentence the law directs, and I shall be prepared to hear it —I trust I shall be prepared to meet its execution. I hope I shall be able, with a right heart and a clear conscience, to appear before a higher tribunal a tribunal where a Judge of infinite goodness, as well as of infinite justice, will preside, and where, my Lords, many, many of the judgments of this world will be reversed."

A murmur of applause ran through the court. Many were moved by the prisoner's words to tears, and among them the counsel to whose care his life had been entrusted

Lord Chief Justice Doherty then proceeded, amid the most profound silence, to pass sentence upon the criminals. After addressing the prisoners at some length, the Judge concluded by saying, "I have now only to pass the sentence upon you, and upon each of you, the awful sentence of the law, which is, that you be taken hence to the place from whence you came, and be thence d— on a hurdle to the place of execution, and there be hanged by the neck until you be dead; and that afterwards the— be severed from his body, and the body of each divided into four quarters, to be disposed of as her Majesty shall think fit—and may the Almighty God have mercy upon your—"

His Lordship, who raised up his hands to heaven as he pronounced the last words of the sentence, left the bench immediately, followed by the Lord Chief Justice Blackburne and Mr Justice Moore.

The Governor of the gaol and his assistant removed the prisoners, who bowed to the Court as they retired down the steps of the dock, and shook hands with their friends.

The trial of the other prisoners was then postponed to Tuesday the— the next, to which day the Special Commission now stands adjourned.

PENALTY FOR REFUSING TO GIVE EVIDENCE AGAINST MR. S. O'BRIEN. The following rule has to be made by the Judges in the cases of John O'Donnell and Richard Shea, for refusing to give evidence against Mr. O'Brien. That each of them be imprisoned for one year, from the 1st of October, and fined £10; and in default of paying such fine, that they be further imprisoned for a period of three months. Edmund Egan, the other man who refused to give evidence, is in for trial, true bills for high treason having been found against him

COST OF WITNESSES—DOBBYN'S COST.—The entire cost of the witnesses, in the recent State prosecutions for high treason, as paid by the Crown, amounts to £1500. Dobbyn, the informer, was paid £17, including all his expenses up to Monday last.

DUBLIN COMMISSION OF OYER AND TERMINER.

On Saturday last this Court was opened, at 11 o'clock, by the Hon. Mr. Justice Torrens, the Hon. Mr. Justice Crampton, and the Right Hon. the Lord Mayor, who attended as usual by the civic officers.

The grand panels for the county and city having been called over, a Jury for each was sworn in to serve for the present sitting of the Court.

When the grand jurors were sworn, Mr. Justice Torrens addressed them. His Lordship alluded to the proceedings at the last commission in the cases of O'Doherty, Duffy, and Williams, against whom the Grand Jury had found true bills for feloniously publishing seditious libels in the Nation and Tribune newspapers. With these cases, of course, the present Grand Jury would have nothing to do; but, as the law officers of the Crown were at present engaged in the Special Commission, he should take the opportunity of stating that any new matter of importance would be sent before them by the Attorney-General, on his return to town. There was a case to which he felt it his duty to allude—one which arose out of the late unfortunate political excitement which had disturbed the peace and endangered the prosperity of the country—he meant the Young Ireland Michael Morun, John Moran, and John M'Cormick, for stabbing a policeman in a most unjustifiable manner on the night of his duty. If they (the Grand Jury) were satisfied with the evidence that would be offered in support of the charge, they would find true bills. After some further remarks, his Lordship concluded; and the grand jurors retired to consider the indictments sent before them

TRIAL OF MR. DILLON.—No day has been fixed as yet. The Crown, it is believed, will not proceed with the case at present. It is at the Commission, but on account of the Attorney-General then declined proceeding. Should a jury, however, disagree or acquit on that case, the Crown is prepared to send up other bills for treasonable conspiracy. His speech was very able and argumentative, and not concluded at half-past seven, when he prayed the indulgence of an adjournment, which the Court refused, till Mr. Meagher asked them to do so as an act of justice to his counsel.

SATURDAY.—Mr. Butt resumed his address; and, at its conclusion,

The Lord Chief Justice (Blackburne) informed Mr. Meagher, that if he wished to say anything, that was the time.

Mr. Meagher replied: No, my Lord; I will say nothing. I have committed my case to counsel whose abilities and genius I am satisfied will, and who have said all I could wish

The Solicitor-General then replied on behalf of the Crown; and

The Lord Chief Justice summed up, reading the evidence of Dobbyn verbatim, respecting which he told the Jury that they must be the sole judges of his veracity.

The Jury retired, and at a quarter to eight returned into court with a verdict of Guilty against T. F. Meagher, strongly recommending him to mercy, on account of his youth, and for other reasons.

MONDAY. The proceedings of this protracted Commission terminated to-day with the sentence on the three prisoners—Messrs M'Manus, O'Donohue, and Meagher. At the opening of the Court, eight of the peasants who were taken in arms were arraigned at the bar, and severally pleaded Not Guilty. They were then directed to withdraw, and, on the motion of the Solicitor-General, the three convicts were brought to the bar, and were severally asked what they had to say why sentence should not be passed upon them. All three addressed the Court in reply, in speeches highly characteristic. M'Manus spoke in the tone of a man who felt that he had played for a high stake and lost it, and that it was beneath him to complain of the forfeit being exacted. Towards the close of his observations he said—"And now, my Lords, in this, which may be the first time for me to put this sentiment on record, I say, that, standing in this dock, and about to ascend the scaffold, it may be to-morrow it may be now it may be never—whatever the result may be, I wish to put this on record, that as an part of my conduct, in no part of the proceedings I have taken, have I been actuated by feelings of animosity towards Englishmen individually, whatever I may have felt of the acts of English men in this Island. Therefore, I have only to say, it is not for having loved England less, but for having loved Ireland more, that I now stand before you." (Murmurs of applause in the gallery.)

In O'Donohue's observations there was nothing to call for notice: he merely evinced the spirit of "the lawyer's clerk," in adverting to points of law which his counsel had already fully dwelt upon.

Mr Meagher, on being called on to say why sentence of death should not be passed upon him, spoke as follows:—"My Lords, it is my intention to say a few words only. I desire that the sentence of the law may be passed on me as soon as much of the public time should be of short duration; nor have I the indelicate wish to close the dreary ceremony of a state prosecution with a vain display of words. Did I fear that, hereafter, when I shall be no more, the country I have tried to serve would think ill of me, I might indeed avail myself of this solemn moment to vindicate my sentiments and my conduct; but I have no such fear. The country will judge of those sentiments and that conduct in a light far different from that in which the jury by which I have been tried and convicted have received them; and by the country, the sentence which you, my Lords, are about to pronounce will be remembered only as the severe and solemn attestation of my rectitude and truth. Whatever be the language in which my sentence be spoken, I know that my fate will meet with sympathy and that my memory will be honored. In speaking thus, as one sure of my fame, I am not actuated by any vain-glorious motive. To the efforts I have made in the just and noble cause I ascribe no vain importance, nor do I claim for those efforts any high reward; but it so happens, and it will ever happen so, that they who have tried to serve their country, no matter how weak their efforts may have been, are sure to receive the thanks and blessings of their race. With my countrymen I leave my memory, my sentiments, my deeds—possibly fearing that they require no explanation from this day. To my fellow countrymen, it is true, have found me guilty of the crime of which I stood indicted. For this I bear not the slightest animosity or resentment towards them: influenced as they must have been by the charge of the learned Chief Justice, perhaps they could have found no other verdict. But, what of this charge? Any strong observations upon it, I feel sincerely, would ill befit the solemnity of this scene; but I would earnestly beseech of you, my Lord—you who preside on that bench when the passions and prejudices of this hour shall have passed away, that you will appeal to your own conscience, and ask if it were a charge, as it ought to have been, impartial and indifferent between the subject and the Crown. My Lords, you may deem it a hyperbole coming as it does from the lips of a beggar in the words—to restore ancient constitutions, and her native powers—this has been my ambition, and this ambition has been my crime. Judged by the law of England, I know that this crime entails on me the penalty of death; but the history of Ireland explains this crime and justifies it. Judged by that history, I am no criminal; you (turning and addressing Mr. M'Manus) are no criminal. You (turning again to Mr. O'Donohue) are no criminal. Nor do I now deserve punishment. Judged by this history, the treason of which I stand convicted loses all guilt, has been sanctified as a duty, and will be ennobled as a sacrifice. With these sentiments, my Lords, I am ready to abide the issue. Having done what I conceived to be my duty having spoken now, as I did on every occasion during my short career, what I feel to be the truth—I now bid farewell to the country of my birth, of my passion, and of my death: the country whose misfortunes have invoked my sympathies, whose factions I have sought to quell, whose intellect I have prompted to lofty aims, whose freedom has been my idle dream. To that country I now offer as a pledge of the love I bore it and as a proof of the sincerity with which I thought, and spoke, and struggled for its freedom, the life of a young heart, and with that life all the hopes, the honours, the endearments of a his ry and an honourable home. Pronounce, then, my Lords, the sentence the law directs, and I shall be prepared to hear it —I trust I shall be prepared to meet its execution. I hope I shall be able, with a right heart and a clear conscience, to appear before a higher tribunal a tribunal where a Judge of infinite goodness, as well as of infinite justice, will preside, and where, my Lords, many, many of the judgments of this world will be reversed."

A murmur of applause ran through the court. Many were moved by the prisoner's words to tears, and among them the counsel to whose care his life had been entrusted

Lord Chief Justice Doherty then proceeded, amid the most profound silence, to pass sentence upon the criminals. After addressing the prisoners at some length, the Judge concluded by saying, "I have now only to pass the sentence upon you, and upon each of you, the awful sentence of the law, which is, that you be taken hence to the place from whence you came, and be thence d— on a hurdle to the place of execution, and there be hanged by the neck until you be dead; and that afterwards the— be severed from his body, and the body of each divided into four quarters, to be disposed of as her Majesty shall think fit—and may the Almighty God have mercy upon your—"

His Lordship, who raised up his hands to heaven as he pronounced the last words of the sentence, left the bench immediately, followed by the Lord Chief Justice Blackburne and Mr Justice Moore.

The Governor of the gaol and his assistant removed the prisoners, who bowed to the Court as they retired down the steps of the dock, and shook hands with their friends.

The trial of the other prisoners was then postponed to Tuesday the— the next, to which day the Special Commission now stands adjourned.

PENALTY FOR REFUSING TO GIVE EVIDENCE AGAINST MR. S. O'BRIEN. The following rule has to be made by the Judges in the cases of John O'Donnell and Richard Shea, for refusing to give evidence against Mr. O'Brien. That each of them be imprisoned for one year, from the 1st of October, and fined £10; and in default of paying such fine, that they be further imprisoned for a period of three months. Edmund Egan, the other man who refused to give evidence, is in for trial, true bills for high treason having been found against him

COST OF WITNESSES—DOBBYN'S COST.—The entire cost of the witnesses, in the recent State prosecutions for high treason, as paid by the Crown, amounts to £1500. Dobbyn, the informer, was paid £17, including all his expenses up to Monday last.

DUBLIN COMMISSION OF OYER AND TERMINER.

On Saturday last this Court was opened, at 11 o'clock, by the Hon. Mr. Justice Torrens, the Hon. Mr. Justice Crampton, and the Right Hon. the Lord Mayor, who attended as usual by the civic officers.

The grand panels for the county and city having been called over, a Jury for each was sworn in to serve for the present sitting of the Court.

When the grand jurors were sworn, Mr. Justice Torrens addressed them. His Lordship alluded to the proceedings at the last commission in the cases of O'Doherty, Duffy, and Williams, against whom the Grand Jury had found true bills for feloniously publishing seditious libels in the Nation and Tribune newspapers. With these cases, of course, the present Grand Jury would have nothing to do; but, as the law officers of the Crown were at present engaged in the Special Commission, he should take the opportunity of stating that any new matter of importance would be sent before them by the Attorney-General, on his return to town. There was a case to which he felt it his duty to allude—one which arose out of the late unfortunate political excitement which had disturbed the peace and endangered the prosperity of the country—he meant the Young Ireland Michael Morun, John Moran, and John M'Cormick, for stabbing a policeman in a most unjustifiable manner on the night of his duty. If they (the Grand Jury) were satisfied with the evidence that would be offered in support of the charge, they would find true bills. After some further remarks, his Lordship concluded; and the grand jurors retired to consider the indictments sent before them

TRIAL OF MR. DILLON.—No day has been fixed as yet. The Crown, it is believed, will not proceed with the case at present. It is at the Commission, but on account of the Attorney-General then declined proceeding. Should a jury, however, disagree or acquit on that case, the Crown is prepared to send up other bills for treasonable conspiracy. His speech was very able and

ABSENCE OF THE LORD-LIEUTENANT FROM IRELAND. At a meeting of the Irish Privy Council on Friday se'nnight, the Right Hon. Maziere Brady, Lord High Chancellor of Ireland, his Grace Richard Lord Archbishop of Dublin, and the Right Hon. Sir Edward Sakeney, K.C.B., Lieutenant-General Commanding the Forces in Ireland, were sworn Lord Justices of Ireland to exercise the Vice-Regal authority during the absence of the Earl of Clarendon, who left Dublin on that day for England. With respect to the Lord-Lieutenant's visit to Lisdoon, it is stated that, besides the political condition of Ireland and the fate of the state prisoners, the social necessities of the people, and the best and wisest remedies for them, will form matter for deliberation with the Cabinet during his Excellency's stay.

RELEASE OF STATE PRISONERS. The law being vindicated by the conviction of the leaders of the late insane insurrection, Lord Clarendon has wisely and humanely resolved to temper justice with mercy. Previous to his Excellency's departure for England an order was issued to admit to bail the following persons, now suffering imprisonment under the Habeas Corpus Suspension Act:—William Matthews, Charles Dudgeon, Patrick Harmon, James Crotty, William Wade, Peter Baker, Coll, Rochford, Owen O Neil, Francis Gabbett, Justin Supple, James M. O'Brien.

THE friends of Mr. John Dillon have received positive information of his escape from the port of Galway, in a vessel called the Gem, bound for New York. He was disguised in the garb of an Arran fisherman; previous to this he had been traversing the country dressed in the habit of a religious order, his appearance creating the slightest suspicion

THE IRISH BANK RETURNS for the month just published, and we are glad to perceive that they show a favourable change. The totals are as follow:—Bank of Ireland, circulation, £2,875,000; gold, £2,000,000. Private banks, circulation, £1,827,000; gold, £740,000. Total circulation, £4,806,000; gold, £2,740,000, showing the very large increase of £341,000 in the circulation, but a decrease of £92,000 in the bullion. There has been a considerable and continuous contraction for the last nine months, so that the increase which has taken place to so marked an extent is very encouraging, and the payment of the dividends, upwards of half a million during the present month, may reasonably be expected to cause a further improvement. A call of £3 10s. per share, payable Nov. 10, has been made on the Waterford and Limerick shares, making £47 10s. paid up; and also calls of £2 10s. each on the Midland Great Western shares and half shares, making £45 paid up on the former, and £12 10s. on the latter

Dublin Freeman.

THE CLEARANCE SYSTEM.—Tenant eviction proceeds in the south with a most determined regularity. Not a journal is published in which we do not read of one or more of these proceedings, which, however legally authorised, and even though socially their ultimate effect may be good, produce much present hardship. At the close of last week several houses were levelled in the immediate vicinity of Limerick, and preparatory notices have been served on several tenants of Lord Clare, in the west of that county. All these levellings are effected in the presence of the police and military.

FINANCIAL REFORM. The Financial Reform Association of Liverpool has presented to the public the result of their examination of the salaries and expenses of the House of Commons and the Government offices. The following is a List of the officers of the House of Commons, and their present annual salaries:—Speaker, £5000; chaplain, £400; secretary to the speaker, £300; counsel to the speaker, £1500; his clerk, £150; examiner of standing orders, £1750; taking officer, £1000; librarian, £1000; assistant librarian, £250; messenger, £140; four Vote-Office clerks, £800, £300, £180, £120. £400; four clerks at the table, £3800, £250, £150, £100. £7100; seven public bill clerks, £1000 £800, £600, £500, £400, £300, £250—£3900; seven journal clerks, £1340; £1030, £1000, £928, £691, £338, £204, also for extra work, £1000 £1531; thirteen committee clerks, £1100, £ [illegible] £ [illegible] £ [illegible]

STONY CROSS.—RUFUS'S STONE.

THE NEW FOREST.

(Concluded from Page 248.)

Before we return to the celebrated localities of the New Forest, it may be as well to glance at its regulation. Thus, its officers are a Lord Warden, lieutenant, riding-forester (we believe, abolished), bow-bearer, two rangers, wood-ward, under wood-ward, four verderers, high-steward, under-steward, twelve regarders; nine foresters, or master-keepers, being one to each bailiwick; and usually fifteen under-foresters, or groom-keepers, but at times a smaller number. We have not space to enumerate the duties of these officers; they relate chiefly to matters respecting "vert and venison:" some of the salaries are little more than nominal, with fees of bucks and does. The Forest has its horse, and its herds of wild hogs, much more scanty than heretofore. There are many deer kept in the Forest, the right of shooting which is now confined to the lord-warden, and those appointed by him.

The chief value of the New Forest is for the raising of oak and beech timber for the use of the Navy. An Act for the improvement and regulation of the Forest was passed in 1800, the enactments of which not only effected the correction of various minor abuses committed within its limits, but were calculated to make it a permanent benefit to the country, by furnishing an abundant, and not, as formerly, a scanty supply of timber for our navy. From the investigation now in progress, the duties of the assistant-deputy-surveyor, for this purpose, are very numerous. He has to assist the deputy-surveyor in the management of everything relating to the Forest; to superintend the setting out, felling, stripping, lopping, and bringing to sale about 4000 oak trees annually; to superintend the setting out, felling, measuring, and assigning about 400 loads of fuel-wood annually in beech and fir poles, half beech and half fir; arranging, making out, and delivering fuel tickets to each of the claimants, according to the fuel-wood list; to superintend the sales, and grants, and exchanges of land, enfranchisement of copyholds, and all valuations of timber, land, and so forth; to attend the courts and magistrates' meetings; to superintend the thinning, clearing, planting, hole-digging, draining, nursery work, and roads enclosed for the growth of timber, 6000 acres or thereabouts; to superintend the carpenters' work, and all necessary repairs to be done at the keepers' lodges, bridges, causeways, &c.; and to manage all official correspondence, payments of salaries and general payments in the forest. Yet the abuses in the several offices are stated to have been very great. Mr. Fletcher, a timber-merchant of Millbrook, Southampton, states it as a fact within his own knowledge, that some of the regarders have sold timber by private contract to certain timber-merchants in the absence of the assistant-deputy-surveyor, whose duty it was to be present on all occasions of sale, public or private; and he further affirms that some of the timber so disposed of was sold for one shilling per foot, instead of two shillings, which it would bring at a public sale—in short, that timber which was worth about £200 was sold for £120 or £130 to these timber-merchants. This timber, which is generally the best in the forest, goes to the ship-building ports in the north of England—Sunderland, Newcastle, Aberdeen, Shields, and Arbroath. And so steady has been the supply, and so abundant also, it would appear withal, that the builders in these ports have publicly advertised that only vessels constructed of south of England timber will be classed A 1 at Lloyd's.

Sir W. Symonds, the late Surveyor of the Navy, has, however, thrown light upon the mismanagement of the timber. "I thought it very extraordinary," said Sir William, "holding the situation I did, that from such a vast tract of land as the Crown lands, the King's forests or Queen's forests, we should not have got a chip, I may say, of timber out of them. In 1832, at the time I became Surveyor of the Navy, we were very short of a particular kind of timber, which the New Forest produces in great abundance—I mean small timber." But the sum and substance of his evidence is to the effect that the dockyards could not get any of it, except at a higher price than was paid to contractors for the same. In fact, according to Sir W. Symonds, the timber that came from the Appenines, from Tuscany, and from the Roman States, was procurable so much cheaper, that it appeared to him to be inexpedient to purchase at the Royal forests: the cost per ton being in the one case £6 6s. in the other, £8 12s. 7d.—the quality of both being precisely the same. And yet the New Forest is within a few miles of the dockyard at Portsmouth.

The best and most trustworthy evidence that can be procured gives a net value in fee for the New Forest equivalent to more than a million and a half (£1,583,760), that is to say, estimating and deducting all known rights of commonage, &c.; and yet to what purpose the forest is turned, except to feed a few deer, no one, except perhaps the officers of the same, fully knows. For Sir William Symonds has shown that it is to useless as regards the Navy. Mr. Milne, one of the Commissioners of Woods and Forests, states that the Lord Warden's establishment costs £2000 a year; the verderers' establishment £181 12s. 6d., exclusive of the bucks to which they are entitled, ex virtute officii; the Woods and Forests establishment to £1687; in all nearly £4000 a year, exclusive of the bucks and does, to which all three are, to a greater or lesser extent, entitled by custom or by right: while there is not a particle of evidence to prove that the Forest is of any general utility or public value in its present condition, but very much the contrary, as the means of promoting idleness, profligacy, poaching, and pauperism among the poor living on its outskirts.

It is now time to turn to the localities we have this week Illustrated. First, is one closely associated with the early history of the Forest,

STONY CROSS,

The place of William Rufus's death. There has been much controversy on the details of this catastrophe; but the following conclusions given in the "Pictorial History of England" appear to be just: "that the King was shot by an arrow in the New Forest, that his body was abandoned and then hastily interred, are facts perfectly well authenticated; but some doubts may be entertained as to the precise circumstances attending his death, notwithstanding their being minutely related by writers who were living at the time, or who flourished in the course of the following century. Sir Walter Tyrrel afterwards swore, in France, that he did not shoot the arrow; but he was, probably, anxious to relieve himself from the odium of killing a King, even by accident. It is quite possible, indeed, that the event did not arise from chance, and that Tyrrel had no part in it. The remorseless ambition of Henry might have had recourse to murder, or the avenging staff might have been aped by the desperate hand of some Englishman, tempted by a favourable opportunity and the traditions of the place. But the most charitable construction is, that the party were intoxicated with the wine they had drunk at Malwood Keep, and that, in the confusion consequent on drunkenness, the King was hit by a random arrow."

In that part of the Forest near Stony Cross, at a short distance from Castle Malwood, formerly stood an oak which tradition affirmed was the tree against which the arrow glanced that caused the death of Rufus. In Leland's time there was a chapel standing near the spot; "most probably (says Howitt) built by some of King William's descendants, to pray for his soul: it being the general opinion of the time, that the divine judgment for his cruelties in the Forest had fallen upon him here more expressly, because he had actually destroyed a church. No trace of such a thing is now visible, and, indeed, it is one of the singularities of this spot, that so little of the destroyed villages, churches, &c. is to be discovered."

Charles II. directed the tree to be encircled by a paling; it has disappeared, but the spot whereon the tree grew is marked by a triangular stone, about 5 feet high, erected by Lord Delaware, upwards of a century ago. The stone has since been faced with an iron casting of the following inscription upon the three sides

Here stood the oak-tree on which an arrow, shot by Sir Walter Tyrrel, at a stag, glanced and struck King William II., surnamed Rufus, on the breast; of which stroke he instantly died, on the 2nd of August, 1100.

King William II., surnamed Rufus, being slain, as before related, was laid in a cart belonging to one Purkess, and drawn from hence to Winchester, and buried in the cathedral church of that city

That where an event so memorable had happened might not hereafter be unknown, this stone was set up by John Lord Delaware, who had seen the tree growing in this place anno 1745.

Stony Cross is a favourite spot for pic-nic parties in the summer; and we agree with William Howitt in thinking there to be a great charm in visiting a spot marked by a singular historical event 700 years ago, and finding it so similar in all its present features. It lies seven miles from Ringwood, on a wide slope among the woods. From the road above, splendid views over the country present themselves; not far off is a capital inn, and below are a few scattered cottages, standing amid their orchards—a picture of forest simplicity and peace.

We have not space for the traditional gossip of the locality, but must add that at Minstead, not many years since, lived Purkess, a charcoal-burner, one of whose ancestors is reported to have carried the body of Rufus to his own cottage, before he conveyed it to Winchester in his cart.

BROKENHURST.

We have incidentally mentioned this locality. It lies midway between Lyndhurst and Lymington. The village is of great antiquity, and portions of the parish church were erected before the Conquest. The font is also very ancient. Brokenhurst Park and Watcombe House are situated near the village: the latter was for several years the residence of John Howard. Cuffnells, a seat near to Lyndhurst, is most delightfully situated in the heart of the Forest. Here the gloom and majesty of the region increases.

At Lyndhurst is the Lodge where George III. used to take up his residence during his hunting visits. On it is placed Rufus's stirrups:—

> And still, in merry Lyndhurst hall,
> Red William's stirrup decks the wall;
> Who sets the antique weapon see
> And a fair stone, in green Malwood,
> Informs the traveller where stood
> The memorable tree.—The Red King. By W. S. Mode.

BROKENHURST.

Sir Benjamin Brodie and the Board of Health.—The medical profession will learn with great pleasure, that Sir Benjamin Brodie did not suffer the Board of Health, as it is termed, to be formed without remonstrating with the Earl of Carlisle (then Lord Morpeth) on the contemplated exclusion of medical men. The reply of the noble Lord was to the effect that it was not a Board of Health over which he presided, so much as a Board of Works, but he added, that he should take steps to ally a medical practitioner with the central board at the earliest possible moment, through the medium of the Bill for the Prevention of Nuisances. The insufficiency of this we have already dwelt on. Sir Benjamin Brodie's application has failed in this object, but we cannot the less record our thanks, and the thanks, we are sure, of the whole profession, for his interposition. His conduct forms a distinguished contrast in this particular to the apathy of the other heads of the profession.—Lancet.

Relief to the Homeward-bound.—The Lords of the Admiralty, of their own accord, and without solicitation, gave orders on Friday se'nnight, by electric telegraph, for her Majesty's steam-sloop Driver, Commander Jonson, to proceed from Portsmouth immediately to the chops of the Channel with water and provisions for the relief of the homeward-bound merchant ships prevented from making their respective ports by the prevalence of north-easterly winds. The steamer accordingly left Portsmouth on Friday afternoon at three o'clock. Their Lordships have also ordered an available steam-vessel, the Trident, Lieut. Commander Rusk, to be despatched from Cork to the entrance of the Channel, for a similar humane purpose.

Loss of an Emigrant Ship.—On Wednesday the desertion of an emigrant ship, while in a sinking condition, with no less than one hundred and fifteen passengers on board, was reported at Lloyd's. The following particulars are confirmed by communication from Mr. Buchanan, the chief agent of emigration at Quebec, who took the deposition of the passengers. The vessel in question was the schooner Ann, 200 tons burthen, Archibald M'Fie master, belonging to Limerick, bound to Quebec with 134 emigrants, men, women, and children. She arrived in the Gulf of St. Lawrence on the 26th of September, and was beating up, the wind blowing very heavy, when she came in collision with another vessel. She was rendered a perfect wreck, her masts and rigging being carried away, and her bows stove in. All the passengers at the time were below asleep, but the violent concussion threw them out of their berths, and a scene of the utmost dismay prevailed. The crew, at the direction of the master, immediately fastened down the hatches, so as to prevent the poor terrified creatures escaping on to the deck; and then, with the captain, jumped on board the vessel with which they had been in contact. The vessel was then being got clear of the Ann, which, incredible as it may appear, had been abandoned with her living freight below decks. Nine of the passengers, however, just before the vessels parted, managed, by breaking through the portion between the steerage and forecastle to gain the deck, and followed the captain and crew on to the other vessel. This turned out to be the Hampton, of Grangemouth, a coaster. She had sustained considerable damage to her rigging, her bowsprit being carried away. Apparently no injury had been caused to her hull, yet not the least effort was made to rescue the unfortunate emigrants. The Hampton, it is reported, left the wreck of the Ann, and was soon lost sight of. The terrified emigrants eventually burst open the hatches, and on getting on deck discovered the deplorable condition they were in. The boats were destroyed, and every sea made a breach over her. After some difficulty, they contrived to hoist a light on the stump end of the mast as a signal of distress, which, in the course of the following morning, was seen by the Princess Royal, of Liverpool. The Master, Mr. Dringuid, took all the emigrants off with the assistance of the brig Hibernia, of Workington, Cootear master, which brought about 20 out of 102, her boats being very small for the sea that was running. If it had not been for the assistance of the brig, some of the men would have been left behind. The passengers saved nothing but what they had on their backs. Subsequent accounts mention the arrival, at Quebec, of the nine passengers who got on deck and escaped on board the Hampton, that vessel having shipped them on board the Witham Steward, of Portsmouth, but, strange to say, of the master and crew of the Ann no tidings have been heard. The nine passengers state that they left them on board. The Ann, we are informed, has been seen on shore on the south side of the island of Anticosti a perfect wreck.

BRYNLLYS TOWER, IN SOUTH WALES.

BY JAMES LEWIS THOMAS, C.E.

It is to be feared that the absorbing interest created in all minds of late years by ecclesiastical architecture, has led to great neglect of the military remains of Great Britain; which, although not making such sacred appeals for preservation, yet ought to be regarded by every lover of our national history as furnishing significant records of the advancement of society from rugged feudality to more civilised despotism, and thence to the time when the reign of law overthrew that of the strong hand. They are, in fact, structures erected at different times, from the one motive—ambition; and plainly illustrate the past periods of refined magnificence, rude power, and savage strength.

The subject of the present Illustration is a round isolated tower, called Brynllys Tower, which signifies "the eminence or brow near the court or palace." It is situated on the banks of the Llynfi, about eight miles from Brecon, and is seen for many miles round rising in bold outline above the rich woods of Treigunter.

Mr. King, the well-known antiquary, devoted a large portion of his valuable work to an inquiry into the origin of this tower, "which, if correct," says the learned historian of the county, "may have been an imitation of Morddal Ger Caerligi, the first stone-mason after the deluge who settled in Britain." He (Mr King) thinks the construction is singularly unlike anything Roman or Norman and therefore infers the architecture to be Syrian, corresponding with Chardin's account of the subordinate kind of Median or Mingrelian ancient Eastern Castles. He proceeds at great length to prove this, by asserting that the Chieftain of the Silures, in whose country this Castle stood, was also Chieftain of the Dumnonii, in Cornwall, who first assumed the regal dignity on the departure of the Romans; and that, as this keep or tower is built of small hewn stones, he is of opinion that it must have been built by the Cornish Britons, who acquired that peculiar art of construction from the Phœnicians. His next argument is from the primitive style of some of the arches, being formed of only two stones, and in some instances merely a plain loop of an oblong form, and flat at the top; also from the circumstance of the large sloping base of the tower, which he says is common to Syria, and seen only in some other instances in this island. By these arguments he endeavours to prove that the structure was raised originally on the Syrian or Phœnician plan, yet so late as at a time when even the arch had been invented and slightly seen, but when its true use was not understood, about the interval between the time of the first invasion of Britain by Julius Cæsar, and the subsequent one by Claudius, which invasions, he farther observes, neither molested nor affected the Britons in Cornwall or Wales, and of which they could have only distant reports.

BRYNLLYS TOWER.

Having an opportunity (through the courtesy of the Rev. Mr. Morgan, Vicar of Talgarth, the present occupant of the adjoining mansion, in whose grounds the Tower is situated) of taking the above sketch, seeing the interior, and ascending to the top, partly by means of ladders and partly by means of the old stairs, which wind round the wall in some parts entire, I examined minutely every part.

There appears in the sloping base or artificial mount a forced entrance to the lower donjon, with a similar breach on the opposite side, apparently the result of great violence, merely made for the convenience of late years—a part which may have been originally a small loop-hole to admit light and air, the entrance being by a well-hole in the ceiling. This opening discloses a singular feature in the construction of the work, viz. two round passages, each about two feet in diameter, made in the thickness of the wall near the ground (at that part about 12 feet), and going quite round the structure: their situation is shown in the engraving. Farther appears the original door of entrance, to which there could have been no access except by a steep flight of steps on the outside, probably a portable construction of wood. The whole height of the Tower is at present about 85 or 90 feet from the ground; but it was evidently much higher, as upon the top is an arched alcove or bower, opening upon an extensive and delightful prospect of the surrounding country, with a handsome fireplace broken off below the mantel. I noticed several arches formed of very thin stones, which partook of all the different forms generally found in architectural remains of an early date: in some, the curve was nearly the segment of a circle; and in others, the early English pointed form. I therefore very much doubt whether it is of the great antiquity Mr King supposes it to be. History is not so entirely dark upon the subject as to leave its origin solely to the fertile imagination of an antiquary. If it had been a British construction and in British possession, it would have followed the fate of the remainder of Breconshire upon the conquest of that county by Bernard de Neufmarche, A.D. 1092, and have been allotted to one of his knights; but we find it in the possession of the Crown at that period, and soon after granted to Richard Fitzbore. It is, then, in all probability, one of the first erections of William the Conqueror, in his expedition into Wales in 1079; and afterwards made a dépôt by William Rufus in his unsuccessful attack upon the Welsh. His successor, although described by some of the old historians as the conqueror of Wales, seeing the difficulty of retaining his acquisitions in Breconshire, granted whatever belonged to him in that county to the Lord Marcher, of Clifford Castle; who, residing in the vicinity, and keeping the strongholds garrisoned, was enabled to preserve Brynllys Castle in his family, until his descendant, Maud, the widow of William Longespee, Earl of Salisbury, was compelled to take for her second husband, John Giffard, of Brimsfield, in Gloucestershire. It was this Giffard, residing then at Brynllys, who was called upon to assist Mortimer in the defeat of Llewelyn ap Griffith, near Builth. The Castle is also mentioned by Giraldus Cambrensis, as the place where Mabel, the impious and abandoned son of Milo Fitzwalter, and nephew of Bernard de Neufmarche, was killed. It was likewise in the possession of the Bohuns, Lords of Brecon, and afterwards the Staffords; and in the reign of Henry the Seventh held by Humphrey Stafford, the last Duke of Buckingham of that name.

This ruin is therefore an object of great historical interest—unlike the gloomy ruins on the banks of the Danube, though similar in form—for they carry back the thoughts of the spectator to the sad picture of avarice, brutality, and cruel disregard of the common dictates of humanity exhibited by the Barons of Germany and their hordes of retainers who lived by the spoil of the industrious classes; while this recals to our minds the noble deeds and the noble songs of the Cambrians, when, in spite of all these feudal erections of their invaders, they disputed, hand to hand, and foot to foot, every inch of their soil, and, inspirited by the poetry of their bards and their innate love of liberty, maintained for seven hundred years a successful warfare for the defence and independence of their homes:

> Such were the sons of Cambria's ancient race—
> A race that check'd victorious Cæsar, saw'd
> Imperial Rome, and forced mankind to own
> Superior virtues [illegible] only knew,
> Or only practised; for they nobly dared
> To face oppression; and where Freedom finds
> Her aid invok'd, there will the Briton die.

SCENE FROM THE NEW OPERA OF "LEOLINE," AT THE PRINCESS' THEATRE.

THE OPERA OF "LEOLINE," AT THE PRINCESS' THEATRE.

The success of Flotow's work, as we anticipated in our last week's notice, has been very great. The animated acting of Miss Rafter, as Léoline; the expressive singing of Mr. Charles Braham, as the Count; and the noble voice of Weiss, as Franz, produce the finest result.

Our artists have depicted one of the most striking dramatic situations in the opera. It is in the trio, in which Franz—learning that Léoline had been beloved by the Count, prior to the catastrophe terminating the first act, when Léoline falls into the precipice and is killed—seizes a musket, and is on the point of shooting his rival; but at the moment of firing, the spirit of Leoline appears, and intervenes to save the life of her lover. This trio is, musically speaking, as remarkable for its intensity as the action is exciting.

THE PROGRESS OF A BILL.

BY W. BLANCHARD JERROLD.

ILLUSTRATED BY KENNY MEADOWS.

(Concluded from page 254.)

CHAPTER VIII.

THE CLIMAX OF THE DRAMA.

In due course of time Mr. Henry Pursey appeared at the Insolvent Court, and was opposed by Mr. Moss for £45, and by another Jew attorney for the value of the second bill cashed secretly by Mr. Macfum. Pursey was described as connected with a mercantile firm in the city, and in the receipt of £250 per annum.

Pursey's legal adviser submitted that his client was entitled to the protection of the Court, inasmuch as he had been the victim of one of those adroit and highly-educated swindlers with which this metropolis unhappily abounded. As for the gentlemen who now opposed Mr. Pursey, the Commissioner knew them well enough, and would not therefore give much weight to their claims, which were certainly legal, but certainly not the result of fair dealing. They had made usurers' bargains, and deserved their loss. It was well known that there was a set of men ready to cash any bills, without regard to the means of the parties whose names were attached to those bills.

The Commissioner read Pursey a most wholesome lecture on the imprudence of which he had been guilty. There he was, a young man, stripped by his imprudence of all he possessed in the world, and, as he (the Commissioner) understood, deprived of his situation. What stared him in the face? At best, a hard and passionate struggle to keep the wolf from his door; whereas, had he listened to the dictates of prudence, and not been blinded by the condescensions and representations of a man who had been instrumental in sending more than one person to that court, he might have still been in the enjoyment of his modest but easy income, and have remained a happy man. As it was, he must begin the world anew—no cheerful prospect to a man on whom a family depended for their subsistence. His (Pursey's) legal adviser had thought proper to urge as a reason for the leniency of the Court towards him, that the individuals who had cashed his (Pursey's) bills were reckless usurers. In his opinion, this did not in any way influence the culpability, or, rather, the utter imprudence of his (Pursey's) conduct. He had put his name to a bill, knowing that he had not wherewithal to pay it should it fall upon him. This constituted the imprudence (he would not apply a harsher epithet) of which he had been guilty. He would make no comment upon the acceptance of the second bill, inasmuch as herein he had become the dupe of an artful man; but he would earnestly counsel him, and, through him, others, to take a lesson from his present misfortune. He thought he had suffered and would suffer sufficient punishment for his imprudence, without the suspension of the Court, and he should therefore grant him the protection he sought.

PROGRESS OF A BILL.—THE CLIMAX.

It forms no part of this history to paint the struggles and the hardships that marked Pursey's new battle with the world. Perhaps, considering the amount of experience he gained by the calamity that befell him, with a bankruptcy, his early prospects, it was not dearly purchased: for that experience is of large value which teaches us to make or mar friendships on certain foundations, and to recollect always, that, however willing we may be to serve a friend, we have no right to sacrifice that willingness to the prejudice of those whose legitimate support we are. That man is esteemed generous who scatters his substance abroad; while he who, in a spirit of honesty to those who by blood and tie are dependent upon him, gathers and keeps his substance exclusively for them, is called either a close-fisted or a worldly man: but, in truth, he is the more generous of the two. The former is generally actuated as much by the praise of the world as by the goodness of his nature; while the latter is always impelled onward by motives of purest generosity. And if Pursey's experience of Mankind turned the tide of his better feelings to their proper channel, and convinced him of the truth of the sentiment which declares that true charity springs from a man's own hearth, and should be ever concentrated there, then, I say, he did not purchase his experience dearly. He endured (the fact must not be hidden) years of severest penury, ere he freed himself from the net in which Macfum had entangled him; but the spirit of youth, strong within him at the outset of his struggle, carried him through the ordeal, and, though the cynic's sneer came upon his lip at times, it had lost little of its early, and, therefore, its best impulse. He was early, and, therefore, its best impulse. He was early, and, therefore, its best impulse. He was

ADVERTISEMENTS.

M. JULLIEN begs to announce that his ANNUAL BENEFIT will take place on FRIDAY NEXT, the 3rd of November.

MISS MIRAN

MR. CHARLES BRAHAM

MR. HENRY PHILLIPS

MR. HARRISON

THE NATIONAL ANTHEM

WEIPPERT'S SOIREES DANSANTES,

THE ROYAL CHINESE JUNK

BUY YOUR WEDDING RING

PIANOFORTES, the best of every description,

PIANOFORTES.—The cheapest house in

PIANOFORTES, by MOORE and Co.—

LONDON PIANOFORTE MART,

SUPERIOR PIANOFORTES, for HIRE or

CRESTS, COATS of ARMS, CYPHERS, &c.,

PRESENTS for WEDDINGS, BIRTH-

JONES'S £4 4s. SILVER LEVER

SARLS ARGENTINE SILVER PLATE.

A HANDSOME PRESENT.—A GOLD

DAVIES'S CANDLES,

PEARL DENTIFRICE.—ROWLAND'S

PUBLICATIONS, &c.

THE LOVERS STRATAGEM, from the OLD LONDON BRIDGE, No. 7, will be

LES HUGUENOTS.—This splendid operatic

NEW SONG. DEAREST, THEN I'LL

MR. CHARLES BRAHAM.—The beautiful

MISS HERBERT'S NEW NOVEL.

THE YOUNG COUNTESS.

SHARPE'S LONDON MAGAZINE, Edited

FOR THE ONLY CORRECT WINTER

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY WINTER

PRICED CATALOGUES of the WORKS of

THE MAN IN THE MOON for NOVEM-

RUINS OF MANY LANDS.

THE ARCHÆOLOGICAL JOURNAL,

MODERN DOMESTIC MEDICINE. A

OLLENDORFF'S METHOD OF LEARNING

D'ARBY on INDIGESTION. A Popular

CLASSICAL BOOKS.—R. SAYWELL'S

CLERICAL ELOCUTION.—Mr. RICHARD

WANTED, a Respectable YOUTH as an

RIDING TAUGHT to LADIES and GEN-

DANCING TAUGHT in the most Fashi-

THE ARCHITECTS, ENGINEERS,

STAMMERING and DEFECTS of

CHEAP MUSIC.—Eighty Songs for Eight

MARSHALL'S BRITISH and FOREIGN

"AS YOU LIKE IT."—Either Six Pounds of GOOD FEMALE SERVANTS are obtained

GORDON'S GOLDEN SHERRY, as per

THE REGAL POLKAS, being a choice Col-

WEDDING ORDERS & INDIA OUTFITS

IMPORTANT and EXTENSIVE CON-

WORTHY of NOTICE.—Upwards of 2000

IF POSSIBLE, the WHOLE STOCK must be

SILKS, SATINS, and VELVETS.

LADIES FASHIONABLE MORNING

CHILDREN'S FROCKS, COATS, &c.

FORD'S EUREKA SHIRT. To a Gentle-

FORD'S EUREKA SHIRT.—Coloured Shirts,

TO TAILORS and WOOLLEN DRAPERS.

NICOLL'S PATENT POCKET PROTEC-

BROWN'S PATENT ELASTIC MOURN-

SUPERIOR WINTER OVER-COATS,

SHOOTING.—The attention of Sporting

"LET a WOOLLEN BELT be WORN

SHIRTS, 4s. 6d. each, or SIX for 26s.—These

NO CHIMNEY is WANTED for RICKETS

"OH! How very Comfortable!" exclaim all

DANIELS' MONUMENT RAZORS were

HEAL and SONS have had a considerable

FOUR FIRES for ONE PENNY, by

DOES YOUR HAIR FALL OFF OR GET

HAIR DYE.—A lady will forward to any

THE TOILET of BEAUTY RENDERED

RHEUMATISM EFFECTUALLY CURED.

FUTURUS FITS EFFECTUALLY and PER-

DO YOU SUFFER TOOTH-ACHE? If so,

CURE for COUGHS, Colds, Asthma, Influenza, Hoarseness, and all Pulmonary Complaints.—DR. LOCOCK'S PULMONIC WAFERS are daily effecting cures of the most obstinate cases of Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Influenza, Hoarseness, and all Pulmonary Complaints. Sold by all Medicine Vendors, price 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., and 11s. per box.

OPENING OF THE GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY.—BOSTON.

OPENING OF THE GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY.

On the 17th inst., the Loop Line of the Great Northern Railway communication Lincolnshire was opened with great éclat. Two well-filled trains left Peterborough at 6 and 9 A.M., and were hailed all along the line by crowds who flocked to see them pass. At twelve o'clock, a train with the passengers from the London and North-Western and Eastern Counties, followed. Among those connected with the undertaking were Mr James Arbuin, Mr. Fyre, Mr. Mowatt, Mr. Cubitt the engineer, Mr. Scott Russell, Mr. Bury the locomotive superintendent, Mr. W. Pulford his manager, Mr Williams, and others. The train arrived at Boston about two, at Lincoln soon after three, and was greeted between Boston and Lincoln with bands of music and masses of people.

The entire line lies on a dead level; and the only difficulty has been in securing a firm foundation in some parts of the fens.

The stations are plain and inexpensive, and the whole line has been constructed at £15,000 per mile, or a total of one million for the 64 miles. It consists of that portion of the Great Northern Railway known as the "loop line," from its coiling round in that form from the main point at Peterborough, and embracing within its circuit of 64 miles, Spalding, Boston, Lincoln, and the adjacent districts; carrying the traffic southward, on the one hand, by means of the London and North-Western Railway, and on the other by means of the Eastern Counties Railway, both of which have a terminal extension at Peterborough. This, however, is merely a temporary arrangement for working the Lincolnshire traffic over the "loop," until the main line of the Great Northern, now being constructed, shall be completed from Peterborough to London. The arrangements are such, that the trains of the Great Northern, on their arrival at Boston, will unite with those of the East Lincolnshire Railway, now completed to the latter point; and will be taken by that railway on to Louth and Grimsby, and the passengers by steamers over the Humber to Hull; the great advantage being that passengers and goods may be conveyed direct, and without interruption, to and from London to Hull, by way of Peterborough, 40 miles shorter than by any other route, and at a saving of two hours.

The distance from Peterborough to Boston is 32 miles, and from Boston to Lincoln 30. The chief peculiarity in the structure of the line is, that all the bridges are built of timber. The line from Peterborough to Boston is for 16 miles continuously straight, besides being level, or pretty nearly so, from Boston to Lincoln. It is provided at all the stations with cattle pens for agricultural purposes. The steepest gradient is 1 in 100. The contractors have been Mr. Peto, M.P., and Mr. Betts.

The line at Boston commands a fine view of the noble tower of the church of St. Botolph, 300 feet high. We have engraved this locality.

We have also illustrated one of the peculiar constructions on the line—the timber bridge which carries it over the Witham, at Bardney. Its length is 729 yards; angle of skew, 32°; central opening, 100 feet; three smaller openings, of 35 feet span; and the approaches of 98 openings, varying in size from 18 to 20 feet.

Next week we shall more fully illustrate the works on the line.

On Thursday (the 26th) there was a great celebration of the Railway opening at Boston. A public dinner was given in the theatre; and in the evening there was a grand ball. There was likewise a tea meeting; and gratuitous railway trips during the day, as well as other recreations, were provided for the entire population.

MR. WYON'S DESIGN FOR THE LIVERPOOL SHIPWRECK AND HUMANE SOCIETY'S MEDAL, AWARDED TO PERSONS WHO ASSISTED AT THE CONFLAGRATION OF THE "OCEAN MONARCH."

LIVERPOOL SHIPWRECK AND HUMANE SOCIETY'S MEDAL.—LOSS OF THE "OCEAN MONARCH."

This Society was instituted in January, 1839; and originated in consequence of the violent hurricane of the 7th of that month, which occasioned such fearful destruction both to life and property at the mouth of the river Mersey. The objects of the Institution are—

1st. The preservation of life from shipwreck.

2nd. The relief of the unfortunate sufferers wrecked on the shores contiguous to the Port of Liverpool.

3rd. The reward of persons instrumental in rescuing life from shipwreck.

REVERSE OF THE MEDAL.—ACTUAL SIZE.

With a view to carrying out the third object, the reward is a beautiful medal, executed by Mr. Wyon, of her Majesty's Mint, in his best style. The obverse represents a sailor kneeling on a fragment of wreck, rescuing an infant and its mother from drowning; a boat in the distance appears similarly engaged; and in the horizon is a ship. The reverse is the Liver, encircled by a wreath of oak.

No less than four gold and twenty-three silver Medals had been awarded on different occasions by the Society, previous to the loss of the Ocean Monarch. On this memorable occasion, Gold Medals were voted to Thomas Littledale, Esq., owner of the yacht Queen of the Ocean; Admiral Pasco Grenfell, Brazilian Consul-General; Captain Lisboa, Captain of H.I.B.M. steam-frigate Affonso; Mr. Dant, Master of the steamer Prince of Wales; and Jerome, the courageous seaman of the New World. The first-class Silver Medals, to the Commander and four Lieutenants of the Affonso—namely, Commander F. X. D'Alcantra; Lieutenants Azevedo, Torrias, d'Araujo, and Teive; to Mr. Jotham Bragdon, mate of the Ocean Monarch, and Mr. Batty, mate of the steamer Prince of Wales: also, second-class Silver Medals, to four seamen of the Affonso.

The particulars as to the conflagration, and the courageous acts of individuals in the rescue, have already appeared in our Journal.

London: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by William Little, 198, Strand aforesaid.—Saturday, October 28, 1848.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

No. 342.—Vol. XIII.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 4, 1848. [Sixpence.

THE FRENCH PRESIDENTSHIP.

It has been definitively fixed that the election for the Presidentship of the French Republic shall take place on the 10th of December next. The determination of the Assembly to this effect was unexpected. It was voted, in fact, by a majority pledged to a contrary decision. The debate which preceded it was, in all respects, the most remarkable as well as the most momentous that has occurred since the Revolution. At a preliminary meeting of the Moderate party—that great majority in the Assembly who have accepted the Republic as an unwelcome fact—it was resolved to oppose the proposition of General Cavaignac for an immediate election, on the ground that, until the Organic Laws had all been voted, the mission of the Assembly would not be fulfilled; and that a President elected before the passing of those laws might, if it so pleased him, dismiss the Assembly, and delegate the task of completing the Constitution to some other legislative body, whose views might chance to be more in accordance with his own, whatever the latter might be. It was so obviously logical that the President should not be elected until his responsibility and that of his Ministers had been defined, that at all the clubs of the Moderate party, including the great club of the Rue de Poitiers, and those also of the Institute and the Palais National, it was agreed, by large majorities, that the postponement of the Presidential election was necessary to the safety of the country. M. Molé, who had not previously spoken in the Assembly, and whose appearance in the tribune excited all the interest and attention due to his venerable age, his high character, and his great experience as a servant of France under many forms of Government, gave expression to these sentiments. He complimented the Government of General Cavaignac upon its services to the nation, and urged upon it the duty of remaining in power until the election of so great a functionary as the President could be made with constitutional formality. He pointed out the risk, that the power of an immediately-elected President might clash with that of an assembly called together for a certain previously defined and appointed work, and existing de jure until that work should be completed. He predicted, from such a condition of affairs, a prolongation, rather than a cessation, of that provisional state of government which it was the interest of the country and the desire of all parties to bring to a close.

The predetermination of the majority supported the orator. He spoke to a willing and favourable audience: there was no one to refute his arguments. Had the vote been taken immediately on his disappearance from the tribune, there can be no doubt that the course which he recommended would have been adopted by acclamation. But General Cavaignac addressed the Assembly in reply; and that body, ductile as clay, was moulded forthwith into a new shape. It was yielding to reason, when it was turned from its purpose by an impulse. The convictions of the majority were with Count Molé; but General Cavaignac struck a stronger chord—he appealed not to their reason, but to their fears. He told them, "with the authority of a man who, owing to the position given to him by the Assembly, had power to judge of high things, that there would be immense danger in adjourning the election of President; and that to delay the nomination beyond what was strictly necessary would, in his opinion, be to compromise greatly the safety of the Republic." He condescended to no particulars. His eloquence was spontaneous, simple, and effective, and it carried all before it. The logic of M. Thiers in the clubs on the previous night, and of Count Molé in the tribune but a minute previously—to which the understanding of more than one-half of the Assembly had assented—was forgotten. The announcement of a nameless and a secret danger, which General Cavaignac knew, but which he could not divulge, sufficed to change the determination of the Assembly, and to mould, in all probability, the fate of France. The project for the election of the President on the 10th of December was carried by a majority of 587 votes against 232, before any one recovered presence of mind sufficient to grapple with the vague and shadowy peril that had been exorcised before the eyes of their imaginations by the potent wand of the Algerine General.

After it had come to this determination the Assembly separated, as surprised, no doubt, at its own act, as the public out of doors were when the announcement of this sudden change of policy was communicated to them. Speculation immediately became rife as to the precise nature of the danger which General Cavaignac had affirmed. A rising of the Red Republicans? The middle classes and the bayonets of Cavaignac's own soldiers had suppressed one such insurrection, and could even more easily suppress a second. A Bonapartist Revolution? If such a result were imminent from a delay in the election of President, a precipitation of the day was still more likely to serve the purposes of the shallow pretender who is now the most popular man in France. A Legitimate rising? No one dreamed of such a result. An Orleanist demonstration? That was still more ridiculous. Every supposition was abandoned as soon as it was formed; but every one felt that a step had been taken of the utmost importance, either for good or evil, in the future destinies of the French Republic.

M. Louis Napoleon Bonaparte formally announced himself as a candidate in an early period of the same sitting. He evidently feels the Imperial diadem on his brows already. He has fitted on the purple in privacy, and admires himself in the flowing robes of Napoleon II. His speech was more like that of a man born to empire, than that of a candidate for an elective office to be both gained and retained by his talents and good behaviour. "France," he said, "regarded the name he bore as having a power to reproduce a consolidation of society now almost shaken to its foundation. I know," he continued, "that my enemies have beset my way with dangers and ambuscades. I will not fall. I shall move in the course that I have traced for myself, without disturbing my peace, without irritating my passions. Nothing shall deprive me of my ease. Nothing shall make me forgetful of my duty. I declare to those who wish to organise against me a system of provocation and offence, that for the future I will not answer any summons to account. I will not regard any attacks from those who would have me speak when it is my pleasure to be silent. Strong in my own heart, I shall ever remain unshaken against force, and impervious to calumny." In this language the would-be Emperor displays himself. He has cultivated Royal words; he has assumed Imperial airs; he has already transformed the President's ship conferred by the people into the more permanent dignity which he thinks the appanage of his name; and Napoleon the Little sits on the throne of Napoleon the Great. His chances are those of the beast. Possibly, they would be better next week than they will be on the 10th of December; and, possibly, far better on the 10th of December than at any later date to which the election might have been postponed. In the meantime, however, he stands highest; and General Cavaignac, if he be not himself a Bonapartist (which we cannot imagine), may shortly have occasion to regret that his own fears were of more weight with the Assembly than the safe counsels of M. Molé, and the cool judgment of the Moderate majority.

VISIT OF THE NEW ARCHBISHOP OF PARIS TO THE FAUBOURG ST. ANTOINE.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

[COUNTRY EDITION]

It is one remarkable feature of this Presidential contest, that no candidate has any chance except a military man. M. Thiers, whose ambition might have aspired to this high office—whose prospects of success would have been far from inconsiderable, and whose name was freely mentioned as a candidate—has resolved to bide his time, to seek no suffrage, and to support with all his influence the candidature of General Cavaignac. M. de Lamartine would accept office if elected, but has not the slightest chance; while the pretensions of M. Ledru-Rollin and the Communist leaders, great as may be the popularity of their names in the dense faubourgs of the metropolis, are not of a kind to recommend them to the great bulk of the industrial population and bourgeoisie of France. They are not stars of the seventh magnitude, compared with the military heroes whose glories fill the eyes and the mouths of the French people. M. Louis Napoleon, it is true, can boast no military achievements of his own. He shines with reflected light; but his lustre, such as it is, is all military. General Cavaignac has made himself what he is by his own military prowess; and between these two the real contest will take place. General Changarnier, another military chief, stands third; on the list of candidates; while Marshal Bugeaud, the hero of a hundred razzias, and the very incarnation of military ferocity, stands fourth. These are the men whom the French people delight to honour. The possession of a sword and the power of using it seem to pre-suppose the possession of an intellect fitted for the task of Government. Perhaps the French have judged themselves rightly in thus respecting it; it is melancholy to reflect, that so great, so civilised, so polished, so intelligent a nation, should not have attained more real wisdom; and that they invite a tyrant, when their necessity is a statesman.

THE NEW ARCHBISHOP OF PARIS.

The scene upon the preceding page is an impressive memorial of the most afflicting episode of the French Revolution of June last. One of the first appearances in public of M. Sibour, after his recent installation as Archbishop of Paris, was on his visit to the very spot in the Faubourg St. Antoine wherein all his predecessor, while exhorting the frantic people to peace, and there he breathed with pious resignation, "It is my duty to offer up my life."

The appearance of the new Archbishop upon this memorable spot drew around him a crowd of people, who implored his blessing, and some fell upon their knees at his feet.

The scene, as our Artist has portrayed it, is full of melancholy sympathy; occurring in the streets of a city even yet retaining the traces of civil strife and anger.

It forms an appropriate companion to the representation upon the front page of our Number for July 8.

CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT.

CHARITIST TRIAL. George Bridge Mullins, the young medical student, who, after a trial which lasted three days, was found Guilty, on Saturday last, of "feloniously compassing and intending to levy war against her Majesty, &c.," was sentenced on Monday to transportation for life.

On Thursday, the first day of Michaelmas Term, the Judges came down, according to usual custom, to fix the days on which the Sessions of the Central Criminal Court should be commenced during the ensuing Michaelmas. The Judges present were Mr. Baron Alderson, Mr. Justice Patteson, Mr. Justice Coltman, Mr. Justice Coleridge, Mr. Baron Rolfe, Mr. Justice Wightman, Mr. Justice Cresswell, Mr. Justice Erle, Mr. Baron Platt, and Mr. Justice Williams.

The following were the days fixed by their Lordships:—1848, November 27, December 18; 1849, January 1, January 29, February 26, April 9, May 7, June 11, July 2, August 20, September 17, October 22. Their Lordships then adjourned.

POLICE

MANSION-HOUSE

CIGARS OF HAY. On Wednesday, J. Jones was charged with having offered to sell two dozen of what he called "real cut-and-cut Havanna" cigars. The defendant, who was dressed like a sailor was seen by a policeman in conversation with another person, whom he was endeavouring to induce to purchase some cabbage. Upon going closer to the pair, he found that the defendant was offering two dozen of cigars for 3d to the other, and he interfered to prevent the sale of contraband goods. The stranger then walked away, and the defendant complained bitterly that the policeman would not allow him to get 3d. out of the fist, whereupon it was considered advisable to refer the whole business to the Lord Mayor. Here the officer produced the cigars, which were very ingeniously made, together and consisted of nothing but dried cabbage leaves stuffed with hay. When a little of the outside was removed from one of them the hay burst forth like the elastic lining of a new shaving-brush.—The Lord Mayor: Well, Mr. Jones, you have subjected yourself to a penalty of £100. Defendant: Not as I know, please your Lordship. I'm blest if I didn't manufacture them at myself, and I'll swear they haven't a morsel of baccy in 'em. (A laugh.)—The Lord Mayor: That excuse won't avail you. I can very well believe that there is no tobacco in these things; but there happens to be a clause in the act which says, "If any person offering for sale any goods under pretence that they are prohibited, or have not been entered inwards, or have not paid the proper duties, all such goods shall be forfeited, and the person offering for sale shall forfeit the value of the goods, or the penalty of £100, at the election of the [illegible]." The Lord Mayor said he [illegible] and the defendant, for having exposed the humbug cigars for sale, [illegible] ordered the alternative of a prison, and was accordingly [illegible] days.

LAMBETH.

CHARGE OF EMBEZZLEMENT AND ARSON.—On Saturday last, 4 Shakespeare was charged on suspicion with having wilfully set fire to the premises of Mr. W. H. Fleming, brewer of Camberwell green (on account of the heavy loss of which previously he had been charged with, and also with embezzling upwards of £.00. The prisoner had been in the service of Mr. W. H. Fleming as confidential clerk, for eight or nine years, and had been discharged about a month. Since his discharge some irregularities had been discovered in the accounts, which led to their investigation, and it was found that upwards of £100, received by the prisoner, had not been properly accounted for. The Messrs. Fleming sent for the prisoner on Friday morning, and he admitted that some of the entries were irregular, but declared that the whole of the monies received by him had been regularly paid in. The Messrs. Fleming told him they did not wish to make any surprise, but should allow him to ren in at large, and bring a solicitor or friend with him on the following (Saturday) morning, to go through a regular examination of the accounts, with the view of ascertaining the exact amount of the defalcation. This arrangement having been decided on, the books were placed in an iron safe in the counting-house, and locked up in the prisoner's presence. On the same night, or rather at ten o'clock, fire crackers, and the consequence was that the premises and the consumption of property amounting to over £1000. There was no the burning of the premises, and the benefit that he might derive from the destruction of the books containing the false entries, and by which alone his guilt could be established. The books, however, have escaped destruction. Mr. H. Dance, who succeeded the prisoner in his situation, sa d that between nine and ten o'clock he went round the premises, and found everything perfectly safe Mr Green, landlord of the Anchor, on Camberwell-green, said that the prisoner and another person came to the house about five minutes before twelve, and remained at his house until the fury of fire was raised.—Mr. Norton remanded the prisoner for a week, accepting bail for his attendance.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

The discussions about forms of Government, constitutions, diplomatic relations with foreign states, peace, war, and the various other subjects which have engaged the French national Assembly of late, have been interrupted this week by a little episode on "money matters" in the Assembly, which has left an impression on the public mind that is by no means satisfactory. The debate on the budget occupied Monday and Tuesday (Wednesday being the feast of All Souls; there was no sitting), and it has created serious apprehensions as to the probability of the French Republic passing through the approaching year without a national bankruptcy. The general gain on in Paris was that it would be difficult to avoid such a catastrophe unless a considerable reduction in the standing army were effected. But [illegible] as a measure few would venture to adopt. The danger of augmenting, by a forced reduction, the number of men already on the numerous unemployed operatives throughout the country, is obvious. None of the speakers in the National Assembly ventured to suggest a real remedy. All cases of economy, but nobody told the Assembly how that economy was to be accomplished.

The deficiency of revenue to meet the expenditure of the present year was set down at 250,000,000f. (£18,000,000), and the deficiency for the year 1849 was estimated at 450,000,000f. (£18,000,000). To provide for this large amount there is no available fund but 177,000,000f. of the canal company—lent in the month of July last, 54,000,000f. borrowed from the shareholders in the Paris and Lyons Railroad Company, and 220,000,000f. borrowed from the Bank. These three sums, amounting to 451,000,000f. (£16,040,000), is all that is forthcoming to provide for a deficiency of 800,000,000f. (£32,000,000), with the exception of a few million francs to be received from the railroad companies. The chief interest of the debate, which had been adjourned to Thursday, lay, also, the revision of the constitution had been fixed, turned upon the question of whether the Government can meet the expenses of 1849 without having recourse to a new loan, as asserted by M. Trouve-Chauvel and M. Goudchaux (Finance Ministers of Louis Philippe's Ministers of Finance), or if there will be an enormous deficiency, as asserted by M. Hinneau and M. Fould.

The Journal des Debats, which is one of the most able and fairest expounders of such subjects, after a minute examination of the statements on both sides, comes to the conclusion that the advocates of equilibrium are in the wrong. "We must reckon," says the Débats, "on the enormous deficiency (360 millions), to which must be added the deficit of 90 millions in the expenditure of the previous year. This is the truth, and it would be childish to dissimulate the fact: it is grave, but we can look it in the face without alarm. The floating debt has been brought down by the consolidations effected in July, to proportions which will allow it, it is to be hoped, to bear a portion of the new deficits. And, besides, there remains the final resource of the new loans, if they are needed. We will thus succeed in passing the crisis; but God knows how much it will have cost us, or how long we must suffer for it."

The National Assembly having on Thursday se'nnight, as noticed in our Postscript, decided by a majority of 587 to 532 in favour of the proposition fixing the Presidential election for the 10th of December next, was occupied on Friday and Saturday with the discussion of the remaining articles of the project of decree. On Friday it was decided that the election should take place in the chief place of each canton, giving a power, however, to the prefects to have subordinate polling-places where it might seem necessary. On Saturday, after some discussion, an amendment was adopted, which conferred upon the President the executive power, but reserved to the Assembly the power of making and promulgating laws

The Committee of the National Assembly on the Constitution on Saturday revised each article of the Constitution according to the observations made in the National Assembly during the discussion, so as to remove all the defects of the original draft. The revision of the amended draft by the Assembly, it was expected, would be finished on Monday, and the terms of the Constitution would then to be promulgated immediately by its insertion in the Moniteur.

The Journal des Débats publishes the following letter, addressed to it by M. de Lamartine, dated St. Point (near Macon), 28th inst.:—

"I read in the Débats an article borrowed from the Courrier de la Gironde, and key passage made by following answer to a correspondent in Bourdeaux:—"I do not [illegible] country should think proper to [illegible] and leave Paris without a Government [illegible] dessert, and I don't read the Courrier de la Gironde in order to withdraw [illegible] To silent in Presidency is to relinquish a [illegible] to refuse it would be wanting to the Republic and the country. I am devoid of this ambition, but incapable of such a act of cowardice."—LAMARTINE

The number of French vessels which entered the harbours of France during the last nine months was 4897, measuring 596,806 tons; or, 825 vessels and 66,198 tons less than in the corresponding period of 1847. The number of foreign vessels which entered those harbours during the same period was 3[illegible] [illegible] than in 1847. [illegible] 1,257,25 tons, or [illegible] 1847, and 1,059 foreign vessels, measuring 590,[illegible] tons, being a diminution of 120 vessels and 142,525 tons.

The Municipal Council of Paris has removed the additional duty, imposed by the Executive Government in existence four months since, on chestnuts, almonds, figs, dates, olives, fruit pies, preserved fruits, sugar, and lemons.

A sixth convoy of 600 or 700 recruits left Paris for Algeria on Sunday

The old grudge existing between the Garde Mobile and the operatives of the faubourgs of Paris, came to blows on Tuesday night at the Barrière Poissonnière. To prevent such a collision, the Garde Mobile quartered in that neighbourhood had been ordered not to quit their barracks; but sixty of them, in disobedience of orders, proceeded to the barrier, and there fell to fighting against the people, who, in their own defence, fired pistol shots. The parties were finally separated after some of them were wounded.

A popular banquet at Ivry, in the head, at which M. Pierre Leroux presided, took place at Battignolles-Monceaux, under the walls of Paris, on Tuesday afternoon. It was attended by at least 1000 operatives, the greater number of whom reside in the neighbouring villages. They [illegible] all communities Count d'Alton Shee, in proposing the first toast, "To the extinction of bad constitutions," declaimed against serve labour and the working of all countries. "The Right of Labour," "The Moral Education of the People," "The Right of Labour," "The Organisation of Labour!" "France Democratic and social!" "Universal association, and the prompt abolition of misery!" "Republic, the union of Europeans and the martyr of liberty." The assemblage separated without the slightest confusion or disturbance

The Committee of the National Assembly examined, on Tuesday, a proposition signed by forty representatives, who demand ed that the sentence of transportation against the insurgents of June should not be carried into effect. Two members only defended the measure, which was rejected.

The members of the Club of Representatives of the Palais National have adopted General Cavaignac as their candidate for the Presidency of the Republic.

The friends of General Cavaignac were determined to make a last attempt to exclude Prince Louis Napoleon from the Presidency. M. Sautayra was to present an amendment to the Constitution, requiring the residence of five years in France, or on the French territory, from the candidates to that dignity.

SPAIN

Accounts from Madrid to the 26th ult. mention that M. Lesseps had presented to the Queen letters from General Gavaignac appointing him Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of France at Madrid. A serious Progressista movement commenced on the 23rd in Upper Aragon, at Borja, situate about 20 miles from Saragossa, close to the frontier of Navarre. The outbreak and manifestations throughout the rural districts, and would, it was considered, be quickly followed by similar ones at other points, and the entry into Aragon from France of a numerous and well-armed band of Progressista refugees, headed by Brigadier Iguzite, late Political Chief of Huesca, under Espartero.

ITALIAN STATES.

PIEDMONT AND LOMBARDY.—Brussels has been chosen by the mediating powers, and accepted by Austria and Sardinia, for the meeting of the approaching Congress on the 10th of May

The Legislative Assembly at Turin has rejected, by a majority of 122 to 13, the amendment moved by M. Brofferio, to the effect of declining the question of peace or war without waiting the issue of the mediation. The Chamber of Deputies opened on the following resolution:—"Considering the declarations made by the Ministry, from which it appears that it will subscribe to no peace that would not secure the honour of the arms and the independence of Italy; that it will not allow the effects of the mediation to extend over too long a period, to the detriment of the state and the Italian cause; that, on the refusal of the propositions offered to Austria, the Ministry will act with frankness and energy the most opportune measures to carry on the war; the Chamber passes to the order of the day." This proposition having been put to the vote, was adopted by a majority of 117 to 17.

The Minister of Public Instruction announced to the Sardinian Senate, on the 21st ult., that the Tuscan Government had adhered to the Italian League.

In a recent decree, King Charles Albert abolished the tax which Jews were subjected to on entering the University.

On the 22nd, the Chambers of Turin voted the immediate levy of 13,000 men.

This week, again, we have rumours, which have reached us through the French papers, that simultaneous insurrections against the Austrians had broken out in several towns of Lombardy. The news requires confirmation.

ROME.—The Circolo Romano, the principal political club of Rome, desirous of contributing as much as possible to the furtherance of the Italian cause, conceived, in the course of the 7th July, the idea of inviting all the states of Italy, and expressed to them a desire to see them for the present abstain from the discuss on of all questions of minor importance, such as municipal matters, territorial divisions, &c., and unite in examining only the means of restoring independence to Italy. This recommendation was generally agreed to, and the meeting separated

The Bologna Gazette of the 19th ult. quotes letters from Ferrara, announcing that the Austrians have retired from the left bank of the Po.

NAPLES AND SICILY.—Advices dated Messina, the 23rd ult., state that the neutral ground assigned by the English and French naval officers was respected by both belligerents, and for the present the island enjoys most perfect tranquillity, good order being maintained at one side by the Provisional Government, and in the vicinity of Messina by the Neapolitan troops. The state of suspended hostilities was considered to be very favourable to the Sicilians, and the Commander-in-Chief of the Neapolitan army complained of its prolongation beyond all reasonable time. The British and native merchants suffered extremely by that state of things, as the present was generally the busy season, and the usual quantity of produce was not brought to market.

AUSTRIA

In the course of the week rumours from various quarters reached town, of Vienna having been bombarded by Prince Windischgrätz, and order having been restored there, much after the fashion in which he had reduced the Slavonic excitement in Prague last summer—by shot and shell; but those accounts have all turned out to be an error. Up to the afternoon of the 27th ult. (the latest date of the communication there had been no bombardment, though the townspeople and the troops had had some sharp skirmishes. Matters, however, wear a most menacing aspect. Vienna is surrounded by the Imperial troops under the chief command of Windischgrätz, who took up his quarters in Hetzendorf, near Fürstdorf, on the night of the 23rd ult., having, on the day previous, issued a proclamation to the Viennese (which was received by the Diet on the 23rd) declaring Vienna in a "state of siege," and threatening martial law against all who disobeyed his orders. On the 23rd, the Prince addressed to the besieged the following terms:—

"In consequence of the state of blockade and martial law for the city of Vienna, the suburbs, and the immediate environs, announced in my first proclamation of the 20th of this month, the following ordinances are addressed by me:—1. The city of Vienna, its suburbs and immediate environs, have forty-eight hours after the receipt of this proclamation to declare their submission, and deliver by 1 gross or unqualified to deliver up their arms at a given place to an appointed committee, including those arms which are private property, to disarm all individuals who are not in the ranks of the National Guards. 2. All armed bodies, and the students' Legions, are dissolved, the Academic Legion and twelve students to be given up as hostages. 3. Several individuals, yet to be named by me, are to be given up. 4. During the duration of the state of the blockade, all journals and newspapers are suspended, with the exception of the Wiener Zeitung, which is to confine itself solely to official communications. 5. All foreigners are to quit the capital within twenty-four hours, with the exception of those who have obtained my special permission to remain. 6. All clubs are dissolved, and the assembling of them during the state of blockade 7. Any person who refuses to obey measures or is proved guilty of disturbance or participation in the seditious attempts of others, or who shall be seized with weapons in his hands, is subject to martial law. For the fulfilment of these conditions, the term of forty-eight hours is granted to the people of Vienna. In case these conditions are not complied with, I shall be forced to adopt the most energetic measures, and to compel the city to obedience.—Head-quarters, Hetzendorf, 23rd, 1848. PRINCE WINDISCHGRÄTZ, Field-Marshal."

The Diet immediately adopted a resolution to the following effect, which was sent to the Prince and to Wessenberg, and posted all over Vienna

Considering that the re-establishment of order appertains solely to the legally constituted authorities, and that the army cannot interfere at their requisition; considering that the Emperor's proclamation of the 19th again guarantees the maintenance of all the liberties acquired, more particularly the independence of the Diet, the Diet declares as illegal, as the measures by which Field-Marshal Prince Windischgrätz threatens the state of siege and martial law. The Diet hopes that the Emperor's Government shall be immediately informed of this resolution by express

In reply to the Protest of the Diet, Prince Windischgrätz stated:—

"In the full powers do not intend to a negotiation with the Diet, which I recognise as only as a corporate assembly. The Minister Krauss shall be considered a prisoner. The only legal assembly which I recognise at Vienna is the Communal Council, and it is unalterable to me to give the Diet twenty-four hours to consider of this.

The Communal Council, to whom a thousand copies of the proclamation were sent by Windischgrätz, refused to receive them; and the Commandant of the Vienna National Guard took in medial steps to put the city in a state of defence. It was said he could muster 80,000 men, but that estimate can scarcely be considered other than exaggerated.

The army of Windischgrätz consists of 62 battalions, 60 squadrons, and 140 guns, the total force is about 100,000 men, and they are described as being well disciplined and determined to fight. They are composed of one battalion of Landwehr, two battalions Ahovenbiller, one battalion Wocher, two battalions Palombini, two battalions Latour, two battalions of Grassaurs, one battalion Wilkenston, one battalion of grenadiers, one battalion Hohenlohe, one regiment of artillery, and six divisions of cavalry, 15 squadrons of cavalry, and three batalions from Klagenfurt.

In the interval between the 23rd and the afternoon of the 27th ult., several attacks upon the Imperial troops had been made in the Viennese, and a great deal of fighting had been going on on the Brotteasse and the faubourg of Lerchenfeld. In consequence of the continual repetition of the attacks, a portion of the Moravian corps d'armée had been impelled to advance, and had taken upon the townspeop e with a brisk fire of grape and canister at the Schmelzer churchyard, against which a battery was constructed, and the churchyard taken by the fusiliers, but they subsequently abandoned it, in consequence of the exposed situation. On the Nussdorf side, the citizens had been completely thrown back; and from the neighbouring Heights, as well as from the Leopoldstadt, had been occupied.

Prince Windischgrätz had given the command that the firing should in everywhere suspended wherever it was not unavoidably called for by an attack from the city itself; nor had any shells been thrown into the city. The Ban (Jellachich) had occupied the Leopoldstadt on the 27th, and likewise the powder magazine, the custom-house, and the Danube canal, on the Danube, below the city. The water and gas conduits had been cut off from the city; the former at the point taken on the Nussdorf side by a most energetic attack on the part of the citizens, but were soon retaken by the Imperial troops.

It was stated that six steamers with Hungarians had come down the Danube, but had turned back again, as the foremost of them had been received with a very brisk fire.

The deputations which up to the above date were continually proceeding from the capital to the army, state that the citizens is disposition to surrender, and that only obstacle therein lies in the wish to immediately executing the demand of Prince Windischgrätz respecting the disarming of the Proletariat and [illegible]

The terms which the popular party demand are stated to be as follows:—A general amnesty, nomination of a popular Ministry, and removal of the troops from the vicinity of Vienna. Upon which, it is added, the city will be given up, and the working classes, and even the Academic Legion, will submit to be disarmed.

PRUSSIA.

Advices from Berlin to the 29th ult. state that the renewed resignation of M. Pfuel had been accepted, though not yet officially announced. The Count d'Arnim-Boitzenburg was named as his successor, and Baron de Beden as the Minister for Foreign Affairs.

The National Assembly was occupied with the discussion on the Constitution. At a meeting of the Democratic Congress, held on the 25th ult., reports were presented on the progress of democracy in different parts of Germany. At Hanover, it was stated there is only one Republican club, and there are few in Hamburg. At Holstein, and the Duchy of Oldenburgh. All the speakers distinctly declared that the object of the clubs was the establishment of the Republic, and some added the Red Republic, which excited great applause. The Congress of National Guards is to be held at Berlin towards the middle of the present month.

UNITED STATES

Advices from New York to the 17th ult. have been received, but they contain no political news of interest.

General Taylor appeared certain of obtaining the Presidency

MEXICO.

At the capital of Mexico affairs still continued in a satisfactory condition, under the Presidency of Herrera. From Yucatan, however, the intelligence is not so satisfactory, Paredes being again at the head of a body of troops numbering upwards of 600 men. He was said to be on his march towards Tabasco, from whence he was but a short distance.

INDIA.

RETREAT OF THE BRITISH FORCES FROM MOULTAN.

Advices in anticipation of the Overland Mail have been received this week; they are dated Calcutta, September 22; Madras, 30th; and Bombay, October 3. The intelligence thus received is not very satisfactory either as regards the operations of the siege of Moultan or the general state of the Punjaub. At Moultan our forces have suffered a check, in consequence of the defection of the auxiliary Sikh troops. Just as the operations of General Whish's brigade had commenced in the most brilliant manner, [illegible] A force of nearly 5000 men under his command, on the 14th of September, went over to the enemy, evidently upon a pre-arranged plot—an event which compelled General Whish instantly to change his tactics, to raise the siege, and, having made a retrograde movement to unite his forces in an entrenched camp at some fifteen miles from the citadel, there to await in a more favourable position the junction of the reinforcements from Ferozepore and Scinde. Two engineer officers had since fallen into the hands of the enemy.

The operations before Moultan (previous to this disaster) are thus described in the Bombay Times.—"On the 5th (of Sept.) it was intimated that twenty-four hours would be allowed for those from a retiring force to quit the town. On the 6th the mortar batteries began to fire. It was at first proposed to storm the town by assault. The guns were first to clear the suburbs, then to advance within 600 yards of the walls. It was expected that in twenty-four hours a practicable breach would be effected. After the storming party had been told off, it was discovered that the suburbs were very strong and well defended; and regular approaches were next determined on. The trenches were begun to be opened on the 7th, and from this till the 9th a succession of severe skirmishes ensued, in which we were successful. On the morning of this day we were compelled to retire, having failed from a strong post we had endeavoured to capture. Further skirmishing ensued, and on the morning of the 12th a strong party was directed to capture the strongpost before which we had formerly been foiled, and which ever since had been annoying us. We succeeded, but not without heavy loss. Up to this time five officers had been killed and 21 wounded, and nearly 200 men had been killed and wounded. A furious attack was made on Edwardes' camp on the 13th; and on the 14th we carried a strong outwork, which enabled us to bring our guns within easy breaching distance. At this time all our plans were thrown into confusion by the desertion of the Durbar leader, Shere Singh, with 4000 Sikhs, and it then became plain that the attack could no longer be maintained with any hope of success."

Expresses were immediately sent off requesting reinforcements. An army of above 20,000 was ordered to be immediately formed at Ferozepore, to proceed either in whole or in part to Moultan. Moolraj, by Shere Singh's defection, had augmented his adherents to about 24,000 men, with the probability of a further accession of nearly as many more. Chutter Singh, the rebel leader in the Hazareh, was marching with about 10,000 men to join the Dewan; and, although Ghulab Singh had not more positively than heretofore gone over to the conspiracy, two of his regiments, with stores and baggage, had left to join the Hazareh Sikhs.

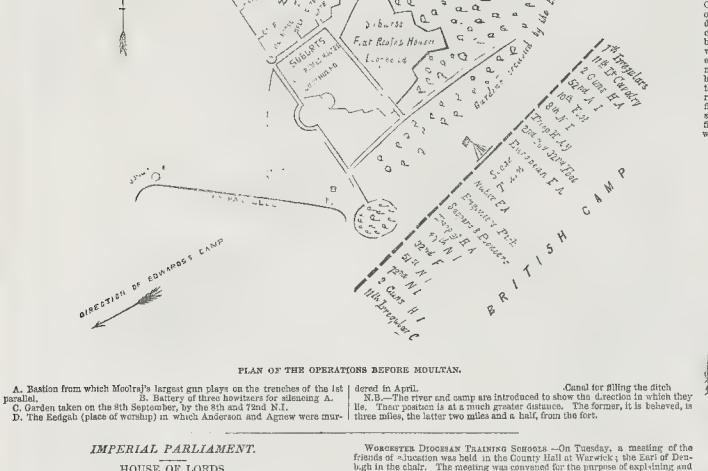
At Lahore the features of this frontier rebellion were not less pronounced, although happily, from our excellent measures of defence there, the circumstance occasioned no great and for ultimate apprehension as to our hold upon the capital. Several other Sirdars of the Khalsa army, however, had proved to be implicated; and, in consequence of this fact, the Resident, on receipt of the intelligence from Moultan, at once secured under a guard the person of Dhuleep Singh, as a hostage, to influence those who, if waverers, as well as to frustrate attempts made by the Sikhs in arms to get possession of the Maharajah's person. The Resident had also, we are told, laid hands on the famous Koh-i-noor diamond, as a measure of similar precaution.

Troops were being poured into Scinde by sea from Bombay, to occupy the line of the middle Indus, and to march, should their services be required, upon the Punjaub. The Bombay force, when united, would amount to about 10,000 men. Some of the Madras regiments would reinforce the Bombay stations, at the same time that a general advance was preparing from the Bengal frontier. From the latter direction, a well-apportioned force, amounting to about 20,000 men, were to march upon Moultan, under General Colbert. No troops could be spared from Lahore; but it was considered the cavalry regiments still left in Ferozepore would be quite sufficient to keep open the line of communication with the camp of General Whish; in other words, to frustrate any rising between him and the capital. Under these circumstances, the position of the British force in the field, strongly entrenched, with a park of artillery of seventy guns, and their flank on the river, at some fifteen miles from Moultan, may be regarded as secure under any contingency.

The following officers had fallen in the siege operations during an attack on an outpost intrusted for defence to extreme gallantry in the annals of the army; namely, Colonel Pattonu, Major Montisambert, Quartermaster Taylor, Lieutenant Cubitt, and Ensign Lloyd.

The Governor General was to leave Calcutta about the 9th inst., on his way to the north west. The Countess of Dalhousie said to "astonish the natives" of the Indian metropolis by driving her own phaëton and pair of Arabs on the Strand every evening.

We are enabled by the courtesy of a Correspondent, to illustrate the operations before Moultan, with the accompanying plan:



RIVER CHENAB
Suraimes
& Quickbands
CAMP
Dilkusha
First Rose's House
Lorenzo
SHUJABAD ROAD
Bridge of Boats
Ferry
Ghaut
Ferry
Ghaut
Ferry
Ghaut

CITIZEN OF MOULTAN AND SIKH SOLDIERS.—(FROM ORIGINAL DRAWINGS MADE IN INDIA.)

By aid of the obliging Correspondent by whom we were favoured with the plan of the town and fort of Moultan, engraved in our Journal for August 26, we are now enabled to present the accompanying portraits of two Soldiers and a Citizen of Moultan, from Sketches made by an Artist employed in Sir Claude Wade's mission to that country.

In addition to the sword, the soldier generally carries a matchlock and pouch. These soldiers are Mahomedans, and are famous for their bravery and fidelity to their employers. They go in parties, called dastar, under chosen leaders of their own tribes, chiefly Affghans and Beloochees, the latter of whom inhabit the country on the Indus, above as well as below the Scinde frontier.

The figure to the right of the central one is a portrait of a soldier of Bhawlpoor, remarkable for the scantiness of the turbans they wear, and the length of their hair, which they are fond of oiling, and wearing in ringlets to their shoulders.

The figure to the left pourtrays a Citizen of Moultan. The costume differs principally in the over-garment, which is of blue check, bordered with red. The turban is scanty, the front and crown blue, and the sides and back red embroidered with gold.

These specimens of the soldiery will convey an idea of the kind of men who lately gave such proof of faithful and gallant conduct with Major Edwardes, in his glorious deeds at Moultan. These troops distinguished themselves with equal fidelity and bravery in the year 1839, when Major F Mackeson, C.B., then our agent in that quarter, enlisted a large number of them for service ..h Sir C. M. Wade, in forcing the Khyber Pass.

We regret, however, to add, that the suspicious alliance which we referred to in our Journal of Oct. 7, has, according to the latest intelligence, been followed by the open defection of 15,000 of these troops to the enemy.

LAUNCH OF MODEL GUN-BRIG, IN EASTWELL-PARK.—(SEE PRECEDING PAGE.)

NEWSPAPER

PARIS FASHIONS FOR NOVEMBER.

The political bouleversement has scarcely yet allowed fashion to resume its empire at Paris; however, the season which is now breaking upon us brings out some novelties. Among the newest autumnal materials is the "satin foulard," a kind of stuff satined, either striped or spotted; the colours the most distinguées are, vanilla and Russian green, with large white spots.

At present a great many dresses are worn with pélerines revers, these revers being trimmed with a little frill of the same, or a narrow fringe of lace.

This winter, velvet canezous, or spencers, will be very fashionable, to accompany skirts of watered silk or Poult. These canezous must be of the same shade as the skirts, open up the front, the sleeves trimmed with jockeys, and ornamented with fringe, or coloured blond. To give straw bonnets a staid aspect, more in accordance with the season, they are generally trimmed with rows of velvet and large bunches of velvet flowers, placed very low on each side. The few velvet bonnets which are yet to be seen are trimmed with a simple appui of velvet to match. A great number of dark drawn silk bonnets are lined with a light colour; in the interior are des oreilles d'ours, or primroses mixed with puffings of tulle. It will be quite comme il faut to wear bonnets of feutre blanc (white felt), ornamented with velvet and feathers. These bonnets for the morning will replace, this winter, the coarse summer straw bonnets.

Plain stuffs are destined to form the foundation of all Parisian toilettes. This is not so much the effect of fashion as of necessity, on account of the commercial and labouring position of the country. Lyons, the town famous for silks, has ceased to work for some months past; and our élégantes must be content with purchasing plain materia s until order be restored. They have quite returned to open-worked and embroidered stockings, with extremely low shoes—a charming fashion. White collars continue very small—as many are worn close round the throat as to lie down; they are composed at the most of three rows of edging.

The accompanying Engraving presents a style of dress very becoming: the boddice, open in a point up the front, is ornamented with two rows of velvet, the width graduated; lace about five or six inches wide, slightly fulled, trims the interior of the boddice; and an embroidered chemisette, half high, ornaments the front. The sleeves à la Montespan, are trimmed with two rows of velvet, ornamented with lace, which falls over large puffings of tulle, tight at the wrist. The dress consists of peau de soie, chesnut-colour, the skirt very full, with two deep flounces; and two rows of velvet are placed plain above and round the flounces.

A little cap, with three rows of Mechlin lace, is placed on the top of the head; two large bunches of satin ribbon, with stripes of pink and chesnut [illegible] at the ears, and the strings, which are very long, terminate with [illegible]. The young lady has her head dressed in a plait à la Circassienne, and long curls flowing on her neck. The boddice, en forme d'écusson, is high; embroidered wreaths form the pélerine à revers, which fall en jockeys on the sleeves. The sleeves are tight, the upper part being embroidered down to the elbow. The skirt is also embroidered up to the knees, and is very full. A corded silk sash is attached by a buckle of fine pearls. The dress just described is composed of China crape, embroidered with silk.

Gentlemen's dress varies but little. Waistcoats continue to be worn extremely long; coats are made rather shorter. The first soirées d'hiver will, without doubt, decide their latest cut. The parties given by the President will, it is expected, be the cradle of new fashions; and they will forthwith be transmitted to us.

PARIS FASHIONS FOR NOVEMBER.

THE NEW ORCHESTRA OF THE SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY AT EXETER HALL.

The appointment of Mr. Costa as Conductor of the Concerts given by the Sacred Harmonic Society, has induced the Acting Committee of that admirable institution to make extensive alterations in the disposition of the choral and orchestral orces, in order more fully to carry out the intention of improving the character of the performances. For the first time in the annals of the Society have the executants received the advantage of efficient, entire, and continuous control over their vocal and instrumental exertions. Mr. Costa has now carried out on a larger scale those principles of acoustics which he so successfully adopted at the Philharmonic Society.

The first change of note to be remarked has been the raising of the whole orchestra; and by this means those members of the chorus (particularly at the back), who formerly could not catch a glimpse of their director, now have a full view of him and his bâton. There can be no doubt that no inconsiderable power had been lost from the voices not being piled or raised enough above each other, but now every row of seats appropriated to choristers rises sixteen inches higher than the one immediately below—thus enabling the singers not merely to see their own notes, but to watch attentively the conductor's movements.

The orchestral players and principal singers participate still more largely in the alterations, for the façade, or front of the orchestra, has been brought forward in the Hall considerably, and Mr. Costa has thus been able to arrange his band similar to his Philharmonic plan. Thus, instead of the double-basses and violoncelli being placed as formerly in a long row in front, just behind the singers, and thus intercepting the coming forth of the melody and subject, these groundworks and roots of the harmony, with the exception of the principals, have been removed to the sides, and judiciously blended amongst the other instruments. A most invaluable result is accomplished by this change: in the first place, the accompanying instruments are brought close to the principal vocalists; secondly, the quartet band is immediately under the control of the conductor; and, thirdly, these combined advantages are secured in the form of a semicircle immediately round the bâton or directing agency of this vast animated instrument, for such it ought to be, and such it is when Costa is manœuvring.

The advantages gained in execution by the alterations and improvements just indicated are an infinitely greater support to the chorus, and increased depth and volume of tone in the forte passages; whilst, on the other hand, the bringing forward of the violins, the fountain source of the motif or theme, tends to develop their brilliancy in a much greater degree. The wood and brass bands are better mixed by amalgamation with stringed. Chipp's place, with his colossal drums, instead of being up at the summit of the orchestra, to the left, looking from the Hall, has been transferred immediately in the centre, under the organist's desk.

The organ itself has undergone some very necessary alterations, by the removal of the screaming, harsh mixtures and sesquialtras, and by supplying their places with unison stops: it has also been re-tuned on the equal temperament system, according to the Continental practice. Save in any other than the open keys, it was sadly out of tune, and when combined with wind instruments without the crash of the whole orchestra, in any other than the keys named, the dissonance was very great. Organ-building is almost yet in its infancy in this country; and there might be more done with the Exeter Hall organ than has been yet accomplished.

The unsightly wooden box or pulpit in which the former conductors were concealed, has been changed, and the director's post is now at the edge of the platform, so that he can overlook the immense body of amateurs and artists in array before him, and the singers can now see his beat. The use of iron, as absorbing as little as possible the tone produced, has been resorted to for the music stands.

The orchestra takes up a space of seventy-six feet in width, eleven feet more than the Birmingham Town-Hall; and wider, if we recollect rightly, than any room we are acquainted with on the Continent, employed for musical purposes The Directors of Exeter Hall, propose [illegible] be made towards the improvement of the approaches, [illegible]-rooms, &c. [illegible] and new one under the property of the Sacred Harmonic Society, and can only be used for their perfo[illegible]

THE NEW ORCHESTRA, EXETER HALL.

[illegible] Harmonic Society are regulated by a President (J. N. Hanson, Esq.), a Treasurer (J. Taylor, Esq.), Hon. Secretary (Mr. T. [illegible]), Librarian (Mr. R. Bowley), with a committee of twelve members, in addition to the above officers, four of the committee retiring each year, but eligible for re-election. Mr Costa is the conductor, Mr. Bennewith the organist, and Mr. Cooper first violin, or chef d'attaque. In the band are Lindley, Howell, Phillips, Tolbecque, Anderson, G. Cooke, Jarrett, Baumann, Card, the Harpers, Smithers, Pratten, Powell, Barrett, Hill, Blagrove, Hill, Banbrick, Hutton, Pratten, Rowland, Lazarus, Irwin, Wagstaff, &c. The double basses and violoncel[illegible] have been increased in number to fourteen each. A considerable addition has been made to the chorus, both in number and in the manners, comprises in its body a number of the most efficient and valuable of the professional choristers

The Sacred Harmonic Society was established in 1832. The original prospectus stated: "The Society has been formed in consequence of it appearing to several amateurs to be desirable to establish in a central part of London a Society whose object should be the cultivation of the vocal music of the higher class of composition in Sacred Harmony, and the improvement of its members in execution, united with a desire to aid in establishing for the London amateurs of music the reputation which has repeatedly been awarded to those of being able to perform the sublime compositions of Handel and other eminent sacred composers, with that degree of precision and effect which their worth entitles them to." It was also stated, that the "projectors wish it to be understood that it does not owe its [illegible] (as many have done) to any division of a society already established, and that their motive for adding to the number of those previously established, has been the extension of the facilities which are afforded by the combined efforts for improvement in the knowledge and practice of music."

The early members of the Society were in a great degree composed of the choirs of the churches and chapels of the metropolis [illegible] first two years the meetings were held in different [illegible] until, in June, 1834, upon the removal by the Exeter Hall proprietors of the restriction which previously prevented the sale of [illegible] for charitable purposes, the Society removed to the small hall at Exeter Hall. The Amateur Festival held in that edifice in Sept., 1834, gave an impetus to the Harmonists, and the numbers [illegible] 400. A festival was held in April, 1836, for the Charing-Cross Hospital. In 1837 a benefit was given for the Shipwrecked and Distressed Seamens' Asylum. In 1840 the large organ was erected by the Society; and its use is restricted to such musical entertainments as are given by the Sacred Harmonic Society only

Since 1836, there have been given 187 performances by this society in Exeter Hall, which have been attended in the aggregate by 357,100 persons. There has been expended, for professional assistance alone, during that period, upwards of £22,000 an evident proof of the utility of this society to the musical profession. The following oratorios of Handel have been revived, and thus rendered familiar to English audiences through the agency of the Society:—"Messiah," revived 1835; "Israel in Egypt," 1837; "Judas Maccabeus," 1838; "Samson," 1838; "Solomon," 1838; "Joshua," 1839; "Saul," 1840. "Jeptha," 1841; "Deborah," 1843; "Athaliah," 1845; and "Belshazzar," 1847. In addition to these works, Handel's "Dettingen Te Deum," the Utrecht "Jubilate," the two Coronation Anthems, "Zadok the Priest," and "My heart is inditing," Purcell's Jubilate in D; Haydn's "Creation," and his Mass in [illegible]; Mozart's Mass No 12, and his motet splendente, "Te Deus;" [illegible] "Mount of Olives" (English), and his Mass in C; Spohr's "Last Judgment," and "Fall of Babylon," Mendelssohn's "Paul," "Elijah," and "Lobgesang," besides Psalms, Neukomm's "David," Romberg's "Lay of the Bell," Haydn's "Creation," Beethoven's "Mount of Olives," Handel's "Occasional Oratorio," "Resurrection" and "Alexander's Feast," and Beethoven's [illegible] music, &c., have been performed by the Society

The Society has on various occasions specially engaged Mendelssohn to direct his own works First, in 1837 [illegible] of his "Paul" first in London In June, 1840, her Majesty and Prince Albert commanded a performance of this work. In April of 1847, Mendelssohn visited England for the last time, at the express invitation of the Sacred Harmonic Society, and conducted four performances of his "Elijah," the Court attending at one of them.

Spohr visited London a few months after the lamented decease of Mendelssohn, and conducted three performances. Thus two of the greatest composers of their age were both in one year invited to lend their valuable aid to the exertions of the Society; and their advent led to one inevitable result the nomination of Costa as conductor, for it was to the progress made in the word after the élève had been more exalted by the master-minds. It was evident that the full resources and appliances of the Society could not been developed and turned to account until that body should be supplied with a conductor of the highest order of the amateurs

At the date of the last annual report (the 15th), the Society had property in the funds and otherwise exceeding £2000 A small deficiency had arisen in the operations of the last year, but the [illegible] and two sung at this present year the same results were apparent: but the steps lately taken have restored the Society to a high position, financially as well as musically; and its future success with such exertions may be regarded as certain.

THE FOSSIL SEA-SERPENT.

(To the Editor of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS )

SIR, Will you allow me to correct a statement that appeared in the last Number of your interesting publication? The fossil mentioned at the conclusion of the admirable notice of the so-called Sea-Serpent, as having been exhibited in America under the name of Hydrarchos. Sillimanum, was constructed by the exhibitor, Koch, from bones collected in various parts of Alabama, and which belonged to several individual skeletons of an extinct marine cetacean, termed Basilosaurus by the American naturalists, and known in this country by that of Zeuglodon, a term signifying yoked tooth. Mr. Koch is the person who, a few years ago, had a fine collection of fossil bones of elephants and mastodons, out of which he made up an enormous skeleton, and exhibited it in the Egyptian Hall, Piccadilly, under the name of Mastodon. This collection was purchased by the trustees of the British Museum, and from it were selected the bones when now constitute the matchless skeleton of a mastodon in our National Gallery of Organic Remains

Not content with the interest which the fossils which he collected in various parts of the United States really possess, Mr. Koch, with the view of exciting the curiosity of the fashionable multitude, strung together all the vertebræ he could obtain of the Basilosaurus, and arranged them in a serpentine form; manufactured a skull and claws, and exhibited the monster as a fossil sea-serpent, under the name above mentioned—Hydrarchos. But the trick was immediately exposed by the American naturalists, and the true nature of the fossil bones published.

Bones of the Basilosaurus have been found in many parts of Alabama and South Carolina, in greensand belonging to a very ancient (eocene) tertiary formation Hundreds of vertebræ, bones of the extremities, portions of the cranium, and of the jaws with teeth, have at times been collected. Remains of species of the same genus have also been found near Bordeaux and in Malta

Professor Owen has shown that the original animal was a marine cetacean, holding an intermediate place between the cachalots and the herbivorous species. It must have attained a length equal to that of the largest living whales, for a series of vertebræ was found in situ, that extended in a line for [illegible]. An interesting memoir on the Basilosaurus, by Dr Gibbes, of Columbia, was published in the Journal of the Academy of Natural Sciences of Philadelphia, Vol. I. Second Series, 1847; and a notice on the remains of the [illegible], by Professor Owen, appeared in the "Transactions of the Geological Society of London," Vol. VI. a brief notice of which is inserted in my "Media of Creation," page 876, under the name of Zeuglodon cetoides.

GIDEON ALGERNON MANTELL.

19, Chester-square, Pimlico, Oct. 31, 1848.

P.S. With regard to the existence of the so-called Sea-Serpent, I would beg to remark, that, although it is highly improbable that an Icthian, or true snake, of the dimensions and marine habits described by [illegible] agers now exists, yet there is nothing to forbid the supposition that [illegible] unseen living forms of cartilaginous fishes [illegible]

[illegible] ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

THE GREAT SEA SERPENT.

(To the Editor.)

I have perused with very great satisfaction the Engravings of the 'Sea-Serpent' in the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS of the 30th inst.; they most faithfully represent the appearance of the animal, as seen from her Majesty's ship Daedalus on the 6th of August last; and it is evident that much care has been bestowed upon the subject by the artist employed, to whom I beg to acknowledge myself greatly indebted for the minute and attention with which he listened to the various alterations suggested by me during the progress of the [illegible]

London, Oct. 31 th, 1848. P. M'QUHAE.

DAVIS' STRAITS WHALES.—Sir John Ross.—A Correspondent in Stromness informs us that on Saturday evening the ships Lord Gambier, of Hull, with seven fish, and the Perseverance of Stromness, were in sight from the harbour, where they are still detained by contrary winds. We learn that the greater number of whalers at Davis Straits were for some weeks too-bound, and that the crews nearly feared shipwreck, or being forced to spend a dreary and desolate winter in the frozen regions. Many of the seamen, under this impression, left their ships and crossed the ice to the shore, during three nights [illegible] accompanied with snow, which swept their clothes into the sea; but, happily, while the storm deprived them of the greater part of their clothing, it broke up [illegible] allowed the vessels to go free, when they were added to reach [illegible] Mr. Hall, of the Lord Gambier, saw Sir John Ross on the Pennie, Davis' Straits, where the gallant Captain and his crew [illegible] fishing their basement entirely [illegible] ships left them on the 1st October [illegible]

NOW READY, PRICE ONE SHILLING,

THE ILLUSTRATED

LONDON ALMANACK

FOR 1849;

Being the Fifth Annual Issue of this most beautifully embellished and useful Almanack. Illustrated by RICHARD DOYLE, B. FOSTER, &c.; and finely engraved by DALZIEL, VIZETELLY, &c. Country Scenes, by THOMAS MILLER; besides a variety of useful Tables usually published in Almanacks. The Astronomical Department by JAMES GLAISHER, Esq., F.R.A.S., and of the Royal Observatory, Greenwich.

Published by WILLIAM LITTLE, 198, Strand, London.

 Country orders supplied for cash only.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, Nov. 5.—Twentieth Sunday after Trinity. Gunpowder Plot, 1605.
MONDAY, 6.—The sun rises at 7h. 6m. and sets at 4h. 22m
TUESDAY, 7. The length of the day is 9h 14m., the decrease since the longest day is 7h. 18m.
WEDNESDAY, 8. Day breaks at 5h. 11m., and twilight ends at 6h. 16m.
THURSDAY, 9. Prince of Wales born, 1841. Lord Mayor's Day.
FRIDAY, 10 Jupiter south at 6h. 18m A.M., and Saturn south at 8h. 1m. P.M
SATURDAY, 11. St. Martin. Half-quarter. Full moon at 1h. 35m. A.M.

TIMES OF HIGH WATER AT LONDON BRIDGE,
FOR THE WEEK ENDING NOVEMBER 11.

Sunday	Monday	Tuesday	Wednesday	Thursday	Friday	Saturday
M. A. h. m. 0 15 0 52	M. A. h. m. 1 5 1 42	M. A. h. m. 1 55 2 32	M. A. h. m. 2 45 3 22	M. A. h. m. 3 35 4 12	M. A. h. m. Full 11 35 eight	M. A. h. m. 0 25 0 50
M. A. h. m. 1 15 1 35	M. A. h. m. 2 0 2 0

* Low Water on the afternoon of Tuesday will take place at 2h 12m, a quarter after one.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"Philo."—See the article on the recently discovered planets, by Mr. Glashier, in the Illustrated London Almanack for 1849.

"Regiomontanus."—Inquire the price of an Azimuth Compass of Mr. Barrow, optician, 26, Snowden street, Haymarket; and he will tell you, also, whether it is the best instrument for your purpose, or not.

"Hertfordian."—We thank you for the sketches of the Mirage seen by you on October 22, but we cannot engrave them.

"W. H. C."—An inch is the smallest linear measure to which a name is given in English measure. Among mechanics this is subdivided into eighths; by all connected with science, the decimal values of an inch are adopted. Formerly, the inch was divided into twelve parts, called lines: but these have very properly fallen into disuse. The French line is the twelfth part of a French inch. The length of a French inch at the temperature of 66° 2' Fahrenheit is 1.066826 English inches; and, consequently, a French line, at the same temperature, is 0.088819 English inch.

"A Subscriber."—The office of Sheriff of London and Middlesex is of considerable expense to those who fill it.

"E. L. J."—Thanks, though we cannot avail ourselves of his offer.

"C. C. Z."—Trowbridge. A hide work on "Building Societies" may be had, by order, of any bookseller.

"T. B."—Coulers, had better not attempt to clean his coins, until some competent judge has seen them.

"A Member of Pembroke College, Oxford," is thanked.

"F. P. L."—should write to the Secretary of the London Art-Union.

"Rev. M. A."—Grantham.—See Wilkinson's work on "South Australia," just out.

"S. N."—Write to the Mechanics' Magazine.

"A. D. A."—should send his enquiry.

"Dramaticus,"—Stamford-hall, will find a copious memoir of Mr. Wallace, the musical composer, in No. 126, of our Journal.

"M. E. B." and "H. M."—We have not room.

"X. Y. Z."—We shall return to the subject

"I. O." is thanked; but we could not engrave the solar spots

"A. C."—The President steam-ship was built of Teak, with fir planking.

"L. M. R."—Vegetable wory is the produce of a tree found on the banks of the river Magdalena, and some other parts of South America. Ivory is the tusks of the elephant and the walrus, and the horn of the narwhal: it is intermediate between bone and horn

"M. N." may obtain the information of some railway journal.

"H. R." Stamford."—Any City or West-End music publisher will give the required information.

"Isabel."—Grisi has never performed Abigail in Verdi's "Nino," or any other part in that opera

"H. F. G." Newport Pagnell Inquire of Ackermann and Co., Strand.

"Rhoda," St. David's, should complain to the Post-office. The practice of sending miscellaneous articles by post was never intended by law.

"J. H. Ao.

"W. S." will, perhaps, send a Sketch and details

"A. Q." Bangarena, is mistaken Portraits of Mr. W. Smith O'Brien have been given in Nos. 113, and 338, of our Journal.

"An Oranian." We have not room.

"W. N." Exeter, states that fowls suffering from the disease lately so prevalent, have been cured by soaking their food in water wherein rue has been boiled.

"G. W. H. W."—Sea a column on the "Iron Trade," published by Whitaker.

"A. J." Chatham.—In a favourable paper on "Modern Painters," in the "Quarterly" for October, it is probable that even this last unhappy extremity will be resorted to.

"A Graduate of Oxford," in Number XII. of The North British Review

"L. B. W." Hackney.—The grotesque sea-trees at Belfont have been too often engraved for us to repeat.

"Frederick" The charge for advertisements in our Journal

"A Subscriber ab Initio," Ingmar.—Observatory, elevatory, at the walls of the nave of a church supported by the arches which decide it from the aisles, and pierced for lights

"E. S. D."—The office of the Journal is in Wellington-street, Strand.

"T. U. T." Carnarvon. The original cost of the Great Britain steam-ship we cannot precisely state

"Ecclesia" Lord Byron's story of "Beppo" is published by Murray, Albemarle-street

"J. H. S.," Finsbury Thanks

"A Regular Subscriber."—There hang no stamp duty, or tax of any kind, on a Will itself, it may be written on plain paper or parchment. The printed "Will paper" is preferable, since it supplies the legal form

"W. N. P." Loughborough. The charge for our Journal is 6s. 6d. per quarter, payable in advance, commencing with any Number

"Agdet, Earls Colne.—It is and per se; that is, and by itself.

"A. A., Bristol.—The weight is [illegible]

"H. J. W. L." Wakefield.—The middle letter, in Goethe Peschel, is pronounced as the name of the fish, perch.

"A Subscriber," Tenby.—Received.

"B. A."—Apply, respecting the Chinese Cards, to Mr. J. R. Smith, 4, Old Compton-street, Soho-square. An account of the different kinds of Chinese Cards will be found in Chaltè's "Facts and Speculations on the Origin and History of Playing Cards," p. 55.

"T. P. K." was answered in our Journal at length a few months back.

"E. M. B." should send his coins, or wax impressions of them. We cannot get the desired information without. There is no mode of restoring the inscriptions on coins but by tooling, and that, at once, will destroy their interest and antiquity.

"D. R." To take the degree of Bachelor of Music, it is necessary to prepare certain exercises. Our correspondent had better address Sir R. S. Bishop on the subject

"A Subscriber."—For the terms of subscription to the Musical Amateur Society, address to Mr. E. Leslie, Hon. Secretary, 60, Cleveland-street

"Sunday Pudding."—We do not see that it is necessary for a Member of Parliament to take his seat, to enable him to accept the Chiltern Hundreds

"H. B."—A midshipman's appointment is obtained through interest as the Admiralty. It cannot be purchased.

"A. B."—Cadetships are in the patronage of the East India Directors.

"A Constant Reader."—An illegitimate child may assume either its father or mother's name

"Paul." Captains in the Navy are not now designated Post Captains.

"A. A. B." There are several instances of persons having taken who use no motto. The latter may be assumed at pleasure

"R. N. Y." The family of Miles, of Bristol, cannot trace the origin of their race, nor can we offer an opinion as to the country from whence it originally came. At no very distant period it was settled at Ledbury, in Herefordshire. The arms are "Az. a chev. erm. between three mascles arg., each charged with a fleur de lis, or." The crest, "A demi-man couped at the shoulders, proper, garnished, and supporting with the hand an anchor ppr. There are many families who have no arms.

GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY. The Promised Views upon this line of Railway are unavoidably deferred till next week.

 We have to thank Mr. A. F. Ridgway, 43, Leicester-square, for his obliging communication of the plan of operations at Moultan.

Our "Magazine Column," and Replies to several Correspondents, must stand over from press of news

BOOKS, &c. RECEIVED DURING THE WEEK

Composition and Punctuation. By J. Brenan.—Dr. Chalmers' Works. Vol. V.—Funch's Pocket-book.—Mother's Ladies's Pocket-book London and the Thames.—Lepage's French School.—Lepage's Ready Guide.—Milton's Prose Works. Vol. III.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 4, 1848.

THE war in the Punjaub has extended itself. The last accounts left the British before Moultan, supported by a native force under the Rajah Shere Singh. The latter was more than half suspected to be a traitor. The suspicion was speedily confirmed. A brigade under General Whish having commenced operations against Moultan, where the Dewan Moolraj was intrenched with a strong force, Shere Singh, with a force of 5000 men, went over to the enemy. The consequence was that the British commander was compelled to raise the siege, and to retire to a distance of fifteen miles from the citadel, there to await reinforcements from Ferozepore and Scinde. The news of this reverse speedily spread through the Punjaub. Chuttar Singh, the father of the traitor, Shere Singh, who was prepared for the contingency, and quite as anxious as his son and the bulk of the Sikh chiefs to strike a blow against the conquerors of the Punjaub, marched immediately at the head of 10,000 men collected in the Hazareh, a wild district at the north-western extremity of the five rivers, to the aid of his countryman in Moultan. The British resident at Lahore seized the person of the young Dulcep Singh as a hostage, and adopted all necessary and proper means for the security of the capital. There is reason to believe that the war will be strictly a frontier one; and that the Indian Government will speedily succeed in crushing a rebellion, which ought, if it had acted promptly upon the information conveyed to it long ago, to have been crushed at a much earlier period. When the last accounts left, troops were being poured into Scinde by sea from Bombay to occupy the line of the middle Indus, and to march, in case of need, upon the Punjaub. This force will amount to about 10,000 men. From the Bengal frontier, a force of 20,000 men, under General Gilbert, is on the march to join General Whish under the walls of Moultan; and the preparations in all parts of India show that our Government does not under-rate the danger, or lack—though at the eleventh hour—the means and the energy to meet it.

ALL kinds of rumours relative to the state of Vienna have been current during the week. For some time it was generally believed that the armies of Windischgrätz, Auersperg, and Jellachich hemmed the city in on all sides; and that a bombardment had commenced which threatened to lay the capital in ruins. It now appears that these accounts, although written on apparently good authority, were only partially correct. The latest authentic accounts received to the time at which we write are of the 27th of October. At that date the suburbs of Vienna were occupied by the Imperial commanders, but no attack had been made upon the city. The withdrawal of the Hungarian reinforcements, the reasons for which have never yet been explained, having left Vienna completely at the mercy of Windischgrätz, he called upon the citizens to surrender. He insisted in his proclamation upon the immediate disarmament of the populace and of the Academic Legion, the delivery of twelve of the students as hostages for the future good behaviour of the citizens, and for the giving up to justice of all the parties concerned in the assassination of the Count Latour. The popular party demurred, and several deputations proceeded from the city to the army, to make known to the Imperial General the conditions upon which the citizens would be content to lay down their arms. These were, a general amnesty, the nomination of a popular Ministry, and the withdrawal of the troops from the vicinity of the capital. These terms were refused; and a proclamation of Windischgrätz to the Viennese, dated on the 26th of October, in which he spoke of the grief he felt at being compelled to act hostilely against the capital of the Monarchy, reiterated his determination to accept of no terms short of those previously proposed. Windischgrätz is virtually master of the city; and, for this reason, it is possible that he will not resort to a bombardment. Should, however, the Hungarians have turned back (and the Breslauer Zeitung and some of the Berlin journals assert that they are in full march for Vienna with a force of from 75,000 to 90,000 men), it is probable that even this last unhappy extremity will be resorted to.

The position both of Windischgrätz and Jellachich in these events is remarkable. Windischgrätz, who but a few short weeks ago was employed by the Court to coerce and overawe the Sclavonians at Prague, and who narrowly escaped with his life amid the insurrections of the Bohemian capital, is now the leader of a Sclavonian army, employed by the same Court to overawe its German subjects; and Jellachich, the Croat, who shortly after the commencement of the convulsions of Europe, in the spring of the present year, was implicated in a rebellious project against the integrity of the Austrian Empire, is now employed in the task of holding together for a short breathing-time the fast-separating nationalities which give their nominal allegiance at the bayonet's point to the unhappy dynasty of Este. Windischgrätz appears to be a man on whom the advisers of the Emperor can rely; but the Ban of Croatia—known to be a far more able man, and suspected of a towering ambition—is an ally who may hereafter prove dangerous. Turn where one will, and examine the state of Austria under any aspect whatever, it is impossible not to feel that now is the darkest day of its history. The attention of all Europe is concentrated upon it; for whatever the immediate fate of the capital may be, the result one way or the other cannot but have the most powerful influence on Europe generally, but more especially upon Germany. Even the unconditional surrender of the Viennese could not have the effect of strengthening, in any sensible degree, the tottering throne of the Cæsars, or of educing anything like order out of the chaotic elements which are now struggling for the mastery.

THE meeting of the Peace Congress in London is a circumstance which calls for notice on the part of all journals that would truly record the aspirations as well as the events of this remarkable epoch. Amid desolating internecine wars, and amid predictions of foreign wars, which are unhappily but too likely to be realised, the friends of peace, nothing daunted by difficulties and discouragements, hold their meetings and disseminate their principles. It is true that there is nothing new in these principles. They are the principles of Christianity—often forgotten, but never entirely disavowed by Christian nations. They are the principles of soldiers themselves; for there is no man, not even the greatest of military heroes, who would not, in his coolness, if questioned, that war is an unhappy necessity, not to be defended as a matter of reason, and only to be resorted to in the last extremity, in defence of the rights of men and nations when unjustly attacked. But, old and holy as these principles are, they need repeating. We rejoice, therefore, to notice the zeal and enthusiasm of the philanthropic men who labour in this cause, and should be sorry to join in that deprecation of their efforts in which some public writers indulge. Peace may be at present impracticable. That is a fact to deplore; but let us remember that wars are generally the offspring of opinion; and that to bring opinion into a purer channel, and to encourage ideas of peace and good-will, it is necessary that it should be acted upon by men who have high convictions and unwearied enthusiasm. There must always be men in advance of their age, to draw the world after them; and every convert made by the preaching of such men is a gain, which of itself may be the means of still further gain, until at last opinion is ripened, and in the course of time the amiable Utopianism of the few becomes the conviction of the many.

It cannot be denied, however much we may be threatened by war at the present time, that the whole tendency of modern civilisation is peaceful. Railroads, the greatest triumphs of modern science, are essentially anti-warlike; and it is not too much to assert, that if the French continue to visit England on their half-holiday trips, as they have done in such large numbers during the last few weeks, the war spirit that once animated them against us, and which was to large measure by the fair intercourse of each by the influence of old traditions, will be eradicated by degrees, and replaced by one more kindly, more politic, more profitable, and more Christian. In fact, much as we sympathise with the objects of the generous crusade which the friends of Peace are waging against war by means of their lectures, their meetings, their publications, their deputations to Ministers and to Governments, and their proposed Congresses in the principal capitals of Europe, we trust for more immediate good to the intercourse of nations with one another. However great our triumphs in War, England is essentially a peaceful country. France will catch our principles—for, luckily, they are contagious—whenever she becomes better acquainted with us. As soon as these two great nations are firmly united by the bonds of mutual esteem as well as mutual interest, the permanent peace of Europe will be somewhat less chimerical than it has hitherto been, or than, unhappily, it still continues to be.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

On Sunday morning the Queen and her family attended divine service in the private chapel of the Castle. The Hon. and Rev. C. Leslie Courtenay officiated.

On Monday the Earl and Countess of Clarendon arrived at the Castle, on a visit to Her Majesty. Prince Albert attended the Earl of Listowel (Lord in Waiting), Capt. the Hon. J. Denman, and Col. Seymour, went out shooting in Windsor Park. The Royal dinner party in the evening included the Duchess of Kent, the Princess of Hohenlohe-Langenburg, Lady A. M. Dawson, Baroness de Speth, the Earl and Countess of Clarendon, and Sir G. Couper.

On Tuesday afternoon the Queen held a Privy Council at the Castle. It was attended by Prince Albert, the Marquis of Lansdowne, the Lord Chancellor, Lord J. Russell, Sir G. Grey, Viscount Palmerston, the Earl of Auckland, Lord Campbell, and the Duke of Norfolk. At the council, Parliament was ordered to be further prorogued from Thursday, the 2nd of November, until the 19th of December. The Hon. W. Bathurst was the clerk of the council in waiting. Her Majesty was attended by the Lord in Waiting and the Vice-Chamberlain. After the council [illegible] Prince Albert went out shooting in Windsor Park. The Royal dinner party in the evening included the Princess of Hohenlohe-Langenburg, the Earl and Countess of Clarendon, Lady A. M. Dawson, Baroness de Speth, the Provost of Eton, and Sir G Couper.

On Wednesday morning, Prince Albert, attended by Mr. G. E. Anson and General Bowles, left the Castle for London, travelling by a special train on the Great Western Railway. His Royal Highness proceeded to Somerset House, and presided at a council of the Duchy of Cornwall. He left early in the afternoon, on his return to Windsor Castle. The Earl and Countess of Clarendon took their departure from the Castle in the course of the day. Lord Camoys has relieved the Earl of Listowel in the duties of Lord in Waiting to the Queen, and Sir Edward Bowater has relieved Captain the Hon. J. Denman in his duties as Groom in Waiting to her Majesty. The Royal dinner circle in the evening included her Serene Highness the Princess of Hohenlohe-Langenburg and the Princess Feodore of Hohenlohe-Langenburg.

The Princess Lieven and suite arrived on Saturday last at Brighton; Prince Metternich visited the Princess Lieven and Sir R. and Lady Marchison on Monday.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

CAMBRIDGE.

THE PUBLIC ORATORSHIP.—Mr. Bateson, whose election we noticed in our Postscript of last week, having complied with all the statutable formalities, has been duly installed in the office. Mr. Williams, the unsuccessful candidate, has issued an address of thanks to his supporters, in which he says:—"I cannot take leave of the contest in which we have been engaged, without some expression of gratitude to those by whom it has been justly earned. We have not succeeded in attaining our object; but I can never regret an attempt, in which so many old friends have given me the most convincing proofs of kind regard, and many members of the Senate, whose approval is in itself distinction, have recorded their unbiassed votes in my favour. There are many sin among my opponents who have treated me with a courtesy of which I must beg them to believe me grateful. The same prominent members of the Senate, and others who recorded their votes for either candidate are the following:—For Mr. Bateson:—The Vice-Chancellor, the Bishop of Chester (Master of Christ's), the Masters of Jesus, Magdalene, Corpus, Downing, and the Vice-Master of Trinity Queen's: Professors Blunt, Challis, Fisher, Haviland, Peacock, Scholefield, Stankie, and Willis: Marquis of Exeter, Lords Godolphin, Powis, Braybrooke, and Sir Edward Sugden, Sir E. Williams, H. Pitzherbert, and J. Romilly. For Mr. Disable J. E. Pepys and G. Denman. For Mr. Williams:—The Provost of King's, the Masters of Trinity, Caius, Catherine Hall, St. Peter's, Clare Hall, and Downing: Professors Clarke, Jarrett, Malkin, Pryme, Sedgwick, and Walmsley: Lords Lyttelton, Hereford, E. Bruce, and A. Compton; Sir J. R. Eustace, the Astronomer Royal (Professor Airey).

THE REV. W. HORACE MATCHAM, B.A., of Queen's College, Oxford, late Curate of Wortley, Leeds, has been elected to the vacant Classical Professorship in the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, Berks.

THE CURACIES IN SUNDERLAND.—On Tuesday evening a meeting of the Ancient Vestry of Sunderland was held in the vestry of the church, when it was unanimously agreed that a respectful memorial be presented to the Lord Bishop of Durham, showing the inadequate amount of the present income of Sunderland Rectory. The income is derived from the following sources: viz., from the rectorial tithes £80, from land £35, from surplice fees £18; total, £280. Added to which is the curacy of St. John's, of the annual value of £300, making a total of £600, out of which sum the Rector of Sunderland must keep three curates, leaving the Episcopal Chapel of Spring-garden-lane totally unprovided for. The memorial further stated that the rate-payers of Sunderland are all of the trading population, and are at present most heavy burdened. It concluded with a prayer that the Lord Bishop of Durham may be pleased to appoint a part of the proceeds (£2000 a year in amount) of the rich living of the rectory of Bishopwearmouth, now vacant, towards assisting the poorer rectory of Sunder land. This respectful and very reasonable memorial was signed by nineteen members of the Ancient Vestry—a body established by Act of Parliament in 1719.

JUBILEE OF THE CHURCH MISSIONARY SOCIETY.—Wednesday being the fiftieth anniversary of the establishment of the Church Missionary Society, its jubilee was celebrated in all parts of the country. His Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury preached a sermon on the occasion in the forenoon, in St. Ann's Church, Blackfriars; and the Bishop of London preached in the Hon. and Rev. Mr. Villiers's Church, St. George's, Bloomsbury. The reason why St. Ann's Church, Blackfriars, was selected for the Archbishop was, that the annual sermon on behalf of the funds of the society were preached in it for a period of 17 years after its formation. The annual income of the society is, in round numbers, about £100,000; but on this occasion it is intended to make some extraordinary exertions to raise a Jubilee Fund of £100,000, making the sum collected in 1848, £200,000. In Sierra Leone and Western Africa the number of communicants in the society's churches is upwards of 2000, and the number of attendants on the respective ministrations of the clergymen is 7000. In New Zealand the number of communicants in the society's places of worship is 3000. In India [illegible] In China [illegible] which 30,000 are under a regular course of Christian instruction, while 16,000 children regularly attend the society's schools. The society has upwards of one hundred stations in different parts of the world, and [illegible] The society derives its funds. The number of missionaries sent out by the society since its commencement [illegible] The receipts for the year ending April 30, 1848, exceeded £2,500,000. A collection was made at the close of the sermons in St. Ann's, Blackfriars, St. George's, Bloomsbury, and at the various other churches in which sermons were preached on behalf of the Jubilee Fund. The amount received was, we understand, in every instance, exceedingly liberal.

THE CONSECRATION OF CHRIST CHURCH, GREAT HORTON-STREET, LIVERPOOL.—The consecration of this beautiful edifice, dedicated to the worship of Almighty God, was solemnised on Monday, by the Right Rev. the Bishop of Chester, assisted by a numerous body of the clergy of the diocese. A numerous congregation was also present on the occasion, amongst whom were the Mayor, Sir Thomas Birch, M.P., William Brown, Esq., M.P., and various gentlemen connected with the town of Liverpool. At the conclusion of the sermon the Right Rev. Prelate pronounced the benediction, and the large congregation separated. Immediately after this his Lordship proceeded to the font to receive his worship the Mayor's infant daughter into the Christian Church, by the ordinance of baptism.

CONSECRATION.—On Monday the Bishop of Chester consecrated the new church at Everton, in the parish of Walton-on-the-Hill, Lancashire. The church was consecrated by the name of "Christ Church;" it contains 1000 sittings, 337 of which are free, and is endowed with the sum of £1650. The cost has been £10,650, and the whole expense including land, &c., will be has been defrayed by T. B. Horsfall, Esq., the Mayor of Liverpool, and the other children of [illegible] Esq., by whom it is intended as a lasting monument to the memory of their late father.

IRELAND.

DUBLIN COMMISSION OF OYER AND TERMINER.

TRIAL OF MR O'DOHERTY, OF THE "TRIBUNE" NEWSPAPER.—On Monday the third trial of Mr Kevin Izod O Doherty, one of the proprietors of the Tribune newspaper, was commenced in the Commission Court before Judges Torrens and Crampton. A jury having been formed, the Clerk of the Crown arraigned the prisoner in the usual manner. The indictment contained ten distinct counts, charging the prisoner with the separate offences of having composed to depose the Queen from the Imperial Crown of the United Kingdom, and of having compassed the levying of war against her Majesty, in order to compel her to change her measures and councils. The two latter counts were charged to have been published by the prisoner in certain articles published in a newspaper called the Irish Tribune, of which he, together with a person named Richard D Williams, was the [illegible] proprietor.

The case occupied [illegible] and was concluded about [illegible] when it was essentially similar to those on the first and second trials of the prisoner in the early part of August last, when the juries on each disagreed. The case for the Crown was then closed, the Court rose. The case for the defence occupied the whole of Tuesday, and on Wednesday, at the sitting of the Court, Mr Justice Crampton charged the jury, who returned into court after a short absence, and returned with a verdict of "Guilty," accompanied with a recommendation to mercy, on account of the prisoner's youth and of the excited state of public feeling at the time of the publication of his treasonable writings.

MR. DUFFY'S TRIAL.—The application made by the prisoner's counsel in this case on Friday (last week) has been decided in his favour. The point was that the indictment be quashed, on the ground that the requirement of the statute 6 Geo. IV. cap. 51 had not been complied with. The [illegible] over the venue shall be changed by the Crown, the names of [illegible] the custody of the prisoner from one gaol to another shall [illegible] days before the bill of indictment shall be found. In this case it was issued after the bill was found. The Court took till next day to consider the point; and the decision given was as mentioned above, [illegible] Mr. Duffy's trial to the January Commission.

Seven young men who were in custody for having been found proceeding at night to an armed meeting, pleaded guilty, and were sentenced to six months' imprisonment from the date of their committal.

Michael Moran, found guilty of the assault (arabbing) on the policeman Byrne, was sentenced to 15 years' imprisonment; his companions, J. J. Moran and M'Cormick, to 9 months' imprisonment with hard labour.

"GEMS" FROM THE "HUE AND CRY."

MEATH.—There is a description of a man named Gogan, who stole "a fat cow 27 years of age 5 feet 9 inches high slight make and fresh complexion, dark hair and long features"! Value £11."

The Meath police are rather graphic, for under the same head we have a description on of Catherine Ford, alias Mooney, who stands charged with having stolen amongst other things "three yards of calico 28 inches wide, a girl about 18 high stout make and sallow complexion with dark brown hair and a grey eye!" (Oh, Katty Mooney!)

Property in the county of Meath is of rather a dubious character, for in the same number of the Hue and Cry there is a description of a lot of fallows "whetted with cords William Owens and James Smyth, keepers on a place called Kilmessan, and carried them off with corn, pigs, carts, and other property which had been seized under a civil bill decree." The said decree is noted as of "[illegible] [illegible]" (The [illegible] of course, [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

REGENT'S QUADRANT.

THE QUADRANT, FROM VIGO-STREET.

more lasting materials than either of the above; for the colonnade consists of cast-iron columns raised upon granite plinths. The columns are of the Roman-Doric order, each 16 ft. 2 in. high, exclusive of the plinth; and, being painted, have all the appearance of stone. Altogether, this has been, from the first, esteemed the most elegant portion of Regent-street: its continuous rows of columns sweeping round in charming perspective, form a fine object, and an extremely picturesque variation to the general architectural decorations of the houses; and, could the sunshine have rested on both sides of the street at once, the colonnade would have been as useful as ornamental. Well do we remember the general admiration of the novelty on its completion: how the ballustraded roof was recommended as a general promenade for the inhabitants of the houses, and how the footway beneath was welcomed by the public as an exceedingly agreeable resort in wet weather. The upper promenade, however, proved a failure, the scheme neither consorting with English taste nor climate. A serious objection, too, lay in one story of the houses—the mezzanine—being dark and gloomy, and especially so in the winter months, thus offering great obstruction to the ventilation of the lower rooms and shops, so necessary to comfort and health; in addition to which, the value of the house property was considerably lessened by the great number of doubtful characters to whom the sheltered portions of the street presented an attraction, to the great discomfort and prejudice of the shopkeepers. One of the evils was, in some instances, attempted to be remedied by glazing the colonnade roof; and the moral status of the promenade beneath was sought to be improved: but serious objections remained, and these, at length, decided the authorities of the Woods and Forests (this being Crown property) on the removal of the colonnade: an Act of Parliament for this purpose was obtained during the past session, and the work of demolition is now in progress, as we this week illustrate. Many regrets have been expressed at the alteration; and we confess that we unwillingly part with this grand architectural characteristic, more especially as our metropolitan street architecture presents so few examples for commendation to be associated with the Quadrant Colonnade. Nevertheless, to the parties most interested—the inhabitants and owners of the property—the change will be highly beneficial; while, in apparently adding to the width of the street, and in the architectural enrichments of the houses being increased, its picturesqueness will scarcely be diminished.

Our Illustrations display two views of the Quadrant: one, from Vigo-street, with the colonnade entire; the other, from Tichborne-circus, as the street will appear when the alterations are completed. It will be seen that these begin at the mezzanine or entresol story, where highly-enriched pilasters are introduced on either side of the windows, from which spring consoles of elegant form, supporting a balcony.

The spaces between the windows are relieved by sunken paneling and pateræ, similar ornaments being introduced in corresponding portions of the balcony. The mouldings and cornices to the windows on the first floor have been greatly increased in importance, and the second story is united to the first with much skilfulness of design. The whole of these alterations are being carried out by James Pennethorne, Esq.; the contractor for the work is Mr. Kelk.

A strange story obtained circulation in the newspapers, some days since—that the contractor, who had purchased the cast-iron columns of the Government, had sold them to a railway company, at a profit of upwards of cent. per cent. Mr. Kelk is, certainly, the purchaser of the columns; but there is no truth in the other part of the story—a sort of bargain gossip, which easily finds credence. The columns, however, 270 in number, with the granite plinth, &c., will, by Mr. Kelk's order, be sold by auction, by Messrs. Eversfield and Horne, on Tuesday next, when the parties interested would, we dare say, not object to find the public gossip a correct anticipation.

THE QUADRANT, AS IT WILL APPEAR FROM TICHBORNE-STREET WITH THE ALTERATIONS COMPLETED.

"GUY FAWKES."—DRAWN BY DODGSON

GUY FAWKES DAYS.

Oh! yes, we remember
Those Fifths of November—
Best of our holidays,
First of our jolly days—
Times always glorious,
Ranting—uproarious;
Welcome to urchins all;
Dear to both great and small.
Never, in after-time,
Found we such fun in rhyme—
As, the full streets among,
Bearing our Guy along,
We sang the old ditty
All day, thro' the city
"Please to remember
The Fifth of November,"
And gather'd the coppers
From passers or stoppers,
Or pleased window-peepers—
Importunate reapers
Of tribute to buy
A warm exit for "Guy."

Ah, well we remember
Those fifths of November,
The laughing, the frolicking,
Shouting and rollicking,
When the powder was hot
And the squibs, and what not,
And the night had begun
For unlimited fun;
When the bonfire was lighted,
The fuses ignited,
And Guy like a felon,
With foolscap and bell on,
Was hung from a tree
Ignominiously,
And dangled his bandy-legs,
Shapeless as brandy kegs,
Over the crackling flame,
We keeping up the game—
Shouting, the whole of us,
That, for the soul of us
"We knew no reason
Why gunpowder treason"
Should slip memory
And deprive us of Guy,
And afford no more pastime
As good as the last time.

'Twas foolish such glee,
But right happy were we.
And, foolish or wise,
Such delight was a prize
Far richer and rarer,
And every way fairer,
Than many a brighter
Since known to the writer.—H. J.

CROATIAN TROOPS.

THE accompanying scene is an episodal Illustration from the great struggle now waging in the Austrian dominions. The Croatians, or Croats, are now fighting to desperation, under Radetzky and their Ban Joseph Von Jellachich, with varied success. One of the dispatches of the past month runs thus:—"The corps of Croats, which had been ineffectually attacked on the 9th by the National Guard of Oedenburg, has been beaten by General Mogs. The affair took place on the 11th inst. One-third of the enemy was cut to pieces, a second taken prisoner, and the remainder dispersed."

ADVANCED GUARD OF THE CROATIAN IRREGULARS.

Again, their position in the struggle will be understood by the following extract from a proclamation from the Hungarian camp, posted in the streets of Vienna on the 20th ult.:—"The Hungarian army hereby declares that it has come to succour its Austrian brethren, and that it will pursue with its whole power the Croatian army, which has been chased from Hungary, and which at this moment ravaging the plains of Austria. We are persuaded that, in chasing from Austria the hostile army of Jellachich, and re-establishing the interrupted communication with the city of Vienna, we shall render the greatest service to the liberty of the people, as well as to the dynasty and to the whole Monarchy."

The Ban has miraculous influence over the Croats, the secret of which is that he is a Croat, and proud to be one, and all his energies are turned towards one object — to procure for his nation that position in Hungary which they claim. He speaks the dialect of the people. "It is the language of my beloved mother (as said one day), and that I will not cease to cherish." Their Ban and their General, he converses with his Croats, and tells them things they had never dreamt of—visions of honour and glory. It is no wonder that when he appears every eye is turned upon him. Let them, once established, be what he means —said that they are ready to follow him to Buda, Pesth, Vienna, or Milan! Wine, they see him, they shout their enthusiastic "Zivio!" (Let him live!) and will follow him anywhere.

Although brought into more regular discipline by the Austrian Government, the Croats still retain their taste for war. Their untutored state, however, is companied by many traits of fidelity. Notwithstanding their fierce fight against Austria, in 1755, on account of certain innovations, their bearing was indescribable when they found themselves united to France in 1809.

MUSIC.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.

The first performance for the present season took place on Wednesday night. The announcement of Mendelssohn's "Elijah," and the first appearance of Mr. Costa in his new position of Conductor to the Society's concerts, attracted an immense audience. Every part of Exeter Hall was crowded to excess, and amongst the auditory were to be seen most distinguished amateurs and musical celebrities. A more exciting scene has rarely witnessed; and, on Costa's entrance to assume the bâton, the applause was deafening—the six hundred amateurs and artistes, forming the vocal and orchestra of six hundred performers, joining most heartily in this enthusiastic greeting to the greatest Musical Conductor of the age. At the end of the first part, and at the conclusion of the oratorio, the greetings for him were renewed again and again—thus proving that he had already secured for the members of the Society their desired object, namely, a marked improvement in the execution.

Having given in another part of our impression an Engraving of the new orchestra, with a Key to its alterations and improvements, accompanied by a brief sketch of the rise and progress of the Society, little space can be afforded to a detailed analysis of one of the finest interpretations of Mendelssohn's sublime work we have ever listened to. On all hands it has been admitted that a more perfect performance has never been heard in London.

The scores of "Elijah," as our well-informed readers are aware, is particularly difficult in the orchestral parts, for never is the instrumentation still a moment from the beginning to the end, the band is perpetual ly going, as an adjunct to the descriptive choral pieces. From the delicate developments and colouring of this instrumental under-current, is the great skill of a conductor exacted. And herein did Costa prove himself worthy of his mission. With kindred genius he touched the mighty inspirations of the lamented master spirit, producing those exquisite gradations of tone, those delicate discriminations in the nuances, that inexhaustible energy and never-failing precision which has been his characteristic in the conduct of the works of the great symphonists, as well as in the embodiment of the lyric drama.

The overture was a foretaste, by the beautiful working of inner parts, of the choral treat; and as the hitherto voices came forth, the chorus of the people, "Help, Lord," cold must have been the heart which could have resisted such powerful strains. The night was Mendelssohnian throughout; he was therein the spirit if not in the presence; and the poetry of his conceptions was realised by the sympathy infused by the conductor. Vitality was given to parts which had hitherto been regarded as sterile. These were intellectual readings of the words by the choristers; the tongue seemed to cleave, indeed, in the description that the "Deeps had no water," and as the full tide of voices rolled on in the injunctions to keep the commandments, never was the power of music wielded with more magnificent effect. Instrumental effects bears of the many were silent tributes, but these were eloquent. Let us record how decorous was the approbation bestowed on the oratorio: free from the vulgar annoyance of incessant applause, but bokeening outward demonstrations of applause, the feeling of the vast assemblage could not be mistaken. The attention was riveted, the feeling was general and sympathetic, and when, at the close, there was the expression for a burst, the occasion was never lost.

In recording the names of Mrs. Lerch, Miss Dolby, Miss A. Williams, Miss Duval, Mr. Lockey, Mr. J. A. Novello, and Mr. Phillips, it will suffice to establish that the general execution of the solos was gratifying and impressive. Exceptions may be taken here and there to certain readings, but there was a conscientious disposition on the part of all to do honour to Mendelssohn. The double quartet "For he shall give," the quartet "Cast thy burden," the trio "Lift thine eyes," and the "Oh, come every one," went beautifully. Of the choral pieces that were more strikingly depicted than on any former occasion were "But the Lord," in the last part, was very remarkable. The "Thanks be to God" was quite electric; and the "He watcheth over Israel" was delightfully done. The Pagan choruses were wonderfully fine; and the one, "The fire descends," almost appall.ng. This was a great night, and a new era for the Sacred Harmonic Society

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.—M. Sainton having joined her Majesty's private band, has resigned the post of leader to the Academy Concerts and principal professorship of the violin. The duties are undertaken by Mr. Henry Blagrove as M. SAINTON'S successor. Mr. Henry Lazarus, principal clarionet of the Royal Italian Opera, has been nominated professor of the clarionet, for which instrument an associate had been named up to this time since the celebrated Weiss.

MDLLE. NISSEN.—The vocalist, like Jenny Lind, is a native of Stockholm, and she was also a fellow pupil with Mdlle. Lind of Manuel Garcia in Paris, the brother of Malibran and Viardot. Mdlle. Nissen has sung at the Italian Operas in Paris and St. Petersburgh; and she has been very popular in Italy, at Rome, Bologna, &c., in "Norma," the "Sonnambula," &c. It is her first essay at Covent-Garden Theatre in the English language.

THE SOCIETY OF BRITISH MUSICIANS.—The Concerts of this Society will begin for the season on the 13th inst.; the second, on the 27th inst.; and the third, on the 11th of December.

GRISI.—Mdme Grisi is now in Paris; she will not sing at any place until the opening of the Royal Italian Opera.

MARIO.—This distinguished tenor will probably make a winter tour in England with Thalberg, the pianist.

MDLLE. LIND.—On Friday week, a concert was given at the Town-Hall, Birmingham, at which Mdlle. Lind, M. Roger, Signori F. Lablache and Belletti, sang—Balfe being the conductor. This week, three performances and a concert have been given by the same party at Brighton. It is believed that Southampton will be visited on the 8th.

DEATH OF MARIA MILANOLLO.—Concert frequenters will easily recollect the name Milanollo, some few years since—"Eugene Sue with a new sensibility for art," states the Musical Record, "and gifted with a faculty of perception of the highest standard of excellence in taste, expression, and style, these charming sisters fairly take the same rank in the musical world which Rachel does as regards the histrionic art." Maria, the youngest, is also no more. On the 21st Oct. she expired in Paris of hooping-cough, at the early age of sixteen, to the grief of her mother and sister. She was buried on the 24th, the funeral ceremony taking place at St. Roch, in the presence of the musical celebrities now in the capital. A monument will be raised to Maria's memory, at Père-la-Chaise, amongst the artists, of whom she was one of the brightest ornaments.

FOREIGN MUSICAL NEWS. M. Girard, who conducts the orchestra of the Paris Grand Opera, has been elected the successor of Habeneck, in the direction of the Conservatoire Concerts. Vieux, after giving concerts with great success in Brussels, has returned to Paris, and will soon arrive in London. The first representation of Clapisson's new opera, "Jeanne la Folle," was to take place on the 3rd instant. An occasional piece, called "Adriano a Parigi," altered from Rossini's "Viaggio à Reims," composed in 1825, the music of which, three years afterwards, he blended in "Count Ory," has been produced at the Italian Opera in Paris. The purport was to prove that the Republ e was a bugbear, and that the capital ought not to be deserted by fashion It does not appear, however, that this opera has made any proselytes, and the theatres continue. The piece was sung by Madame Castellan, Mdlle. Persiani, Mdlle. Beslo, Mdlle. Sara (Miss Hounsom), Mdlle. Clari, Madame Bellini, and by Bordas, Morelli, Arnouri, and Ronconi. The last-mentioned singer had but a slight season in Paris, that of Paris cockney; but the public could not overlook The cavatinas of Madame Persiani and Madame Castellan were also much applauded; but the piece was pronounced to be froide et ennuyeuse—fatal words in the mouths of Parisian dilettanti.

PROPOSED VISIT OF THE FRENCH NATIONAL GUARD TO MANCHESTER.—It is stated that several of this gallant body of men (about 1400, principally from Paris), who have been in London during the last few days, made many inquiries about Manchester, its people, its factories, and, above all, the Free-Trade Hall, which they expressed a strong desire to see. A deputation waited on the London and North-Western Railway Company, in order to ascertain upon what terms a number of the National Guard could be taken to and returned from Manchester. Moderate terms were offered, and it is anticipated that a detachment of the 3rd legion, which is about to visit England in a short time, will spend a day or two in this city.—Manchester Guardian.

THE THEATRES.

COVENT-GARDEN

Owing to Mr. Reeves's indisposition on Saturday last, Balfe's opera of the "Enchantress" was substituted for the announced "Sonnambula." Auber's "Haydée" was performed on Monday, but was postponed until Wednesday, on the same plea of illness for the tenor. On Wednesday, a further adjournment until this evening (Saturday) was declared in the bills, and a medical certificate has been printed in the journals, still allowing the cause of the delays on Mr. Reeves.

We regret these disappointments, which, of course, must be equally disastrous for the manager as the company; but it is to be regretted, that, instead of resorting to the equivocal proceeding of closing the theatre for a week, the début of Mdlle Nissen, which had been advertised for Thursday, did not take place, especially as Mr. Harrison, who is to be the Polinto, has sung that part frequently before. However, we trust to hear of no further contrarieties, and that the success of such a beautiful opera as that of "Haydée," and the triumph of Mdlle. Nissen next Tuesday for that is the night now fixed for her début, will tend to the prosperity of the undertaking, on which the fortunes of so many families are dependant, exclusive of the considerations of art.

PRINCESS'

The general style of mounting and executing "Norma," last Monday night, was so very creditable, that it is to be regretted that the new representation of the Druidical priestess should have proved inadequate. Mdlle. de Roissy, as a mere vocalist, has very considerable executive power, but she has to contend with an organ which is not sympathetic in its quality. It is of that thin, wiry, shrill body or volume, well adapted to develop vocal mechanism, to astonish, but little calculated to charm. Then it was a mistake to have selected Norma for her first appearance. It is not a character which depends on the mere rendering of portions of the cavatina, and of the duos and concerted pieces; but it is the impulse of strong passions, and of great physical force, which alone carry an ensemble through such an ordeal. Mdlle Roissy is an accomplished vocalist, who, in parts better adapted for her agile powers of execution, will no doubt take her revenge

The Adalisa of Miss Poole was, artistically speaking, not nearly so well sung as Mdlle. de Roissy sang the music of "Norma," told infinitely more with the audience, from the influence of simple feeling and a delicious organ, and although the French prima donna was exceedingly well received after her spontaneous applause of Miss Poole's hearers secured her ultimately the advantage in both the duos, wh ch were encored, as well as Mdlle de Roissy in the adagio of the "Casta diva." Miss Poole was affectingly conceived and energetically acted; and the Oroveso of Weiss was emphatically sung

ADELPHI.

We cannot compliment the management upon the farce of "The Dance of the Shirt," produced here on Monday evening. The story is that of some milliners, who subscribe for a ball; but the treasurer—a kind-hearted girl gives the money entrusted to her care to a starving old man. The piece is a remote number of Ainsworth's Magazine, called "Miss (Somebody's) Polka Party;" and, still further back, we recollect a charming sketch of Paul de Kock's, called "Un Bal des Grisettes" the original, we suspect, of all. We are not, however finding fault with the scenes, as magazine papers have furnished some of our most successful pieces; we only object to the manner in which the subject was worked out. The author took a bad line, hastily defined, between fun and sentiment; and, in consequence, the audience could not make out which he was going for, and so believed in neither.

Yet there were all the elements of comicality in the plot and characters. Miss Woolgar as the kind-hearted sempstress; Mrs Frank Matthews as Sally Meander Mr. Paul Bedford as a member of the Fire Brigade, John Pipes; and Mr. Maynard as a purveyor of asses' milk, ought to have ensured the success of the farce amongst them. It was, however, not a hit, and so the audience thought when it was announced for repetition

Mr. Wright came back to his favourite boards on the same evening, and was most enthusiastically received in the first piece His admirers and we are of them—evidently regard him as the Adelphi Theatre collectively, and do not take the least offence in it when he says, "I am not my self to-day, sir." Mr. Wright must be there; and long may he continue to make us injure ourselves seriously with laughter.

STRAND

As we announced, this tiny theatre opened on Monday, under the direction of Mr Hooper, who has collected a company with the majority of whose names we are not very familiar. The pieces selected were the old musical romance of "Henri Quatre," by Planché, and the farce of "The British Legion," called "The old farce of "Deaf as a Post" forming altogether the bill of fare that one might expect in the provinces, but not calculated to attract a London audience. Mr. Hooper wishes to succeed, and we trust he will entirely do so very soon. As we have before observed, the Strand Theatre is so very small, that it must be quite full to return a profit; and a crowded house can only be accommodated by first rate pieces and actors. Mediocrity must not be expected to succeed, as it can generally in the 31 eatrical world, about which the public is getting exceedingly acute.

Mr. Buckstone and Mrs. Fitzwilliam are engaged at the MARYLEBONE Theatre. They will commence at the termination of Mr. T. P. Cooke's performances, about a week hence, and continue up to Christmas—opening with the "Flowers of the Forest," and the "Rough Diamond." The interior of the British capital, and the old farce of "Deaf as a Post" forming altogether the bill of fare that one might expect in the provinces, but not calculated to attract a London audience. Mr. Hooper wishes to succeed, and we trust he will entirely do so very soon. As we have before observed, the Strand Theatre is so very small, that it must be quite full to return a profit; and a crowded house can only be accommodated by first rate pieces and actors. Mediocrity must not be expected to succeed, as it can generally in the theatrical world, about which the public is getting exceedingly acute.

Mr. Buckstone and Mrs. Fitzwilliam are engaged at the MARYLEBONE Theatre. They will commence at the termination of Mr. T. P. Cooke's performances, about a week hence, and continue up to Christmas—opening with the "Flowers of the Forest," and the "Rough Diamond." The interior of the British capital, and the neighbourhood from St. John's Wood to Oxford Terrace are under no small obligations to the lessee for his unceasing energy in catering for them. The Keeleys, Mr. Hudson, T. P. Cooke, and Mrs. Fitzwilliam cannot be overpraised; and all the pieces in which these popular artistes have played have been in every respect as well mounted as when originally produced. The secret of management success is not always to be found in the quality of the pieces which flock to any theatre at which they can make certain to be amused, or, besides, as an evident desire on the part of the management to treat them liberally. If this feeling does not exist, as all the conventional newspaper paragraphs to the world, nor self-glorification at the top of the playbills, will fill the house

Mr Leigh Murray, we are sorry to say, has been seriously indisposed, and has not been able to appear at the PRINCE OF WALES'S THEATRE can fill spare him, and we shall rejoice to hear of his speedy convalescence

The SURREY Theatre is undergoing a complete renovation. A new stage is to be laid down in a few days, being painted by Messrs. Grieve and Telbin, and the auditory will be made exceedingly beautiful as well as convenient. It will open on December 2.

THE QUEEN AND PRINCE ALBERT IN THE COURT OF CHANCERY. The piracy of some etchings executed by her Majesty and the Prince Consort has the cause of this extraordinary occurrence. These drawings, or etchings, or copies of them, it seems, have been abstracted from the palace without authority They were taken to a publisher in Paternoster-row, who proceeded to advertise them for publication, with a "descriptive catalogue," but the Royal artists have resolved to take proceedings to restrain the individual in question from proceeding with his threatened publication. Prince Albert has made the necessary affidavit, the subjoin an abstract of it: The deponent describes himself as "Albert, Prince of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha, Consort of her Majesty the Queen," and maketh oath and saith: "That he hath looked through the printed 'A Descriptive Catalogue of the Royal Victoria and Albert Gallery of Etchings.' That there are such etchings made by her Majesty and himself respectively as therein mentioned—that the same were made for the private use of her Majesty and himself, and not for publication. That they had a private press, from which they occasionally took impressions of the etchings; and that the plates were and are kept locked up by her Majesty, in order that the same might not be published; but that copies are left in some of the private apartments, and in such private apartments only. That there are various family portraits and etchings, and copies of rare engravings in the collection of her Majesty, and several from such original designs as in this catalogue mentioned, and that amongst such etchings are several portraits of he Princess Royal, and many others of the personal friends of her Majesty, as the deponent is speaking positively for himself, and to the best of his belief for her Majesty, that no such collection as that advertised for exhibition was ever given away by them or either of them, or by their or either of their permission. That no such collection could have been formed, except by impressions surreptitiously and improperly obtained, and believes that the defendant is in person or persons in the possession of the collection advertised for exhibition, must have obtained, and did obtain the same from some person or persons surreptitiously. That, by whatever means the same were obtained, the exhibition of the said etchings, or any of them, is wit out the sanction, and against the wishes of her Majesty and deponent, and believes that such catalogue could not have been compiled or made except by possession of the several impressions of the said etchings so surreptitiously obtained. That the deponent's first knowledge of the existence of such Catalogue of Etchings was on the 11th October instant, when it was given to deponent by G. E. Anson, Esq., as a parcel which had been left at the palace, directed to her Majesty, and opened by him as her privy purse, and deponent there y learnt for the first time that it was intended to submit them to public exhibition; and he believes on such occasion, and at the same time, her Majesty first became aware of the existence of such catalogue, and deponent immediately desired the said G. E Anson, Esq., to write for privy council office of Majesty on the subject." Upon this affidavit an injunction has been granted to restrain the publisher in question from proceeding further in the business. It is said that, in a legal point of view, the application is a new one. The case of pirated drawings not intended for publication does not appear to have come before the courts in any previous instance The new case to it in which an injunction has been granted was where the application was to restrain the publication by a piratical bookseller of Archdeacon Paley's MS sermons after his death.

An account of the Duty on Hops of the growth of the year 1848, for the undermentioned districts, distinguishing the old duty from the new duty:—Kent, £168 18s. 4½d.; Hants, £15,273 2s. 6d.; Hereford, £22,739 2s. 1½d.; Lincoln, £1891 13s. 11½d., Oxford, £20 19s. 9½d.; Surrey, £.20 14s. 9d.—total £40,960 18s. 6½d. This total is made up of 9 d duty at 1 13-20d. per lb., £32,747 10s. 3½d. 16 20d.; new duty at 2 8-20, £16,436 os 6 4 20d.; and additional duty 5 per cent. per act 3 Vic., c. 17, £.932 19s. 8½d The returns from the remainder of the districts will be published as soon as received.—S. S. LANE, Accountant-general.—Excise-office, London, October 31, 1848.

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

The Chamber of Commerce of Manchester has addressed a memorial to the Committee of Privy Council for Affairs of Trade and Plantations, protesting against the transfer of Vancouver's Island to the Hudson's Bay Company

The Bishop of Gloucester will hold an ordination in the Cathedral Church of Bristol, on Dec. 24.

Captain Swynney, of the 63rd Regiment, on last Saturday morning, destroyed himself, in his apartment, at No. 8, Cecil-street, Strand. A regimental sword was lying by him, the point of which was covered with blood, having been forced by him into his side. A surgeon was sent for, but the unfortunate gentleman expired before his arrival.

The commission de clémence, instituted in Paris for the revision of the cases of the prisoners of June, ordered to be transported by the military commission, has terminated its labours. Out of 3600 cases submitted to it, the commission have resolved that 965 of the transported shall forthwith be recommended to the clemency of the chief of the Executive Government. A second revision is to be made at a later period; and the number of the transported, whose case is will be fixed at a maximum of ten years, will amount to about 1700.

Macdonald, the marine, who was tried in July last by court-martial at Portsmouth for striking Captain Baynes, of the Belleorphon, on the quarter-deck, and sentenced to transportation for life, has received a most gracious pardon. The court-martial followed close upon the investigation that had taken place before one of the Lords of the Admiralty respecting the discipline of the Bellerophon, and there seemed no doubt that the prisoner had committed the crime in a fit of desirair

The Hon. Charles Wm. Wentworth-Fitzwilliam, youngest son of Earl Fitzwilliam, was offered himself as a candidate for the representation of the West Riding of Yorkshire, in the room of Lord Morpeth, now Earl of Carlisle.

The administration of the French Post-office has published a notice, that the uniform rate for letters not exceeding 7½ grammes in weight will come into operation on 1st January next. Pre-payment will be voluntary, and postage stamps similar to those in England, but bearing the head of the figure of Liberty, will be prepared.

The returns of the French customs duties collected in September last amounted to 8,733,554 francs, or 2,121,286 less than in the corresponding month of 1847. The customs produced during the nine months of 1848, ending on the 1st of October, 62,826,190 francs, showing a diminution as compared with 1847 of 37,021,154 francs.

The Committee of the French National Assembly on Legislation, in its report on the question of arrest for debt, recommends that the old law be maintained, but with considerable modifications with respect to arrest in civil, commercial, and criminal matters

Twelve Sisters of Charity are about to embark at Brest, to found an establishment at Honolulu, the capital of the Sandwich Islands, by invitation from King Kamoueua III.

Importations of potatoes have lately taken place from France and Belgium, of the most extensive character

The Moniteur publishes a decree of General Cavaignac, commanding that the system laid down for placing signal-lights during the night, practised on board the steamers of the military navy of France, be likewise adopted by the commercial steamers. The system referred to is the one rendered compulsory in the British navy by the act of the 25th June, 1848.

David Power, Esq., of the Norfolk Circuit, is appointed Recorder of Ipswich.

Captain Malet is to be the Deputy Governor of Millbank Penitentiary, to succeed Mr. Laurence, appointed to the post of Governor

On Thursday morning, last week, about four o'clock, the three powder-mills at Sedgewick, near Kendal, were totally destroyed by an explosion; the report was heard at a distance of 40 miles, and mistaken for thunder. Fortunately no person was present, so that no lives were lost. The mills were the property of Messrs. Wakefield, of Kendal

The proprietors of the Dundee Advertiser, after a trial of three years, have found it necessary to advance the price of their journal selling papers for less than cost price not having answered their purpose.

On Thursday morning, last week, James M'Whelan was executed at Ayr for the murder of a young lad named James Young, at Forty Acres, near Annanwater, by wretchedly pushing all two or three days before his death, exhibited a very unsatisfactory state of mind, and only the day before could be brought to make a simple admission that he was guilty of the murder

On Saturday, about four o'clock in the afternoon, a little boy, about five years old, son of Mr. John Geech, a roper at Padstow, near Plymouth, when playing in his father's rope-walk, fell into a furnace of boiling tar. His companions ran for help, but the flames and fumes from the tar, when he was taken out, but so dreadfully scalded that he died after twelve hours' suffering.

Out of the three thousand two hundred Paris insurgents transported, there are no less than one hundred and fifty artists, or about one-twe.fth of the whole. Whilst every nation is represented amongst them, there is not one Englishman nor even an Irishman

With praiseworthy liberality, the Marquis of Bute has lent his noble collection of pictures for ten years to the Royal Scottish Academy—a valuable boon to Scottish artists

On Monday, an inquest was held on the body of Daniel Rogers, aged 57, a respectable and steady young man, a compositor, in the employ of Messrs. Cowes, printers, of Duke-street, Westminster, who, during a paroxysm of insanity, the result of intense grief for the death of his wife. Verdict accordingly.

On Friday (se'nnight), at Brilley, in Herefordshire, a wretched drunkard, named Jones, murdered his wife. He was partially intoxicated; and on attempting to go out to obtain more liquor, and finding that his wife had locked the door, he suddenly seized a heavy piece of wood and beat out her brains by repeated blows. The murderer was secured the same day

On Monday an inquest was held on the body of James Orpwood, aged forty years, who was formerly in an affluent position, and was the owner of a very large drug establishment in the metropolis. He failed in business, and having become addicted to drinking, his mind became affected, and he cut his throat with a razor. Verdict, "Temporary Insanity"

On Tuesday, the engine of the Caledonian express down-train ran off the line at the curve, about half a mile south of the Weedon station on the London and North-Western Railway. Four of the carriages were drawn off the rails; the two last, with the guard's break, remained on. The carriages were dreadfully shattered, but it stated that none of the passengers were injured except two who received slight contusions. The driver and fireman were severely scalded

During the last few days accounts have been received at Lloyd's of the loss of several vessels. The Free Trader, for Cork, from St. John's, New Brunswick; a Hamburg emigrant ship, for New York, with 122 passengers; and the Nicholson, bound for London with a general cargo. The captain, his wife, and three seamen belonging to the latter vessel were drowned. Twelve other seamen were saved by the brig Anderson. Three or four vessels have been reported as wrecked during the late gales, but fortunately without loss of life in any instance.

Tenpenny Postage Stamps have been issued for sale. They will be sold for the present only at St. Martin's-le-Grand and the branch offices in London, Edinburgh, Glasgow, Charing-cross, and the offices in Aldersgate, and Dublin, and at about 100 of the principal country offices in England, Scotland, and Ireland. The tenpenny stamps are, in shape and size, like the shilling postage stamps, but they are of a red colour.

The states of the Zollverein are understood to have consented to the admission of British goods free from additional duties, provided they are accompanied by certificates from the British Government has intimated attention of re mbursing the additional duties already paid on British merchandise imported with proper certificates, and of inviting the other states of the Zollverein to adopt the same course.

Sir William Fiholes, Bart., has been elected Chairman of the Norfolk Estuary Company, vice Lord George Bentinck, deceased.

A new church is about to be erected in Bernal-green, dedicated to St. Thomas. An ecclesiastical district has already been assigned to it, and the Rev. Wm. Kerry, M.A., will be the officiating minister Sir Wm. Colebrooke, the new Governor-General of the Windward Islands, has arrived at Barbadoes.

A reciprocal arrangement has been made between France and Russia, whereby the vessels of both nations will be allowed the privileges of nations in the respective ports of the two countries, and compelled into Russia in French bottoms will be admitted without the necessity of the usual certificate of origin.

Cattle from Stockholm, of the 20th of October, announce that London and the other ports on the Thames, as also Sunderland and Leith, and the whole of the Larbours in the Frith of Forth, and all other Scotch ports, are classed in the Quarantine regulations as suspected of being infected with cholera

The valleys of the Sour and of the Trent have been for some days flooded to a great depth; and the Fen district, in Norfolk and Lincolnshire, has presented a similar appearance. There have been also inundations in and around the county

A young man, in passing through one of the roads at the west end of the town of Ashburton, last week, perceived a couple of hawks in the hedgerow in full combat; he immediately took off his coat and put it on them, and secured both without injury. They have since been kindly fixed in each other, that eventually one must have fallen a victim to his antagonist

The Rev. W. Cotton, chaplain to the Bishop of Australia, has offered to give the annual sermon in aid of St. Nicholas Church and schools, Great Yarmouth, on condition that the remaining deficiency be raised by the parish

A few days since, a fine whale, 30 feet long and 13 feet in girth, was taken in the Humber, having been left on the shore by the receding tide. It was brought down to Hull, and conveyed to one of the Greenland boiling yards.

The last intelligence from India this week mentions two shipwrecks near Calcutta—that of the Belvedo, from Glasgow, which ran upon the Roof Head and was totally lost, and that of the John Wood, from Calcutta for Mauritius, which went on shore on False Bay, and, it was hoped, might be got off by the aid of a steamer. In the latter vessel the carpenter alone was lost, in the second all hands have been saved.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

PUBLIC MEETINGS.

PEACE CONGRESS IN LONDON.

On Tue day evening a meeting of the friends of peace was held at Exeter Hall, to receive M. Visschers, Councillor to the Belgian Government; M. Franciscus Bricet, member of the French National Assembly; Baron Sirtema Grovestins, of Holland; Elihu Burritt, Esq., of the United States; and Wm. Ewart, Esq., M.P., the President and Vice-Presidents of the late Peace Congress at Brussels. C. Hindley, Esq., M.P., occupied the chair. The vast hall was crowded in every corner, and the platform was filled with the more prominent advocates of the cause, among whom were Dr. Bowring, M.P.; Dr. Lee, of Aylesbury; J. Sharps, Esq., of Birmingham; H. Clapp, Esq., of the United States; G. W. Alexander, Esq., of London; Professor Hoppus; T. Krag, of Christiania, Norway; Lord Beresford; Sir W. Lawson, Bart.; Dr. Newton, &c. Messrs. Bowyer and Sturgeon were unavoidably absent. A French National Guard who had taken his seat on a back bench, was, on being perceived by the meeting, loudly welcomed forward to a chair on the first step of the platform, and there again enthusiastically cheered.

The Chairman opened the proceedings by a brief address, in which he stated that the present meeting had originated in the important Peace Congress we had lately been host at Brussels, a deputation from which congress was now in England, for the purpose of co-operating with the friends of peace in this country in the great object it was so essential to establish, the remission of that hole curse—the Saviour of mankind had come to declare—"Peace on earth, goodwill among men."

Mr. Scoble having detailed the proceedings of the Peace Congress at Brussels, observed that its principles were making way throughout the civilised world. Before the Congress assembled at Brussels, there had been forwarded to it letters from Italy, from Germany, from France, from Schleswig, from Holstein, from all parts of Europe, entirely concurring in the object of the Congress.

W. Bowley, Esq., of Gloucester, moved the first resolution, as follows:—

That this meeting cannot but express a deep sense of the importance of the recent Congress at Brussels, and of the opinions and principles which were therein enunciated, particularly its gratitude to God for the many mercy and wisdom which characterised its entire proceedings; and it feels with delight the presence of M. Visschers, who with the various Presidents, contributed so largely to give effect to the deliberations of that Assembly.

Dr. Bowring, in seconding the resolution, remarked upon the late visit of the French National Guards as one of the most splendid incidents that any other to bring about friendly and brotherly feeling between the people of the two nations, and consequently as a security for the maintenance of peace. (Hear, hear.) War was the invention of every thing that was detestable. The greatest conquests were not those of the sword, but of peace. (Cheers.) It was gratifying to see the progress of pacific principles amongst nations. Every day brought new testimonies, and fresh importance had been attempted: the only interference we had offered, was to express our hope that permanent liberty, permanent happiness, and permanent peace might be the result. He rejoiced at the presence of his friend on the part of French magistrates in the garb of the National Guard—who had come here to study our institutions. Nations had much to learn from each other. He (Dr. Bowring) had seen much to admire in France, and very much to admire in Belgium, where the people, he thought, exercised more than any others the highest office of man the benefit of mankind (Cheers.) Not long ago, Brussels was the scene of a Peace Congress; afterwards, it witnessed the advancement of prison discipline; and this year, the same Belgium had welcomed those who had gone thither from all parts of the world to discuss the means by which peace between all nations could be established on a permanent and unchangeable foundation. He cordially seconded the resolution.

The resolution having been put and carried unanimously, the Chairman introduced

M. Visschers, who was most cordially received, and addressed the meeting in French, his observations—which were frequently applauded—being translated into English by Dr. Bowring.

Messrs. Ewart, M.P., and Burritt also spoke

G. W. Alexander, Esq., a member of the Society of Friends, moved the second resolution as follows:—

That permanent and universal peace is the only condition that can fully develop the principles of Christianity, civilisation, and commerce; that such a condition is the normal state of the movement of mankind, and we therefore regard with the highest satisfaction all moral movement of mankind, and we therefore regard with the highest satisfaction all moral movement of mankind, and we therefore regard with the highest satisfaction all moral upon he assumed their surname, by Royal license. Paternally, he descended from the ancient house of Fownes, of Saxby, and afterwards of Whitley and Nethway, Devon; and maternally, from the old Scottish line of Somerville, now represented by Lord Somerville. The venerable gentleman, who, at the period of his decease, had nearly completed his ninth year, married, 17th February, 1800, Frances, second daughter of William Hyett, Esq., of Bowringsleigh, Devon, and by her (who died 24th July, 1821) had issue two sons and three daughters: of the former, the elder, William Henry Fownes, of Balliol College, Oxford, died unmarried in 1838; and the younger, the present James Carta Somerville, Esq., of Dinder House, has succeeded his father, and is a Barrister of the Middle Temple.

THE VERNON GALLERY.

SIR HENRY WILMOT SETON, KT.

Sir Henry Seton died on the 26th of July last, on board of the Earl of Dalhousie, on his return from Calcutta to England. The learned gentleman was called to the bar in 1809, and received in 1826 the appointment of Judge of the Supreme Court at Calcutta. On that occasion he was knighted.

THE LATE HON. AND REV. DR. WELLESLEY.

THE HON. AND REV. GERALD VALERIAN WELLESLEY, D.D.

In our last Number we gave a memoir of this venerable divine, with particulars of his family and ancestry. The following details will complete the biographical sketch:—After the usual University course, in which he did not attain any particular distinction, Dr Wellesley took orders, and became subsequently Rector of Chelsea. In 1827 he was presented by the Bishop of Durham to the rich Living of Bishopwearmouth, and to a prebendal stall in the Cathedral. He held, besides, the appointments of Chaplain to Hampton Court Palace, and Chaplain in Ordinary to the Queen. Although thus of a "pluralist," Dr. Wellesley was not greedy of preferment: if he had been, no one could for a moment doubt that his family interest might have secured him the highest promotion in the Church. When the Duke of Wellington became Prime Minister, it was universally supposed that he would elevate his brother to a bishopric; but his grace deemed it literally all sufficient.

Dr Wellesley has left seven children—of his daughters, the eldest, Emily, married, in 1834, the Hon. and Rev. Robert Liddell, Vicar of Barking, in Essex; the second, Georgiana, became the wife of the Rev. George Darby St. Quintin; the third, Mary, married her cousin, Lord Chelsea; and the fourth, Cecil, is the wife of the Hon. George Augustus Liddell.

Beyond these few brief notes, there is nothing to record of the deceased gentleman, who did not court publicity at any period of his life, and for many years had resigned himself to the quiet and unpretending discharge of the easy duties attached to his prebendal stall. "In himself," says a local journal, "he presented no points of interest to the public; but his death so far inspires regret and suggests reflection, as that he was one of the few remaining links between the past and present contemporaries of his illustrious brother."

The accompanying Portrait is the fac-simile of a pen-and-ink sketch, by a Durham Correspondent.

THE VERNON COLLECTION.

When Mr. Wilkins was examined before a Parliamentary Committee, many years since, as to the capaciousness of the proposed National Gallery, he replied, somewhat over confidently, that very many years would elapse ere it would be filled with pictures. The Professor of Architecture did not, however, in all probability, calculate upon the Royal Academy taking possession of one wing of the building: nor did he reckon upon a long posterity; for, within little more than ten years from the building of the Gallery, its walls have been found insufficient for the bequests and purchases which individual munificence and Government consideration have added to the nucleus of the National Collection.

Our readers are already acquainted with Mr. Vernon's splendid present to the country, in transferring his entire collection of pictures to the National Gallery. It might reasonably have been expected that so precious a gift would have induced the Government to have provided a fitting place for their reception. Already Mr. Wilkins's prediction was falsified: there was no room for the Vernon pictures in the National Gallery, and they were accordingly, for a time, exhibited at the home of the princely donor, in Pall-Mall.

The rush incidental to a gratuitous sight was, however, strangely inimical to the quiet of the mansion of a private gentleman, we regret to add, in ill health; and, accordingly, after much difficulty, a sort of temporary location has been found for the Collection in the Trafalgar-square premises.

The provision is strange enough—in the basement of the west wing of the gallery, in a suite of small rooms built for servants' offices. The descent is on the right hand of the flight of steps leading to the "National Gallery." Upon these walls hang the Vernon pictures! Some alteration has been made in the windows, but the admission of light is in some instances so distressing as to destroy the picture it glares upon; whilst, in other instances, a painting is hung upon a pier between two windows, which pour a flood of light into either eye, and blind you to the picture.

From a large picture by Hilton, anomalous as the complaint may seem, you cannot get far enough off to see it! A splendid water-colour subject is hung in a dark passage, and is only saved from obscurity by its own extraordinary brilliancy. It would, however, be tedious in detail all the disadvantages under which these pictures must be seen until a proper receptacle is provided for them: the infelicitously of light was never more unsparingly evident than in the havoc it plays with these triumphs of art.

Yet the Collection itself is, in one sense, far more National than that in the apartments above; it is exclusively of our own country, and a proud evidence it is of the rapid growth of the English school.

The Gallery was opened to the public on Monday week, and, as might be expected, has proved very attractive. The days of exhibition are the same as those of the National Gallery.

Our Artist has sketched the principal room, with Hilton's magnificent picture in the centre. Around hang portraits by Reynolds, Gainsborough, Hoppner, Jackson, and others. Here, too, are fine pictures by Briggs, Collins, Maclise, Landseer, Lance, Etty, &c.

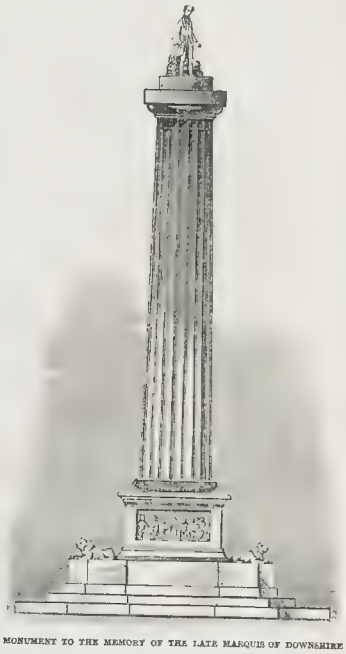
DOWNSHIRE TESTIMONIAL, AT HILLSBOROUGH.

[illegible] week, the foundation of this monument, to perpetuate the memory of the late lamented Marquis of Downshire, was laid with great ceremony. The site has been most happily chosen, being an eminence, west of the town, near the place known as Basin-hill, and immediately opposite the princely residence of the Downshire family. The prospect is very delightful; it seems a vast natural amphitheatre formed of lofty mountains, bounding on the right and left the flourishing counties of Antrim and Down.

The ceremony was altogether an imposing scene, and was attended by the leading personages of the neighbourhood. The stone was laid by the venerable Earl of Roden; after which, the benediction was pronounced by Archdeacon Mant, and the Marquis of Downshire then thanked the noble Earl and the assemblage for the mark of their kindness which he and his family had just received.

The flags on the ground, which, to this time, had remained half-staff high, were now raised, which was the signal for the bells to send forth a merry peal. Three cheers were then given for the Marquis of Downshire, as well as in honour of the Marchioness of Downshire, the Dowager Marchioness of Downshire, the Earl of Roden, and Lady Edwin Hall, and the assemblage separated.

The column to be erected will be eighty-three feet ten inches in height, and of the Grecian Doric order. The design was originally drawn by the late Robert Law Montserrat, Esq., and, since his death, adopted, with a few alterations, by the present architects, Messrs. Darley and Montgomery, of Dublin. The task of superintending the building has been entrusted to Mr. Nathaniel Montgomery. The builder is Mr. James Archer, of Caledon, whose tasteful erection of a similar column to the memory of the Earl of Caledon has been so generally admired.



MONUMENT TO THE MEMORY OF THE LATE MARQUIS OF DOWNSHIRE

MR. JOHN REEVE.

We last week noticed the début of this gentleman at the Lyceum Theatre; and we now give his Portrait, with a short biographical sketch, which may not be uninteresting to our play-going readers.

The father of our young actor—the renowned "John Reeve," of glorious memory—was the son of a draper on Ludgate-hill, and nephew to Alderman Waithman. Mr. John Reeve (senior), first brought up behind his father's counter, was transferred to the house of Neville and Co., of Wood-street, wholesale hosiers, and afterwards to Gosling's, the bankers, in Fleet-street, in which house he lived at the time of his first appearance at the old English Opera-House, in the character of Sylvester Daggerwood. It was during one of his provincial tours, that, at the age of nineteen, he married a sweet young actress—an amiable and affectionate girl, who died one year afterwards, giving birth to the subject of the present sketch, at Swansea, in South Wales. She was so much beloved and regretted, that the inhabitants of the town erected a monument, with a long poetical inscription, to her memory.

MR. JOHN REEVE, OF THE LYCEUM THEATRE.

The present Mr. John Reeve is, therefore, a Welshman, although he did not remain in Swansea beyond a few days, and has never been into Wales since. He was brought up to the business of his grandfather, at first under the house of Flits and Everington, in St. Paul's Churchyard. Mr. Everington, sen., was Mr. Waithman's partner: this introduced him to the connexion, and many were the jokes elicited from him in his capacity as head of the "Rag Department," as he always termed the handkerchief warehouse. From here he went to the house of Neville and Co.—also "like his father before him"—but soon deserted the City for the stage. Seeing that he was so much inclined to follow his father's career, and believing him to be well fortified, from his father's example, against the temptations that assail the life of an actor, his uncle, Mr. Lovell Reeve, a gentleman of eminence in the scientific world, and the author of some valuable works on conchology, took his case in hand, and succeeded in reconciling his friends and relations to the change he had so long meditated.

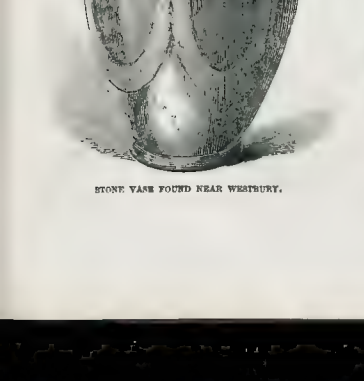
His first experiment was made at at a private performance during Lent, at the Adelphi, February 3, 1845, as Bill Downey, in the "Unfinished Gentleman." Since then he has been studying and working in the country: he played one night last year at the Haymarket, for Mr. Buckstone's benefit, and subsequently, for a week, at the Surrey, for the sake of obliging that gentleman.

It is gratifying to add, that we can speak advisedly in the highest terms of his integrity and excellent disposition. He is said to have more natural humour than his father at his age. He has an excellent ear for music—plays ad libitum on the pianoforte, although he never had a lesson, and is expected to do great things with songs. One of our contemporaries recently paid him the compliment of saying that his song was Parry acting! Our Artist has sketched him in his already famous "Country Fair."

Since our last notice, Mr. John Reeve has felt more at home at the Lyceum, and gives his humour more unrestrained play, eliciting peals of laughter and applause from the audience. He was evidently nervous about putting forth all his fun on the night of his début. Indeed, it is scarcely fair to form any opinion, from a first night's performance, either of a piece or an actor.

INTERESTING DISCOVERY NEAR WESTBURY, WILTS.

On the 20th ultimo, as some labourers were digging a field in the vicinity of the Great Western Railway, about a mile from Westbury, they discovered, at three feet below the surface, a leaden coffin, which, on examination, was found to contain a skeleton. Under each arm was a small stone vase, the size and form of the accompanying Engraving, which has been sketched from the original by Miss Margaret Wilkins. Fragments of an ornamented cup were also contained in the coffin, but too much broken for the shape or use to be ascertained.



STONE VASE FOUND NEAR WESTBURY.

REMAINS OF THE PRIORY OF ST. GREGORY, AT CANTERBURY.

Appointments under the Public Health Act.—Various towns having already presented petitions for the application of the Public Health Act to their respective localities, the General Board of Health have appointed four civil engineers to be superintending inspectors, to commence the preliminary inquiries prescribed by the Act. The gentlemen selected to fulfil the responsible duties of the office are Messrs. G. T. Clark, E. Cresy, R. Rawlinson, and W. Ranger. Mr. Clark has served much in England and in India, where he has been engaged in drainage works. Mr. Cresy is the author of the "Encyclopædia of Civil Engineering," and gave valuable evidence before the Metropolitan Sanatory Commission. Mr. Rawlinson, formerly engineer to the Bridgewater Trust, has been employed in works of sanatory improvement in several of the northern towns. Mr. Ranger has directed drainage works in Essex, and is lecturer on civil engineering at the Royal Engineer Establishment at Chatham, and at the Putney College.

The Patented Electric Light.—A number of experiments, demonstrative of the properties of this new light, were given on Monday evening in the Hanover-square Rooms, by Mr. W. E. Staite, the patentee. The company consisted for the most part of scientific men assembled by especial invitation; and it must have been gratifying to Mr. Staite to receive such unequivocal testimony as was spontaneously and heartily rendered to the success of his practical demonstrations. The light, in addition to its sun-light brilliancy, possesses several properties which have been hitherto much desiderated: it is permanent, self-regulating, perfectly safe, pure, and cheap. It is not supported by combustion, as was shown by its burning under a glass shade fixed down to a metal plate so as to exclude the external air; and what is also of importance, it will burn as brilliantly under water as under a glass or in the open air. The light exhibited, although only occupying the space of an argand burner, and not evolving more than its heat, gave a light equal to seven or eight hundred wax candles. A ray directed to some pictures placed at one end of the room brought out the most delicate tints with the distinctness of daylight. Altogether, the effect upon the lamps and candles which were burning in the room was like that which is felt when daylight bursts into a room where artificial light happens to be burning. The expense of a light equal to a hundred wax candles is estimated at a penny per hour. The fluid which sustained the light exhibited by Mr. Staite was supplied by a cast-iron battery of forty-four plates, with a zinc surface equal to one and a quarter square yards. Means are to be taken, by public lectures and otherwise, to bring the properties and advantages of the interesting discovery fairly before the public.

ST. GREGORY'S PRIORY, AT CANTERBURY.

The city of Canterbury is about to lose a group of its monastic glories—the relics of the Priory of Saint Gregory, which were sold, for the purpose of pulling down, a few days since. They are situated on the high road leading to the Isle of Thanet; a considerable portion of the building is standing, though much changed from its original appearance. One of the best features is a fine old doorway at the back of the building, opening into the burial-ground of the fraternity.

The history of the foundation is briefly as follows:—When Archbishop Lanfranc built the Hospital at Canterbury, which he dedicated to St. John, he erected on the opposite side of the road a church and priory, which he dedicated to St. Gregory; he then supplied it with monks, styled Regular or Black Canons, of the order of St. Augustine, and appointed them to minister to the spiritual wants of the brothers and sisters of the Hospital opposite.

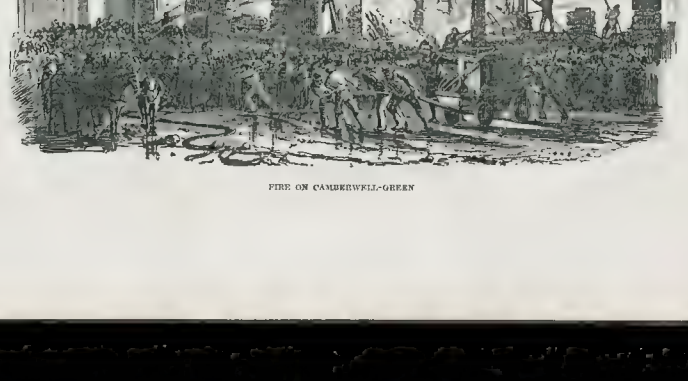
At the Dissolution, there were 13 brethren in the Priory, and the revenue, according to Dugdale, was £121 15s. 1d. It was then granted to the Archbishop of Canterbury, and has since been sold and let to various persons. In the reign of Elizabeth, the priory house was the mansion of Sir John Boys: it has, however, for many years, been in decay; and one of its "base uses" has been as a manufactory of tobacco-pipes. The precincts of the Priory are still called "The Ville of St. Gregory."

Our Sketch will, at least, be the means of preserving from oblivion one of the memorials of the pious zeal of Lanfranc, who, it will be recollected, proved a great benefactor to the church of Canterbury, by asserting its right to the primacy of England, by recovering many of its possessions, and by rebuilding the Cathedral

FIRE AT CAMBERWELL.

On Saturday morning last, shortly after one o'clock, a fire was discovered in an empty house, communicating with another dwelling-house on the same estate with Messrs. Fleming's brewery, on Camberwell-green. An immediate alarm was given, but in a few minutes the flames had communicated to the brewery itself. On the arrival of engines, the greater portion of the brewery was found to be on fire, and three or four of the houses on the Green were fiercely burning at the back, threatening destruction to the whole range of premises on that part of the ground. Owing to an inadequate supply of water, the flames baffled the efforts of the firemen to master them; several houses were much injured; and in less than two hours after the first discovery, every building connected with the brewery was destroyed. The loss is considerable. How the fire originated, is not precisely known; but, from circumstances known only to Mr Fleming, he felt himself justified in giving a person into the custody of the police on a charge of having wilfully set the premises on fire. Some particulars on this point will be found in our Lambeth Police report.

Mr. Fleming's premises are stated to have been totally insured. Among the uninsured sufferers by the fire are Messrs. Branch and Co., whose stabling and stock, besides two valuable hunters, household furniture, &c., were burnt.



FIRE ON CAMBERWELL-GREEN

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"S. L." Equally faulty, and as devoid of constructive skill. In the solution of the first, you make White play his Kt to Q. B 5th, on grass of the adverse King, who, by taking it, can escape, at once, from all danger of checkmate.

"W. H. L."—Try the Grand Divan, in the Strand, or Goode's Divan, on Ludgate-hill.

"M. M.," Haddenham—We cannot see how mate can be effected in No. 248 under six moves, if Black play properly.

"S. Pain."—The game appears to us quite right. Black at his 18th move takes the Q Bishop with his Rook (ch), if, then, White take the Rook with the Q. Black retakes with his K Bishop; and if, instead of taking with the Q, he take the Rook with K B P, mate evidently ensues next move.

"Sesso."—Mr. Waller's ingenious variations on the Evans Gambit commenced in the Chess Players' Chronicle for September, and are to be continued.

"Carlo Fokero."—It shall be examined.

"Sever."—Too feeble, and incorrect besides

"J. T."—Black can delay the mate by checking with his Kt at the first move.

"Rex Mosa."—The last appears of No. 61 is better; but what a cumbrous array of pieces for so small a purpose! Why not direct your attention to the construction of a Problem bearing some resemblance to the termination of an actual game? There is more merit, and more difficulty, too—though young players don't think it—in the invention of a skilful position of this kind, where the mate cannot be protracted beyond three or four moves, than in twenty fantastic stratagems in which the game is to be won only by the Bishop or the Knight.

"Honorary Secretary."—An analysis of the American variation of the "B's" Gambit, by Von der Lasa, is announced for the forthcoming Number of the Chess-Players' Chronicle. The attention to question was first published in an American paper, and has subsequently engaged the attention of all the best players in Europe. The author was Mr. Schulten, of New York.

"Maximilian."—We doubt if the power of playing without sight of the Chess-board can be taught; but recommend an application to Mr. Harrwitz, of the London Chess Club.

"Chess-nut."—We have not read the epistle in question, nor is it necessary. If Mr. Lowe had any serious intentions of putting his pretensions to the test, he would gladly have accepted Mr. S's. proposal to give him the Pawn and two moves, for any stake from 100 to 20 guineas. The sensing counter-challenges in the face of this is only an evasion of the real debt.

"P. M."—Halifax, Nova Scotia.—It is easy, but not without merit, and shall have a place among the Enigmas

"B. M. P."—In the game mentioned neither party can boast of much advantage, but we should take the Black side for choice

"R. E."—Your letter may have miscarried.

"A. W. B." Next week

"T. B." Kingston. The Secretary of the Brighton Chess Club will readily furnish you with a copy of their rules.

"Inquisitor" is desirous of knowing whether it is possible so to dispose the White men on the Chess-board that the Black King could occupy no square without going into check

"C. E."—There are very many better works on the game Get either the "Hand-book," published by Bohn, or Lewis' "First Series of Lessons."

Solutions by "M. P.," "H. E. A.," "The Rev. T. B.," "H. K. F.," "F. G. R.," "Sopracitta." "G. A. H." "Carlo Fokero." "C. C. B." "B. M. P.," "H. H." "Rev. A. G. W." "Rev. W. T." "W. L.," "M. Ustoff." "C. F.," "J. R." "F. B. S.," "Omega," "Theta," "Otho," "Cæsar," "Bath Dun," "Tonbridge Tyro," are correct. Thanks by "Ferdinand," "A. B. A." "G. C." "The Liverpool Trio," are wrong.

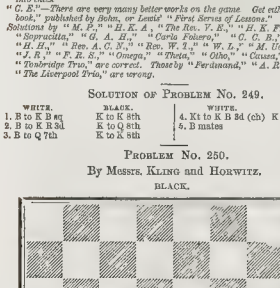
SOLUTION OF PROBLEM No. 249.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
1. B to K B sq	K to K 6th	4. Kt to K B 3d (ch)	K to B 5th or
2. B to K B 3d	K to Q 5th	5. B mates	to Q 5th
3. B to Q 7th	K to K 5th

PROBLEM No. 250.

By MESSRS. KLING and HORWITZ.

BLACK.



WHITE.

White, playing first, mates in four moves.

MATCH BY CORRESPONDENCE,

BETWEEN THE CHESS CLUBS OF LONDON AND AMSTERDAM.

WHITE (Amsterdam). BLACK (London).

1. P to K 4th	1. P to K 4th
2. Kt to Q B 3d	2. Kt to Q B 3d
3. B to Q Kt 5th	3. P to Q R 3d
4. B to Q R 4th	4. Kt to B 3d
5. P to Q 4th	5. P takes P
6. Kt to K 5th	6. Kt to Q 4th
7. B to K 3d	7. P to Q B 4th
8. Kt to K B 3d	8. P to K 3d
9. Castles	9. B to K 2d
10. P to K 5th	10. Kt to K sq
11. P to Q 4th	11. P takes P
12. Kt to Q B 3d	12. B to K 3d
13. Kt to K 4th	13. Castles
14. Kt to Q 6th	14. B takes Kt
15. P takes B	15. Kt to Q 2d
16. Q to K 2d	16. P to Q B 5th
17. Q to K R 6th	17. Kt to K B 3d
18. Q to K R 5th	18. Kt to K 5th
19. Q takes Kt	19. P takes Q
20. Kt to K 6th (ch)	20. K to Kt sq
21. Kt takes R	21. Q to K 2d
22. Kt to K 6th (a)	22. Q to K 5th
23. Kt to K B 5th	23. Q to K 2d
24. Kt to K 6th	24. Q to K 5th
25. Kt to K B 5th (b)	25. Q to K 2d
26. Kt to K 6th	26. Q to K 5th
27. Kt to K B 5th	27. Q to K 2d
28. Kt to K 6th	28. Q to K 5th
29. Kt to K B 5th	29. Q to K 2d
30. Kt to K 6th	30. Q to K 5th
31. Kt to Q Kt 5th	31. Q to K 2d
32. Kt to K B 2nd	32. Q to K 5th
33. Kt to Q B 3d	33. Q to K 2d
34. Kt to Q B 4th	34. Q to K 5th
35. Kt to K 3d (c)	35. Q to K 2d
36. Kt takes K	36. P takes Kt
37. Kt takes Q B P (d)	37. K takes Kt
38. R to B 7th (ch)	38. K to B 3d
39. R to Q 7th	39. P to Q 7th

And in a few moves White surrendered.

(a) Black is compelled to lose the exchange. (b) Well played.
(c) Threatening to gain the exchange by taking the Bishop with their Rook.
(d) Kt to K 3d would have been better play. (e) Prettily play. 1.
(f) The termination of this game is very cleverly conducted by Black.
(g) A fatal error. The only move apparently which offers a hope of successfully repelling Black's terrible attack is Kt to Q Kt 5d

(A) R to Q B 3d would have been better, we believe

CHESS ENIGMAS.

No. 380.—By MESSRS. KLING and HORWITZ

White: K at K Kt 3d, Q at K B 8th, R at K 8th, P at K B 5th.
Black: K at K Kt 4th; Ps at K R 2d, K Kt 3d, and K B 3d.
White to play, and mate in three moves.

No. 381.—By Mr. S. SOPER.

White: K at Q Kt 6th, Kts at K Kt 5th and Q 5th, Ps at K B 3d, K 2d and 4th.
Black: K at Q 4d; Ps at K B 4th and Q 2d
White to play, and mate in four moves.

No. 382.—By AMBULATOR

White: K at Q B 4th, R at K sq, Kts at K 3d and Q 5th; Ps at K Kt 4th, Q 3d, and Q B 5th.
Black: K at his 3d, B at K R 5th, Kt at Q 2d, P at K B 2d.
White to play, and mate in five moves.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

Mutat enim mundi, naturam totius ætas
* * * *
Nec manet ulla sui similis res.——

Beneath this starry arch
Nought changeless can be still;
But all things have their march
As I, my pen must still!
* * * *
Hurra! hurra! hurrah!—
On, on, for ever!

Life is progress. It is the activity of this eternal principle that makes the world we live in so full of it. Without it, where had been civilization and refinement? or what had been philosophy?

"The glory and the nothing of a name."

To the question of the Bard of Nature, "whom does time travel withal?" we answer, with all that is worthy of the name of Man, "Things to be built in Chancery." It journeyeth not, indeed, with an equal foot, or over the rough places as on the smooth; but if here and there, the pace, perforce, be slow, yet is it sure. Lo! within the current week, like another Columbus, Progress hath penetrated to the dominions wherein are bred "the Three Black Graces." As far removed from vulgar eyes as if their cradles had been rocked by the Cham of Tartary, or Prester John, Physic, and Divinity, hard by classic Cam summon to-day of the austerities of their youth, and of the grave customs of their maturer years. Herein did common report not depart from its popular attribute. The principle that went forth found the rift in a statute—a primeval barbarity. "The examinations for degrees," says the narrative, "are similar to those burlesques enacted on board of ships when they cross the Line." Such was sanctity in its earliest stage—such the rude type of the noble image ran." Progress will, no doubt, introduce the arrangements of civilization into this rude community . . . . As with science in its shrvsalis, so it is with its higher condition. Gas is said to be at the peep. Its substitute was exhibited the other evening at the Hanover-square Rooms; being a "candescent" warranted to make us independent of the sun, and so free from all inflammatory material, that the consumption of the same hath found the rifle in a state of primeval barbarity. "The examinations for degrees," says the narrative, "are similar to those burlesques enacted on board of ships when they cross the Line." Such was sanctity in its earliest stage—such the rude type of the noble image ran." Progress will, no doubt, introduce the arrangements of civilization into this rude community . . . . As with science in its shrvsalis, so it is with its higher condition. Gas is said to be at the peep. Its substitute was exhibited the other evening at the Hanover-square Rooms; being a "candescent" warranted to make us independent of the sun, and so free from all inflammatory material, that the consumption of the same hath found the rifle in a state of

No portion of the social machine is ever at rest. Now the political department throws off the largest share of produce—now the financial. Both have been very busy during the present season, with but one symptom that of ruling, which, while in progress, had frequent mention in these columns. It is all over with the practical part of the Turf for 1848. The predicament in which last year of grace planted, and left it, was a peculiar one. Gambling, to almost a fashions extent, prevailed in connexion with the great events of the course. The public ran into the "hells" as they do to have pocketsful of gold scrambled in the streets in the Golden Age, seeking to be devoured. Nothing exceeded the fleecing, but the demand to be plundered.

An idea of the hunger and thirst may be formed from a little "snack" prepared for the Liverpool Steeple-Chase—the bill of fare now before us, in scarlet and blue characters, announcing the prices to the tune of three-and thirty thousand pounds! Not a single "delicacy" in the whole round had arrived. We have seen their philanthropic offers to make the favourites for the Sweeps "safe," at prices low beyond all former example. Dacia could have been done (according to the proposal) for a "monkey" (500*l*.), and Bloomsbury Boy would give £50 for the name of the gentleman who proposed to officiate. Red Republicanism in politics; railway interest in finance; raising lotteries in sporting, are despotisms of change.

What shall come of the two first will engage the care and calculation of loftier aspirants than such as turn their inquiries upon the last. But the curious in credulity might occupy their leisure more unprofitably than in an analysis of the existing system of turf speculation by means of those mysteries called Sweeps; and let them not be deterred through any false shame on the score of ignorance. It can be no reproach to the most enlightened mind to be ignorant of processes of this great metropolis, at a time when her citizens reckon among the most occult secrets of science the "mounting" of mathematics at the University of Cambridge.

TATTERSALL'S.

MONDAY.—The settling occupied so much time, that little opportunity was afforded for other business; no apology, therefore, need be offered for a very short quotation.

7 to 1 agst Pot o' Stew, Jr	10 to 1 agst Rose of Woman	12 to 1 agst Jostler to Eng-
7 to 1 —— Miss Baron	10 to 1 —— Proceed (t)	land
7 to 1 —— Abd-el-Kader	10 to 1 —— Royston Gower	12 to 1 —— Red Lancer
5 to 1 agst The Flying Dutchman	12 to 1 agst Honeycomb	40 to 1 agst Old Dan Tucker
7 to 1 —— Talisor	12 to 1 —— Strongbow	40 to 1 —— The Kenna
		50 to 1 —— Castaneit a.

GAME.

400 to 60 agst Starter to Arkwright

TUESDAY.—Altogether a blank day.

ANCIENT CHARTER.—The present High Bailiff of Cheltenham (Mr. George Arthur Williams) has now in his possession the original charter of King Henry III., granting the manor of Cheltenham, in Gloucestershire, and certain lands in Lincolnshire, to the Abbey of Pessamp, in Normandy, in exchange for the towns and ports of Winchelsea and Rye, in Sussex, for the better peace of the kingdom. This curious MS., on vellum, is in fine preservation, bears date the 1-th of May, 1246, and is witnessed by Walter de Grey, Archbishop of York, Willi am de Raleigh, Bishop of Winchester; Peter de Egeblank, Bishop of Hereford; William of York, bishop of Salsbury; Richard, Abbot of Westminster; Richard Plantagenet, Earl of Cornwall; Hedhard de Clare, Earl of Gloucester and Hereford; Simon de Montfort, Earl of Leicester; Peter of Savoy; John Mansel, Provost of Bewerly; Robert Passe.ewe, Archdeacon of Lewes; William de Cantelupe, and others.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

Notwithstanding the menacing aspect of affairs in Germany, as well as the coming election of the French President, Consols have maintained last week's advance, supported by the abundance of unemployed money. The price to-day fluctuated between 88¾ and 89, closing at 89¼ on Tuesday, registering now for the last price. Wednesday being a close holiday, no legitimate business was transacted until Thursday. Consols then opened heavily at 89⅜, affected by the unfavourable news from India, but afterwards rallying to 89⅝. Upon its transpiring that the Bank Directors at their weekly meeting had determined to reduce the maximum rate of interest for loans, &c., from 4 to 3 per cent., Consols immed.ately advanced to 89⅞. The prudence of the proceeding, while money is so redundant, is rather questionable. The discount houses always undersell the Bank of England, besides the rapidity with which the transaction is executed. The Bank, consequently, will not be able to push out its notes by the change, the only effect produced being an impetus to speculation. The markets, at the close of the week, by its buoyancy, proved the truth of this belief, Consols closing at 89⅞ to ¾. Exchequer Bills have made a slight advance, and Indian Bonds are also improving. The closing quotations are for Bank Stock, 189*¾*; Reduced, 85*¾*; Consols, 86⅞; New 3¼ per cent., Annuities, 80; Long Annuities, to expire Jan., 1859, 8¼; Ditto, October 10, 1859, 8⅛; Ditto, 30 years, January 5, 1865, 8 11-16; India Stock, 260; India Bonds, £2,000, 90 p.; Ditto, under £2,000, 43 p.; Consols for Account, 86⅞; Exchequer Bills, £1000, March, 47 p.; £1500, June, 45 p.; £500, June, 45 p.; Small, June, 45 p.

The principal transactions in the Foreign House have been in Mexican Stock, although the advance in prices has not been so marked as during the previous week. In the other description of secur ties alterations have been little more than fractional, as the following list of prices will show:—Brazil ian Bonds, New, 1829 and 1839, 72¾; Chilian Bonds, 6 per cent., 84¾. Grenada Bonds, 1 per cent., 12¾; Mexican, 5 per cent., 1846, 21¾; Portuguese 4 per cent., 24; Spanish 5 per cent., 1841, 12; Ditto, Passive, 5¼; Ditto, 3 per cent., 32¾; Dutch 2½ per cent., 45¾; Ditto, 4 per cent., 69

Tuesday was settling day in the Share Market, a fact on account proved one of the heaviest since the second railway panic. The range of prices clearly showed that the most desperate Bearing had been resorted to during the account. As the settling day approached, the parties who had oversold themselves became anxious, and commenced buying in their stock at fluctuating prices, and by this, who never purchase on a falling market, became buyers, increasing the difficulty of the Bears finding shares to deliver. Hence the sudden advances; and as the account quit generally to a close, the fluctuations were not materially recorded, when the reduction in the rate of interestlent a new impulse. Buoyancy, it will be seen by the closing list of prices, was the feature of the market at the end of the week. Aberdeen, 16; Birmingham and Oxford Junction, calls 5⅝ paid, or and Carlisle, 80; Lancashire and Yorkshire, 67¾; Ditto, Quarter Shares, 10⅛; Ditto, Fifths, 4¾; Ditto, Thirds (Registered), 3¾; Ditto, New, Gua. Six per Cent., 5⅛; Ditto (West Riding Union), 1¾; Leeds and Bradford, 88, 89; Leeds and Thirsk, 16½; London and Blackwal, 4¾; London, Brighton, and South Coast, 49; London, New, &c., Junction, Guildford, and Reigate, 8½ per Cent., 8¾; London and North-Western, 119¾; Ditto, New, 8¾; Ditto, No. 3, 14; Ditto, £10 (M. and B.) A., 9¾; Ditto, £10 (M. and B.) B., 9¾; Ditto, £10 (M. and B.) C., 9¾; London, Chatham, and Dover, A., 3⅜; Ditto, New (1850), 2¾; Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire, New, £10 Pref., 9¾; Ditto, Lateral, 2¾; Ditto, Consolidated Pref. (£50 Shares), 10¾; Midland, Birmingham, and Derby, 51¾; Midland Consolidated Bristol and Birmingham (6 per cent.), 113¾; Norfolk, 34; North British, 14¾; Ditto, Halves, 6¾; Ditto, Quarters, 3¾; Ditto, Thirds, 2¾; North Staffordshire, 8¾; Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton, 28¾; Reading, Guildford, and Reigate, 8¾; Scottish Central, 23¾; Shropshi.re Union, 4¾; South Eastern, 23¾; Ditto, No 3, 14; Ditto, No. 4 (Thirds), . . ; South Wales, 7¾; Wear Valley, 6 per Cent. Guaranteed, 26¾; Wilts, Somerset, and Weymouth, 8; York, Newcastle, and Berwick, 23¾; Ditto, Original New and Berwick, 26; Ditto, Extension, No. 1, 13¾; Ditto, ditto, No. 2, 13; Ditto, G. N. E. Preference, 7¼; York and North Midland, 23¾; Ditto, Preference, 8; York and North Midland (East and West Riding Extension), 23¾ Boulogne and Amiens, 6¾; Namur and Liege, 4¼.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE (Friday).—Supplies are fair, English wheat has arrived fresh up to our market early in the present week, and the show of samples of both red and white to day was very good indeed. The average qualities commanded a steady sale, at full, but as nothing quotable beyond Monday's prices. All other alods moved off slowly, at late rates. The large parcels of foreign wheat since our last report have been on a very moderate scale. For that article there was a firm and somewhat extensive inquiry, and higher prices were obtained, at full rates of currency. Barley—both English and foreign—we were scantily supplied. Fine malting parcels moved off freely, at very full prices. Grinding and distilling sorts were heavy, slow in sale at late rates. Superfine malt ready for delivery was in good request, but few forward transactions in it were very like to occur. The oat trade was firm, and the second corn was fed per Quarter. Beans, peas, Indian corn, and flour were very slow in sale.

ARRIVALS: English wheat, 3810; barley, 1050; oats, 780. Irish oats, 1110. Foreign: wheat, 10,170; barley, 3020; oats, 6360 quarters. Flour, 4170 sacks; malt, 1150 quarters.

London.—Wheat (Essex, Kent, and Suffolk, new, 40s to 45s; ditto, white, 46s to 52s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 44s to 48s; ditto, white, 47s to 51s. Barley, 32s to 36s; grinding barley, 28s to 29s, distilling ditto, 32s to 35s; malting ditto, [illegible] Malt, [illegible] Beans, 36s to 38s; old, [illegible] Peas, 36s to 38s; new, [illegible] Oats, 22s to 24s; Scotch and Yorkshire, 22s to 23s; Lincolnshire feed oats, 19s to 22s; potato ditto, 21s to 24s; Youghal and Cork, black, 19s to 19s; ditto white, 22s to 24s; ticke beans, 32s to 36s; ditto, old, 34s to 38s; grey peas, 37s to 39s; maple, 38s to 42s; white, 35s to 38s; harlers, 38s to 41s, per quarter. Town-made flour, 42s to 46s; Suffolk, 37s to 42s; Yorkshire and Yorkshire to 38s per 280 lbs.—Foreign: Danzig red wheat, [illegible] white, [illegible] to [illegible]; barley, [illegible] to [illegible]; beans, [illegible] to [illegible]; oats, [illegible] to [illegible] per quarter. Flour, Anconian, 37s to 31s per barrel. Baltic, [illegible] to [illegible] per sack.

Liverpool.—Market dull. There has been a slight change to notice in this market Generally speaking, the demand is not large.

Liverpool, English, sowing, 36s to 40s; Baltic, crushing, 42s to 44s Mediterranean and Odessa, 42s to 44s; Hungarian, 42s to 44s; Egyptian, 40s to 42s; Pernambuco, 42s to 43s per cwt. Indian Mustard-seed, 6s to 12s; white ditto, 8s to 11s 6d. Tares, 7s 6d to 10s 6d per bushel. English Hempseed 42*l* to 43*l* per last of 10 quarters. Linseed cakes, English, £11 10s to £12 10s; ditto, foreign, £8 10s to £10 10s per 1000. Rapeseed cakes, £4 15s to £5 5s per ton. Canary, 60s to 64s per quarter. English flour, [illegible] to [illegible] per sack. Foreign, red, [illegible] to [illegible]; white, [illegible] to [illegible]; extra, [illegible] to [illegible]; extra, [illegible]; white, [illegible] to [illegible] per barrel.

Bread. The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis are from 8d to 8½d; of household ditto, 6d to 7d; and of 6½d and [illegible].

Imperial Weekly Average.—Wheat, 51s 0d; barley, 32s 7d; oats, 20s 6d; rye, 28s 9d; beans, 37s 3d; peas, 40s 1d.

The Six Weeks' Average.—Wheat, 52s 0d; barley, 32s 8d; oats, 20s 9d; rye, 3 s 2d; beans, 36s 3d., peas, 39s 1d.

Duties.—Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 5s 0d barley, 2s 0d; oats, 2s 0d; rye, 2s 0d; beans, 2s 0d, peas, 2s 0d

Flour.—All descriptions kinds of ten the demand on fluxes tolerably steady, at prices fully equal to those obtained last week The number of samples on offer is comparatively small

Hops.—Since our last report the demand has been very limited, and the trade stagnant, in prices, however, we have no change of importance to notice. Standard lumps are selling at 42s to 56s per cwt.

Coffee.—For most kinds of coffee the demand is in a very sluggish state, and prices are with [illegible] quotable [illegible].

Rice.—Bengal and Carolina parcels are selling at an advance of 6d per cwt. The quantity on offer is large Provisions.—For the best Irish butter the d mand is tolerably steady, at very full prices, while other kinds are a slow inquiry, at barely la t rates. Bacon butter is in fair request, and the best brands have commanded full prices. English butter moves off slowly, at 102s to 124s per cwt. for the finest. 90s to 98s; middling, 84s to 88s; fine to 96s for Devon, and 11s to 12s Hamwih, 8s, Stewart's 90s 3d per cwt.

Smithfield (Friday).—Our market to-day was somewhat heavily supplied with both English and foreign beasts, while the sheep were [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

ADVERTISEMENTS.

WEIPPERT'S SOIREES DANSANTES, PRINCESS'S CONCERT ROOMS, MONDAY, NOV. 6, and every Monday. A Remember of Two Guineas is entitled to an admission for himself and lady any six nights during the season. 21 gilt tickets, 2l. each. Weippert's Palace Band as usual, consisting of his self M C Mr. Corrie. The Refreshments and Supper by Mr. Payne. Commence at Eight—come early. Tickets and programmes at 21 Soho-square, and of Mr. Corrie, 52, Great Marlborough-street.

WALHALLA. SALLE DE VALENTINO, Leicester-square. This spacious and elegant SALOON is OPEN EVERY EVENING. The Lighting, Ventilation, and the whole of the Decorations and Appointments call forth the admiration of thousands who attend. All lovers of Dancing or Exercise to visit the delightful Temple of Terpsichore. The dance on a regular Sprung Floor. Master of the Ceremonies in full costume. The Quadrilles and admired Quadrille, "Jeunesse and Jeunesse," every evening. Mrs. Conductress, Bell—Dancing at a Quarter past 8; M. Dubrey to Commence at Half-past Eight, and Quadrille at Half-past Eleven. Admission, 1s.

MINERVA HALL, 7, H. YMARKET, NEXT to the Theatre.—NOW OPEN, every Morning at and Evening at 8, with a splendid series of TABLEAUX VIVANS of a most novel and superior character than ever yet exemplified. Brilliant reception of the New Grand Historical Group in Six Changes entitled the young Herald slaying his Sister after Returning from his Victory over the Locusts, forming Six Distinct Living Pictures—pronounced by the Court Journals of Tableaux Vivans Splendid New Scraphina Quadrilles, &c. supported by a Select Company of Male and Female Vocalists. Admission, 1s; Reserved Seats, 2s; Stalls, 3s.

THE ROYAL CHINESE JUNK is NOW OPEN, moored by a Chinese Crew.—The most interesting Exhibition which has been yet collected the "greatest novelty in Europe," has been visited by her Majesty the Queen, and the Royal Family, and an immense number of persons, who are daily nearly all the nobility and foreigners of distinction in London. The "Keying" is now open for Exhibition, from 10 a.m. to 10 p.m., in the East India Docks adjoining the Railway and steam-boat Pier, Black-wall-entrance, and THE only Public Junk Vessel, including fare and admission, are issued by the Blackwall, and Eastern Counties Railways. Omnibuses pass by Bishopsgate, and Steam Vessels from all the Piers between Westminster and Woolwich, fare 4d. Catalogues obtainable only on board, price 6d.

ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION. A LECTURE on SANITARY MEASURES connected with the Prevention of CHOLERA, and other Epidemics, by Dr. Ryan, daily, at half-past Three; and on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday Evenings at Nine o'Clock. Also, on the Manufacture of Steel Pens, by Mr. Bachhoffner, Morning and Afternoon Evenings. An entirely new Phantasmagoria, by Oblito, every Evening at Eight o'Clock, with appropriate Music. The Dissolving Views, with Historical Descriptions of the Cartoons, with New Effects. The Microscope is now Visited daily. Diver and Diving-Bell. Working Models explained.—Admission, 1s.; Schools, Half-price.—The New Catalogue, 1s

PIANOFORTES, the best of every description, New and Second-hand, Foreign and English, for SALE or HIRE, at CRAMER, BEALE, and Co.'s, 201, Regent-street.

LONDON PIANOFORTE MART, 76, Strand. FINE INSTRUMENTS, at 25, 28, 30, 32, 35, and 40 Guineas. Also, a splendid Variety of MOTT'S New Patent EVER-STANDING and MUSIC-UNDERSPRUNG PIANOS, which were submitted to inspection of 70,000 visitors, at the Royal Society of Arts and honoured and rewarded with universal approbation.

PIANOFORTES.—The cheapest house in London to purchase good instruments is at H. TOLKEN'S, 28, King William street, London-bridge. H. T. a splendid cased Piccolo with 6 Octaves, Metallic Plate, G G Fall, &c., only 25 guineas. An immense Stock always on show.

THOMAS'S 28, 29, King William-street, London-bridge

JONES'S £4 4s. SILVER LEVER WATCHES, at the Manufactory, 338, Strand, opposite Somerset House. They comprise every modern improvement, and are warranted not to vary more than half a minute per week. The great reduction of price at once sets aside all rivalry, either of the most manufacturers, or any other house. On receipt of a Post-office Order, payable to JOHN JONES, for £4 4s., one will be sent Free. Hand Stores Stock of Watches, and Free for a Twopenny Stamp

WATCHES and CLOCKS.—A Pamphlet, explaining the various constructions, and the advantages of each, with a List of Prices, will be forwarded, Gratis, by post, if applied for by a prepaid letter, to DENT, Chronometer and Watch Makers, Watchmakers, &c., 47, Cornhill (seven doors from Gracechurch-street), London.

ELECTRO and SHEFFIELD PLATE.—The Catalogue of Prizes, with Drawings of Silver Fluted Dish Covers, Vegetable or Curry Dishes, and other requisites for the Dinner Table, is published, and may be had, gratis, on application, or will be sent free, to any part of Great Britain, Ireland, or the Colonies.—H. SAVORY and SON, 47, Cornhill, London, seven doors from Gracechurch-street.

SILVER PLATE.—A. B. SAVORY and SONS beg to call the attention of the public to the reduced prices at which they are now selling the best wrought London-made SILVER SPOONS and FORKS. Also, a large Stock of Second-hand Plate, Watches, &c., 47, Cornhill (seven doors from Gracechurch-street), London.

SILVER PLATE.—A. B. SAVORY and SONS, 47, Cornhill, opposite the Royal Exchange, have for sale a large and splendid STOCK of SPOONS and FORKS of every variety of pattern. The late extensive demand for the article having rendered a constant supply impossible, A. B. S. and S. have determined on informing their friends and the public that orders to any extent can now be promptly executed, and that the prices usually asked for gold silver are now unprecedented by her, and Sons in their Argentine Plate. Pamphlets of prices and patterns gratis.

A HANDSOME PRESENT.—A GOLD WATCH and FINE GOLD CHAIN, fitted complete in a morocco case, for £6 10s, very suitable for a present. The description of the watch is as follows:—Double backed gold case, gold dial, highly jewelled in 4 holes, with the movements and every recent improvement, being chiefly manufactured by the proprietor, and warranted to keep good time for a twelvemonth. Price 4, 10s. Each article is of the best quality, and sold by SARL and SONS, Watch Manufacturers, 18, Cornhill, opposite the New Royal Exchange.—N.B. Every elegant present forwarded immediately through the Post-office with perfect safety, upon the receipt of an order for the amount.

DAKIN'S ROYAL PATENT COFFEE. The following certificate of Mr Alfred S Taylor and Mr Arthur Aikin, the great authorities on chemistry and adulteration, as to the beneficial effects and advantages of DAKIN'S ROYAL PATENT COFFEE, will no doubt, be deemed conclusive. The ingredients, fully described in the certificate, and the particulars of the process, will be found in the pamphlet, which may be had gratis of coffee; namely, best Mocha, Jamaica, very fine and good Plantation, roasted to a nicety, and ground in a peculiar manner. Also, an examined sample of the same varieties of Coffee roasted at the same time, but not ground. Dakin's process is, in our judgment, superior to that pared by Messrs. Dakin's process is, in our judgment, superior to that now in general use.

We have also examined the apparatus used by Messrs. Dakin for roasting coffee, and find it well adapted for the purpose. The coffee is roasted in contact during this process are of silver. We find also the roast coffee is taken by a peculiar contrivance from the roasting cylinder to a supplementary one to render necessary a longer time and lower temperature to effect the roasting, whereby all risk of charring the berry, or of producing empyreumatic oil, is prevented, the separation of aroma and vapour is more gradual and complete, and a larger portion of aroma is retained than occurs in the usual methods of coffee roasting.

"The process of Messrs. Dakin appears to us, therefore, in a chemical point of view, to be the most perfect method of roasting coffee in pure and

ARTHUR AIKIN.

"Chemical Laboratory, Guy's Hospital, Aug 9, 1848."

PRICE CURRENT OF "DAKIN'S ROYAL PATENT COFFEE."

ROASTED IN SILVER CYLINDERS.

In addition to the following sorts, DAKIN and Co have the best Coffees procurable from Demerara, Jamaica, Malabar, Ceylon, Java, Padang, St. Domingo, Bahia, Havannah, Cuba, La Guayra, Porto Rico, &c.

per lb.	s.	d.	s.	d.	SELECTED SORTS, WHOLE OR GROUND.	per lb.	s.	d.
